Shepard's educational statesmanship was far in advance of the mentality of his contemporaries. Had he agreed to change the curriculum of his school from liberal to agricultural, his request for supplementary, annual appropriations might have been granted with a smile. But he insisted that North Carolina needed a first class liberal college for the training of the black citizens of the state, and that there were many such citizens who had no interest in farming, shoemaking or tailoring; that the obligations of the state to its black citizenry went beyond the mere establishing of technical and agricultural schools. North Carolina, however, was not, then, interested in liberal college education for its minority group.

Despite discouraging handicaps, Dr. Shepard, with the untiring zeal and devotion that characterize men with prophetic vision, went ahead with the arduous task to which he consecrated his life. He labored hard to save the school from bankruptcy while performing unusual tour de force in raising the level of the institution to academic respectability and recognition.

We suspect, however, the belated act of the legislature was provoked by the judicial implications of the Supreme Court decision in the Gaines case. To forestall any future injunction which would make it mandatory for the State University at Chapel Hill to admit Race students in its professional schools, North Carolina fortifies itself with a substitute measure, avoiding thereby the embarrassing experience of Missouri. Under the circumstances Shepard had no other alternative. The decision merely stipulates equal facilities within the geographical of the state. Thus, if North Carolina provides such facilities, be they at Durham, Greensboro or Charlotte, a Race applicant would have no legal grounds on which to force his admission into the University of North Carolina.

Of course, the ideal, sensible and economical thing would be for the state university, which is already well equipped for graduate studies, to forego its traditions of racial discrimination, and admit all qualified students who wish to pursue professional work. But, North Carolina is content to remain within the purview of the law so long as its traditions are upheld.

for financial and moral support with results that were more discouraging than inspiring. Against this background the N.A.A.C.P. has moved steadily onward in the march for unabbreviated recognition of the legitimate, natural rights of black America.

Its recent triumph before the Supreme Court of the United States for extending the blessings of higher education to qualified Race students of the state of Missouri, and the fight it is waging before Congress for the passage of an anti-lynch law attest to the sound militancy of its enlightened leadership and amply justify its continued existence in the sight of God and man. With the fate of democracy yet in the balance, the N.A.A.C.P. deserves larger support and greater sacrifice from us. Let us resolve to do our share."

Detailed Study of Negro Conditions in State Expected to Shape Future Educational Plan

By Jack Morris

An exhaustive survey of the social, economic and educational status of the Negro in Virginia—a study which may be the basis for one of the most progressive Negro education programs in the country—is nearing completion under the direction of the State Department of Education.

The $5,000 survey, started without fanfare when Dr. Sidney B. Hall, State superintendent of public instruction, engaged Fred M. Alexander as State supervisor of Negro education for that purpose, has been under way quietly for nearly three years and is expected to be completed by next January 1.

"It will give us a basis on which to fashion the future program for Negroes in the State," Dr. Hall said yesterday in his first comment on the study.

"It will mean," said Mr. Alexander, "the balancing of our school program, which, as everybody knows, is now out of balance."

Investigate Negro Conditions

In an effort to obtain a unified picture of the conditions and needs of the Negro in Virginia, Mr. Alexander's investigators have been looking minutely into the social-economic conditions of Negro life, the Negro's educational conditions and opportunities, the vocational and occupational problem as it relates to the education of Negroes and the extent to which Negroes of the State are improvable and educable.

They also are making case studies of trends in interracial, intraracial and social relations and drawing up a list of recommendations for the Negro's education.

Under the study of social-economic conditions of Negro life, Mr. Alexander hopes to disclose the status of health, standards of living, opportunities for personal development and quality of citizenship of Negroes.

Improvement Sought

He expects to show that improvement of the Negro in these lines will be profitable to the whites as well and will increase the wealth and improve the quality of citizenship of all Virginians.

The effort of the Negro's economic condition and cultural level on each other and the relation of his economic condition to crime, delinquency and disease are being traced.

To do this, investigators are looking into the Negro population trends, family and marital relations, standards of living (housing, cultural conditions, health, income and food and nourishment), character-building organizations, community organizations (both economic and social), crime and its contributing factors, civic status, poverty and dependency and buying power.

Both the quantity and quality of educational facilities and opportunities for Negroes are being considered under the second section of Mr. Alexander's survey. The relation of the environment of children to their learning is being investigated with care.

Spot Map Prepared

One of the initial steps taken under this section was the preparation of a Negro population spot map for each of the State's 100 counties, showing the location and educational level of every child of school age in the county. Different symbols show whether the child is in school or, if not, whether he is of elementary or high school age and in what grade he was when he left school.

Tapping numerous sources of information, including school superintendents and other local school officials, the investigators are studying teacher-training, supervision, salaries and the like, school population, enrollment and attendance, school facilities (including the teaching load, length of term, equipment, libraries, teaching materials and the school plant), transportation facilities, school financial support, extension work, curriculum, illiteracy, educational attainment and utilization opportunities, enforcement of the compulsory education law, educational guidance, psychology of Negro pupils toward occupations and possibilities for advancement.

Vocational Problem Studied

In studying the vocational and occupational problem as it relates to the education of Negroes, Mr. Alexander proposes to answer such questions as:

"What occupations are now open to Negroes exclusively? In what occupations are Negroes being displaced by white people? What are the causes of the trends? What occupations that once were open to Negroes almost exclusively are now closed to them?"

One consideration here is to find what employers would extend employment to Negroes if they had adequate vocational training and could show ability to do the work well.

Another question is, "To what extent is the occupational problem a matter of race prejudice or a matter of ability to do the job successfully?"

Mr. Alexander is studying the occupational problem from the point of view of the Negro worker himself, as well as from that of the labor union and the employer and the Negro's relation to them.

Occupations Investigated

Specific items under investigation are actual occupations engaged in by Negroes, displacement of Negroes by whites, trends toward other occupations, present vocational offerings in schools, selective migration and counter movement and wages and income (including average earning and spending of Negro workers and farming oportunities for the Negro, child labor, trade unions, labor legislation and employment services).

Fred M. Alexander

Nears End of Study

In looking into "the improvability and educability of the Negro,' Mr. Alexander expects to assemble evidence from anthropology, biology and sociology to determine whether the Negro is improvable and educable to the point of becoming an economic and cultural asset to the State on a high level.

Considerable attention is being given to the achievements of Negroes in educational, economic and cultural areas and to the achievements of Negro school children in cases where adequate educational opportunity has been provided.

Evidence is being collected for the purpose of finding out little truth there is in such sayings as "all Negroes are slow," "all Negroes are lazy," and "all Negroes steal."

Will Cite Descriptions

In case studies of trends in interracial, intraracial and social relations, Mr. Alexander will give descriptions of actual situations in Virginia showing the prevailing attitudes of both whites and Negroes—in occupations, toward the education of the Negro and concerning the relation of the Negro group to the white group.

The attitudes of newspapers are included, as well as the attitudes of white organizations as evidenced by the admission of Negroes to scientific societies and other organizations.

From the information, assembled guides and techniques for improving race relations are being developed as a basis for future action.

"While this study is limited to Negro life," declares a prospectus of the entire survey, "a broad social problem rather than a race problem alone is being attacked.

Threatens Progress of State

"One-half of the population of Virginia is in a condition of economic and cultural poverty that is a menace to the other half and that threatens the progress of Virginia as a democratic State. In this group white people outnumber Negroes almost two to one. Further restriction of opportunity and isolation of the Negro are not the remedy. The answer seems to lie in co-operation of the two groups in solving problems common to both.

"Therefore, comparison of conditions of Negroes with those of whites will not be emphasized. Essentially the needs of both groups are the same.

"The outcome of the study will be a proposal to the State and to the school divisions of a sound educational program to provide for the needs of the Negro population."

To set up the general plan of the study and to suggest means for carrying the results in action, a committee of eight Virginia economists and sociologists was appointed. Members are Dr. T. R. Snavely, professor of economics, University of Virginia; Dr. W. E. Garnett, rural sociologist of Virginia Polytechnic Institute; Dr. Raymond B. Pinchbeck, dean and professor of economics, University of Richmond; Dr. Wilson Gee, professor of rural socialogy, University of Virginia; Dr. D. J. Blocker, professor of sociology, University of Virginia; Mary; Dr. Gordon B. Hancock, professor of sociology, Virginia Union University; William Cooper, director of extension, Hampton Institute, and Dr. Belle Boone Beard, professor of economics, Sweet Briar College.

Five working committees were appointed to make schedules, collect data and supervise other details, one committee for each section of study. They are:

Committee on social-economic conditions in Negro life in Virginia—Dr. L. P. Jackson of Virginia State College, chairman; Dr. Harry S. Roberts, also of Virginia State College; W. H. Barnes of Manassas Industrial School, Winston Douglas of Booker T. Washington High School, Norfolk, and T. C. Walker of the WPA State headquarters, Richmond.

Educational Committee

Committee on educational opportunities and conditions—Eva C. Mitchell of Hampton Institute, chairman; K. P. Evans of Lunenburg County Training School, Mrs. Genevieve Whitehead of St. Paul Normal School, Bessie Jones of Hampton Institute and Edna M. Colson of Virginia State College.

Committee on the vocational problem as it relates to the education of Negroes—Dr. J. M. Ellison of Virginia Union University, chairman; Dr. Gordon B. Hancock, also of Virginia Union University, E. A. Gibson of Langston High School, Danville, and Major W. M. Whitehead of St. Paul Normal School.

Committee on interracial, intraracial and social relations—William M. Cooper of Hampton Institute, chairman; L. F. Palmer of Huntington High School, Newport News, and W. D. Elam of Parker-Gray High School, Alexandria.

Committee on organizing the field—H. D. Carpenter Jr. of the Negro Organization Society, Richmond, chairman; T. C. Walker of WPA State headquarters, Margaret O. Townes of Manassas, Rosa Lewis of Powhatan, Virginia Randolph of Richmond and H. D. Carpenter Jr. of Richmond.

In addition, WPA workers have been engaged in office and field work, and the data will be tabulated under a WPA project recently approved.

Even since the survey has been underway, Dr. Hall said yesterday, a number of steps have been taken for the improvement of Negro education in Virginia.

Last year, he pointed out, a uniform nine-month school term for both whites and Negroes was put into effect for the first time. Transportation facilities have been improved and "one after another" high school building for Negroes have been erected, he said.

Virginia State College for Negroes, Dr. Hall declared, "has grown by leaps and bounds and now has as fine a physical plant as there is in the State." A graduate education program is being developed there "as rapidly as the need and the economic ability of the State will permit," he said.

He gave these as examples of things to come under a program for which the survey may lay the groundwork.

Federal Aid For Southern Schools

Sooner or later the Congress of the United States will pass a measure intended to equalize educational opportunities in all the states. Bills to that end have been introduced at all the recent sessions, and both the Senate and the House now have bills pending on the matter.

It is inevitable that legislation to this end will pass. The trend of public thought lies predominantly toward action which will at least reduce the present great and growing inequalities existing among the states in their support of public education.

As long as states and local governments depended for revenue almost entirely upon the property tax, the inequalities in educational support could be blamed upon such fundamental difference as those of soil and other natural resources. But the tendency now is toward more public revenue from taxing incomes and the intangible forms of wealth.

One result of this shift in tax sources has been to give additional advantage to those states holding a large part of the corporate wealth of the nation. Such things as stocks and bonds are more unevenly distributed than the wealth of natural resources. Consequently it has come much easier for some states to contribute liberally to education than it has for others.

Out of this situation it is inevitable that the federal government will seek to equalize educational opportunities. This will mean taking tax money collected in the richer states and distributing it among the poorer states.

The principle is well established within the states. Alabama uses that principle. Formerly education was financed entirely by the community, but now the state equalization fund operates. Although the operation of the fund has not always worked out fairly, its principle is basically sound.

What Alabama is doing as between Jefferson and Choctaw Counties, or between Tuscaloosa and Cleburne, the federal government must do between Massachusetts and Mississippi, between New York and North Dakota.

Alabama and the rest of the South, of course, will stand to profit greatly through any federal program of equalization. The present position of Alabama in regard to educational opportunity is set forth in the current issue of The Alabama School Journal by Dr. Harl R. Douglas, professor of education at the University of North Carolina.

Using recent figures of the National Bureau of Economic Research, Dr. Douglas points out that the annual income per child of 6 to 17 years is only $1,018 in Alabama as compared with a national average of $2,481; the per pupil expenditure for education in Alabama is $28 per annum against a national figure of $74; the average annual salary for teachers in Alabama is $606 in contrast to the national average of $1,283, and the average length of the school term in Alabama is only 138 days while that of the nation is 173 days.

If the bills now pending in Congress are approved, Alabama will receive $4,155,157 the first year for educational purposes. By the end of six years the grant will rise to approximately $12,000,000. Alabama's apportionment will be among the largest. What these sums would mean to Alabama, Dr Douglas describes as follows:

Alabama would in the first year receive $4,155,157. If only one-half of this were spent upon increased teachers' salaries, it would result in an immediate increase in average annual salary of more than $100 per teacher. Five years later, Alabama's share would amount approximately to $12,000,000. A large share of this would be available for teachers' salaries. If two-thirds of it were spent for increased teachers' salaries, it would mean an increase in annual salary of more than $400 a year.

In addition to the increase in teachers' salaries with all that it means for better teachers, for better schools and for justice to the teacher, federal aid would also provide nearly $2,400,000 a year for more and better buildings, nearly $1,200,000 for adult education, nearly $500,000 a year for institutions training teachers, a similar amount for rural libraries and more than a hundred thousand dollars for the State Department of Education.

Surely in the face of these facts, and considering the justness of our cause, Alabamians should vigorously get behind the pending legislation and urge its passage.

Whites Slash Gifts More In School Fights

NAACP Secretary Says Race Must Bear Own Burden

DURHAM, N. C.—Because white philanthropists are less and less willing to spend money which may disturb existing conditions, the only hope of carrying on an uncompromising fight to gain equal educational opportunities for the race lies within the rank of the Negroes themselves.

This was the view expressed by Walter White, executive secretary of the NAACP in a speech delivered here December 7, before an education conference sponsored by the Association of Colleges and Secondary Schools for Negroes.

FORCES LIQUIDATION

Pointing to the Rockefeller-sponsored General Education Board and the Carnegie Corporation as examples of huge foundations whose 1938 annual reports show that more and more they are spending principal and not interest with a view to eventual liquidation of their resources for philanthropic purposes, Mr. White said that the nationwide drive to open the doors of higher education to colored in southern and border states is facing a crisis unless Negroes themselves bear a major portion of the financial burden.

"The same thing obtains," he said, "in the fight now being conducted by the NAACP to equalize the salaries of colored and white teachers in the public schools of southern and border states."

Despite the fact that duplication of graduate and professional schools for colored is economically impossible in the poverty-ridden South, he said, that section of the country insists on the luxury of a dual education system in order to maintain the myth of Nordic superiority.

Mr. White decried the die-hard attitude of southern reactionaries who have sought, through scholarship laws to get around the problem of equalizing higher educational opportunities for colored as a short-sighted policy that has carried over into the field of industry and labor. The NAACP secretary said that these expedient measures will not solve the problem.

Although dealing primarily with education, Mr. White declared the whole fight for rights in every field must be assumed more and more by colored people themselves.

EDUCATORS AID JIM CROW

"A deplorable development growing out of the determination of the South to head off this educational program," he said, "is the attitude shown by the heads of several southern colored schools, who have sought to aid their states in evading the Supreme Court decision in the Gaines case, by offering plans to have the states make their schools segregated professional institutions.

"A bright ray of light in the educational equality fight," he said, "has come from Kentucky, where the Governor's education committee went on record last fortnight as recognizing the legal right of colored citizens to attend the University of Kentucky, when such courses as they want are not given in colored colleges of that state."

Use Education As Torch, Negro Grads Advised

Tuskegee Registrar Speaker, Award Diplomas

Characterizing the education they had received as a torch and urging them to pass this torch along for the enlightenment of their race, Albert Turner, registrar at Tuskegee Institute, delivered a splendid commencement address to graduates of Opelika Colored High School Monday evening. Climaxing the exercises was presentation of diplomas by City School Superintendent R. B. Mardre to 11 high school graduates and certificates of promotion to 25 elementary school graduates.

The auditorium of Carver Hall was filled with a large crowd for the exercises. Musical features of the program were three selections rendered by the Opelika Colored School Chorus. Principal W. E. Morton presided and awarded the prizes. The speaker was introduced by J. A. Kitchens, Lee County Negro Farm Agent.

"You are finishing here only to begin," said the speaker, who holds a Rosenwald Fellowship for study in advanced science. "Some of you will begin in other schools, some in the school of life. You are about to begin work that must be done by your own initiative and not by the prodding of parents and teachers.

"If we would go onward and upward, if we would keep abreast of the truth, we must take a careful inventory of our stock in trade to see how our chances stack up against the future.

"In the world today, and particularly in the South, there is confusion, contradiction. We are living in potentially the wealthiest section of the country—yet we actually are poorest off.

"The paradox of the South is that while it is blessed by Nature with immense wealth, its people as a whole are the poorest in the country. In spite of our wealth of population and natural resources the South is poor in machinery for converting this wealth to the uses of its people. Its potentialities have been neglected and its opportunities unrealized.

"The South, with a reasonably healthful climate, is characterized by far too many preventable diseases. The effect of bad housing in the South can be measured directly in the general welfare as it lessens industrial efficiency, encourages inferior citizenship, lowers the standard of family life.

"For these circumstances and conditions you are in no way responsible—but if 15 years from now a commencement speaker can say these same things to your children, then you will be partly responsible.

"All of you know by now that the negro has his special problems which makes his position still more difficult in this confusing age. You have had some special equipment for helping the race and the nation in the solution of our problems. Each of you represents one of 100 negroes able to go to high school in Alabama. You may not have a searchlight to throw upon the road but here in this school you have at least received a torch.

"You can use your torch to light up the home and family life of the negro. In the large cities organized vice seems to gravitate toward the negro district and far too many negro homes have been converted into liquor dispensaries and lottery offices. In the rural sections the charge is that the negro is unmoral, never having learned a high code of social morality. These, along with charges of thriftlessness and shiftlessness, they say, are occasioned by the fundamental weakness in the negro's family life.

"Use your torch to teach the negro the ideals and traditions of family life, teach him to make some provision for the younger generation. Teach the negro that strengthening family life and planting certain ideals in the family doesn't depend upon education and wealth. Teach them to put beauty into their lives from the brooks, the flowers, the starry firmaments on high.

"Use your torch to light the negro's pathway to education. Literacy means nothing unless it can be translated in terms of usefulness to the individual and society. When you have further educated yourselves you can teach those less fortunate than you.

"Pass the torch on farther by helping to develop a better leadership for your race. Get rid of that class of dishonest men and women who imitate the genuine for their personal aggrandizement. Light the negro's pathway by preaching to him and to America that Democracy is the greatest fact of modern history. You can use your torch to make the negro a better citizen by illuminating his history with your torch.

"Use your torch to smoke out and then light up the church. Work for a church with better preachers, a church that teaches a belief in God.

"If you would be a torch bearer in the march of human progress you must hew to the line and follow a thorny path. In spite of oppression, prejudice and lack of opportunity, you can make of yourselves whatever you will, if you work!"

High school diplomas were awarded to eleven graduates as follows:

Florence Cecilia Barrow, Eloise Joyce Blandon, Sallie Mae Dixon, Orlena Louise Hawkins, Ruth Louise Hill, Catherine Clestine Lyles, Olivia Elmira Samford, Mildred Louise Smith, Hugh Benjamin Dawkins, Emanuel Trotter Jones, William David Mitchell.

Certificates of promotion were awarded to 25 elementary school graduates as follows:

An Effective Spur

THE contemplated and actual action of certain southern states with respect to advancing the higher educational possibilities of Negroes, is a healthy sign of the effectiveness of the recent supreme court decision in the Missouri U. case. It reveals that, although the southern whites will not yield in their blind prejudices, they will, when spurred on by federal action, take steps to remedy some of the evils with which that section of the country is cursed. They do not intend to permit Negroes to attend the so-called "white" schools, but they do make assertion that the educational lot of the Negro will be bettered. And if they carry out these assertions, it is safe to say that the lot of the Negro in the South will be bettered.

Of course, it seems a shame now, just as it has always been, that southern whites cannot be democratic enough to permit the working out of a fully democratic program with respect to its Negro citizenry. But it is hard, we suppose, to get away from the age-old traditions of racial bias and color prejudice. The whites of the South are not just now being taught racial animosities. They have known them for hundreds of years. They may not actually believe that their treatment of Negroes is right and best, but they have followed their line of reasoning in this respect for so long a time until they are reluctant to make a change for the better.

The program of the South is now, and always has been, a very costly one. In regard to the higher education of the Negro, their program of establishing separate institutions of higher learning, rather than admitting those Negroes who seek such education to the already established state institutions, will prove a very costly item, and serve to further impoverish that section. But it seems that southern whites want to do things the hard way only, when it comes to dealing with the Negro. They are determined, despite the cost, to uphold their traditional prejudices and racial bias. It is a fearful price to be paying for something that is of no worth to them, and of still less worth to those against whom it is directed.

IF INTERESTED IN SOUTH CAROLINA PLEASE STUDY THESE FACTS.

The State has not seen a more arousing study of conditions in South Carolina than is presented in a Clemson bulletin, An Analytical Study of a Rural School Area, by Dr. Henry L. Fulmer. The facts are sensational! They call for revolution in our thinking and in our public policies that determine the purposes of public expenditures.

These are not Negroes Doctor Fulmer is writing about. They are white people, all of them. The State mentions this fact because so often when unhappy conditions are revealed in South Carolina and in the South, the matter is dismissed by some with the remark, "Oh well, you're talking about Negroes. Of course they pull our average down."

The population of the ten school districts studied by Doctor Fulmer is described in the bulletin as "almost totally white (98 per cent.) and descended entirely from pioneer American stock. They are peace-loving, church-going, law-abiding folk. . . . In religion they are Protestant, chiefly Baptist and Methodist. . . . There are 827 white homes in the study area. There are 451 tenant homes and 376 owner homes. There are in all of these homes 4,260 people. The cash income per family is about $325 a year.

"The section (Pickens county) is well adapted to the growing of apples and certain other fruits, but there are no apple orchards in the area, and most of the homes are without an apple tree. In fact 45 per cent. stated they produced no fruit of any kind even for home use. While the soil is capable of producing a variety of vegetables there are no vegetables sold from the farms. The majority of the families produce only a limited amount for home use, and 19 per cent. of the families stated that they raised no vegetables of any kind. . . . A very high percentage of families, especially among the tenant group, are without a milk cow. . . ."

Forty per cent. (43.9 is the precise figure) of these families spend less than $50 a year for clothing; and 80 per cent. of all the families spend less than $100 a year for clothing, even though the average family is made up of 5.2 persons. Eighteen per cent. of these families have a daily newspaper, 27 per cent. a weekly newspaper, and 24 per cent. have books or magazines in their homes. Of the youth of school age, 28 per cent. were not in school when the study was made.

"At present," again quoting the bulletin, "there are 32 youth from the area attending college, all of them from owner homes. . . . There is not to be found in the entire area one person who attended college and returned to the community to devote his full time to farming. . . . The great majority of these youth did not complete a high school course. . . . Almost one-fourth of all the parents of the area attended school only through or the equivalent of the first grade. . . .

"In practically all the schools of the study area, one or more relatives of the trustees are teaching. In one school the entire staff is closely connected with the trustees. In most of the schools, the same teaching force usually remains until there is a change of trustees. . . . Two principals stated that the trustees appoint teachers without consulting the head teacher or teaching principal under whom they are to teach.

"In the 11 elementary schools there are 36 teachers, of whom 11 are men and 25 are women. All of these teachers are natives of Pickens county and 32 of them reside in the study area. Twenty-seven of these teachers attended elementary schools in the study area and 15 attended the same elementary school in which they now teach.

"All of the elementary teachers in the area, except one, attended college one or more years; five attended only one year ,29 two years, and one was graduated. The institutions of college grade which these teachers attended are all located in or near the Piedmont section of the Carolinas. . . . Seventeen teachers have attended one or more summer schools, but 19 have taken no additional work since they began teaching. The average teaching experience of these elementary teachers is 5.2 years. . . . Fourteen have not traveled beyond the borders of South Carolina, and one has traveled only short distances from Pickens county. . . ."

Twenty-seven per cent. of all elementary pupils are absent from school each day, and in the course of health surveys it was found that more than 90 per cent. of all the school children had one or more major defects. . . . It was the opinion of the county health officer that a great many of these rural children were insufficiently and improperly fed. This, in his opinion, was the chief cause of their poor health."

From this digest of Doctor Fulmer's bulletin you can draw your own conclusions concerning what South Carolina must do to promote the common good.

Baseball is not played by electricity, yet some teams often need a new battery.

Eighteen per cent. of these families have a daily newspaper, 27 per cent. a weekly newspaper, and 24 per cent. have books or magazines in their homes. Of the youth of school age, 28 per cent. were not in school when the study was made.

"At present," again quoting the bulletin, "there are 32 youth from the area attending college, all of them from owner homes. . . . There is not to be found in the entire area one person who attended college and returned to the community to devote his full time to farming. . . . The great majority of these youth did not complete a high school course. . . . Almost one-fourth of all the parents of the area attended school only through or the equivalent of the first grade. . . .

"In practically all the schools of the study area, one or more relatives of the trustees are teaching. In one school the entire staff is closely connected with the trustees. In most of the schools, the same teaching force usually remains until there is a change of trustees. . . . Two principals stated that the trustees appoint teachers without consulting the head teacher or teaching principal under whom they are to teach.

"In the 11 elementary schools there are 36 teachers, of whom 11 are men and 25 are women. All of these teachers are natives of Pickens county and 32 of them reside in the study area. Twenty-seven of these teachers attended elementary schools in the study area and 15 attended the same elementary school in which they now teach.

"All of the elementary teachers in the area, except one, attended college one or more years; five attended only one year ,29 two years, and one was graduated. The institutions of college grade which these teachers attended are all located in or near the Piedmont section of the Carolinas. . . . Seventeen teachers have attended one or more summer schools, but 19 have taken no additional work since they began teaching. The average teaching experience of these elementary teachers is 5.2 years. . . . Fourteen have not traveled beyond the borders of South Carolina, and one has traveled only short distances from Pickens county. . . ."

Twenty-seven per cent. of all elementary pupils are absent from school each day, and in the course of health surveys it was found that more than 90 per cent. of all the school children had one or more major defects. . . . It was the opinion of the county health officer that a great many of these rural children were insufficiently and improperly fed. This, in his opinion, was the chief cause of their poor health."

From this digest of Doctor Fulmer's bulletin you can draw your own conclusions concerning what South Carolina must do to promote the common good.

NEGRO EDUCATION PLANS PRESENTED

Dr. Harmon Caldwell Suggests Setting Up Regional Colored Universities

ATLANTA, Oct. 31. — (AP) — A southern educator today suggested setting up regional negro universities or subsidizing existing negro colleges with state funds as possible cation for negroes in the south. professional and graduate study in the south.

Discussing the question before the Southern University conference, President Harmon W. Caldwell of the University of Georgia said he believed the subsidization plan was "the best solution."

"For example, Atlanta has a fine university center for negroes," he said. "The state might give to a private negro institution a subsidy, allowing the school to expand and set up professional schools of law, medicine and dentistry. The state also might buy the services of those institutions."

The question was discussed in the light of a supreme court decision in a Missouri case requiring states to furnish negroes adequate studies for graduate study or admit them to their state universities and graduate schools.

On the recommendation of Dean F. C. Smith of the University of Tennessee, the educators authorized appointment of a committee to study the question of higher education fr negroes in the south. Caldwell was named chairman.

Dr. Francis P. Gaines of Washington and Lee university, Lexington, Va., was elected president of the conference, representing 41 colleges and universities in 13 southern states. Chancellor A. B. Butts of the University of Mississippi and Charles E. Diehl, president of Southwestern university, Memphis, Tenn., were named vice president and secretary-treasurer, respectively.

ADVANCE STUDY FOR NEGROES UP

Educators Are Seeking Solution To Enable Graduate Work

ATLANTA, Oct. 31—(AP)—A Southern educator Tuesday suggested setting up regional Negro universities or subsidizing existing Negro colleges with state funds as possible solutions for providing Negroes with professional and graduate study in the South.

Discussing the question before the Southern University conference, President Harmon W. Caldwell, of the University of Georgia, said he believed the subsidization plan was "the best solution."

"For example, Atlanta has a fine university center for Negroes," he said. "The state might give to a private Negro institution a subsidy, allowing the school to expand and set up professional schools of law, medicine and dentistry. The state also might buy the services of those institutions."

Question Is Discussed

The question was discussed in the light of a Supreme Court decision in a Missouri case requiring states to furnish Negroes adequate facilities for graduate study or admit them to their state universities and graduate schools.

On the recommendation of Dean F. C. Smith, of the University of Tennessee, the educators authorized appointment of a committee to study the question of higher education for Negroes in the South. Caldwell was named chairman.

Dr. Francis P. Gaines, of Washington and Lee University, Lexington, Va., was elected president of the conference, representing 41 colleges and universities in 13 Southern states. Chancellor A. B. Butts, of the University of Mississippi and Charles E. Diehl, president of Southwestern University, Memphis, Tenn., were named vice president and secretary-treasurer, respectively.

Discussing subsidization of private Negro colleges, Chancellor O. C. Carmichael, of Vanderbilt University, asked if it would be possible for Tennessee to designate Fisk University at Nashville, as a university for Negroes and "subsidize" it for professional work. Fisk is one of the few Negro colleges in the South with a graduate school.

"Personally, I believe it would work," Caldwell replied. "Also, I personally believe it would be legal."

Money "Appropriated"

Dean Smith, of the University of Tennessee, asserted the Tennessee Legislature had "appropriated money for that purpose" and added "that not one penny has been called for to send them to Fisk."

Smith reported the University of Tennessee faced mandamus proceedings in court Monday seeking to force the institution to admit four Negroes in its graduate school and two in its law school.

Dr. John J. Tigert, of the University of Florida, said he did not agree to the "economic advisability" of setting up separate graduate schools for Negroes and whites. He added that Negro land grant colleges in several states had proved "a satisfactory solution."

Caldwell discussed separate schools for Negroes and whites, but termed it "an unfortunate solution."

"It would mean less financial support for white institutions and certainly a weakening of graduate schools."

He also suggested the possibility of separate divisions of university for Negroes, with an exchange of equipment, libraries and faculty.

State Subsidies to Private Negro Colleges Proposed

The Chattanooga Times

A RECENT decision of the Supreme Court of the United States which in effect, requires the several States to provide for Negroes adequate facilities for graduate study or admit them to their State universities and graduate schools has led to a re-examination of an important aspect of education in the South. A few Southern States, including Tennessee, offer to Negroes an opportunity for graduate study; but in the South as a whole, facilities for advanced work and for training in the professions are unequal to the demand.

The problem which has arisen constitutes a tribute to both the Negroes and the whites. For the problem would not exist if the white people had not encouraged the Negroes by establishing an increasing number of schools in the elementary and high school classifications, and if the Negroes had not availed themselves of the opportunity to obtain an education. The Negro has made his own considerable contribution to the cost of maintaining schools for his race. The question which is now coming to the fore is how the leaders of both races in the South can best take the next step and provide facilities for graduate and professional work.

At a meeting in Atlanta of the Southern University Conference, the subsidizing of existing Negro colleges with State funds was suggested Tuesday as a solution worthy of study. President Harmon W. STATE SUBSIDIES TO PRIVATE NEGRO COLLEGES PROPOSED.

Why Shouldn't School Teachers Marry?

Daily Record
Atlanta, Ga.

The question of the right of Atlanta colored women teachers to marry has received long and heated discussion. There have been many pros and cons offered in the argument, most of the discussions ending in bitter controversy.

The Atlanta Baptist Ministers' Union decided to study the record as unqualifiedly saying that the teachers have the right to marry. The A. M. E. Ministers' Union decided to study the question following the last meeting, indication being towards reaction favorable to marriage of teachers. Other ministerial groups have indicated their willingness to see the marriage relationship allowed those who instruct in the city school system. This should dispel the idea of those who contended that the ministers of the colored group are the ones who are fighting for the marriage ban being continued against female teachers.

Recently, the Tennessee Supreme Court ruled that it was illegal for a municipality board to dismiss a teacher because she married. The Georgia Supreme Court ruled last year that the Fulton County Board of Education could not dismiss teachers because of marriage, resulting in reinstatement of several who went into the ways of matrimony and were fired.

And why not? Should not those who teach our children to live normal lives live what they teach? Is it not only fair that the home life so deeply emphasized in the city school system be allowed those who are in the school rooms doing their best to improve society and the community day in and day out? Can the best in interest, in production in results be expected out of teachers who are forced to live unnatural, abnormal lives? Have not the tragedies of the past, the results of the abnormal living, been enough to convince all that home life and home ties alone could have prevented the ill fates of those so affected?

Yes, school teachers should be allowed to live normal lives and marry, if they wish to do so. They should be given the opportunity to show the normal and correct way of living as well as to teach it from text books. Leaders, continue your fight in this direction. Let's improve the standards of the group by improving the standards of the home life and the school life.

EDUCATION- 1939
DISCUSSION

RAISING THE STANDARD OF CITIZENSHIP IN THE U.S.A. IS THE EQUAL EDUCATION OF ALL THE CHILDREN, NOT A PART OF THE CHILDREN

Globe 10-20-39

CITIZENSHIP and education go hand in hand, and one can not survive long without the other. The policy of education in the state must be broad and liberal enough, to cover all the children, without regard to race, color or creed; if the standard of citizenship is raised at all. As long as half of the children are educated, and the other half uneducated, the standard of citizenship will not be raised or the people enlightened. It is another case of Abraham Lincoln saying, "The Republic cannot endure, half free and half slave."

There is much noise being made in Georgia about Citizens Day, but the program does not include Negro citizens. The Negro is not considered a part and parcel of the thought, conscience, wealth, and citizenship in many sections of the country, and particularly in the South. The Negro is not in the minds of the white program makers when they make their programs; except to discriminate against him; and as long as these conditions obtain, there will be no improvement in the standard of citizenship in our country. Mr. Hughes Spaulding made this point clear, a few days ago in a speech delivered before the Rotary Club in Savannah, Georgia, when he said:

"Citizenship and education go hand in hand. We will cure our political sores when we have improved, by education, our boys and girls who will grow up to resent the political sores. The creation of improved citizenship is the duty of the schools. We are, in Georgia, slowly but surely destroying the schools. That is not a pleasant statement. It is a true statement.

"He took the school figures and showed that we have 730,000 children in our schools. If that number 270,000 are Negro children. One trouble with Georgia's citizenship level has been that we have not had the money to provide all our children with the proper school facilities. Especially have we not had it for the Negro children.

"Our white elementary school teachers received, on a 12-month basis, $62 per month and the Negro teachers an average of about $30 per month. In the high schools the pay was an average of $85 per month and about $60 in the Negro schools. That pay rate was set a year ago. It was the best rate the teachers of Georgia have ever had.

"We paid our teachers about what we pay a common laborer on the WPA relief roles.

"That is what we think of citizenship. That is what we do for our children."

Mr. Spaulding is a former member of the Board of Regents of the University System of Georgia, and knows whereof he speaks. He comes from the most intelligent and liberal class of white folks in the South; and in publicly stating the financial status of his state, he said: "We have not had the money to provide all our children with the proper school facilities. Especially, we have not had it for the Negro children." Is not this a bold and shameful statement coming from a state officer, who has been charged with the duty of enforcing the laws of his state under oath, impartially and without fear or favor between citizenship?

The laws of Georgia provide that the state shall provide an equal per capita sum of money, for every child in the state, between the ages of six and eighteen years old. Not white children, nor colored children; but the children of the state between certain ages as stated above. Any officer who diverts, or apportions public funds differently from how the laws directs, is guilty of malfeasance in office, and ought to be dismissed from the service of the state. Mr. Spaulding asked this important question. "Can we expect our young people to learn to love and respect the state, if the state does not give them education, capable teachers who respect their professions, and who believe in representative government?" The state cannot expect such service and patriotism of its young, white or black; if it is delinquent in educating its youth. Neither can Uncle Sam expect the Negro soldier to give the same kind of loyal service in peace or war, the white soldier gives him, as long as he shuts the door of hope and opportunity, at West Point and Annapolis in his face; and deny him other military training and education he provides for white boys.

If the state neglects the youth, it may expect the man to neglect the state. It is not natural for man to love the hand, that seeks to filch his rights and freedom from him. It matters not with the individual, whether the deed is one by the state or a person, the individual resents the crime. Legalizing a wrong does not make it right. Many laws and policies of men, may be legally right, but are morally wrong. And no law or policy is just, unless it is right both in the law and in good morals. The basis of all good laws is morality. The basis of good citizenship is sound moral character, and not legislative enactments. No division of school funds upon the grounds or race, color or previous conditions of servitude, by local boards of education, is fair in either laws or morals. Negroes can no more rally to the support of their government, than the Jews can to Germany, it matters not how much they love the flag, and we do love it, in spite of its failure to protect us at home, as long as the government aids and abets a part of the state in denying them their rights and privileges under the Constitution, and discriminate itself against them in Constitutional benefits. If the government will accord the Negro the same rights and privileges, it affords the white citizens; Negroes will give the government better soldiers and patriots than white men are capable of giving the U.S.A.; but demand that the government give them the best it has for its citizens in return for what they give the government. The Negro has never proven false to the government, or betrayed any trust imposed in him. All the traitors to our government have been white men. Negroes are incapable of betraying their government, but white men have proven that they will sell the government's innermost secrets to a foreign foe. If you are looking for a Benedict Arnold, you will have to look among white folks and not Negro citizens. If you would find those who have assaulted our flag and denied its emblematic supremacy, you will find them among white people, not Negro citizens.

"Education For Democracy"

An excerpt from an address by President Frank P. Graham, University of North Carolina, delivered at the Congress on Education for Democracy, held at Teachers College, Columbia University during August of this year:

Charlotte News 11-16-39

. . Those who identify the conception of equality with a conception contradicted by biology, psychology, and common sense, and see liberty and progress submerged in the dead level of the uniformity and mediocrity of a misconceived equalitarianism, should remember that the equality of the American dream is the companion not the foe of freedom. It is clear to all that human beings are not equal in physical, mental, and spiritual qualities and abilities. No theory or law can make them so. But they are all human beings, all members of the same great human family, and are all potentially sons of God. . .

Our democracy is the free spirit of a self-governing people in the control of the sources of their common life toward the fulfillment of the American dream. American democracy would preserve the precious liberties of worship, assembly, speech, suffrage, lawful process, for person and property, and the press, regardless of creed, race, color, or economic position, and would enlarge the historic Bill of Rights to include, as basic to all, provisions for the more equal educational opportunity of all the children in all the states, provisions for farms as equal partners in our now lopsided economic society, for equality of bargaining power through the organization of workers, the cooperation of farmers, and the information of consumers, for the right to work and decent terms and conditions of the working life, for higher levels of social security against the hazards of modern society to lift the levels of human liberty, for American participation in international cooperation for peace and security against the hazards of an unorganized world community in which wars and depressions anywhere involve people everywhere, for intelligent production as a way of abundance and decent consumption as a way of life, and for an abundant distribution of the good life in the eternal adventure toward the Kingdom of God to which America would dedicate both education and democracy.

. . . As America may with new faith turn to both education and democracy, may we, as teachers and citizens, turn for guidance to Him who was at once the Greatest Teacher and the Supreme Democrat from whose teachings and life became the foundations of freedom and democracy in the modern world. . . .

Our Western democracies, unchristian and undemocratic in their grasping might, may pyramid economic power to intercontinental heights above a subject world and yet without spiritual insight and social intelligence, be helpless to prevent either world wars with their murder of millions of the fathers of school children or world depressions which take work and bread from millions of homes to which school children return, plastic to their influences, to look into the faces of defeated men. In the midst of such a world we turn in humility and need to the ways and hopes of freedom, and democracy and the little tried guidance of Him who joined teaching and life, who said, "Know the truth and the truth shall make you free"; "I am come that you might have life and have it more abundantly"; and "Suffer the children to come unto Me and forbid them not for of such is the Kingdom of God." Upon these teachings of the Master Teacher we take our stand for education and democracy.

Dr. S. B. Hall Describes Plan For Educators

A five-point platform of "immediate objectives to be realized at the earliest time," drawn up by the State Board of Education, was announced last night by Dr. Sidney B. Hall, superintendent of public instruction, at the final session of the annual convention of the Virginia Education Association at the John Marshall High School.

The objectives, contained in a "Declaration of Policy" of the board, included the following:

To set up procedures (1) for the participation of all the people in formulating school policies, in developing a program of instruction and in devising ways to finance the school program; (2) for school administration to enlist and utilize suggestions of school personnel in improving education in the State, (3) for coordinating the services of the State Department of Education and the State Teachers' Colleges in providing effective instruction in Virginia schools and (4) for getting and holding all children in school with an effective instructional program.

The fifth objective called for studies to be made "for the purpose of suggesting sound procedures for extending the school program upward and downward."

Program Outlined

In discussing the objective regarding the holding of all children in school with an effective instructional program, Dr. Hall said the board would seek to attain this end by working, for the enforcement of the compulsory attendance law, by raising teachers' salaries "well beyond the present minimum program proposal," by securing State aid for transportation, by revision of secondary school standards to include qualitative aspects of the school program, by taking definite steps to improve materially educational facilities for Negroes, by providing student aid for public funds when necessary to permit able young people to remain in school at least through the high school; by providing an appropriate teacher load in every school, by extending supervision in both elementary and secondary schools and by establishing in every division comprehensive high schools to provide for social and vocational competence for all the people.

The Board of Education's statement of policy, presented by Dr. Hall last night, opened with an explanation as to why the board was created. The board has been formed, the statement said, because the administration of the schools should be kept close to the people, because education is a unique function of government in American democracy and because education is a State function.

Seek Modern Trend

With a mandate from the people to provide for the educational needs of the State, the board is attempting to extend educational facilities and to promote a type of education suited to modern times, Dr. Hall said.

"Neither laymen nor the school officials and teachers have caught up with the flood of new scientific knowledge about the natural and social world which has so vitally changed the living of people during recent years," Dr. Hall declared. "Our people, in the main are endeavoring to carry on their new ways of living according to beliefs that are no longer valid and concepts long since outmoded. There is a conflict between the new ways of living and outworn beliefs and ideas. This conflict must be resolved if our democratic state is to survive."

In addition to the board's immediate objectives, Dr. Hall listed some long-range goals adopted by the board, "recognizing that the ultimate realization . . . depends upon the co-operation of the General Assembly and the local governmental units." These goals included the sponsoring of a program of educational publicity to make the people conscious of the need for improving the educational program and for larger financial support, to provide education for all adults and handicapped children, to urge consolidation of small high schools, to develop a unified program of elementary, secondary and higher education and to devise ways and means of co-ordinating the educational activities of other State departments, voluntary groups and the Federal Government.

As to the necessity for reaching these goals, Dr. Hall cited several faults with the present educational setup.

Present Faults Cited

"There are glaring irregularities of educational opportunity among the school divisions of the State," he declared. "A child born and reared in one county may have many times less educational opportunity than a child born in another county or city. Generally, the education of Negroes is from 25 to 30 years behind that of the whites. Approximately one-fourth of the school buildings are obsolete. Many school children are without textbooks. There has been a tremendous increase in teaching materials during the last six years, yet hundreds of schools are without adequate teaching materials.

"In many schools the teaching load is far too high for efficient teaching and learning. Although the average annual salary of teachers shows a slight increase teachers' salaries in general are far too low to provide a teaching corps of the high morale, leadership and efficiency that Virginia expects.

"Secondary education still suffers because of far too many small and weak high schools. Of the 468 accredited secondary schools, 265 have less than six teachers . . excessive cost of providing a varied program in these small schools prohibits the supplying of a varied offering to meet the needs of all pupils. One great need of secondary education in Virginia is the consolidation of these small high schools into comprehensive high schools of from 400 to 1,200 pupils. In this way a modern offering can be provided to meet the needs of all pupils and the people of the attendance area."

The Board of Education, Dr. Hall said, seeks the co-operation of local governmental units and the General Assembly in correcting these faults.

Ask General Assembly Support

A business session at the John Marshall High School opened yesterday's V. E. A. program. The convention passed a resolution calling on the General Assembly to support the Governor in his efforts to comply with the constitutional mandate "to maintain and support an adequate school system." The resolution also urged the Governor and the Legislature to give "faithful consideration" to the report by Dr. Alvin B. Biscoe suggesting methods whereby Virginia can raise additional funds for education.

Other resolutions requested Congress to support measures giving Federal aid to public schools of the States and called on all teachers to become qualified voters.

Joseph E. Healy of Staunton, president of the association, gave his annual address, outlining the duties of the president.

Brooks Named Treasurer

J. Irving Brooks, principal of the Clarksville High School, was elected treasurer of the VEA in balloting which continued throughout most of the day, it was announced last night. He succeeds H. D. Wolff of Petersburg. The board of directors of the association appointed Forbes Norris, assistant superintendent of Richmond schools, to fill the vacancy on the executive committee caused by Mr. Brooks' assuming his new position.

"More Art in Our Schools, Fewer Criminals in Our Jails" was the topic for discussion in the Art Section yesterday. The art group was one of several sections and departments which held meetings yesterday.

Dr. K. J. Hoke, dean of the College of William and Mary, told the art teachers in session at Madison School that "crime in Virginia is increasing at an alarming rate." He said that the great majority of penitentiary inmates are young people; that many of them really are not criminals, but merely have committed some minor offenses and that the school in many cases is failing to do what it can to keep young people away from criminal activities.

Mrs. Mary Bibb Appleton made a report on "Research Concerning Art Activities as a Socially Desirable Medium of Creative Expression in Contrast to Criminal Activities as Socially Undesirable Expression." Mrs. Appleton said that art work can provide an outlet for a child's creative impulses and thus keep him interested in doing something worth while.

Changes in Retirement Law

The teacher retirement committee at yesterday's business session recommended that the association resubmit its proposed retirement law to the General Assembly with two changes:

First, that teachers in State teachers' colleges be included in the list of beneficiaries submitted to the 1938 Assembly, and, second, that the annual sum for the administration of the proposed law be increased from $10,000 to $25,000.

State Monopolizing Education

The "South Carolina College" was reopened in the Autumn of 1882. Two years before it had been occupied as an agricultural college. Between 1877 and 1890 it was closed, the "Radicals" having driven respectable white students out of it between 1873 and 1877. Fifty-six years ago there were thirteen buildings on the campus, including dormitories and houses of professors. One of them, which had been designed for a chapel, was not in use. These buildings, some of which dated from 1805, or about that time, when the college first opened its doors, had probably cost, in the aggregate, as much as $400,000.

They had served a right good purpose. In them had been educated such men as James H. Thornwell, Hugh S. Legare, John Belton O'Neall, James H. Hammond, George McDuffie, Wade Hampton, William Campbell Preston and Dr. J. Marion Sims.

Between 1900 and 1912 two or three other buildings, Davis College and LeConte College among them, were erected. The university was expanding. These buildings cost about $40,000 each.

In an interesting article in The News and Courier last Monday, by Frank H. Wardlaw, it was said that on the university grounds construction to the amount in money of $1,400,000 has just been completed, which raised the building program of the last three or four to $1,750,000. The enrollment of students for the current year breaks former records.

Last week it was published that the university was asking, before the state budget commission, for one or another purpose, about $745,000. The expansion of the plant at a cost $1,750,000 (more than four times the cost of the whole plant before 1900) implies a considerable additional appropriation from the general assembly. The plant not only must be protected from decay but must be utilized. Unless the dormitories be occupied, why have them? Additional professors are required for enlarged bodies of students.

In three other state colleges, Clemson, Winthrop, and the Citadel, similar expansion has been in progress. The college for negroes in Orangeburg has had some additional funds, but they have not been on a great scale.

Furman, Wofford, Erskine, Presbyterian Newberry have not made similar "progress" in recent years. They are Church colleges. The people who support them also support the state colleges—these "people" being the taxpayers.

In physical size and equipment, in variety of departments and in courses offered, it is plain now that state colleges are overshadowing, dwarfing, reducing to a secondary place, the denominational colleges. The support from the taxpayers implied by the extension of state college plants implies annual appropriations by the general assembly many times greater than the aggregate income of the church institutions.

The conclusion from the facts of expenditure by the taxpayers is that the educational program of South Carolina contemplates the extinction of church colleges as institutions competing with them. The church colleges, if they shall survive at all, must look to far greater sacrifices by churchmen than they have heretofore been called upon to make.

Even then the church colleges must be content with a diminished part in education. The state is to monopolize education.

It were as well, too, that the taxpayers face the truth that buildings do not make a first-rate college. Buildings and equipment costing $2,000,000 or $3,000,000, in Columbia, Rock Hill, Clemson, cannot educate in rivalry with Duke and North Carolina if they pay no more than $2,500 or $3,000 a year to professors. If a state college in South Carolina have at this time a teacher of a high order of talents and attainments he is present in it by reason of accidental circumstances. He is likely to be well past middle life. Unless the general assembly shall provide instructional corps of quality, to which it is apparently committed by plant expansion, students looking for the best in education will still have to go out of the state. The state colleges, to hold their own with those of other states, must have in their faculties some teachers receiving as much as $6,000 or $7,000 a year. Otherwise they will be, however grand their buildings, more or less sham colleges.

A William Campbell Preston or a J. Marion Sims in a faculty would be of more value to the University of South Carolina than a "Preston" or a "Sims" building.

The Three-Way Education

He is a Negro man somewhere in his 60's. He sells cold drinks and apples from a basket at the courthouse. He has never been on relief. He has never applied to an organized charity for help. He has worked all his life and still enjoys it.

He is a man of firm convictions. He knows a good bit about people, white and black. He has a philosophy of his own.

"People need a three-way education," he will tell you if you take the trouble to ask him sometime. "Too many folks think they can get by on a one-way education." And if you ask him the difference between a one-way education and a three-way education he will place his fruit basket on the floor, tap a long finger on his forehead and explain: "A one-way education is educating the brain."

"But a three-way education," he will explain, touching first his forehead then his arm, then his chest, "is educating the brain, the muscle and the heart. You got to be all right all three places to do a good job in this world and that's what I tell these young black boys that think they can get by on a one-way education."

It is a good philosophy. But it is too good to be confined to "black boys" alone. The need for its preachment spreads out among all people, of all ages

Education Not A Gift
N. C. College Head Says

Journal & Guide = Norfolk, Va.

DURHAM, N. C.—"Education is not a philanthropy, not an expediency, but the bone and sinew, the life or the death of democracy. Our problems are not peculiar to race or section, are not of the North, the South, the East, or the West, but are universal."

Thus declared Dr. James E. Shepard, president of the North Carolina College for Negroes in a radio speech over a statewide hook-up in the B. N. Duke auditorium here on Sunday morning, Nov. 26. The program was broadcast between 10:30 and 11 o'clock.

Speaking from the subject, "Education in a Democracy," Dr. Shepard cited the great strides made in North Carolina within recent years in regards to the expenditures for public education." Any discussion of these questions is in the end certain to revolve around the most recent and most impressive legislation in behalf of Negroes in North Carolina — the graduate courses authorized for A. and T. College in Greensboro, and North Carolina College for Negroes in Durham," Dr. Shepard declared.

"These courses are ready this fall. Substantial appropriations have been made for the work, and at the Durham college of liberal arts we have the instructional assistance of a large circle of eminent teachers from Duke and the University of North Carolina, and other great institutions," he said.

SOLVE ECONOMIC PROBLEMS

Commenting upon President Roosevelt's declaration that the South is the "nation's economic problem No. 1," the North Carolina College head declared that a "section may be the country's noblest opportunity without ceasing to be also the nation's most difficult economic problem." "Let us compromise and say that in order to live up to our greatest economic opporunity we must solve economic problems," he said.

"My first counsel is such a crusade," he continued, "is to watch the Negro.' Make his happiness, hope and prosperity, our first consideration. He is the man farthest down; he is the man who feels first the depression, and last the prosperity of his time.

"If he is the procuring cause of the depression, and last the prosperity, our scandalously high homicide rate; if he is responsible for the murderous mind of Shreveport, Atlanta, Memphis, Charlotte, and Savannah, lift him up. It is the ignorant Negro, the pauper Negro, the diseased Negro, not the educated man, who committs these crimes."

"The General Assembly of 1939 put North Carolina's citizens under a peculiar obligation. It gave more generously to the cause of education than any of its predecessors, and to the Negro schools it made appropriations on a scale hitherto unknown. It made some adjustments in teacher differentials and left our people with the hope that greater restorations are soon to come in this evolution of racial goodwill.

THOUGHTFUL POSITION

"But best of all," the speaker continued, "the Legislature began continued and ended its labors by getting away from a thoughtless, amiable attitude toward Negro education, by taking a thoughtful and generous position toward the entire subject of state schools, including Negro institutions, in this democratic process."

Making a direct appeal for even greater "investments by the state in the education of its Negro citizens," Dr. Shepard declared that "I know it costs money, but there is no economy of ignorance. Education is a costly item in the states budget, but its expensiveness is not a circumstance to the extravagance of ignorance."

"Peace is a tremendously costly blessing; but war is infinitely more so. Education is a vastly expensive resource, but ignorance is incomparably more so. Public health demands unimaginably large sums of money for its support, but public disease is immeasureably more expensive.

"Good wages, happy working conditions, and habitable houses in which to live, are a great burden upon society, but poverty, ignorance, crime, illigitimacy, disease and premature death, are vastly greater ones. An educated citizenship without the Negro would be a contradiction of terms. An American democracy without its 12,000,000 Negro citizens given the fullest opportunity for development would be a delusion and a snare.

'NO-GOD EXHIBITS'

"When I read in the newspapers and magazines that the Soviet government has taken great cathedrals, in which God has been praised for centuries, and in those sacred places has set up 'no-God ex-

nibits, I share the universal indignation of Christian peoples. But I am asking why we let "No-God exhibits" in our own land remain. War and slums and penury and lynching, ignorance and race hatred, all look perilously much like "no-God exhibits" in this Christian land. I am asking my people, white and colored, to banish them from the face of the earth. There are many of these "no-God exhibits" in North Carolina; conditions in which God's children are forced to live.

"North Carolina has banked on this Black man. If he fails his state let it be said of him that he fell beneath the weight of his own demerits and not by the tyranny of a stronger people."

A NEW RACE PROBLEM

Regional Universities for colored students may be proposed by the Southern University Conference as the South's answer to the Supreme Court's ruling in the Lloyd Gaines—Missouri case. Stirred by the crisis developing as colored students knock for admission at tax-supported state universities, leaders of forty-one colleges and universities at a recent meeting in Atlanta took steps toward a possible solution by appointing a committee to study the problem and make recommendations. Dr. Harmon W. Caldwell, president of Georgia University, is chairman of the committee.

That the problem is becoming acute and disturbing was apparent from Dr. Caldwell's warning that "we must do something quickly." The Supreme Court decided in the Gaines case that a state must provide colored students with adequate opportunities for graduate study. A similar case is now before Tennessee Courts. In Tennessee four colored students seek admission to the graduate schools of the State University; three other colored students are demanding entrance into the University of Georgia; but decision on the applications has been side-stepped or delayed while educational authorities worry over a way out. Obviously representative of the die-hard reactionaries at Georgia University, Dr. Caldwell asserted: "I do not believe it is feasible to admit colored students to Southern institutions used by white students just now. The most practical solution would be in setting up regional universities to which all States in the region would contribute. This arrangement would relieve the States of tremendous if not prohibitive costs of establishing separate graduate schools."

The "regional university plan" will undoubtedly be rejected because it does not comply with the Supreme court's mandate that the adequate facilities for colored graduate study must be set up within the boundaries of the State. Students of one state are not to be compelled to go to another state for their education. The old bogeyism that stifles the south still continues to bar a democratic, progressive solution of Southern problems. For once at least, the South's better element is forced concern itself about a color issue. The Southern leaders of education unquestionably are worried. Their commanding position as America's teachers, responsible in a great degree for the nation's future leadership, makes them acutely aware that their decision should not fall short of the liberalized standards of their calling; that their particular solution of color question should be well-grounded on patriotism, democracy and tolerance, — sound Americanism. Will they dare to cut the Gordian knot with a bold stroke for democracy?

Although the old fogeyism of Missouri University officialdom prevailed to establish a separate law school in St. Louis for the present and future Lloyd Gaineses, the student body evinced little or no organized opposition toward sharing classrooms with colored students. Southern-born white students at Northern universities have never been known to develop a single case of "heebie jeebies" at sight of a colored student in a classroom. On the other hand there are many instances on record where young gentlemen from Dixie and colored fellow-students have got along together unusually well. For race-prejudice is not a natural product. It is deliberately indoctrinated into Southern youth. And young people of today are getting mighty tired of the continuing folly of it.

All these considerations should suggest to the South the democratic and the best way out of the muddle, Let the question of admitting the colored graduates come up before the student bodies. The guess may be wrong at times; but the growing liberalism of young America, South as well as North, should have an open democratic chance to function, at last unrestrained by the old race-hating adversaries of progress.

RACE LAWYER BLASTS NAACP FOR SPENDING HUGE FUNDS IN FIGHT

Jackson, Tennessee Attorney Says No Negro Who Finished Mixed Schools Amounts to Anything.

JACKSON, Tenn., Nov. 30. (ANP)—There is at least one Negro in Tennessee who objects to the recent suits filed by colored students for entrance into the state university in accordance with the Gaines' decision. That Negro is P. L. Harden, well-known local attorney.

Not only is Lawyer Harden opposed to these suits but also he objects to "mixed" schools and declares he has never seen a graduate of such an institution amount to anything. He is against the N.A.A.C.P. spending funds in the Tennessee fight.

"I think we ought to have educational facilities equal to those of any other citizens, but we must realize we have two separate and distinct races in this country with the Negro a special subject," the barrister told the Associated Negro Press.

"Have we as a race ever received any advantage out of any mixed schools? I am ardently opposed to mixed schools. I don't think they're for the best interest of either race. I have not seen any of our group amount to anything worthwhile to the group who went to and finished a mixed school. If you can find just one, I'd like to see him and find what he looks like. The most I've seen are job hunters who never can fit into the group's program.

"As a member of the N.A.A.C.P., I am opposed to the organization spending any of the people's funds on hiring lawyers and paying legal expenses unless they find out whether the local branches in Tennessee are back of the fight. The N.A.A.C.P. should be enjoined from paying out money in that manner. If those five persons want to go to the University of Tennessee, let them hire their own lawyers and pay the expense."

Atty. Harden said that if enough money had not been set aside by Tennessee for Negro scholarships in other states, either more should be asked or facilities enlarged at Tennessee State in Nashville. He says he is contacting colored educators along that line so they can map a plan and present it to the state legislature in 1941.

Dr. Brown Upholds Dignity of Overalls

LAWRENCEVILLE, Va.—"We can't all be teachers, doctors, dentists, lawyers, or preachers and we have got to dignify this thing we call common labor," avowed Dr. Charlotte Hawkins Brown, president of Palmer Memorial Institute, the first speaker in the American Education Weeks observance at St. Paul Normal and Industrial School, last week.

Dr. Brown emphasized the knowing of one's self as a most important step in the process of education. Two of the vital questions each should answer, she emphasized, are: Why are you here, and what are you doing?

Speaking specifically on answering the question where are we going, and in connection with the dignity of labor, she continued:

NOT ALL BLAME ON SKIN

"Don't be ashamed to put on overalls, but be ashamed to do a poor job. Put on overalls and then master your job, do it well. Glorify it.

"All unemployment is not on account of color of the skin," declared Dr. Brown. "Much of it is on account of the slipshod way a job is performed.

"There is depression, some oppression, and segregation about us No matter where you go you are a Negro. It is the same in all sections of America.

"Don't think that you'll go North and not be segregated. In the South you know where you stand, where to look for segregation, but in the North the white man hides it under a cloak but it is there just the same."

Addressing herself to the question why are we here, Dr. Brown declared:

"Are you here because you like football, baseball, or basketball Or, are you here just because you knew some other girl or boy who was coming, or because boarding school is a fine place to spend the winter?

"If you are here because you want to develop into leaders, because you have a vision, because you have taken some man or woman as your ideal and you want to get strength and wisdom to follow in their footsteps, then more power to you that you may achieve.

"Hammer and forge yourself into character. This institution is the anvil by which you are pressed into tools that may lead and serve" was Dr. Brown's admonition.

Parity of Economic and Educational Opportunity in a Democracy

WILLIAM PICKENS has vitally expressed an axiomatic truth: "The public wealth and the public treasury belong equally to all the people. That is democracy. The opposite is tyranny and slavery." His conviction is extremely in point with reference to the economic proscription currently under fire in southern localities, including Norfolk—where last week a local court denied the petition of a teacher to compel the school board to abandon differentials in pay for teachers of the two races, differentials that invariably follow the color line, however adroitly legalistic minds explain to the contrary.

Journal and Guide 6-10-39 Norfolk, Va.

They speak of discretionary power to compensate teachers on an individual basis, but none but pseudo-scientists will now defend the thesis that all Negroes are inferior to whites. But how is it to be explained that not one white teacher ever is held, in the board's discretionary power, to be on the qualification level of poorer paid Negro teachers—at least is not paid on the basis of being on that level? Or is the board paying its less competent white teachers more than their qualifications and work entitle them to?

To the lay mind the court's view that a taxpaying citizen-teacher cannot question the school board's discretion is difficult to square with the guarantees in the U. S. Constitution. The lay mind, at least, cannot see how a state grant of discretion supersedes any constitutional guarantee. Any of us has the descretion to heave or not heave a brick through somebody's plate glass window, to their detriment and loss, but the exercise of that discretion violates the owner's guarantee of security in his property rights and the brick-heaver will be held accountable and punished. That may be an extreme parallel, but it does make the point clear.

Granted that the board is endowed with discretion, if that discretion invariably and systematically operates to affect only one class or race of persons, isn't that violative of the 14th Amendment, even where the statute itself is, on its face, non-discriminatory? A comparable situation existed in the denial of the right to register to vote in Oklahoma, and the views of the Supreme Court on the Oklahoma matter, phrased by Mr. Justice Frankfurter, appear to be relevant here. The court held that "sophisticated as well as simple-minded modes of discrimination" and "procedural requirements which effectively handicap exercise of the franchise by the colored race although the abstract right to vote may remain unrestricted as to race" were not to be condoned.

Daily newspaper comment frankly admits that the salary schedules are based on race; in fact the school board does also, but this racial basis is held to be proper and constitutional because it is discretionary and not discriminatory. The line between discretion and discrimination seems to us to be mighty fine, and we do not doubt that the adverse results in rounds one and two, before the board and the court, will not stand up in higher courts, certainly not in the Supreme Court. The logic of all its recent decisions particularly points to the soundness of that confidence.

The lack of information on Negro effort and aspirations is brilliantly exemplified in some of the editorial comment which has come to our attention. One editor opines that the Norfolk case sprang from the Supreme Court's decision in the Gaines-University of Missouri case. The preliminary steps in the local suit antedated that case by many months. Discussion and petitions were taking place toward a lessening of the disparity in teachers' pay years and years ago. It was in November, 1937, that the organized teachers of the state and the N. A. A. C. P. branches in Virginia voted formally to aid in removing the disparities.

The Gaines suit was not even instituted in a local Missouri court until March, 1936, and it was in March, 1937, before the case reached the Missouri Supreme Court on appeal, and it was not until earlier this year that the highest tribunal's decision was handed down.

The same erroneous slant was taken after the Supreme Court's decision in one of the Scottbsoro case appeals in which jury service denial to Negroes was outlawed. These final victories are the culmination of long efforts, not the instigators of the efforts. They, of course, point the way for others and energize movements of a similar nature. The difference is material.

Similarly, the throwback to a state's rights defense is benighted. Of course the states have certain rights, just as does the individual, guaranteed under the constitution; but that does not protect them in violations of individuals rights on account of race, color, creed, or previous condition of servitude. And, besides, considerably large federal sums help finance education within the states. The rank injustices wrought in the distribution of these funds is a well known fact.

Even the states and localities within the states are not fairly executing their vaunted right to educate their citizens without interference from the national government. In Elizabeth City County, Hampton, and Phoebus no public high school is maintained for colored pupils, but every Negro's tax bill has a specified amount for schools, including high schools. Only the imminent closing of the Phenix School of Hampton Institute prodded the county authorities to partly pay Hampton for continuing to educate the section's colored pupils on the high school level.

Yes, equality of educational opportunity is a democratic requirement, so vouchsafed now in clear-cut language by the nation's court of final resort. Parity of economic opportunity is inherent in the matter of pay for teachers in public schools and similar institutions, we believe that will come too. The handwriting is on the wall.

NEW DEAL REFUGEES.

The Chicago board of education intends to spend more than a million and a quarter dollars this year to build new schools and additions to old ones in the sections of the south side where colored people live. Since 1933 seven schools and additions have been erected in this area but the overcrowding is still severe. The 1939 program will provide a new elementary high school, a new vocational school, additions to four elementary schools and an addition to the Du Sable High school.

Mr. Henry Wallace, the secretary of agriculture, and his fellow New Dealers have thrust this burden on Chicago. The overcrowding of the schools in the colored districts results not from an increase in the Chicago born Negro population but from immigration of Negroes to Chicago from the cotton states. The parents of these children were thrown off the land by the successive plow unders and acreage restriction schemes imposed by the New Dealers. Where less land was cultivated fewer hands were needed to hoe and pick cotton. Some of the families driven from the land found their way into southern cities but by tens of thousands they fled to the north.

The statisticians of the board of education have provided some significant figures in this connection. Twelve schools in Negro districts were studied. It was found that more than 21 per cent of the children in these schools had come to Chicago since September, 1934. Approximately half of the newcomers had arrived since last September. Most of them were from such typical cotton states as Mississippi, Alabama, Texas, Louisiana, and Arkansas.

The migration appears to be gaining momentum. Thus, in the school year beginning in 1934 the newcomers at the twelve schools numbered only 232. In 1935 the migration from the south accounted for another 321 children. A year later it was 558. By 1937 it was 1,247 and last year it was 2,057. Of 4,415 who have come in five years, 2,057, or 46 per cent, have come since September, 1938.

The world is horrified, and rightly so, at the enforced migration of persecuted racial religious and political minorities from central Europe. A little indignation might well be spared for those toplofty idealists of ours in Washington who deliberately plotted an economic persecution of the southern Negroes, a persecution which drove them off the land and out of the only occupation which most of them knew.

Mr. Wallace's schemes haven't succeeded in solving the surplus cotton problem. The surplus is greater than ever today. The schemes have not brought prosperity to cotton. In spite of acreage reductions and everything else, the price today is still desperately low. All that the New Dealers have accomplished has been to throw hundreds of thousands of tenants and share croppers out of work and thrust the responsibility for the care of them and their families upon already overburdened communities.

The migration has imposed a stupendous burden upon Chicago and it falls with greatest weight upon the Negroes long resident here. Their residential areas have been overcrowded with resultant discomfort, high rentals, and neighborhood deterioration. Their schools have been overcrowded and in consequence the education of their children has suffered.

The New Dealers did this and they did it deliberately, in the face of repeated warnings that the consequences of the cotton program would be exactly what they have proved to be. What Herr Hitler did to the Jews and Comrade Stalin did to the kulaks, Mr. Wallace and his starry-eyed pals have done to the southern Negroes.

Education: Is It A Luxury Or An Economic Necessity?

"But why educate more Negroes when people are already standing in line trying to get jobs?"

The question was overheard as the audience left the Birmingham-Southern College commencement exercises at which Edwin R. Embree, president of the Julius Rosenwald Fund, was the principal speaker.

In the course of his address on the future of the South, Mr. Embree had discussed the fuller development of the Negro's economic potentialities as one of the steps to be taken.

The doubt implied in the question quoted above is held by many, not only in its application to the Negro, but to all groups. It arises from surface thinking—an impression that education is a luxury and that a community or state is able to provide opportunities for a fixed number of educated people.

Actually education is a necessity. It is not a racial problem, but a human problem. However, since it is often discussed in its racial aspects it might be well to consider here whether Alabama can "afford" a drastic increase in its educated Negro population.

Suppose for an instant that every Negro within a radius of 50 miles of Birmingham was equipped to produce, or earn, 30 per cent more than he or she is now producing. This would mean that every factory worker was 30 per cent more efficient than he is now. It would mean that every service employe was 30 per cent more efficient in performing his job. It would mean that every Negro school teacher and professional worker was that much better equipped to do his or her job.

In addition it would mean that every cook, maid or nurse was equipped to do her job more effectively. Could Birmingham use more Negro cooks and maids who have a knowledge of sanitation, who know how to prepare better meals more economically, who know more about caring for children?

When we say "earn" 30 per cent more, we do not mean merely receiving that much additional wages, but being worth 30 per cent more to their employers or as independent workers because they are adding that much additional to the world's wealth or contributing it in improved services. Basically, that is the only way the sum total of our wealth is increased—in the producing or processing of additional products or in providing services for those engaged in such tasks.

In considering what it would mean to this district if the approximately 350,000 Negroes within a radius of 50 miles of Birmingham produced 30 per cent more, it is easy to see the important role of education. It is impossible to educate the mass without preparing leaders in college.

Education should fit the individual not only to be of more service to himself, but of greater service to society. Unless it does the latter, it is not education. Furthermore every man is either an economic liability or he is an economic asset—regardless of his race, creed or color.

Education should develop imagination and initiative. It should be preparing men and women to use our human and natural resources more effectively. The educated man does not become a drone in society. Consider any one of scores of Alabama industrialists who were educated in the state and have provided employment opportunities for others. They represent investments on the part of the public.

There is one plot of ground in Alabama which is less than six acres, but which today provides a livelihood for 238 people who are engaged directly in growing, processing and selling the products from that ground. Elsewhere in Alabama there are thousands of families who are living in poverty on 40 acres of land which is basically just as rich as the six acres.

In Mobile County, some of the most successful and largest nurseries are owned by Japanese. They are adding to the wealth of Alabama. From Baldwin County, several hundred thousand dollars worth of gladioli are shipped annually to Eastern and Midwestern cities.

Ability and imagination can utilize resources available in Alabama which otherwise would be worthless, or nearly so. Formal education is society's most effective technique for developing ability and imagination. As such, it is not a luxury but a necessity, regardless of race.

CASTE SYSTEM IN SOUTH CAROLINA.

One of South Carolina's ablest students of contemporary life and conditions recently made this assertion: "In South Carolina we have a caste system, and I am not referring to the racial situation, either. We have what is, in effect, a caste system that divides white tenant farmers from other white persons."

To support his assertion he referred to the disclosures in surveys conducted by Dr. Henry Fulmer and others, these disclosures showing plainly that the children of white tenant farmers receive much less education than do the children of white owner farmers.

The children of tenant farmers are more numerous than those of owner farmers. In the lowest primary grades they are a majority. But by the time high school is reached the tenant children are a small minority of the total enrollment, and in colleges they are almost non-existent.

"I have made some studies also," continued the studious gentleman in his talk with The State. "After a careful study of one county, in which the white population is about 80 per cent. of the total, I cannot find where any child of a white tenant farmer ever has been graduated from college. That's an astounding fact!

"No one has a right to assume a natural inferiority of tenants to owners. Given equal food the young children of the white tenants are equal to the young children of the white owners. But they do not have equal food, and that is one factor against them.

"Another factor—and this is where the caste idea comes in—is that the children of white tenant farmers often get, from somewhere or from everywhere, the unfortunate idea that they are a class apart."

A caste system in South Carolina? We have always had that, or something like it, operative in recial relations, but it is a bit shocking to hear a studious, intelligent and enthusiastic South Carolinian say we have right much the same system of division operative within the white groups.

"A revolution in viewpoint is needed," continued the gentleman. "Those who are not tenants must revise their opinions of tenants, and their treatment of tenants; and tenants must revise their opinions of themselves."

Holds Degrees from Colleges Are Valueless

New York, Dec. 10 [Special].—Most of the academic degrees awarded by universities were devised to meet the needs of medieval life and may mean nothing nowadays. Teaching positions and other vacancies thruout the country are being filled by degrees—not by men and women.

These comments on the value of scholastic awards were made in the annual report of the Carnegie Corporation of New York, presented today by its president, Frederick P. Keppel.

They supplemented the announcement that the corporation had made grants totaling $4,846,126 during the fiscal year of 1938-'39 to organizations in the United States and in the British dominions and colonies.

Established by Carnegie.

The foundation was established by Andrew Carnegie, the steel magnate, in 1911 "for the advancement and diffusion of knowledge and understanding among the people of the United States and the British dominions and colonies.' The program includes the support of educational and scientific research and the advancement of numerous educational agencies.

"Society's demands upon education," the report stated, "never very clear or constant, shift with such changes in our community life as the disappearance of the backyard, of farm chores, of the old relations between the master and the apprentice, and with the changing place of the church in society.

Cites Need of Money.

"Education needs money and those responsible for providing it are faced with actual want in many places and with uncertainty everywhere. Meanwhile, the new knowledge is piling up more rapidly than education can analyze it, digest it, and revise its curricula accordingly. Some of the new knowledge bears directly upon education's own processes.

"The prevailing confusion is revealed when one turns to the most conspicuous of the outward and visible signs of educational achievement.

"Academic degrees for the bachelor, master, and doctor were devised to meet the needs of medieval life in theology, law, medicine, and the arts. For centuries there was little or no change. In the 19th century the general pattern was broadened to make provision for such new branches as engineering.

Calls Increase Preposterous.

"Since then the creation of academic degrees has increased to a preposterous point in the United States. Only in a few strong professions, notably medicine and law, and the older branches of engineering, can it be said that the possession of a degree today necessarily means anything.

"Elsewhere, all too often, a degree as such may mean literally nothing. All over the country teaching and other vacancies are being filled by degrees, not by men and women, the appointing bodies accepting the diplomas as a substitute for the tiresome process of really finding out something as to the professional and personal qualifications of individual human beings.

"Sometimes the situation presents curious anomalies, as in the fine arts where the possession of a Ph. D., however much it may imply as to scholarly knowledge, all too often reflects the absence of creative interest and capacity on the part of the possessor."

Questions Training Machinery.

The report said it might be well to investigate whether the layman fully understands the significance of professional qualifications, and also whether the present machinery for training thruout the professions is working adequately.

It emphasized the importance of interprofessional contacts among doctors, lawyers, teachers, and other professionally trained persons. The first step, it said, may well be a better understanding of the reciprocal nature of the relationship between the professional and the layman.

Of the nearly $5,000,000 disbursed by the foundation in the last year, $1,157,325 was given for the arts, $1,253,650 for research, studies, and publications; $697,200 for library interests, $204,921 for adult education, and $1,533,030 for the general program of the corporation.

Group Gets Quarter Million.

The largest single grant of the year was $250,000 to complete the sum necessary to establish joint academic library services for Vanderbilt university, Peabody college, and Scarritt college at Nashville, Tenn.

Commenting on this grant, the report said it might well provide an example for the other communities having a group of educational institutions.

Grants of $500,436 were made for the British dominions and colonies. In Canada grants have been made primarily to continue research programs in colleges and universities and to forward library extension. In South Africa the funds were used chiefly for scientific inquiry, and in New Zealand and Australia emphasis has been on educational research, libraries, and social services.

ROLE OF CHRISTIAN COLLEGE IN NEGRO EDUCATION

By Robt. P. Daniel, President, Shaw University

As the president of a church-related college, I am especially interested in the significant contribution of the Christian college to Negro leadership. The earliest schools in behalf of the intellectual emancipation of this race in bondage were established by religious bodies. "They considered it a duty to give the Negro a chance, through Christian education, to rise in the human scale."

The denominational boards which were most active in the establishment of the church-related colleges that exist today are the Congregationalists, the Baptists, the Methodists and the Presbyterians. In recent years the educational programs for Negroes of the Protestant Episcopal Church and the Roman Catholic Church have been expanded to include four years of college work.

The Negro denominational boards which established schools and colleges are the African Methodist Episcopal Church, the African Methodist Episcopal Zion Church, the Colored Methodist Episcopal Church, and various Negro Baptist state conventions.

In my opinion the most significant program in support of religious training in our Negro colleges today is the contribution which the Home Mission Board of the Southern Baptist Convention is making to the salaries of professors of religion in eighteen of our colleges.

The oldest Negro college both in the North and in the South are church-related colleges. In the North are Lincoln University in Pennsylvania originally directed by the Presbyterian Chruch, and Wilberforce University in Ohio, supported by the African Methodist Episcopal Church. The oldest Negro college in the South of continued existence as one institution is Shaw University in North Carolina supported by the Negro General Baptist State Convention of North Carolina, the Board of Education of the Northern Baptist Convention, and the Home Mission Board of the Southern Baptist Convention.

The educational philosophy underlying the establishment of the denominational schools for Negroes is well expressed by Dr. Kelly Miller in his book "From Servitude to Service:"

"The higher education should be encouraged because of the moral impotency of all the modes of education which do not touch and stir the human spirit. It is folly to suppose that the moral nature of the child is improved because it has been taught to read and write and cast up accounts, or to practice handicraft. Rules in grammar, dates in history, sums in arithmetic, and points in geography do not strengthen the grasp or moral truth. The ability to saw to a line or hit a nail aplomb with a hammer does not create a zeal for righteousness and truth. It is only when the pupil comes to feel the vitalizing power of knowledge that it begins to react upon the life and to fructify the character."

Thousands of Negro leaders in America past and present are exhibits of the distinctive significance of Christian education. Indeed, the cause of public support of higher education of the Negro was greatly enhanced by the effectiveness of the program and the product of the Christian college in the South. The church-related colleges of the nature of Shaw University, Virginia Union University, Morehouse College and others are trying to answer the cry of the great host of Negroes of higher educational opportunities. Their work is especially the training of Christian leaders.

What, then, is involved in the program of the church-related college? Schools are not made of brick and mortar, but rather of the influence of are accustomed to measure those things that we regard as of the highest value in human lige.

Southern Baptist Home Mission wholesome instruction, of teachers of character, and of standards of the highest idealism.

The Christian college seeks to implant in young minds new ideals of life; it sets before them the highest modes of human conduct, gathered from the whole range of human history; it inculcates the soundest ethical principles, which are to be determining forces in influencing conduct and regulating character; it strives to awaken a spirit of unrest and discontent in any unworthy station, and to implant aspirations after the noblest and best that is attainable.

The Christian college is at once a seminary of learning and a training school of character; its ultimate aim is the improvement of the physical intellectual and moral status of every student within its walls, each one of whom shall go out from it with high ideals, seeking to renovate families and reform social abuses; to fight vice and crime, ignorance and superstition, and thus improve the industrial, social, political and religious condition of all upon whom their influence shall be brought to bear.

The Christian college is a central force working from within outward The Christian college is a dynamic force uprooting evil and implanting germs of good. The Christian college is an abiding force continuing its work through generation after generation, and setting no limits to its influence in time or space.

The Christian college thus takes its place among the most beneficent factors in the promotion of human civilization; its worth is measured only by the worth of the human soul and its dignity can be measured only by the standard with which we

A Lawyer's Strange Confession

Lawyer P. L. Hardin of Jackson, Tenn., is quoted in an Associated Negro Press release as having sounded off in condemnation of the legal proceedings instituted by the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, in an effort to protect the Constitutional rights of the young colored Tennesseans who have sought entrance to the University of Tennessee, as follows:

"I think we ought to have educational facilities equal to those of any other citizens, but we must realize we have two separate and distinct races in this country with the Negro a special subject.

"Have we as a race ever received any advantage out of any mixed school? I am ardently opposed to mixed schools. I don't think they're for the best interest of either race. I have not seen any of our group amount to anything worthwhile to the group who went to and finished a mixed school. If you can find just one, I'd like to see him and find what he looks like. The most I've seen are job hunters who never can fit into the group's program."

We feel sure that there is not a bigot of the white race nor an "Uncle Tom" of the Negro race who will not kick up his heels with glee when he reads this piece of clap-trap enunciated by Lawyer Hardin. Lawyer Hardin could be excused for his insult to the intelligence of the American people were he an ignorant man. But being, as he undoubtedly is, a man of considerable intelligence and influence in his community and the state he can not escape being accused of engaging in a crude form of publicity seeking among the most backward members of both the white and Negro races if the statement above quoted was made.

As a lawyer, Mr. Hardin knows full well that the application which the young colored men have made to enter the University of Tennessee was a proper legal step to take if Negroes of Tennessee are ever to have the "educational facilities equal to those of any other citizens," which he claims to desire.

He, as a lawyer, knows that unless these students, actually made an effort to enter the University of Tennessee and were refused admittance they would not know, as the courts would require them to know, that Tennessee is not providing for them "equal justice under law" in compliance with the recent decision of the Supreme Court.

Since the famous Supreme Court decesion was rendered we have had a session of the Tennessee Legislature and neither that body nor any other responsible state authorities have shown any purpose to establish in this state a Negro school which would provide for Negro citizens the same educational facilities that are provided for white students at the University of Tennessee. The failure of the Legislature and other state authorities to do anything to show that they meant to comply with the mandate of the United States Supreme Court had given rise to the belief that the Negroes of Tennessee would go to sleep on their rights and be as long in getting increased educational facilities as this state was in getting a Negro land grant college established.

Lawyer Hardin speaks the majority sentiment of Negroes and of whites in the South when he advocates separate schools for the two races. While such a system has practical reasons for its existence, it is nothing less than hypocrisy for any one to contend that separate schools for Negroes have produced a better citizenship than have the mixed schools in other parts of the country. The biggest boast that either race in the South has any reason to make for the separate school system is to say that it has trained its young people "as well" as the mixed schools have trained theirs. And it would be a hard strain on credulity even to believe that.

No Negro who ever went to a mixed school ever amounted to anything worthwhile "to the group," Lawyer Hardin says and the statement is bound to win for him the prize for cutting loose with the most ridiculous and irresponsible statement of the year.

Lawyer Hardin ought to get it out of his head that public education is being provided Negroes particularly to make them valuable cogs in any particular "group." Public education is intended to make all who receive it valuable members of society and loyal American citizens.' It is hoped and believed that if these beneficiaries of public education succeed in being good Americans they incidentally will be valuable members of the Negro "group."

Now to give a list of only a few colored Americans who were educated in so-called mixed schools and "whom not to know argues one's self unknown:"

Dr. George W. Carver was educated in "mixed" University of Iowa and got a better education there than any all-Negro college in the United States could give him.

Major Charles Young was educated in "mixed" West Point Military Academy and was such a notable soldier that many Americans wanted him named as a general at the time of the World War.

Dr. Carter G. Woodson was educated in "mixed" Berea College in Kentucky and who is there who can minimize his achievements in challenging the bigots who have written our histories with a deliberate purpose to ignore or belittle the part Negroes have played in making these United States the greatest nation of the world?

William Pickens, like hundreds of other Southern "boys," felt he could improve his value as a citizen by completing his education at "mixed" Yale University. He came back to his "group" and has been heard from pretty regularly during the past thirty-five years.

Paul Robeson was educated in Rutgers and Columbia and everybody in his "group" and outside of it says he is a valuable American. William H. Lewis of Boston who served as Assistant Attorney General of the United States is a graduate of Harvard University, as is Charles H. Houston, now being endorsed for appointment as a Justice of the Supreme Court. Our own Dean George W. Gore of A. and I State College is a graduate of "mixed" Depauw University and also of "mixed" Columbia. He has performed a notable service for the educational advancement of Tennessee.

Jesse Owens, trained at "mixed" Ohio State University, it will be conceded, did much better with that training than with what he would have gotten in his native Alabama.

The fact is, in every walk of life, colored men and women, trained in our "mixed" schools, are doing creditable work and it serves no good purpose to bear false witness against them.

Well-Known Men Will Speak At Education Meet

NEW YORK, Aug. 3 —(AP)— Stanley Baldwin, former British prime minister, Edouard Herriot former premier of Fance, Josiah Stamp, noted Bitish economist Winthrop Aldrich, New York banker, and other leading international figures, will address the Congress on Education for Democracy to be held here at Teachers' college, Columbia university Aug. 15, 16, and 17.

Dr. Nicholas Murray Butler president of Columbia is honorary chairman of the congress: William F. Russell, dean of Teachers' college, chairman, and Aldrich, vice chairman.

In explaining the purpose of the congress, Dean Russell said it was frankly experimental, but that if the meetings were successful the organization might be made permanent and a virogous effort launched to instill the teaching of democracy into American schools.

While many foreign leaders will address the congress, Dean Russell said, plans call for an emphasis on "how to make democracy work in the United States" rather than the formation of any international front of the so-called democratic nations.

The congress is financed by voluntary contributions "from wealthy Americans who are interested", according to Dean Russell.

Representative lay organizations included in the congress include the American Bankers association, American Federation of Labor, American Legion, United States Chamber of Commerce, National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, National Association of Manufacturers, National Grange and National Negro congress.

South Faces Problem in Negro Higher Education

Colored Man as Rule Anxious To Better Himself—Likes Farming

By RICHARD P. CARTER

He was what either a writer of fiction or reporter might aptly term a "typical negro of the deep south," with his worn overalls, his wide-brim straw hat and his much-used shoes through which a toe or two protruded, and a wide grin that showed strong white teeth that glistened in the sunshine.

He took off his hat and his hair was short and matted. He might have been twenty or thirty-five, so well preserved was he through years of living in the fields. He said he was thirty-three years old.

Unexpected Diversion

He was plowing cotton in an Alabama field. It wasn't a large field—a better term for it might be "a patch of cotton." And he was as contented and peaceful in appearance as the battered old mule that pulled his plow, only he had considerably more interest in life. The mule just stood stock still and flicked at the flies with his ears. The man was ready enough to stop and talk to me and rest a while at the end of a row. It was an unexpected diversion, an interruption in his day's schedule of cleaning the furrow between the stalks of fiber-yielding plants.

I offered him a quarter if he would let me photograph him with his mule and he agreed. He would have posed anyway, just for the fun of it. I asked him what he would do with the money, whether he would buy a drink on the sly or just throw the quarter away. His grin broadened—I had not thought such a broadening possible, he was in such a good humor anyway—until it covered his entire face and he said without hesitation that he would spend the money for smoking tobacco. Said he hadn't had any recently.

There were some cabins across the way, but he lived a little farther down the road and came to this cotton patch every morning to work it.

Did he own the cotton? No. He was "jest workin' it" for somebody else. Did the fellow who had stopped plowing over at the other side of the field own it? No, he was just working there too. Would he like to own his own cotton patch? Again the grin broadened and he said "Yes suh!" and said it in such a way you could not possibly doubt him.

Chances Slim

I began to wonder just how much of a chance he would ever have to own a cotton field and decided, on the basis of everything I had read and observed, they were pretty slim. He didn't want a big farm, either. Just a few acres to till. But he was vitally interested in the welfare of the cotton, no matter to whom it belonged, and that seemed the most important part of the whole roadside incident, which might be repeated every few miles or so down in Dixie. The incident emphasized that the southern negro is primarily an agriculturist, a rural individual who loves to cuddle the crops and work in the sunshine.

Undeniably, this is true. It leads naturally to speculation on the education of the southern negro, one of Dixie's most perplexing problems in a land where social and economic enigmas are as confusing and tantalizing as they can be.

The southern negro does not yet seem prepared for, or—on the whole—especially desirous of a "classical" education as such. His interests are too vocational, too agricultural in the majority of cases in the lower south. The southern negro makes a good farmer, if he works under supervision or if he has learned enough to work for himself. A good negro small-land-owning farmer usually is a solid citizen.

More Eager To Learn

Paralleling this, it is common knowledge that the negro of today is more eager to learn than he was a generation or even a decade ago. It is the responsibility of Dixie's ruling class to see this eagerness satisfied, and to see that the learning is directed into channels beneficial to both races.

The solution appears to lie not in too much emphasis on the so-called classical education in the lower schools, but on better opportunities for vocational training, and with concentration on agriculture. Offered the opportunities, I am convinced the Dixie negro would avail himself of considerable instruction in agriculture and like pursuits and continue to lean to them and not to play upon the more spectacular demands for "equality" in higher technical and professional education. The trend, though slow, is in this general direction.

Complex Problem

But the problem is far too complex for such simple treatment or settlement. Before the southern negro can be taught in school to do the work for which he is so well adapted by his physical and mental makeup, teachers must be provided. To provide them, better and broader facilities for higher education are needed in virtually all of the southern states.

This can be accomplished by only one of two methods—admitting negroes to the universities and colleges from which they are excluded, or by building up the higher negro institutions now functioning.

The first has its overpowering traditional and actual disadvantages, although the courts are showing a tendency to believe otherwise. The second involves an outlay of money which just does not exist in the south. It's something of an impasse, but—speaking strictly in a reportorial sense—it cannot remain that way much longer.

The south is coming face to face with the cold, bald fact that higher education must be provided for those few but determined negroes who want to study law, medicine and other professions. Leaders in the sundry campaigns for equality of treatment have their most sensational point to make here, and are making it.

May Be Answer

I talked the other day with a well known southern educator, a man who has spent his life teaching in a southern university, who believes an intense program of vocational instruction may provide an answer to the puzzle—he wants the negro to have the education that will benefit him most. He confessed an assurance that something will have to be done to meet negro demands for higher education in Dixie and his preferred solution was bolstering the curriculums in negro colleges, expanding these colleges.

What, then, of the negro in the cotton field? Does he really want to learn?

Dr. F. G. Lankford, Jr., assistant professor of education at the University of Virginia, put it this way in a discussion of public education in the south:

"* * * * the negro is using the educational provisions made for him as well as the white is using those provided for him."

MARYLAND LAW ADMITS THIRD RACE STUDENT

Association Ready For Action In Missouri And Tennessee

NEW YORK, Sept. 29—"We have succeeded in keeping the doors of the University of Maryland open to Negro students," Thurgood Marshall, special counsel for the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People announced here Friday, as the organization's fight to open the doors of southern and border-state universities to Race students moved forward in three states this week.

Marshall made the statement following receipt of a telegram from George B. Murphy, of Baltimore, Md., announcing that his son, William, had been enrolled in the University of Maryland law school on Wednesday, Sept. 19.

Murphy represents the third student to be admitted to the Maryland law school since the N.A.A.C.P. won its victory before the Maryland court of appeals in 1935.

At that time the high court decided that the University of Maryland had to open its law school to Donald Gaines Murray until such time as identical facilities could be set up in Maryland. Murray finished his course at the school last year and has since passed the state bar examination.

Asked to Withdraw

William Murphy, whose case represents the first victory in the association's roster of eight cases now under way this year, applied for entrance to the University of Maryland law school last February.

A graduate of Oberlin college, he has attempted several times to get an answer to his application from the registrar, W. M. Hillegeist, without success.

On September 9 he conferred with President Curly Byrd, at the latter's request. At this conference, he said that President Byrd told him that unless he withdrew his application he would not be notified whether he would be accepted or rejected.

Following this conference the N.A.A.C.P., whose assistance Murphy had asked for, drafted a letter for him which was sent to the registrar of the law school, demanding an immediate answer to the application.

In the letter Murphy advised Hillegeist that, unless he received an immediate answer or if his application was refused, he would take the necessary legal steps to protect his rights.

Phones Murphy

As a result of this letter, President Byrd phoned Carl Murphy, uncle of the student, on September 16, stating that Murphy would be accepted for registration.

Murphy was represented by Thurgood Marshall, special N.A.A.C.P. counsel; Edward Lovett, of the organization's national legal staff; and W. A. C. Hughes Jr., of the association's Baltimore branch.

Action Pending

The University of Missouri, despite the Supreme Court ruling handed down December 12, 1938 ordering the school to open its doors to Lloyd Gaines, refused for a second time to do so, when Miss Lucille Bluford, managing editor of the Kansas City Call, appeared on the campus and sought to enter the school of journalism September 14.

According to Registrar S. W. Canada, Miss Bluford should have made application to Lincoln university for these courses. He refused to heed the plea that Lincoln university offers no such courses.

Since the Supreme Court decision in the Gaines case, the state supreme court of Missouri has reversed itself and ordered the law school to be opened to Race students or equal facilities supplied within the state.

The state has set up a Race law school in St. Louis, with an appropriation of $200,000 as its answer.

Wednesday, when the school's 19 students appeared to register, they were met with a picket line protesting that the school was a "makeshift" arrangement that did not meet the court's decision.

The pickets urged that Race students be admitted to the University of Missouri law school.

Action in both the Gaines and Bluford cases is being prepared by Sidney Redmond and Charles H. Houston, both members of the association's national legal staff. The Kansas City, Mo., branch of the association has sent a check for $150 to continue the Gaines case.

Applicants Ready

L. A. Ransom, chief counsel in the association's fight to gain admission for six students to the University of Tennessee, announced Friday at Knoxville, that the students, none of whose applications have been acted upon by the university board of trustees, will present themselves on the campus of the school for enrollment, September 25 and 26.

They will be accompanied by Carl Cowan, local N.A.A.C.P. attorney.

Ransom, in association with Cowan, and Z. Alexander Looby, Nashville attorney, has been in Knoxville during the past week, inspecting the minutes of the university's trustee boafd, interviewing the applicants, and inspecting the university's records.

The trustees have not rejected the applicants, Ransom said (no court action can be undertaken unless the students are rejected) but Secretary of the University Hess arranged a conference Wednesday, Sept. 20, between President James Hoskins and the lawyers.

At this conference, according to Dr. Ransom, President Hoskins urged the N.A.A.C.P. to have the applicants withdraw in order not to impair "good race relations." The suggestion was refused.

All of the applicants have also refused to withdraw their applications. he said.

NAACP Reports Fight To Open Doors Of South, Border-State Schools To Race Goes Forward

Important Victory Clears Way For NAACP Action In Mississippi And Tennessee, Leaders Announce

NEW YORK, N. Y.—"We have succeeded in keeping the doors of the University of Maryland open to Negro students," Thurgood Marshall special counsel for the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People announced here Friday as the organization's fight to open the doors of southern and border-state universities to Negroes moved forward on three fronts.

Marshall made the statement following receipt of a telegram from George B. Murphy, of Baltimore, Md., announcing that his son, William, had been enrolled in the University of Maryland Law School on Wednesday, September [illegible].

THIRD STUDENT ADMITTED

Murphy represents the third student to be admited to the Maryland law school since the NAACP won its victory before the Maryland Court of Appeals in 1935. At that time the high court decided that the University of Maryland had to open its law school to Donald Gaines Murray until such time as identical facilities could be set up in Maryland. Murray finished his course at the school last year and has since passed the state bar examination.

William Murphy, whose case represents the first victory in the Association's roster of eight cases now under way this year, applied for entrance to the University of Maryland Law School last February. A graduate of Oberlin College, he has attempted several times to get an answer to his application from the registrar, W. M. Hillegeist, without success.

CONFERS WITH SCHOOL HEAD

On September 9, he conferred with President Curly Byrd, at the latter's request. At this conference, he said that President Byrd told him that unless he withdrew his application he would not be notified whether he would be accepted or rejected.

Following this conference the NAACP, whose assistance Murphy had asked for, drafted a letter for him which was sent to the registrar of the law school, demanding an immediate answer to the application. In the letter Murphy advised Hillegeist that, unless he received an immediate answer or if his application was refused, he would take the necessary legal steps to protect his rights.

As a result of this letter, President Byrd phoned Carl Murphy, uncle of the student, on September 16, stating that Murphy would be accepted for registration. Murphy was represented by Thurgood Marshall, special NAACP counsel; Edward Lovett of the organization's national legal staff; and W. A. C. Hughes, Jr., of the association's Baltimore Branch.

ACCEPTED BY STUDENTS

"The successful conclusion of this case," Marshall said, "means that we have to keep this school open to Negroes. The important gain in the Donald Gaines Murray case, was not only that we succeeded for the first time in opening the doors of a southern university to Negroes, but that he was accepted by the students of the school without friction, graduated in the first third of his class, and subsequently passed the state bar Thus the basis for the claim that scholarship laws or separate state universities are necessary or wise is completely destroyed. The determination of the NAACP to keep the University of Maryland open to Negroes is a symbol of our program for full educational opportunities for Negro citizens."

Group Behavior At Football Games

Persons who have opportunity to watch the conduct at different football games, especially police officers and near-by parking lot attendants, have found that marked differences exist in the behavior of different groups.

While exceptions occur, the best-behaved crowds are usually those which attend football games between Negro schools. Next in conduct are the high school games. Then come the small colleges, such as Howard and Birmingham - Southern locally. The worst games, in point of conduct among the spectators, are those between large colleges.

A number of reasons might be advanced for this. The Negroes interested in college life and activities come for the most part from the most law-abiding elements of their race. High school students, while enthusiastic and boisterous, are generally pretty well disciplined. Furthermore, ideals of sportsmanship are drilled into them regularly at school, here in Birmingham at least. At college games, as far as the local institutions are concerned, a stronger religious influence is at work to keep down rowdyism among students and alumni than in the case of some other games. Also, it is generally alumni, rather than students, who cause trouble at football games; alumni feel a keener sense of loyalty to their colleges than to their high schools and consequently attend the college games more. And finally, it is the better played college games that draw spectators from the general public, many of whom are out for a general good time, regardless of law and decency.

But with all these reasons, it still remains a discredit to the white race that crowds at Negro football games are better behaved. It is still a reflection on "higher learning" that crowds at college games are more disorderly than those at high school games. It does little good to the claims that big schools produce a broader culture when football meetings between the larger colleges draw more rowdy crowds than do the games of smaller colleges. And such phrases as the wisdom of age and years of discretion mean nothing when alumni behave worse than undergraduates.

DISCUSSION

FROM AN EDITOR'S NOTE BOOK

RAPHAEL O'HARA LANIER, assistant to the Director of Negro Affairs, National Youth Administration, made a decidedly fine impression in the two addresses he made in Norfolk. Both in his commencement address and his talk before the Grace Church Forum, Mr. Lanier modestly, and properly, talked about the problems of youth, omitting references to, or commitments by the Federal agency he represents. He is something of an expert on vocational problems, by training and experience. As dean of Houston's unique municipal college it was his privilege to gain valuable experience in a department of secondary education in which the Texas city is a pioneer and leader. The Houston institution represents one of the two southern adventures in the municipally supported public school system beyond the high school level, the other being the Louisville Municipal College. In Houston the emphasis is upon vocational training. The general trend is in that direction, which is to say that public school education is being adjusted to best serve the 85 per cent who after high school or junior college have to find jobs, if there are any around for which they are fitted.

* * * *

Some questions put to Mr. Lanier during the Forum question period indicated that there is not a working familiarity with the National Youth Administration on the part of some of the people this agency is designed to benefit. That is due, undoubtedly, to the scant part which Virginia colored people have in the machinery set up in the State to integrate eligible youths within the NYA program. We have a part-time assistant-to-the-administrator who is working under an arrangement with the Negro Organization Society, who pays half of his salary. We doubt if any such arrangement obtains in any other State in the Union. We do not say this as a reflection upon Mr. Carpenter. He is doing a good job in the time at his disposal. His should be a full-time NYA job.

* * * *

According to a report just released the National Youth Administration expended last year in aiding college students in Virginia the sum of $236,715.00. Of this amount students in Negro colleges received $31,680 and students in white colleges received $205,035. If this distribution was on the basis of college students registered by the respective races, the allotments are probably in the correct ratio. Students in 34 white colleges were aided, while there are only eight colored institutions that come within the college classification. We received 13 per cent of the student aid extended by NYA, which was about in line with what we were due to receive on a basis of college registration. There is one question that remains to be answered. How many deserving youths remained out of college for the want of just the amount of aid extended by National Youth Administration?

THE LIVING CHURCH, organ of the Protestant Episcopal Church, published in New York City, devotes an editorial in the first issue of each year to "an honor roll of distinguished Christians who have rendered notable service to Christ and His Church during the previous year." We are glad to find Lieut. Lawrence A. Oxley, formerly of Raleigh, now of Washington, on the honor roll of The Living Church for 1938. The citation in part: "Lieutenant Oxley, a recognized leader of his people, both in the nation and in the Church, has made a notable contribution . . . . to the cause of better understanding between white and colored Churchmen and the improvement of the Church's ministry to Negroes." Mr. Oxley is cited particularly for his work in connection with the Joint Commission on Negro Work. He is a busy man, holding an important post in the United States Department of Labor, but he finds time to lend his talents to the advancement of religion among men. The Most Rev. Henry St. George Tucker, D.D., Bishop of Virginia and Presiding Bishop of the Church is also included in this honor roll. "Under his spiritual leadership," reads the citation, "the whole Church is moving forward with a new unity and a common purpose. It is recorded that in his first year as primate Bishop Tucker has visited every province in the Church."

PROFESSOR C. H. Hamlin, head of the department of Social Science at Atlantic Christian College, Wilson, North Carolina, never misses an opportunity to record himself on the side of social justice. We have received a letter from him in which he says: "I have just written to President Newcomb of the University of Virginia urging that Negroes be admitted to graduate and professional work there. I have urged the same at Chapel Hill." Mr. Hamlin is a graduate of the University of Virginia class of 1917. The university at Charlottesville may be counted upon to be the last among the border state universities to do what Mr. Hamlin suggests, as long as there is any way to prevent it and everyone may count upon the classic institution founded by Thomas Jefferson to find a way out. But it is good to hear from a real liberal like Mr. Hamlin, who received his education at Charlottesville. Up there he would be classed as a "radical." Over at Wilson, where he heads an important department in a small liberal arts college supported by the Christian Church he has helped to create an atmosphere of academic freedom. If it were not so he would not be there.

A FEW weeks ago the writer went to Piedmont Sanatorium, at Burkeville, as a member of a committee headed by Dr. T. R. Lovelace, president of the Old Dominion Medical Society. Our mission was to interview Dr. J. B. Woodson, medical director of the sanatorium, on a matter of mutual interest to the medical society and our citizens generally. We were impressed first by the general improvements that have been made to the plant since our last visit there six years ago. The attractive Nurses Home, which is now being enlarged, was the first improvement that attracted our attention. Interviewing State officials, especially those under the Health Department, is not always a pleasant experience —at least, it is not always a satisfying experience. But Dr. Woodson "took us in." He was so genial, cordial and hospitable, that we were made to feel immediately at ease, and our task, which we had imagined would be a little difficult, was made easy.

The genial Dr. Woodson is a versatile man. Physician, farmer, industrialist and law-maker, his interests run in many directions. For about 30 years he has been a member of the Virginia General Assembly, now serving in the Senate, of which branch he has been an important leader for many years. When the State placed him in charge of the Piedmont Sanatorium he was handed a man's job. To Piedmont he carried a wealth of experience which has served him generously in developing a long range program, which is well on the way toward reaching its objective. He showed us the blue prints of the new 150 bed unit now under construction. This unit, when completed, will double the present capacity. Dr. Woodson had it planned so that four wings can be added, gradually increasing the bed capacity until it is doubled again. This building, three stories high, will be one of the most modern facilities in the southern states for the treatment of the tubercular.

Dr. Woodson's versatility has saved the State many dollars. He has a mechanical turn of mind and likes to handle machinery as a hobby. Following this hobby he has assembled at Piedmont a machine shop that would do credit to a much larger institution. Some of the machinery he placed at his own expense in order to make the shop complete. As a result his mechanics can repair any breakdown that may occur to the heating, lighting or sewage systems at the institution. He drew the plans for the Nurses Home and superintended the construction, saving the State about $10,000 in the operation. He speaks of retirement when his building program is completed, because he is approaching "three score and ten." But he appears "no ways tired." He gives one the impression of a man who possesses an abundance of health and enthusiasm. He has rendered yeoman service to the State.

TNYA Socio-Economic Survey.

A survey of socio-economic conditions among the Negroes of Virginia is being conducted by the State Department of Education under the direct supervision of Dr. Fred Alexander, Supervisor of Negro Education, and a committee of specialists in the fields of sociology and economics of several white and Negro colleges of the State. The survey in Virginia Bristol is under the direction of Principal Hayes and the faculty of Douglas High School.

The purpose of this survey, generally speaking, is to secure data on conditions, trends and problems of the Negro; to find the outstanding cause of present conditions, social, economic and political; to discover prevailing attitudes toward the Negro; also the attitudes of white employers of colored labor; to create greater occupational opportunities for Negroes in Virginia; to arouse among them a greater interest in schools and school affairs; to create among them a greater sense of responsibility in their work and in their relation to the community; to discover their attitudes toward themselves and their problems; to stimulate better interracial feeling, and to make for better citizens.

The information which this survey will develop will be of value. It will throw light on present social and economic conditions among the Negro population of Virginia and will indicate the measures that need to be taken to improve those conditions. Attainment of the objective of this movement will require the cooperation of the Negroes themselves, but that doubtless will be forthcoming. We believe the result of the survey will show that the Negroes of Bristol are as progressive and as wisely led as those of any other part of the State or country. Any movement looking to a solution of their social and economic and other problems will command their interest. As to interracial relations, it is safe to say they are as friendly in this community as anywhere.

NEGRO EDUCATION

The filing of an application for admission to the University of North Carolina graduate school by a Negress now living in New York has the appearance of a move to accentuate the Negro graduate and professional school issue while the legislature is in session. Which is not surprising and need not be disturbing, though we would call it ill-timed.

It happens that on the very day the application reached President Graham's desk Governor Hoey was delivering his biennial message to the legislature and was recommending the launching of graduate and professional school facilities for Negroes.

The legislature, of course, is yet to pass judgment on the governor's recommendation and the starting of noise over an application by a Negress for admission to the state university may appeal to some as a good way to persuade the legislature to act favorably. And that strategy may be sound. We think not, but we shall soon see.

That aside, the governor's position on the question impresses us as being sound.

Rational members of both races understand that the policy of segregation of races with respect to schools is a fixed one in this part of the country. No one in his right mind favors trying to abandon or materially amend that policy at this juncture.

Reasonable members of both race understand, too, that it is essential that the inadequacy of facilities for offering graduate and professional instruction to members of the Negro race be recognized and immediate steps taken to remedy the situation. Simple justice demands as much and the Missouri case, as it has become known, compels it.

It is no credit to the state that it waited until confronted with the force of a supreme court decision to move to discharge its full educational obligations to its Negro citizens. But it is too late to argue about that now. The task now is to face the problem as it is and try to deal realistically with it.

How best can we, as a state, go about that task? First off, we can't turn in and build at one stroke a fullfledged graduate school, a medical school, a law school, a school of pharmacy and other schools that might attract one or two Negro students. If we could do that, it would be perfect foolishness to do so. Moreover, he who takes the reasonable and realistic view well knows that the potential supply of students is not sufficient to justify the building of graduate and professional schools for Negroes in every southern state. No responsible spokesman for the Negro race that we have ever heard of subscribes to any such program.

What North Carolina can do and ought to do this year is add modest graduate school facilities to established Negro schools. And not because it happens to be located in Durham but because it offers the best foundation, the beginning should be made in connection with the North Carolina College for Negroes. With the graduate school, of course, should go commitments providing for the gradual establishment of such professional school facilities as demand warrant and resources permit.

There is no occasion for bitter controversy and no necessity of a tremendous outlay, to start with. It will require appropriations, of course, and profound thought on the part of the governor and legislative leaders.

ALABAMA'S SYSTEM OF HIGHER EDUCATION

The time has come in Alabama to reopen the discussion of ways and means of unifying the State's system of higher education.

Many States already have faced the problem and have found a satisfactory method of unification and centralized direction. North Carolina is the most conspicuous example in the South. Georgia has what is called a University System, which embraces Georgia Tech and the University of Georgia. Emory and Agnes Scott in Atlanta have formulated a cooperative program, which has been blessed by the General Education Board with a grant of $2,500,000.

The Birmingham News thinks that a Birmingham university, built on the foundations of Howard and Birmingham-Southern, and perhaps also in cooperation with the Birmingham Conservatory of Music, the University of Alabama extension service in Birmingham, and the Birmingham School of Law, would benefit the whole State and attract the attention of foundations interested in education.

The General Education Board, supported by Rockefeller monies, is in the process of liquidation, and it is distributing its funds in cities where cooperative programs have been developed. The several institutions in Nashville, including Vanderbilt and Peabody, have combined their library facilities with the encouragement of a handsome gift from the General Education Board.

It is reported that the Board would like to see Birmingham organize a cooperative and coordinated system of higher education. "Atlanta," says The Birmingham News, "has been four years developing its plan for the university center. The work began with a survey designed to study the city's educational opportunities and needs. The plan has reached the point where there is already being put into effect arrangements for exchange of students and teachers in certain departments, for library exchanges, for cooperative buying and coordination in summer school work."

It would seem that now is the opportune time for Birmingham to consider a reorganization. Howard's president has recently resigned, and the college is in need of new leadership. Birmingham-Southern has a new president who, from all accounts, has won the complete confidence and respect of all his associates. The President of the University of Alabama is interested in the development of higher education in the whole State.

The Anniston Star applauds the Birmingham idea—which apparently is just an idea—and urges again that there be fuller cooperation among all the State's colleges and universities. Duplications are costly: an engineering school, for example, is maintained at the University as well as at Auburn. The State supports too many teachers' colleges. There are denominational institutions competing with each other and struggling for existence. Then there are the Negro schools. Like other Southern States Alabama is too poor to afford waste, too much competition and over-lapping of educational programs.

It needs to concentrate on a few instead of wasting its money on the many. As Dr. Howard Odum has pointed out, the South "has no university or college of agriculture or engineering school of the first rank, and affords no advanced instruction of the highest order in many of the subjects now demanded in the newer developments in politics, business, agriculture, industry, land utilization."

Furthermore, in the South "the teaching load of faculty members is about a third heavier and salaries about a third less than for the best of the nation's colleges and universities. So, too, in terms of the highest degree less than fifty per cent of the faculties hold the doctor's degree compared with about 75 per cent of the corresponding schools elsewhere."

Those facts underscore the need for cooperation instead of conflict among Southern colleges and universities. The General Education Board has recognized the necessity for one or two first-rate Southern institutions, and therefore has appropriated millions of dollars for the benefit of Vanderbilt, the University of North Carolina and the institutions in New Orleans. It would look with favor upon cooperative efforts in Alabama, but probably would not be quick to give money to an isolated Alabama institution.

The whole trend of higher education is toward cooperation and coordination of facilities. In recent years Alabama has gone in the opposite direction. It is time for a change.

DISCUSSION

Are They "Going To The Dogs?"

Poll, Conducted By W. Va. Educator, Begets Wide Variety Of Opinions--"A Car, Cigarette, A Hot Band And A Bottle Of Gin All They Think About," Says College Prexy--But 76% Believe He'll Get Along O.K.

PHILADELPHIA, Pa., May 4—Young Negroes will not "go to the dogs," even though they seem headed that way, in the opinion of a poll of 100 people in all parts of the country, representing all segments of Negro life, as reported in the May issue of the Kappa Alpha Psi Journal by I. J. K. Wells, State Supervisor of Negro Schools in West Virginia.

Although only 18 per cent voted that the youth of the race is hopeless, this majority was very outspoken in its condemnation. 76 per cent believed that youth is not going to the dogs, and six per cent professed seeing no difference between present-day young people and their elders, and between the 1939 edition of youth and young people of all times.

Even those who gave a general vote favorable to youth, however, pointed out many examples of youth sliding downwards in their ideals, attitudes, habits and general development.

"It will be noticed from the summary of the check list," the author points out, "that reverence for parents, chivalry towards women and girls and the weaker members of society, religion, patience, sex matters, indicate that youth is taking an awful tumble in the minds of the jury.

"If the youth is not going to the dogs, they are certainly headed this way."

Most of the jury thinks, however, that youth "has larger social, economic, and political goals, that he is more social-minded; more race-conscious; possesses more creative tendencies, and is trying to live longer and healthier."

Youth Doesn't Want To Work To Achieve Goal

"Youth needs balance," wrote one elementary school teacher.

The president of a large insurance company believes that "Youth is inclined to seek positions without having served an apprenticeship," while the dean of men at an eastern school asserts that "youth must develop the habit of hard work in the interest of worthwhile social principal. "Youth needs to learn how to stick, for this is a test of character, they are afraid to risk; they lack reliability in labor."

An Ohio river man said: "Present-day Negro youth needs to be more patient, self-sacrificing, more of the 'work-it-out-along-this-line-if-it-takes-all-summer' spirit, courageous, more idealistic, more self-reliant."

goals.

"He must learn to accept the consequences of his actions; he must learn the importance of thoroughness in any job to which he puts his hands."

A college president from the blue grass State had this interesting comment on college youth, according to Mr. Wells:

"They are predominantly pleasure-seekers. Just another good orchestra and another hot dance is their daily and weekly goal. A car, a cigaret and too, frequently a bottle of gin are the equipment which they use and idolize in others."

In his own conclusions, the West Virginia educator-author declared that "no matter where youth is going now, he will not get to the dogs."

Ready To Gamble But Not To Sacrifice

One college official wrote that "youth is emancipated," but not going to the dogs. "It knows a lot more than its elders, it is not afraid of anything; it has real courage; it is eager to advance, to change, to try something else.

But it is also light-hearted; it is selfish; it is intolerant of restraint. It does not believe in fair play; it is ready to gamble but not to sacrifice; it is ready to die for a cause but not to live for it."

"When it comes to real activity, Negro youth is not worth a tinker's damn," declared one high school

3,467 COLLEGE GRADUATES, MAGAZINE SURVEY REVEALS

NEW YORK, (SNS)—A total of 3,467 college graduates received diplomas of one kind or another in June, 1939, according to the annual education number of The Crisis magazine. Of these, 2,820 received the bachelor degree from Negro colleges and 173 from mixed colleges. The masters degree went to 182, with 42 being awarded at Howard, 34 at Atlanta, and 17 at Fisk. Meharry and Howard each graduated 30 doctors of medicine. There were 12 doctors of philosophy. Howard university had the largest enrollment among Negro colleges, with 2403, while New York university, with 556, had the largest enrollment among mixed colleges.

THE COST OF A YEAR IN COLLEGE.

How much does it cost to go to college? This question is answered in a news release from Teachers college, of Columbia university, and here is the answer:

According to figures compiled by the United States Office of Education, the average typical costs of students attending co-educational colleges are as follows: Privately controlled institutions, $979; Roman Catholic institutions, $635; Protestant denominational institutions, $480; State controlled institutions and State and City teachers' colleges, $314; Negro colleges, $260.

These figures include room, board, tuition, fees, books, laundry, supplies, and other personal expenses. Since these costs are averaged, the expenses may be higher in some institutions.

For non-co-educational institutions the costs were found to be higher. In general the typical cost for students attending men's colleges is higher than that for women's colleges, and both are higher than for co-educational institutions.

Leaders In Various Fields On Program

Dr. E. M. Colson Is In Charge of Arrangements

PETERSBURG, Va.—A modern discussion school, in which problems of present day importance to agricultural, educational and social welfare will be discussed, will be held at Virginia State College July 31 through August 3.

DR. COLSON

The school was made possible through cooperative arrangement with the program study and discussion section of the Agricultural Adjustment Administration and the education and recreation department of the WPA of Virginia.

Outstanding national leaders in the fields of agriculture, education and sociology will discuss these problems before the Summer School student body and faculty and WPA adult education teachers and supervisors.

The conference will consider as its general theme "What is a Desirable Rural Life Program?"

The following nationally known persons will serve as discussion leaders: Walter R. Chivers, department of sociology, Morehouse College; Furman G. McLarty, department of philosophy, Duke University; Carl F. Taeusch, director, division of program planning, agricultural adjustment administration, U. S. Department of Agriculture; Charles S. Johnson, department of social science, Fisk University; and Doxey A. Wilkerson, department of education, Howard University.

These leaders will discuss such problems as 'The Place of Government in Modern Society," "The Relation of Government to Social and Economic Affairs," "The Place of Government in Education," "Conservation of Natural and Human Resources," "Population Problems," "Problems of Social Adjustment," and others.

DEMONSTRATION IN EDUCATION METHODS

The conference will present two sessions each day, a morning session beginning at 9:00 a. m., and ending at 12 noon, and an afternoon session beginning at 2:00 and ending at 4:00.

The afternoon hours of the first and third days will be devoted to discussion in small groups under the leadership of the Virginia State College faculty and the conference members.

The conference will be divided in the afternoon into groups of 25 or 30 persons each, who will focus their attention on the materials of the morning lectures as they bear on the group interests.

A general assembly and informal panel discussion will be substituted for the small group discussions on the afternoon of the second day with visiting staff members and members of the college faculty and student body.

DR. HALL TO SPEAK

The subject of this panel discussion will be, "What Part Should Government Play in Solving our Social and Economic Problems?" This discussion follows the discussion led by Dr. Sidney B. Hall, superintendent of Public Instruction of Virginia, on "The Place of Government in Education."

The arrangement of this discussion school is in keeping with the newer trends and practices in education and is the first such discussion school and institute arranged in cooperation with the United States Department of Agriculture for a Negro group or at a Negro institution. Dr. Edna M. Colson, director of education at Virginia State College, is in charge of arrangements.

Coordinators to the arrangement of this conference are: Hugo H. Johnston, dean of the college; John M. Lockett, director of the school of agriculture; and Samuel A. Madden, supervisor Negro WPA adult education.

Negro Education In U. S. Is Advancing, Survey Says

Is Still Lagging Behind Accepted Standards, Officials Point Out.

A government survey disclosed that negro education had made marked advances in the last 20 years, but still lagged behind accepted standards.

Estimating the number of 1935-36 graduates from negro public high schools in 18 southern states at 18,500, office of education experts said that number was 50 per cent more than all the negroes enrolled in high cchool in 1915-16.

Then, only 58 per cent of the negro children 6 to 14 years old were attending school. In 1930-31, the percentage was 84. Between 1931-32 and 1935-36, the negro elementary school enrollment increased 1.5 per cent to 2,250,-045, and negro high school enrollment increased 39 per cent to 188,936.

White and Black

An old man came into this newspaper office a couple of days ago. He was black with the mark of Africa untouched by any lighter strain. He wore a gray beard and had a jovial dignity which made him welcome. He introduced himself as a bishop and sat down to talk.

He talked well. He wanted to continue work which he said he started almost 50 years ago to teach young members of his own race. He said he was 80-something years old.

He spoke in generalities, but what he said was sense. He said his race, brought here bodily and by force, has advanced far more rapidly in the comparatively brief span of time since the first slaves were landed on these shores than in any other period of several thousand years.

He readily recognized that advancement is not complete. He remarked that the white race here is the product of thousands upon thousands of years of civilized experience. Grafted on this stem of progress, he suggested, it is remarkable that the Negro race has absorbed as much of the stream of culture as it has. But the job is just begun.

"The young people of my race," he said. "Forget this and they want to try to take all the progress which has been the heritage of the white race for scores of generations."

It was his contention that while the progress of the Negro race, in association with the white race, appears slow, and the future seems almost hopeless, the progress has been fast and the future is bright.

The Negro race is passing through a searing crucible in which the processes of racial change have been speeded by some alchemy of life. This passage is painful. It has taken the tragedy of slavedom and now it is taking the slow pain of grinding poverty and endless labor. This may go on for many more generations for civil evolution is a ponderous thing.

This viewpoint somehow makes the problem of racial relations in the South seem much simpler. Frankly, what frightens most white Southerners in thinking about the race relations of the future is the idea of social equality for Negroes.

This seems hardly worth worrying about. In the first place, segregation will disappear gradually and naturally as the classification of the Negro race as a whole grows less defined. As more and more members of that race absorb the information and the training which will make it possible for them to fill more nad more jobs outside the labor and domestic servant groups, there will be a decreasing feeling that "Negro" is complete discription and classificaton of any member of the race. The outstanding members of it will come more and more to be regarded by whites and Negroes alike merely as scientists, businessmen or artists—whatever they are.

EDUCATION- 1939

DISCUSSION

CHERISH IDEALS RATHER THAN MEAL TICKETS

There is one fundamental ideal that must be gotten into the heads of the Negro youth, as he leaves college each year; or his education will prove un-education instead of real education; and that one fundamental is, that temporary security is no substitute for human liberty. To cherish ideals instead of meals. The Negro youth must see as the white youth sees; that man cannot live on bread alone, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God. Nobody will deny that there is some merit in the New Deal; and that its policies have done a part of the people some good. But where does it lead all the people to? Nowhere.

The young Negro must think beyond his day and time. He must have visions of the future of his race. He must think in terms of centuries and of achievements, in the fields of letters, economics and politics. He must look forward to the day, when other people will look to his race, for guidance, religion and relief, as he looks to others today, for support and progress. Thinking in terms of bread alone, will lift the individual, or his race, up to this utopia of confidence and security. Government was not instituted to take care of men, but instituted for men to support and take care of government. Man is master, and government is servant.

Negroes must seek and cherish liberty and freedom, and not jobs and bread. The man who is free and at liberty to act and think for himself, without interference from the other fellow; will always have bread, and a voice in directing the affairs of the government, of which he is part and parcel; but the poor creature who is satisfied to eat bread from the hands of another out of the Government till, will end in the loss of both his bread and freedom; and will never have a voice in selecting those who measure out to him the food he subsists upon.

Great men like Senator Robert A. Taft of Ohio, are laboring hard to make the Negro see that eating bread out of the Government trough spells the end of their liberty, and the independence of the white man's supported by the Government's policy of discrimination against citizens on the grounds of race, color and previous condition of servitude. In finality, what do a thousand petty Federal jobs mean to the race, when the liberty and freedom of 13,000,000 American citizens, is the price paid in exchange? Must we give up the right to vote, to be free men and women, for a seat in the national poorhouse at the dole table, where white political henchmen hand out to us a quart of molasses; two pounds of sow belly; a half a peck of meal, or $2.50 a week to feed a family of four, while a white family of four receives double the amount the Negro receives.

We must use our heads to think what we are going to do, when relief fails, because of the bankruptcy of the Government. Relief has not paid Negroes enough wages to save a dollar for a rainy day. When relief is over, persons who have lived on it, will be poorer in money and morale than they were the day the Government took them over, and has been working them on half pay, and feeding them on half rations. The morale of the people on relief is gone, self initiative is dead; hope has completely fled from their breasts, and the only thought they have is bread to keep soul and body to gether, until death comes along. Nothing spiritually is left in the man; merely government support. Shall we make economic and political paupers of ourselves, by substituting bread for ideals?

Kelly Miller, one of the races' leading educators, in advising the 1939 graduates of his race, to cherish ideals instead of meals, fittingly remarked:

"If these 3,000 graduates should consecrate themselves as missionaries of service in face of the whitened harvest field, saying: "here am I, O Lord, send me," our colleges and universities would be abundantly vindicated. But if they insist mainly upon better payroll facilities then the efforts of philanthropy and statesmanship to provide and maintain college and universities will in the end prove to be mainly vanity and vexation of spirit.

I am presuming upon my seventy-five years of age and fifty years of service in the field of higher education as qualifying me as commencement advisor extraordinary. This is my last word to the gradutes of 1939—"Go forth into the vineyard already white unto harvest and cherish ideals rather than meals."

But the so-called higher education of the Negro has fallen upon evil days. The college graduate is carried away with the job objective. He is too often prone to enter the mad rush for wealth and material gain, in which he is foredoomed to defeat and disaster. The ordinary white mechanic and every day humdrum workman will outdistance him in the race for meals.

As President Lowell of Harvard once said, in comparing salaries of college professors and train conductors, "The man who minds the train receives higher salaries than those who train the mind." The history of the human race proves that those who reach the pinnacle of fame and honor are the ones who devote themselves to a life of sacrifice and service and not to the vainglorious pursuit of mammon. —Union-Review.

RULING IN GAINES' CASE CAUSES ACTION

ST. LOUIh, Mo., July 14—(ANP)—Recent activity on the part of the board of curators at Lincoln university to expand that school's facilities and start post graduate courses at the coming fall term, has found an echo in various other states of the South.

Stem of the present activity South is the supreme court ruling of last December 8 which ordered the University of Missouri to admit Law Student Lloyd Gaines to its classes or provide equal educational facilities within the state." The state legislature appropriated $200,000 for graduate and professional study at Lincoln university, whose board, headed by President Sherman D. Scruggs, is trying to have the school for law ready to admit students on Sept. 1.

In Austin, Texas, fortnight ago, the legislature appropriated $50,000 for the next two years, for graduate and professional courses for colored students. In addition to this, an additional grant of -200,000 was made to Prairie View college for graduate work. Both grants will be used to provide scholarships to Negro students for out-of-state study until the state can conform with with the supreme court ruling. Dr. Thomas W. Currie and Dr. R. T. Hamilton, prominent Texans, were largely responsible for getting favorable action on the scholarship grants in the legislature Dr. Hamilton commented as follows:

"While we realize that this is just a temporary expedient and does not confirm to the supreme court decision, still it is unfair to the hundreds of Texas students and teachers to force the continuation of the additional cost of graduate and professional study. Our task is to work out a plan so that we can help Prairie View State college and President Banks' fine corps of teachers to add a real graduate course to the institution and prepare the way for such professional courses in medicine, law, dentistry, pharmacy, engineering and other much-needed lines."

Last week in Durham, N. C., it was announced that Duke university and the University of North Carolina will furnish many of the teachers for the North Carolina college for Negroes when the latter opens its classes for graduate students in September. The state legislature authorized the Negro college to give graduate courses and appropriated $14,000 for that purpose. The liberal arts school will be the first opened under the new program.

Famous white instructors who have been engaged to teach at North Carolina college for Negroes include the following: Dr. Edgar W. Knight, Dr. A. M. Jordan and Dr. H. R. Douglass, school of education; Dr. Hugh T. Lefler, Dr. A. R. Newsome and Dr. F. M. Green, department of history; Dr. W. W. Pierson, political science; Dr. Calvin B. Hoover, dean of Duke university's graduate school of arts and sciences, and several others of prminence.

While Negro citizens in North Carolina and Texas seem to be accepting the gesture of their state legislatures and educational departmens in setting up graduate study on a separate school basis, the racial leaders in Missouri where the Gaines case had its inception are sternly opposed to any separate arrangement.

Despite the fact that the Missouri legislature appropriated $200,000 for Lincoln university's graduate work program, Missourians contend that it will require huge sums, vast equipment and many years before "equal" education can be achieved in their separate state college. The Show Me state residents point out that the supreme court decision required the state of Missouri to provide equal accommodations and that this can be done only by admitting students to the University of Missouri's professional and graduate schools. In the meantime, officials at Lincoln university are proceeding with the program ordered by the state superintendent of education.

Other Southern states are watching developments. Recently in Washington, the presidents of five Southern state universities met with a group of Negro educators at Howard university in an effort to discover some solution for the problem, stating frankly that their states could not support an adequate separate graduate school program, but that neither would conditions permit the entry of Negro students. The conference broke up without any definite agreement of policy being reached.

Cites Progress Of Dixie Negro

Belief that the negroes of the South are making more progress than the negroes of the North had been expressed Friday by Rev. B. R. Holmes, founder and president of Holmes Institute, speaking before delegates to an A. M. E. gathering in New York City.

"Many negroes who are unemployed have been educated for teaching and other professions," Rev. Holmes declared, "when they should have been trained as carpenters, masons, farmers and other artisans.

"When a person has been educated and cannot find employment, then he is mis-educated," he concluded.

A SYMPOSIUM ON DEMOCRACY

A Congress on Education for Democracy began its first session Tuesday under the auspices of Teachers college, Columbia university, with Dean William F. Russell of Teachers college as chairman. Earl Baldwin, former British Prime Minister, is among leading European personalities who are contributing to a three-day symposium. American scholars, educators, business and labor leaders are participating in the deliberations. The collected opinions of the congress will serve as a foundation for a concrete educational program for the nation.

A program of the sort that embodies and seeks to propagate the basic assumptions of democracy may postpone, if not permanently, at least for the moment the collapse of our political system. One specific service which can be rendered by the congress is to point out in clear, understandable terms that the issue in the world today is not between Fascism and Communism as it is between Fascism and bourgeois democracy. The conquest of Ethiopia, Austria, Czechoslovakia, Albania and the subjugation of China and even Spain where Communism was not adopted as a form of political government, showed incontrovertibly that Fascism is opposed to the fundamental concept of capitalistic democracy. Dialectics may develop a lofty argument in which totalitarianism becomes a lofty conception in which the individual surrenders the totality of his being to the superior claims of the State, losing himself to find himself. But no logic will set out to prove that a slave is a higher being than a free man, or that man's highest lot is to be owned body and soul by somebody outside himself.

Earl Baldwin, who was one of the principal actors in the drama that ended with the loss of Ethiopia's sovereignty, should have much to say on the weaknesses of European democracies, and especially British democracy. He was Prime Minister during the East African crisis. He dictated the foreign policy of his government and subscribed to the prevailing belief in the House of Lords that to help Ethiopia is to endanger the security of every white man in Africa. Thus Haile Selassie was left to defend his empire without financial or military assistance. A Facist victory in Ethiopia, as events have demonstrated, has strengthened neither the position of the white man in Africa nor the security of the great British Empire. Earl Baldwin should be able and willing to tell us whether democracy can save itself from a disastrous collapse by periodic concessions to Fascism.

If the congress succeeds in redefining democracy in terms that can be understood and supported by the masses it will have fulfilled a great mission.

Northern Neck People Praised For Cooperation With School Heads

Tells of Sacrifices Made In Lancaster County by Pioneers in Education

Editor, Journal and Guide::
When posterity views the tremendous effort of today's school teachers in their struggle for existence; they will call the teachers blessed. There is no single profession doing more for the advancement of Negroes than the school teacher. Their work will never be erased; as long as one pupil is alive to tell the story, the teacher will live.

In all professions there are those who stray from the path of popular service and seek to aggrandize themselves. There are ministers who are seemingly prosperous, but underneath their false prosperity there is decay: because they rob God of the glory. Like some Physicians who turn their medical knowledge into selfish gain and lawyers who are constantly pleading their personal case for dollars. Thus hidden corruption marches on unnoticed by the masses.

There are some left who style themselves leaders of men; but they do not realize these facts of success. One writer said, While misfortune sleeps the wise tread lightly. The Bible says "Let no man think more highly of himself than he ought." I think some school teachers, supervisors and Preachers should remember these words. It is so heart rending to think of a poverty stricken widow, who has struggled to keep her daughter in school and on graduating day the glorified daughter ignores her mother, or is ashamed of her.

My attention is callel to an article published (May 6, 1939) in the Journal and Guide titled EDUCATIONAL PROGRESS IN NORTHERN NECK.

The report is highly impressive and the Jeanes Supervisor is an energetic woman, she is worthy of praise for her work in Northern Neck. There are however, statements contrary to facts, in this report of Northern Neck. I quote from the article of May 6th in the Guide, quote: THERE ARE NO INDUSTRIES IN NORTHERN NECK, THE PEOPLE DEPEND ON FARMING AND FISHING AND OYSTER BEDS FOR A LIVING. The writer of the article ignored the great fishing industry of this section. There are industries sending ships as far south as Florida and far north as Maine, employing over a thousand Negroes annually. Will somebody please define the word industry.

In Northern Neck the schools were consolidated, which was a great help to some; but there are several sections of Lancaster county where there is no school at all. There was a frame school house once upon a time; now the poor children do not attend any school, because of the distance they are compelled to walk to a consolidated school. I have in mind those God-for-saken children in Mars-Hill section of the county.

I quote again from the report of May 6th, quote: THE SIGNIFICANT FACTOR ABOUT THESE SCHOOLS AND BUSSES IS THAT THE COLORED CITIZENS HAVE NOT PAID FOR A SINGLE ITEM. THE COUNTY HAS FOOTED ALL BILLS.

This statement is too good to be true. It is an insult to the hard working people of Lancaster county. The significant factor is that the people BOUGHT the school busses and turned them over to the school board to operate. All around the county socials and parties were held, envelopes were in the hands of children to beg money for the school busses.

I have lived for over a quarter of a century in these parts, I am acquainted with every teacher and supervisor in the county. I liberally gave out my meager funds to buy a school bus and to help the school, it was my duty and there are thousands as I am.

In order that posterity might know the good works of their fathers I write. How those teachers in Northern Neck are struggling is pathetic. They are hard workers and industrious, the people are helping the teachers to better educational facilities.

Lest we forget, the A. T. Wright High school is one of the best in the rural south. Mr. A. T. Wright has worked for over forty years at this school. The people and school faculty are helping him with the load of education. The people of the county will never forget the work of Prof. Dudley, Agricultural teacher for Lancaster County. He is now working to make the people civic conscious.

May the people live long in Northern Neck.

President Of Fisk, Speaking Here, Urges Character Education Of Negro

Because the American Negro vote s being used to "swing elections" nd Negro labor to incite industrial strife, future education of the race nust emphasize "character training," Dr. Thomas Elza Jones, president of Fisk University, said in a ecture here last evening.

The status of the Negro—economic, educational and political —is 'vastly different" from that of 25 'ears ago, said Dr. Jones. This, he aid, constitutes a great danger and also a great advantage.

Unless the Negro is educated to respect and understand the constitution of the United States and taught to take his place as a citizen, his advancing social status will become "a canker on American society that is certain to lead to totalitarianism," Dr. Jones added.

Presented By A. A. U. W.

The noted leader of Negro education fields spoke as a presentation of the American Association of University Women at the Training School. The subject of his address was "Education Problems in South Africa," from which he digressed to comment on racial conditions in the United States.

Dr. Jones spoke from observations and studies he and Mrs. Jones made while members of a commission for the American Friends Service, the organization to which Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt contributes the money from her lectures.

In the Union of South Africa, he said, where there are three native Blacks to every white British or Boer, the native has no citizenship and no guarantees such as are granted by the constitution of the United States. The British, who conquered the Boefrs, have long preached democracy, and say that the Boers (the Dutch colonists) won't cooperate with them, and thus are leopardizing democracy in the colonies.

The native, however, under the British, has found that nearly all the land has been taken over by the whites. Futhermore, as a mine worker he is paid from $5 to $15 a month, and the government takes 50 percent of that for education, road building and improvement of the country.

Wonder Who Friends Are

The result is, said Dr. Jones, that the native is beginning to feel that his best friends are those who keep him in his place—the Boers, rather than the democracy-preaching British. The problem with 6,600,000 natives, outnumbering the whites by three to one, is becoming a serious one.

The attitude of such leaders as General Smuts is, however, that the natives are not yet ready to handle money wisely, said Dr. Jones.

The speaker was introduced by Dr. Eva Burkett, general chairman for the A. A. U.

Segregation A Relic of Barbarism

Gaines Case Discussion By Rayford Logan

Recommending Segregation Puzzles Richmonder

Editor, Journal and Guide: Speaking before the third district Teachers' Association at Virginia Union University in Richmond, recently, Dr. Rayford W. Logan, in commenting on the Gaines case decision is quoted as saying: "The decision of the Supreme Court has four aspects, they are: legal, educational, socio-economic, and segregation. On the question of segregation we have got to decide whether we want the principle of integration or segregation. I am in favor of segregation, but it must be segregation all the way; equal opportunities, facilities and salary. By this kind of segregation we assure ourselves the opening up of new jobs. On the other hand if we take the principle of integration we make no jobs for ourselves or for our children."

It is indeed difficult to understand his philosophy. He seems to lose sight of the broader view and larger objective. Segregation is the thing we have been fighting with tireless energy and no little expense.

If we can get the youth of both races accustomed to working together in the schools and classrooms, they will eventually work together in offices and public buildings, in industrial and commercial institutions, and will finally vote for each other for public office. This will lead to mixed faculties in our educational institutions. Then, and not until then we can boast of things democratic.

The speaker admits this that to have segregation is to have inferior schools. If there is not a decent university in the south it may be traceable to the suppression of the Negro, as the speaker observed, indirectly but directly to the dual system that is both wasteful and inefficient.

Appropriations and allotments for Negro education under the dual system have been cut to the nth degree in the effort to maintain some sort of rating for white schools and colleges, using funds taken from Negro education to supplement funds for white institutions.

Segregation is the very root of this evil which is reflected in high ratio of illiteracy, low standards of living, antiquated schools and facilities, poor pay to teachers, appalling to delinquency among youth, ad infinitum.

Yes, the Gaines case offers its economic opportunities but not in the direction of the dual system of segregation which long ago should have been discarded.

Segregation, like polygamy and slavery, is a relic of barbarism. New England, where slavery died aborning, is today the envy of the rest of the world, while the South where slavery became an established institution and persists to this day in the form of segregation and otherwise, is dubbed the nation's problem child. There is a reason there can be no progress without change. This the South has been unwilling to do.

The Gaines case decision has given the South a wonderful opportunity to begin to demolish its wasteful, antiquated dual system of education by making graduate instruction available in institutions where it is now offered, and then gradually work out a single system of instruction and guidance founded on democratic principles. What is needed is a few men of wisdom and courage on both sides to strike the blow.

Class Legislation

In maintaining Missouri's traditional attitude toward Negro education, the legislature and Governor Stark made one move that is class legislation. When the Supreme Court ordered the state to give its citizens equal education, the state had free choice between enrolling Negroes in the schools it has already or creating separate schools for them. But whatever it did for Negroes it was due to do also for whites, or be guilty of class legislation.

The state is going through the motions of creating new separate schools for Negroes, having appropriated $200,000 for any additional courses demanded. Since there are nine branches taught at Missouri university for which Negroes now go out of the state, it is evident this sum is inadequate. But to prove that the state has made only a gesture and has not obeyed the supreme court's order, judgment must wait until the $200,000 is spent.

The legislature realizes what it has done. So it appropriated $50,000 more as student aid, continuing the practice which the Supreme Court had specifically condemned when it said Missouri must educate its citizens, and that paying some other state to do, it was illegal.

Since Negroes now have the same right to education as whites, no more and no less, and whites have the same rights as Negroes, no more and no less whatever the state does for one it must do for the other. Therefore this $50,000 is class legislation. Before the Gaines decision Missouri had Negroes bluffed into thinking they had to go out of the state for an education. Going they took anything it gave them. From this time on the law says they are to be educated at home. As a consequence any money for them is a gift given with bad motives but still a gift not shared as it must be if legal.

This $50,000 appropriation proves that the state authorities expect Missouri to repeat its past treatment of Negroes, the very thing any intelligent observer expects, because $200,000 will not create separate schools equal to those the state has for whites. In other words the legislative and executive branches of the state know now that the law will be violated! So they stand ready to pay "hush money," so to speak. Maybe Negroes will swap their rights to an equal education here in the state for money to go elsewhere. We hope not! But if they do, their lack of manliness is matched by the authorities disregard for the spirit and the letter of the law!

Class legislation is an evil with grave consequences. There is no longer a reason on earth — unless the assumption that the law will be broken automatically justifies expedients—why a Missouri Negro going to school in Kansas or Illinois, should have his tuition paid by the state! And if it is paid, as this $50,000 appropriation indicates will be done, then any white student going out state has equal right to state aid!

Class legislation is a departure from the spirit of America so grave that to prove it exists, condemns a law in public opinion as well as leads to its being declared unconstitutional.

Missouri is giving these Negro students money to escape doing its duty. But the plan will fail. Missouri, because it is unwilling to deal fair with Negroes' education, is swapping the devil for the witch. It would have felt better and built better if it had set out resolutely to obey the Supreme Court's order, hoping by the thoroughness with which it educates Negroes now to be forgiven its past neglect.

A New Day In Education

RURAL EDUCATION in this state comes to a new day and a new deal. In a round over the state it will be found that the old time rural shanty with its poorly paid as well as poorly prepared teachers have been replaced. While much can be done in the line of equipment and building improvement, the fact that the state is demanding and getting better prepared teachers is indeed encouraging. Not in the history of the state have there been so many college graduates teaching in the rural areas.

For the first time in our history the boys and girls have access to professional experts in their line of work. In every quarter may be seen fine young men and women doing the task of inspiring the youth. Many young men are coming into the service. For a long time this field did not appeal to young men. Now they may be seen in charge of the girls and boys giving them the advantage of college contacts.

Many young men and women in former days have given up in despair and gone the way of the unheard because of the inability of the type of inspiration they were receiving to arouse them.

Prepared young men and women are bringing to the rural areas a sentiment. They are bringing more. They are creating a thirst in the community for better buildings, grounds, recreational advantages and pointing the young people to higher professions and trades.

Some of the finest blood within the group lies hidden in the rurals. Many a flower has been "born to blush unseen and waste its fragrance on the desert air" because it never saw the light nor heard of the outside world. Their characters have been dwarfed and their urge stilled and stifled and they have wasted the opportunity of a wholesome contribution.

Today the youngsters can look in the faces of successful men and women. They sit at the feet of specialists who have studied the arts and sciences.

With these advantages the state and race should go forward. A new day and a new deal come to the surface and from this score we are bound to bring up a better breed and brand of people. By this medium we will come into our own as fullfledged citizens. We are working at the grass roots and our young people no longer will content themselves with half fare on a half preparedness program.

For this the state is divinely grateful. It should show this gratitude by its cooperation with the young people who are foregoing other vocations for the profession of teaching.

For the proper improvement of equipment and grounds and recreational advantage we must keep these young people. They should be paid salaries commensurate with their training and unique ability to impart to youth.

Our teachers are our greatest asset. They are the tenders of the nurseries of our race and for anything less than a fair deal to them in their work is nothing short of inflicting a penalty on the highest type of loyalty in existence anywhere.

Graduate And Professional Training For Negroes

During this month two embryo law schools, one in Missouri and another in North Carolina, will open, offering courses to Negroes supposed to be identical and the same as given by these two states to white students. Whether this method of approach to the Lloyd Gaines decision, as rendered by the United States Supreme Court, will offer equality in education should be studied carefully. We are rather fearful that the experiment will prove, as all Jim Crow efforts do, to expose an effort giving inferior training to Negro youth.

In Missouri the law school is to be manned by Negroes, while in North Carolina, the governing agencies have worked out a plan by which the Dean of the white law school will have charge of the Negro law school, along with visiting white professors, and the law library is to be organized by the white librarian.

Of course it is all right to say a law school has been established in these two states for Negroes, but when one approaches the subject in a practical way, there may be some cause for doubt. For instance, the big item of expense, in the establishment of a law school is the library. Will the state of Missouri and North Carolina be willing to make the same outlay in books and other material as is provided in the white schools? If this is not done the facilities will not be equal.

We certainly trust that Missouri and North Carolina will not have the same notion regarding a law library for Negroes as most southern cities apparently have regarding separate public libraries. Here in Oklahoma City, where the Black Dispatch is published, the Dunbar Library is a loose collection of antequated texts, with the thought in mind that occasionally a few books may be borrowed from the white library. This is fairly representative of the approach made to this subject in most southern communities. Usually the librarian in charge holds her position because she is the daughter of somebody who cooks for "Judge So-and So."

Or we might offer another silly approach made in the south towards agricultural instruction and stock raising. Ever so often at Langston University, the Negro farm youths are allowed to go down to Stillwater and look at the fine herds of blooded cattle, and survey the activities in that vast experiment station, and with this sort of shadow-boxing at knowledge, the state washes its hands and alleges that Negro boys and girls have had equality in education.

It is because of the previous attitude of the ruling class towards Negro education, especially in the higher brackets, that the Black Dispatch is doubtful that the new experiments in North Carolina and Missouri will pan out well.

When Representative Creekmore Wallace of Oklahoma proposed a Bill converting Langston University into a graduate and professional school, we joined with others in the state in an effort to see how far Oklahoma would go in such a program. If the state wanted to do the task, we wanted the state to have the opportunity. We were one of those who argued that Negroes should not attempt to determine standards for the school, but that if the state were going to tackle such a herculean task, the North Central Association of Colleges and Secondary Schools should use it's yard stick. We think that in this position Oklahoma Negroes far out-distanced their Missouri and North Carolina brethren, for when the North Central officials presented a plan for the development of a law and medical school for Negroes in Oklahoma, the state backed right down and went to talking about "out-state scholarships". The last legislature amended the old student-aid law, which was a complete joker, and offered no substantial assistance whatsoever, and under the amended statute, a far more generous grant is made.

In other words, as the matter stands now, the Negroes of this state are on record as wanting a separately maintained graduate school, and the state government is on record as refusing to grant their request. If a court action is started, having for its purpose the securing of graduate and professional training for Negroes equal to that offered by the state to white students, we shall support it. is the 'easiest' solution from the standpoint of deal justice."

While Mr. Johnson, a liberal minded white southerner, thinks it was a mistake on the part of the N. A. A. C. P. to force the issue, and thus obstruct solutions No. 2 and 3, we feel that objective thinking will produce no such conclusion. Every one knows that the south's educational program so far as blacks are concerned, was in status quo, prior to the Lloyd Gaines decision. We are not so sure that solution No. 3 is not in the offing. The recent appointment of an educational survey committee, by the United States Department of Education has, we believe, for its purpose the possible recommendation of some such regional graduate schools as proposed by Dr. Johnson.

Looking at it from this angle we believe that the Lloyd Gaines decision has speeded up a trend towards Dr. Johnson's solution No. 3. The South knows, just as the governor of Oklahoma, and the recent legislature in this state discovered, that it is economically impossible to do justice to the Supreme Court's mandate with make-shift gestures such as proposed in North Carolina and in Missouri.

In discussing graduate and professional courses there also arises the question of medicine and surgery. Who is it that believes the state of Oklahoma will ever attempt to provide a hospital with all of the modern medical and surgical equipment to be found today at the State University Hospital? Negroes would not need as many beds in a separate medical institution, but equality of opportunity would mean that they would have a staff comparable with the State University staff, and the same and identical instructional equipment as to be found on 13th street in Oklahoma City.

The survey committee now at work is going to take cognizance of this fact, and we believe that the practical solution to the giving of graduate and professional courses in the south will be found either in the establishment of regional colleges, comprising several states, or the entry of Negro students to white colleges.

The Black Dispatch is willing to go any distance to try out such experiments as white Southerners have in mind, which has for its purpose, an honest-to-God attempt to give Negroes educational equality. We do not feel that out-state scholarships will do this. The Supreme Court has outlawed such procedure. We believe that regional Universities will go further in solving educational inequalities in the south, than state land grant colleges. Our main reason for assuming this position is noted in the fact that such a college would tend to suppress the quite evident desire of Negroes in states where they vote, to change college presidents every four years. Such a school would in the nature of things have regents named from each participating state, and thus the political ambitions of the Negroes of a single state would be submerged.

In this connection it should be noted that Negroes who live in states, where suffrage is denied them, retain their presidents of land grant colleges longer than in states where they do vote. This is a serious problem which Negroes must settle among themselves. Regional Colleges may point to the way by which we can eliminate politics from our state schools. Such schools might bump off the patronage grabs made by state legislators and other minor officials.

Educational Detour

Purchase of Morgan College by Maryland is that State's solution of the vital problem which has confronted every Southern State since the Gaines decision. Missouri's answer was the establishment of a law school for Negroes. These acts are typical of others to follow when Southern youth asserts its right to professional training at State expense.

But more than that they indicate the extent to which the Southerner will go to circumvent association with the Negro on an equal level. No economic or educational advantage which these new State-owned institutions can afford should blind the Negro's eye to the truth.

Neither Missouri nor Maryland has today more sincere interest in higher education for its Negro youth than it did before the Supreme Court handed down its decision last October. The University of Missouri is still closed to Lloyd Gaines. Maryland has no intention of inviting all who knock at the doors of the University of Maryland to enter.

The attitude expressed by the government of these two States was translated into speech by Southerners in the House and the Senate more than a decade ago when the question of placing Howard University under the federal government was under discussion.

Money has since been lavished upon that institution with the prayerful hope of many who appropriate it that the maintenance of superior facilities at Howard will attract many a colored boy or girl who might otherwise rub elbows with Congressional offspring in Northern colleges.

This method of detour is not new

EXTENDING NEGRO EDUCATION

PERCEIVING that the uneducated Negro, like the unschooled white man, is "definitely a personal and a public liability", every Southern State is granting more public aid than heretofore to schools designed "to help the Negro youth meet life." That report is contained in Horace Mann Bond's "Negro Education in Alabama" — a work aptly subtitled, "Study in Cotton and Steel". That survey, which represents nine years' fact-finding on the author's part covers the entire "Negro problem" and the economic-social conditions underlying that problem. Except that Tuskegee Institute necessarily looms in the picture, the report might be applied to Mississippi, Louisiana or any Southern State.

The significant fact emphasized by the writer is that schooling in books and in the arts and crafts (which are well taught at Tuskegee) is doing things to the Negro. To the New South, the change is welcome. As Mr. Bond puts it, the Negro "is developing a definite racial pride." He considers himself a freeborn American and is getting away from his inherited subserviency—a vestige of slave-time. However, taking a practical view of the social-economic situation, Negro educators urge the boys and girls to "learn how to be good toilers—farmers, stockmen, chauffeurs, plumbers, nurses, electricians, mechanics, printers and painters." That is the Tuskegee idea which Booker T. Washington developed and spread through the South: He taught his pupils the dignity and utility of efficient labor—how to "live on the farm off the farm."

EDUCATION FOR NEGROES URGED

Survey Made In State And Other Southern Points Is Made Public

WASHINGTON, Feb. 9—A report that "55 per cent of the total number of negroes gainfully employed an over 10 years of age are engaged in occupations requiring little or no skill" was made here following a survey of South Carolina and other Southern states. At the same time an increase in vocational education opportunities for negroes in the South was recommended by the office of education.

The survey, made by the WPA covered all South Carolina negro high schools and two negro institutions of higher learning in the state. Five hundred workers were employed in the survey under the direction of 40 professional workers, it was said.

Although more than half the negroes in the South live in rural areas, the report found that vocational education in agriculture was offered only in a limited number of schools. It is reported that in one state 80,000 negro youths settled on farms after completing the sixth grade with no formal education in agriculture. The poor training is due both to lack of funds and a lack of demand for classes, the survey found. It recommended that agricultural training be introduced in the upper grades of negro grammar schools.

Despite the fact that a large number of negroes are engaged in domestic service and the need for such training in their own homes, comparatively few negroes study home economics and kindred subjects, according to the survey.

"Its need is shown by the prevalance of poor health, inadequate housing, early marriage, gainfully employed mothers and infant mortality among negroes," the report said. Pointing out that 62 per cent of negro women and 12 per cent of the men are engaged in domestic or personal service, the report said, "since the demands in personal service occupations are increasing in number and complexity, the school should definitely address itself to the task of preparing these persons for effective adjustment to these tasks."

Applicants Plan to Swamp Virginia U.

(Staff Correspondence)

RICHMOND — Dr. J. M. Tinsley, president of the local and State Association of the NAACP, announced, Saturday, that as a result of a series of articles appearing in the AFRO-PLANET on the stand of Virginia in regards to the Gaines-Missouri case decision, the association has received many applications from persons interested in registering at the University of Virginia, next month.

The names of the applicants will not be released until after the meeting of the State board of education, Thursday, at which time it is expected that some decision will be reached as to what course Virginia will pursue in carrying out the edict of the Supreme Court.

Discuss "Equalities"

At a meeting of the Virginia Interracial Commission, last week, the problem facing the State in dealing out educational "equality" to its colored population was discussed, but no definite plans made.

Officials of the organization when interviewed declined to make any statement.

EDITOR'S NOTE: The Interracial Commission, at a meeting called soon after the Louis-Schmeling fight to settle the so-called riot after the bout in which a white motorist was accused of running over five colored persons, also refused to commit itself then by not furnishing its findings for publication.

When asked for personal opinion, executives declared that the matter was left entirely up to the State board of education for disposition.

Among those who attended the meeting were:

Tennant Bryan, L. R. Reynolds, Dr. Garnett Ryland, the Rev. Churchill, J. Gibson, Dr. W. J. Clarke, all white; Dr. John M. Gandy, Dr. J. M. Ellison, T. C. Walker, Dr. W. H. Hughes, Wiley A. Hall, John Charity and Mrs. J. P. Barrett.

Grievance State-wide

Complaints continue to pour in to the NAACP from individuals and organizations outside of Richmond, airing the adverse conditions in colored schools.

From Chauncey Harmon of Pulaski, came a letter which in part reads:

"Our school stiuation, as you already know, is far less than satisfactory. It is for this reason that we are willing to exhaust every posible means to obtain our rights.

Questions Walker Attitude

"Mr. T. C. Walker was here not long ago investigating but recently I received a very discouraging letter from him stating that there was nothing possible under the present law that could be done about it.

"Is this a fact? Certainly the recent decision of the Supreme Court is contrary to Mr. Walker's reply.

"I hope Mr. Hewin will find it possible to enter this county as soon as possible, but I am wondering if it will be possible to combine this court action into a dual or triple suit.

Have $100 Ready

"I am rushing to you some information which I feel of much importance at this particular time. Although these colored citizens are poor and their work is scarce, they have about $100 that they are willing to contribute to any organization, preferably the NAACP, in order that their cause might be fought.

Have No School

"As you know we do not have a school. The present plans call for a $37,000 eight room building with auditorium, and a gymnasium for the whites only, at the cost of $48,000. We know this is not equal or near equal.

"Our bus system is valued at $12,000, and our colored patrons send their children to school on the Greyhound line and in cars at their own expense.

"The school board definitely refuses to transport colored children. There has never been a high school for colored in this county, and only one or two colored children are sent to a high school out of the county, by the county.

"What high school work we do, we are forced to do it in an eight-room building, where the elementary grades are housed at the same time. We feel that now is the time. Please let me hear from you immediately, for we are ready to do the most drastic."

File Petition

Residents of Surry County, in the meantime have taken a forward step in the matter of having the same transportation facilities as whites and directed a petition to the school board of that county, last week.

NAACP to Act

The NAACP, it was learned Saturday, has taken the matter of the Surry County transportation case under consideration and is already launching a program with litigation, as a last resort if necessary, in order to obtain the desired results.

To Seek Injunction

Colored citizens of Covington are also on the verge of seeking a court injunction, in trying to prevent officials of that section from continuing a school building which they consider to be far below the requirement standards, and also, they are opposed to the site on which it is to be erected.

A letter to the NAACP from the Watson Training School Parent-Teacher League, in part reads:

Federal Grant

"On August 23, 1938, an election was ordered by the circuit judge of this district for the people to decide whether or not bonds should be issued to finance the erection of a high school for whites, and a consolidated school for colored.

"The above was made possible through Federal grant of $122,576, which represents 45 per cent and a bond issue of $150,000, which represents 55 per cent, for the erection of the two structures, totaling $272,576.

Distribution Unequal

"The colored school has been let to a contractor for $44,743, with an additional $15,000 for excavating, concrete, filling, and other equipment, making the total approximately $60,000.

"In the first place the colored patrons here feel that this is a very unequal distribution of the funds; in the second place, they realize that it is contrary to the last ruling of the Supreme Court.

"Thirdly, the school board selected an undesirable site, over the objection of a majority of the colored people, and is erecting a building there without adequate facilities.

Whites Considered

"Near the present site, adjacent property, sufficient for the erection of the new school, could have been secured at a small cost. The whites have been granted an extension and there is a consideration of several sites yet in progress.

"The county officials have planned an election for the purpose of deciding on location for the whites. We have in mind an injunction to prohibit further work on our project."

Lee Honored

While these complaints of alleged racial inequality continue to flow in from all sections of the State, students and members of the faculty of the new Maggie L. Walker High School and Armstrong High School observed Lee-Jackson Day, Thursday.

A picture of Lee and Jackson was unveiled at a ceremony at the new school for that particular occasion, and later placed in the school library.

The Rev. Churchill, J. Gibson, white, rector of St. James Episcopal Church, the main speaker, said, "I definitely would not leave a heritage of hate as a legacy to the next generations."

In conjunction with the general education shake-up in the State, the AFRO-PLANET will begin its survey in the Richmond public school system, next week.

Al Smith Urges Ac Educational Facilitie

Blames Whites for Not Doing Duty; Part of Negro Problem Is White Problem, He Says

NEW YORK CITY (ANP)—Alfred E. Smith, former New York governor, made a strong plea for better educational facilities for Negroes, and called upon the nation at large to help solve the racial problem at a Lincoln University luncheon given recently at the Empire State club by J. Frederick Talcott, a member of the university board of trustees.

"Part of what we call the Negro problem is a white problem," Mr. Smith said. "The white part of the population hasn't always done what it could to help the Negro on his long upward climb. Today we are trying to make our institutions serve them better and give them more opportunities. Opportunity is all they ask. They can and are solving their own problem and working out their own destiny. But they need some help."

"It strikes me that the remarkable thing is not that we have a Negro problem, but that the Negro is so little of a problem and has come so far in so short a time. We can help them work out their economic and educational opportunities for them.

HITS AT SLUMS

"We should stop crowding them into slums, both country slums and city slums. The Negro problem would be much more quickly solved, too, if better health and medical service were available to the race, and that is one of the things we must give attention to along with education, housing, jobs and better working conditions in the future.

"There isn't any bigger job ahead of us in this country than to help give the opportunity to this race that they are entitled to as citizens of the nation. To give them their opportunity will not only help them, but it will help the entire nation."

PRESIDENT ILL

Another of the speakers was the Rev. Dr. Walter H. Brooks, pastor of the 19th Street Baptist Church of Washington for 56 years, a former slave who is a member of the class of 1872. Dr. George Johnson, dean of Lincoln, spoke in the absence of the president, Dr. Walter Livingston Wright, who was ill.

Dr. Collis P. Bliss, former dean of New York University, volunteered to head a special committee for Lincoln University in support of the campaign for $10,000,000 sponsored by the Presbyterian Board of Christian Education in behalf of its 52 colleges and 54 foundations operating in state universities in behalf of Presbyterian youth.

Education Of Negro Will Be Discussed

Several Durham Persons To Be In Forum Tonight At University Of North Carolina

Several Durham residents will participate tonight at 8:30 o'clock in a panel discussion at Chapel Hill on "Higher Education for Negroes in North Carolina." The meeting will be in the main lounge of Graham memorial, the student union building.

The panel will be sponsored by the University of North Carolina Y. M. C. A. and the American Student union.

Speakers will be Dean James Taylor of the North Carolina College for Negroes; Dr. Robert N. Dett of Bennett college, Greensboro; Dr. Guy B. Johnson, of the University of North Carolina sociology department; Miss Frances Jones, of Bennett college; and Miss Jane Castles, of the Durham Y. W. C. A. industrial council.

Dean Taylor has in the past assisted the university Y. M. C. A. with interracial matters. Dr. Dett played a prominent part at an interracial student-worker conference at Durham last fall. He is considered one of the foremost Negro composers in America, having once been a student of Madame Boulanger in the Fontainbleau school of music at Paris.

Dr. Johnson's special field of study is the Negro and he published a number of books on it. Miss Jones is the daughter of the president of Bennett college and is a vice-chairman for the South of the American Student union. In addition to her work with the Durham Y. W. C. A., Miss Castles is a graduate student at U. N. C.

KINDERGARTEN PLAN IS LIKELY TO WAIT

SCHOOL BOARD EXPECTED TO EXPLAIN SITUATION TODAY

It appeared extremely doubtful this afternoon, a few hours before the Board of Education met, that the board will exercise its discretionary power to make kindergartens a part of the public school system prior to the completion of its program to furnish adequate buildings and facilities for children between the ages of 6 and 18, provision for whose education is mandatory under Georgia law.

At its February session this afternoon the board will hear from delegations interested in making a beginning toward including kindergartens in the public schools. There will be several speakers to address the board on this subject, including Mrs. Perry Brannen, Dr. A. J. Waring and the Rev. John S. Wilder, D. D.

A survey of the situation indicates the board is sympathetic toward this development in childhood education, but feels that because of the uncertainty of school finances, and because of the need for additional school houses and the betterment of facilities in some of the existing buildings this is not the time to embark on the kindergarten plan.

There is a bill pending in the Georgia Legislature which would deprive Chatham county of a substantial portion of school funds it receives from the state. Arguments against the bill have been presented by representatives of Chatham and other counties affected, and Ormond B. Strong, superintendent of schools, is even now in Atlanta, having been summoned there unexpectedly over the week-end to appear before the subcommittee to which the bill has been referred.

In presenting what may be the view of the Board of Education on the kindergarten subject this afternoon it is likely to be pointed out facilities for those children whose education as a part of the public school system is required by law are at present inadequate, an inadequacy which some board members are known to feel should be removed before taking on new financial obligations. It is generally recognized by school authorities improved lavatory facilities and better lighting are very much required in some schools. Furthermore there is the need for new school buildings for instance a white school at Pooler and at least two simple buildings in the county and a west side school for negroes in the city.

Split and double sessions are being operated in the negro city schols, there being at present sixteen split sessions where first and second grade pupils attend classes (8 to 11 and 11 to 2 o'clock under one teacher) and nine double sessions, where two different teachers teach separate classes, the day beginning at 7:45 a. m. and running to 4:45 p. m. There are five fewer split and double sessions now than at the beginning of school in September but records show the number will increase again when the new term begins next fall. When the Beach School is in operation the split and double sessions can be reduced but not eliminated, that school furnishing facilities which would do away with seven split and three double sessions. School authorities present that there is a definite and urgent need for a new negro school on the west side of the city, and in the county two simple structures are needed, one in particular to take care of a negro school now housed in one room, where two teachers are conducting different and large classes at the same time.

The pupil load per teacher in the negro schools here is considered by educational authorities too high, the average being higher than in the white schools. Remedy for this condition would call for more class rooms and teachers. The number of pupils per teacher in the city colored schools ranges from 43.6 to 50, and in the county from 33 to 61.

In brief, a survey of the situation indicates the kindergarten delegations may be advised that the expansion of the school system to include discretionary services must wait until mandatory services are adequately provided for and the financial road is clear.

Negro Education.

While the future trend is believed toward lower registration in colleges generally, the opposite tendency is seen in institutions for Negroes, according to Dr. W. C. Jackson, Dean of Woman's College University of North Carolina, who says the records show that the great majority of Negro youths today are found in grades between the 10th year of schooling, or junior high school period, and the sophomore year of college.

It is said that approximately 40,000 young Negro men and women are attending college in the United States, as against 1,643 students from their ranks in 1915.

Friends of Negro education declare that this "reflects the spread of opportunities which the democratization of education is accomplishing, the economic and cultural advancement of the Negro in the United States, as well as reflecting the improvement of elementary schools, better teachers and the building up of the high schools."

Nor can it be said that it took recent court decisions calling for adequate if not equal facilities, under the constitution to bring the South into line. In the main the Southern States, certainly North Carolina, have provided well for the educational advancement of the colored citizen. Our public school system in providing separate schools for the races in no sense limits colored school support to a prorated tax burden, hence the colored youth have abundant if not equal opportunity to achieve a high school education. Likewise college facilities are made available to the more ambitious of them, and it is encouraging to hear Dr. Jackson say that they are taking advantage of it, even to a greater comparable extent than the whites.

DISCUSSION

Exaggerated Interest In Higher Education Foreign Born Trait

The first extensive study of foreign-born Negroes in the United States has been made by Ira De A. Reid, professor of sociology at Atlanta University, in "The Negro Immigrant," published by Columbia University Press. Reid notes that the present foreign-born Negro population of the country numbers approximately 100,000 persons, who have immigrated largely from the Caribbean area and who form a cultural group quite distinct from the native Negro population.

In general, this volume seeks to present the many significant aspects of this Negro immigration. It analyzes the impact of United States culture upon the immigrant Negro groups, and the effect of their cultures upon the native Negro population. On the basis of these steps, the book, in summary, provides an inductive analysis of the problems and conflicts arising from this inter-cultural and inter-racial differentation.

The volume meets an important need for basic material in the field of cultural and racial adjustments.

"High schools and colleges in New York City have an unusually high foreign-born Negro representation Reid writes. "It seems a justifiable opinion that Negroes, foreign and native have developed an almost exaggerated interest in higher education as an avenue of escape to the accumulation of wealth."

The desire for learning was not because the West Indies Negroes are more "intelligent" than native-born Negroes, the author says, but because the ones who had the desire to immigrate from the Indies were of a higher class than average.

"The Negro Immigrant" is one of a series of Studies in History, Economics and Public Law, No. 449, published by Columbia University Press, Morningside Heights, New York. It has 261 pages and sells for $3.50 per copy.

HIGHER EDUCATION FOR NEGROES EYED

Educators Ponder Ruling Race Must Be Given Same Opportunity As Whites

ATLANTA—(AP)—The Southern University Conference today authorized appointment of a committee to study the question of providing Negroes professional and graduate study in the South.

Action came after President Harmon W. Caldwell, of the University of Georgia, suggested subsidization of Southern Negro colleges by the states as one possible solution to the problem of higher education for Negroes.

The Supreme Court recently ruled in a Missouri case that if a state did not furnish Negroes adequate facilities for graduate study it must admit them to the state universities and graduate schools.

Chancellor O. C. Carmichael, of Vanderbilt University at Nashville asked if it would be possible for Tennessee to designate Fisk University as a university for Negroes, and have the state pay Fisk "a certain sum" to allow Negroes to do professional work there.

"Personally, I believe it would work," Caldwell replied. "It seems to be the answer to the problem. Also, I personally believe it would be legal."

Dean F. C. Smith, of the University of Tennessee, said the Tennessee Legislature had "appropriated money for that purpose."

"And not one penny has been called for to send them to Fisk," he added.

Smith reported the University of Tennessee must face mandamus proceedings in court Monday to admit six Negroes, four to its graduate school and two to its law school.

The Tennessee law, he said, provided a $50 fine and a 30-day jail sentence for university officials allowing Negroes to enter a white university.

Dr. John J. Tiger, of the University of Florida, said the setting up of Negro land grant colleges in several states had proved "a satisfactory solution."

Dr. Caldwell said he did not believe it was feasible "just now" to admit Negroes to Southern institutions used by white students.

"The most practical solution," he believed the subsidization plan was "the best solution."

"For example, Atlanta has a fine university center for Negroes," he said. "The state might give to a private Negro institution a subsidy, allowing the school to expand and set up professional schools of law, medicine and dentistry. The state also might buy the services of those institutions."

Question Is Discussed

The question was discussed in the light of a Supreme Court decision in a Missouri case requiring states to furnish Negroes adequate facilities for graduate study or admit them to their state universities and graduate schools.

On the recommendation of Dean F. C. Smith, of the University of Tennessee, the educators authorized appointment of a committee to study the question of higher education for Negroes in the South. Caldwell was named chairman.

Dr. Francis P. Gaines, of Washington and Lee University, Lexington, Va., was elected president of the conference, representing 41 colleges and universities in 13 Southern states. Chancellor A. B. Butts, of the University of Mississippi and Charles E. Diehl, president of Southwestern University, Memphis, Tenn., were named vice president and secretary-treasurer, respectively.

Discussing subsidization of private Negro colleges, Chancellor O. C. Carmichael, of Vanderbilt University, asked if it would be possible for Tennessee to designate Fisk University at Nashville, as a university for Negroes and "subsidize" it for professional work. Fisk is one of the few Negro colleges in the South with a graduate school.

"Personally, I believe it would work," Caldwell replied. "Also, I personally believe it would be legal."

Money "Appropriated"

Dean Smith, of the University of Tennessee, asserted the Tennessee Legislature had "appropriated money for that purpose" and added "that not one penny has been called for to send them to Fisk."

Smith reported the University of Tennessee faced mandamus proceedings in court Monday seeking to force the institution to admit four Negroes in its graduate school and two in its law school.

Dr. John J. Tigert, of the University of Florida, said he did not agree to the "economic advisability" of setting up separate graduate schools for Negroes and whites. He added that Negro land grant colleges in several states had proved "a satisfactory solution."

Caldwell discussed separate schools for Negroes and whites, but termed it "an unfortunate solution."

"It would mean less financial support for white institutions and certainly a weakening of graduate schools."

He also suggested the possibility of separate divisions of university for Negroes, with an exchange of equipment, libraries and faculty.

ATLANTA, Oct. 31—(AP)—A Southern educator Tuesday suggested setting up regional Negro universities or subsidizing existing Negro colleges with state funds as possible solutions for providing Negroes with professional and graduate study in the South.

REGIONAL SCHOOLS FOR NEGROES URGED

Leaders of 41 Colleges and Universities in South Seek Answer to Equal Study

SPECIAL COMMITTEE NAMED

Dr. H. W. Caldwell of Georgia Citing Recent Ruling Says Speed Is Necessary

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

ATLANTA, Oct. 31—Leaders from forty-one colleges and universities in the South determined today to seek a solution to the problem of providing Negroes with equality in opportunity to study law, medicine and other advanced subjects.

Taking cognizance of the possibility that constitutional provisions require that States must either furnish Negrose with adequate facilities for graduate study or admit them to the State universities and graduate schools, the fifth annual Southern University Conference instructed for the appointment of a committee to make a study and submit recommendations. Dr. Harmon W. Caldwell, president of the University of Georgia, heads the committee.

In a general discussion at the closing session of the conference, Dr. Caldwell, who presided, declared "we must do something quickly."

Pointing out that the Supreme Court decided in a Missouri case that a State must provide Negroes with proper opportunities for graduate study, and that court action is pending in a similar case in Tennessee, Dr. Caldwell said:

"I do not believe it is feasible to admit Negroes to Southern institutions used by white students just now.

"The most practical solution would be in setting up regional Negro universities to which all States in the region would contribute. This arrangement would relieve the States of tremendous if not prohibitive costs of establishing separate graduate schools."

O. C. Carmichael, Chancellor of Vanderbilt University, Nashville,

Tenn., asked if it would be possible for Tennessee to designate Fisk University as a university for Negroes and have the State pay Fisk "a certain sum to allow Negroes to do professional work there."

Dr. Caldwell replied that he believed this plan would be legal.

Dr. John J. Tigert, president of the University of Florida, said the establishment of Negro land grant colleges in several States had proved "a very satisfactory solution."

Dr. F. P. Gaines, president of Washington and Lee University, was chosen president of the conference, succeeding Dr. J. R. McCain, president of Agnes Scott College of Atlanta.

Dr. A. B. Butts, chancellor of the University of Mississippi, was chosen vice president. Charles E. Diehl, president of Southwestern University, has two more years to serve as secretary-treasurer.

The executive committee of the conference discussed the status of Louisiana State University as a result of the recent "Louisiana scandals" investigation but deferred action.

ADVANCE STUDY FOR NEGROES UP

NEGROES IN WHITE COLLEGES

A supreme court ruling that a state must provide negroes the same opportunity to study law, medicine and other advanced subjects as white residents came before southern educators at a meeting in Atlanta Tuesday, says an Associated Press dispatch.

"We must do something quickly," asserted President Harmon W. Caldwell of the University of Georgia, discussion leader at a conference of representatives of 41 colleges and universities situated in 13 states.

"Already the University of Georgia has received applications for admission from three negroes and I understand a hearing is to be held soon on a petition for mandamus to force the University of Tennessee to admit six negroes, four to its graduate school and two to its law school. Similar situations doubtless exist in other southern institutions used by white students.

"The most practical solution," he continued, "would be the setting up of regional negro universities to which all states in the region would contribute. This arrangement would save the states of a tremendous—if not prohibitive— cost of setting up separate graduate schools.

"However, if it should not meet supreme court requirements — and it might not — two other possible solutions suggest themselves:

"1. Expansion of negro state colleges to provide for adequate instruction in law, medicine, teaching, the ministry, social work and other such subjects.

"2. Financial aid to privately-owned negro colleges and universities to accomplish the same purpose, provided state laws will permit this."

Dr. Caldwell observed that development of high school and college education for negroes had contributed to bring about a "greater need than ever before" for advance training. In 1903, for example, he said, there were less than 4,000 negroes in colleges in the United States; now, there are approximately 40,000. "We must meet that need some way or another," he said.

President Caldwell mentions two "possible" solutions, to neither of which objections are filed. However, the field of possibility is one with such extended horizons that a third "possible" solution may be permissible, such as:

3. Let the state institutions discontinue educating doctors, preachers and lawyers, and permit Mercer University, Emory University, and other institutions of higher education to perform these duties. These institutions have high standards, high classifications, and have demonstrated great capacities in this direction. They can furnish patients, clients and sinners with just as capably trained servants as can the state institutions, and at the same time dispose of the race issue raised by the supreme court decision.

THE SCHOOL TRANSFER SYSTEM AND RACE CHILDREN

Apprehension is registered in many quarters with regard to what appears to be a gradual persistent attempt toward segregated schools The question has been raised time and again is Chicago drifting toward a separate school system?

Certainly the policy of transferring Race pupils from one school into another opens to question the motive that lies behind such a procedure. It appears that the basis for this transfer method was established a few years ago when the Board of Education, submitting to pressure of race prejudice, redistricted the school population. As a result Race children are more and more concentrated in schools where no other racial group is in attendance. This, obviously is tantamount to placing a color bar against them.

School authorities, of course, hide behind a very convenient though highly questionable argument. When school principals are pressed by parents for an explanation as to the cause for transferring their children, the stock answer is, "They do not belong to this district." Why should a boy have to go two or three miles away from his locality to attend school, when there is one within a stone's throw of his home? It is evident, that beside the clear intent of segregation, the redistribution of the school population was done without regard for the hardship and inconvenience which it imposes upon parents and children alike. It was done in the interest of race prejudice.

Unless we fight now the insufferable evil of school transfer, we are likely to wake up and find ourselves faced with as complete a segregated school system in Chicago as exists in Alabama, Georgia, Mississippi and in other southern states We must not allow segregation to flourish unchallenged in our public schools here. This is a very serious matter. For, upon our public schools rests the responsibility for the perpetuity of our democratic principles. The public schools were founded with the view of providing a sure guarantee against any possible demolition of the structure of the temple of democracy. To allow them to be used as agencies that negate our civil and constitutional rights, is to encourage the devil to abide with us. In so doing we hasten our own destruction.

Race teachers in Chicago should be allowed to teach in any school. Most assuredly there should be no prohibition on our children based upon their racial identity.

LETTERS FROM THE PEOPLE

Think for Yourself and Let Others Enjoy the Privilege to Do So.—Voltaire

THE WESLEYAN DRIVE

To the Editor of The Telegraph:

It is a pleasure to know that the Negro is interested in saving Wesleyan College. There are those who do not know that the Negro is interested in every worth-while institution of the city. We all know that there are some who do not know that the Negro's salvation is held in the hands of the Christian churches and schools; it matters not whether they be white or black.

No one will ever know just what Wesleyan has meant to the Negro of this city. It has a silent influence that has never been expressed.

In cities that have great religious colleges you will always find that the real relations are very congenial. Wesleyan College has been an inspiration to Negro girls. These Wesleyan students have caused many of the Negro girls to aspire for the higher and finer things in life. Therefore it is the duty of the Negro as well as the white people to help save this institution.

I pity the person who is not interested in any institutions but those operated by his own race. We are all citizens of this city and what helps one helps all.

We as Negroes must realize that the better white schools we have in Macon and throughout the South the better schools we are going to have for Negroes. Therefore we should do our best to help save this great institution.

I was in a city, a very fine little city, where the race relations were fine, but there arose a difference and misunderstanding between the races and the only thing that prevented bloodshed was that there was a female college in that city. The cool heads said, "Never will we disturb the fine Christian young womanhood of Georgia with a race riot in our fair city."

What was that school worth to the Negroes of that city? It was there that I for the first time realized that what helps one race helps all races. It was there and then that I learned that all mankind held a claim on everything within me that is true and noble. It was there and then that I was fitted to serve humanity because I did away with racial selfishness and became interested in people regardless of race.

Therefore let us all do something for this school if we are called on. Suppose ten pastors would give ten dollars each. That would be one hundred dollars and would open the way for our group to put two thousand dollars in this great effort which has been a beacon light in our fair city for more than a hundred years.

FEDERAL AID.

The modern school is a far cry from the first schools set up by the pioneers for the education of the youth. Early American life was simpler; needs were fewer. It was logical enough then to consider the training of the youth as a local community or family problem.

Thomas Jefferson, however, had another conception of the educational needs of America and, like a few of his famous contemporaries, felt that schooling was especially necessary in a democracy. These leaders thought of education as a national problem and endeavored to interest the people in making schools available to the children of all citizens. The schools were finally developed, however, under the supervision of the states and local units, which bore the financial burdens. There was no guarantee that a child because of American birth would receive adequate training. Many children have been handicapped in some school districts for lack of sufficient school funds.

The development of the nation, with vast changes in wealth and shiftings in population, accentuated the school problems still more. More and more the money gravitated toward the industrial centers, while the rapid increase in population was due to a great extent to the large families of the rural areas.

South Carolina, along with other Southern states, is bearing a disproportionate share of the load in the rearing and educating of children for the industrialized sections of the nation.

Experts say that it cost about $18,000 to rear and educate a child. Is not the South contributing greatly of its poverty to the wealth of other sections through the flow of its trained human resources toward those centers? Should not those sections be interested in better schooling for this part of their future citizens?

There is a bill, in the present congress, which purports to give federal aid to the states according to the need of those states for education. This bill is an attempt to insure equal training of all children in America regardless of the locality of the child. It does not achieve these aims, of course, but it will take some of the money from where the money is and use it where the children are.

Is this not as it should be? Is the South going to allow the fear of the race question and federal control to defeat the first opportunity its children have had to receive equality in education with the rest of the country? Why penalize the whites, who after all, are the greater taxpayers, in the hope of keeping the negro down? Someday the South will learn that it cannot keep the negro down without keeping the whites down too.

But federal aid for education will not be voted by the congress now. The South stands to benefit most from federal aid for schools and the South is lost in the congress for all the congressional chairmanships held by Southerners. The Southern states are not the doubtful states and already everything in Washington is beginning to revolve around 1940.

EMBREE G... LIGHT OF THE ACHIEVEMENTS

Local Meet Shows Over Half of 3-Million Fisk Goal In

A Negro "Einstein" and a Negro "Edison" were told of by Dr. Edwin R. Embree of the Julius Rosenwald Foundation at a meeting on Negro Education in the South at the University Club, 3605 Washington boulevard, last Friday night. He referred to them to show that neither the General Education Board nor the Rosenwald Fund had made a mistake in backing the Negro, and to show that the Negro is making contributions to American learning.

The meeting was sponsored by Bishop William Scarlett, Charles Nagel, lawyer, and J. Lionberger Davis, chairman of the National Security Bank. About 50 of the wealthiest and most influential white citizens formed the audience. Beside Embree, the other principal speakers were Chancellor Oliver C. Carmichael of Vanderbilt U., Nashville, Tenn., and Pres. Thomas E. Jones of Fisk U.

The meeting was part of a campaign for a $3,000,000 endowment fund for Fisk over half of which has already been realized.

Mr. Embree in his address said in part:

Tells Marvelous Work

"There is a young man named William S. Claytor—and that is a name worth remembering, because you will hear it a great deal before you die—William S. Claytor is a totologist.

"I am sorry that Dr. Carmichael left, because he is probably the only man in the room who knows what a totologist is. Totology is that aspect of mathematics which deals with constants as contrasted with most aspects of mathematics which deal with variables. William S. Claytor is America's leading totologist. Princeton has, after years of prejudice and discrimination against Negro students, invited this young man to come to that eminent group of mathematicians headed by Einstein and take his place with the eight or ten leading mathematical students of this country. This boy is a Negro. No other fellowship has been given to a mathematician, white or Negro.

"Last month I was in California. I went to the California Institute of Technology, which is, as all things in Cal., an amazing institution, grown up in no time at all. The same type of people that Harper brought to Chicago suddenly went to that Institute. I was out to see a young Negro to whom we had given a fellowship named LuValle, who first broke into print as winning in the Olympics. When I went to the University at Pasadena—it is a very impressive place, handsome buildings and busy laboratories—I had no difficulty getting hold of Morgan or Wills, but I had to wait two days for LuValle, because he was working on the chemical approach for smashing this poor little atom, and he was so engrossed in his problem with a group of assistants around him that literally day and night he was working on it. and I waited two days to see him. Millikan said to me: 'well, you can't expect to see people like that. They are busy on important things.' And this is one of the men who is making history in physical chemistry at this time. That is a young Negro who, in his spare time, wins Olympic races for the American team."

PASS IT ON

Editor P. B. Young, Jr., of the Norfolk Journal and Guide is "doing his stuff". He writes the "Editor's Note Book" which is one of the newsiest corners in that nationally read newspaper. Again he sends out some good news about the achievement in Negro education in South Carolina. We may not be able to publish these interesting paragraphs again soon However, we wish to pass this one one to our many readers in the Palmetto State:

"One of the most interesting institutions to visit is South Carolina State A. and M. College at Orangeburg, whose third president is alert and progressive M. F. Whittaker. A sound curriculum, with emphasis on agricultural and mechanical training, matches a notable physical expansion. Just a few weeks ago the college, a land-grant-institution, dedicated two new buildings—a $65,000 men's dormitory and a $80,000 library building—named after two previous presidents, Dr. Thomas E. Miller, one-time congressman, and Dr. R. S. Wilkinson. Dr. Miller founded the college.

At present it is putting the finishing touches on a $120,000 mechanical industries building that is modern in every respect, as fire proof as scientific design and construction can make it, and planned for specific purposes. The main section of the structure is up and partly occupied and two wings are to follow. The main section is constructed for enlargement via additional floors. The present and entire future development of the college is following and will follow a skillfully worked out five-year scheme, a beautifully executed draft of which hangs in a lobby of the new library.

The mechanical industries building was put up with only eight skilled mechanics. Of these two were faculty members and three were students. The rest of the workmen were supplied by WPA, the structure being partly financed by that federal agency. A great portion of the credit for this and other construction on the campus is given to Professor Paul Vernon Jewell, head of the mechanics department at the college. He passed up an opportunity for sabbatical leave to do further advanced study on a fellewship to contribute his brilliantly expert supervision to the physical development of the institution.

Professor Jewell is licensed by the State of South Carolina as a mechanical and as an electrical engineer. He is a graduate of Massachusetts Institute of Technilogy, a master of science from Ohio State university, where he was elected to Sigma Xi, honorary engineering society ranking with Phi Beta Kappa in its field, and a member of the American Society of Engineers. He is a fine teacher, with an unswerving devotion to his calling, an excellent administrator, and a proved engineer. During the days of CWA the City of Orangeburg need ed a supervising engineer for a drainage project. Right at home they found him: Professor Jewell and put him in charge of it, and over a crew of workmen of both races. Respect for Negro ability comes that way.

He took great pride in telling of the work of a student in drafting and having approved plans for the completion, at a great saving to the congregation, of a large church structure in Orangeburg. His physics and electrical measurements laboratory he exhibited a similar pride in describing. It is equipped largely with instruments made possible through a $5,000 grant from the General Education Board. The fund was offered about five years ago, and was to become available when a fireproof building was completed to house the equipment.

As rapidly as the new buildings go up at the college another engineer, this time one in the landscaping field—Charles Dickerson, a Columbus, Ohio, native who studied at Ohio State, plans and supervises the beautifying of the grounds. Many extra hours he and Professor Jewell, and President Whittaker, and others of the loyal faculty, work on sketches, plans and blueprints. It is a labor of love.

Someone has said that the best executives are those who surround themselves with able associates and imbue these associates with a driving desire to produce. This test alone President Whittaker passes with flying colors. Quietly, without ostentation, he dreams, plans, and executes, his five-year plan of academic and physical expansion—the latter involving a half million dollars; and in these things he has the fine help of devoted men and women on his staff who during the 1937-38 term taught 2,182 students in the regular and summer session, all in college level courses."

We are proud of the South Carolina State college. It's the apex of our public school system. One glorious thing which helped to bring about the marvelous growth at State college, Bro. Young, is that this institution has never been contaminated with incomplacent leadership.

Leaders of Both Races Make Educational Plans

To Seek Broader Training For Race Ministers

DURHAM, N. C.—Better educational opportunities for the rank and file of Negro ministers in different parts of the country through interdenominational cooperation was the theme discussed at a conference of colored and white church leaders here Tuesday, April 18, called by the Federal Council of Churches and the Home Missions Council, and attended by twenty-five colored and five white church leaders from twelve denominational bodies.

The purpose of the conference, presented for the convening committee by Dr. George E. Haynes of the Federal Council, cited the facts of large sums of money appropriated by philanthropic foundations, missions boards and government for lay education and for professional training of doctors, teachers, nurses, etc., of religious leaders, especially ministers, among Negro people. He also cited that the race is desperately in need of competent religious leadership; that the rank and file of Negro ministers need the type of training that will keep them abreast with community needs and changes; that the training for their position of leadership is as important as that for the trained physician or educational leader.

TO SUGGEST CAUSES

"We are invited to this conference to plan suggested courses of study needed," said Dr. Haynes, "to seek ways and means of strengthening those institutes that already exist, and to coordinate the efforts of all agencies that will cooperate in inter-denominational promotion. There is special need for more systematic instruction in short-term institutes for both rural and urban Negro ministers."

Reports of experience with institutes for colored ministers were given by church leaders from Alabama, Florida, Mississippi, Georgia and North Carolina. The topics, "The Need of Interdenominational Institutes," and "What Can be Done Through Interdenominational Cooperation" were fully discussed.

COMMITTEES NAMED

Committees were appointed that worked out recommendations to all interested national church bodies and boards of all interested denominations. Included in these recommendations was the report of the Committee on Organization, Bishop S. L. Greene, chairman, and Dr. A. B. McCoy, secretary, embracing plans for a nation-wide committee to function under the Federal Council of Churches and the Home Missions Council with a sub-committee on courses of study and a business committee to find ways and means for promotion of the plans as well as for affiliation of state committees.

RECOMMENDATIONS

Recommendations from the Committee on Courses of Study, Dr. James W. Eichelberger, Jr., chairman, and Chaplain H. V. Richardson, secretary, were also approved which included general recommendations that courses of study should be centered around experience; that they need not conform to existing academic programs.

Courses will be outlined for a number of fields of study from which institutes may make selections suitable to their various areas. The need for setting up standards was considered.

EDUCATION- 1939
DISCUSSION

FROM AN EDITOR'S NOTE BOOK

RALEIGH, N. C.—In 1928 the North Carolina Department of Public Instruction called Harold L. Trigg from the principalship of one of the State's best high schools to the post of supervisor of Negro high schools. There were then only 24 public high schools for Negroes in the State. There are now 102 high schools, attended by 35,000 youths, one-tenth of whom will graduate this Spring. Only six counties in the State that have sufficient colored population to warrant a Negro high school under the dual system have none. Hertford, Warren, Johnston, Montgomery, Robeson, Alexander and Wake counties have accredited rural high schools. Wake and Robeson have five each. Seventy-one counties furnish bus transportation for high school children. The high school situation has vastly improved under Mr. Trigg's supervision and leadership, although it is far from the State standard as any informed North Carolina educator will readily tell you, and as a recent report to Governor Hoey pointed out. But the fact remains that there has been improvement, all through the depression and recession years. In a long range program, approaching the problem realistically, the progress made is notable. There are many leavening factors in the steady, if slow adjustment in the realm of Negro schools in North Carolina. The main driving forces are Mr. Trigg and Dr. N. C. Newbold, director of the division of Negro education.

MR. TRIGG

* * * *

DR. NEWBOLD'S endeavors in the field of Negro education in North Carolina ante-date Mr. Trigg's by a good many years, and a comparison of conditions when he started with the situation now would be illuminating. But that is not so important, since relatively speaking the status of Negro schools in North Carolina, as elsewhere in the South, is distressingly low. To this writer Mr. Trigg paid Mr. Newbold a gracious compliment: "He is the interpreter of each race to the other." Mr. Newbold, so it is said, can go among white people and allay their fears of the expanding needs of the Negro. Likewise he is able to go among colored people and allay their fears of hostile attitudes on the part of white people. The leaders among the Negro people in North Carolina cooperate splendidly in all educational programs, working shoulder to shoulder with Dr. Newbold and Mr. Trigg for the advancement of the schools from the elementary to the college.

AS ELSEWHERE, the pressure is on in North Carolina for equality of opportunity for Negroes in the matter of graduate schools. North Carolina, like Virginia and other Southern states set up certain standards for its Negro teachers and educational leaders, but makes no provisions within the State for attaining these standards. For example, Mr. Trigg received his advanced training at Syracuse and Columbia. The State demands university trained men but prefers having them trained in the North to opening the doors of the State university to them. There is something paradoxical in the responsibility which the State places upon men and women trained in northern schools and the suspicion with which its white people look upon northern ways. If the State legislature, which is made up mostly of rural lawyers, farmers and business men, with a good sprinkling of city corporation lawyers, can ever be convinced that the State is confronted with a duty it cannot sidestep, the State colleges at Durham and Greensboro will be able to do graduate work in some fields. There are those in North Carolina who believe that the day is not far distant when the University of North Carolina will be providing training in medicine and law for Negroes.

COLORED CITIZENS have received generous recognition in the administration of government agencies, Federal and State, in North Carolina. They are pretty well integrated within all departments having to do with health, education, recreation, unemployment and relief. The following impressive list is an eye-opener:

MRS. IRMA NEAL HENRY, Consultant on Negro Affairs, WPA, for the State.

LEANDER G. BLACKUS, State Supervisor WPA Recreation for Negroes.

MRS. NELL HUNTER, Assistant State Choral Director.

H. I. F. NANTON, State Supervisor of Housing Survey.

MISS E. LOUISE COOPER, State Supervisor Negro Work, WPA Adult Education.

J. PERCY BOND, State Director National Youth Administration for Negroes.

JOHN W. MITCHELL, Federal District Farm Agent.

S. B. SIMMONS, State Supervisor Agricultural Education.

MISS LUCY FULLER JAMES, State Supervisor Home Economics.

ROBERT E. JONES, State Supervisor 4-H Clubs.

MRS. D. F. LOWE, State Supervisor Home Demonstration Agents.

DR. WALTER J. HUGHES, Attache State Board of Health.

MISS MAE HARPER, In charge of State Employment Service Negro office. (There are offices with Negro personnel in all of the principal cities)

H. L. TRIGG, State Supervisor of Negro High Schools.

MISS MARIE McIVER, State Supervisor of Negro Elementary Schools.

W. RANDOLPH JOHNSON, Negro Consultant, State Board of Charities and Public Welfare. (There are 30 case workers employed in various counties by the Board.)

PRESIDENT ROBERT P. DANIEL is mobilizing more support for Shaw University in the ranks of the white Baptists. The American Baptist Home Mission Society, which in former years sponsored the institution, invited Dr. Daniel to address white Baptist Associations last autumn in Missouri, Illinois, Iowa, Utah, Pennsylvania and Indiana on behalf of Shaw and other Baptist colleges. Needless to say, the dynamic president of Shaw awakended new interest among northern and western Baptists which lagged when the trustees of Shaw University resolved that it was time for the institution to have a Negro president. The prospects are that support which was withdrawn at the time will be fully restored. Shaw had an enrollment the first semester of 442, which is close to the maximum that can be accommodated. There were 177 in the college freshmen class

U. S. Survey Shows A Great Increase In Vocationally-Trained Workers

WASHINGTON, Feb. 24—The office of education, U. S. Department of Interior, has just reported to Secretary of Interior Harold L. Ickes on on the first national survey ever nade of vocational education and guidance opportunities for the Race n the United States.

Five hundred "white collar" workers on the relief rolls participated in the survey in addition o approximately 40 professional workers.

John W. Studebaker, commissioner of education, this week reported some of the significant facts revealed by this survey, which was conducted in 200 communities of 33 states and the District of Columbia.

Few Trained in Skills

The survey report indicates that 'approximately 55 per cent of the total number of young people, 16 years old and over gainfully employed are engaged in occupations requiring little or no skill."

It points out, however, that "it is well for Negro students, teachers, and counselors to know that Negroes are engaged in many highly skilled occupations, generally with success."

Vocational Agriculture

More than half of the Race in the United States live in rural areas. The study of vocational education in agriculture shows decided enrollment increases. In evening classes in agriculture, there was an increase in the number of men enrolled of from 5,200 to 15,00 over a six-year period. The enrollment of women in these classes increased from 300 to 3,100.

It is recommended, as a temporary measure, that vocational guidance and preparation be introduced in the upper grades of elementary schools in order to benefit over-age pupils who drop out of school early, and in order to provide vocational preparation for pupils who otherwise would not receive it.

Home Economics

There was an increase over a six-year period of more than 300 per cent in the number of vocational education classes in home economics. This is significant, the office of education study concludes, "because the training that Negroes received in these classes can be put to immediate use in their homes."

Comparatively few however, study child care, nursing, hygiene and parent education. Few boys are enrolled in home economics courses although large numbers of men are engaged in occupations related to home making. More than 62 per cent of all gainfully employed women are in domestic and personal service, as are 12 per cent of the gainfully employed men.

"Since so large a percentage of Negro workers are employed in these occupations, and since the demands in personal service occupations are increasing in number and complexity, the school, through home economics instruction or some other agency, should definitely address itself to the task of preparing persons for effective adjustments in these occupations," it is suggested.

Trades and Industries

The number of federally aided courses in trades and industries offered in high schools is limited in comparison with the total number of courses offered, and in many of those offered relatively few are enrolled.

Among the courses attracting the largest number of students in trade and industrial pursuits are auto mechanics, carpentry and woodwork, masonry, mining, shoemaking and repairing, tailoring, industrial arts and mechanical drawing.

The possibility of increasing the opportunities to receive vocational education in trades and industries should be explored.

The survey disclosed that many of the teachers of vocational education are inadequately prepared and that the handicaps which their inadequate preparation places upon pupils may result in serious consequences for the individuals concerned.

Salaries of Race teachers of vocational education range from $1,060 to $1,871 per year, the lowest salaries being received by teachers of agriculture in rural areas.

Guidance

The survey points out that the kind of home and its upkeep, the opportunities for study and healthful sleep and recreation, quality and number of books, magazines and newspapers available have a bearing on the pupil's ability to profit by the educational program provided.

Some significant recommendations made as the result of survey findings are as follows:

1. That Negro land-grant colleges take a more active leadership in promoting the occupational adjustment of Negroes;

2. That citizens in each community inform themselves concerning the vocational education needs of Negroes, acquaint themselves with the provisions of all federal aid programs for education, and take the necessary steps to insure that Negroes receive equitable benefits from such programs;

3. That schools for Negroes institute programs of guidance for youth, and extension programs for the re-education of adults;

4. "That individuals and groups interested in the improvement of educational facilities for Negroes continue and increase their efforts to promote equality of educational opportunity and equitable distribution of funds without regard to race or color, especially with respect to federal and state funds allotted to education."

Permanent Committee On Education Is Objective

Reflector Bureau.

By HENRY AVERILL

Raleigh, April 3.—North Carolina's future General Assemblies Governors and educational departments will never be without benefit of the advice of a permanent commission which had made a thorough and complete study of the state's educational system and needs, under terms of a joint resolution introduced by Senator Bob McIntyre of Robeson county and approved by the current legislature.

Under it there will be appointed by the Governor a commission of nine members, to be known as the Commission on Education which will be a permanent body which can be terminated only by direct and specific action of some future General Assembly.

In addition there will be an Advisory Council of Education "to consist of 25 members, selected by the Governor as fairly representative of al groups in the State directly or indirectly concerned in public education."

The duty of the Commission on Education as set forth in the resolution is: "To study the problems of public education in North Carolina and to develop a long time program for improvement of public education in this State; to make recommendations to the Governor, the Advisory Budget Commission and to the General Assembly as to such improvements therein as may be recommended for each succeeding biennium.

"The scope of such work shall include the University of North Carolina and all colleges and institutions of higher education supported, in whole or in part, by the State of North Carolina."

The Advisory Council would be expected "to give special thought and study to the relations between business and education." It would meet when called into session by the Commission on Education.

Specifically the resolution names among the studies to be undertaken by the Commission on Education those "made by the Retirement Commission, the Commission for Exceptional Children, the Educational Commission, and the Commission of Negro Education."

Provisions of the McIntyre resolution are wholly in accord with views expressed by Governor Clyde R. Hoey and others interested in the progress of education in North Carolina.

The Robeson Senator was an appropriate introducer of the resolution. He comes quite naturally and rightfully by his interest in educational affairs of North Carolina in view of the fact that his father, Stephen McIntyre was one of the leaders in earlier efforts to advance the educational cause in North Carolina.

Students Oppose Negroes at UNC

Poll Also Shows They Are Against Giving Girls Corsages and Late Dates at Dances

CHAPEL HILL, N. C., Feb. 8.—A poll on such questions as corsages for dances, the admission of Negroes to the university, late dates and freshman co-eds was conducted by the Carolina Political Union at the mid-winter German club dances held here during the week-end and the result, announced today, showed that:

Girls attending the dances voted 101 to 64 for prohibiting corsages at university dances. Boys voted 207 to 70 against flowers.

Thirty-six boys voted yes to the question: "Should Negroes be admitted to the university?" while 237 said no. Fifteen girls said yes and 150 no.

"Should girls give late dates to boys other than the ones who took them to the dances," was answered negatively by 176 boys and positively by 98. Girls also disapproved by 109 to 59.

"Should co-eds be admitted to the university as freshmen" was answered yes by 220 boys and no by 55. Girls were not so definitely in favor of the idea, but approved 99 to 65.

The poll was taken on the automatic voting machines which have been in the CPU's custody since last fall. Girls and boys used separate machines.

GOOD MORNING

By LOUIE D. NEWTON.

A PLAN OF WORK.

Charles L. Gideons, principal of the Booker T. Washington Evening school in Atlanta, invited me to speak to his faculty Monday evening. In the meantime, Florence Read, president of Spelman College, called me and asked me to come by her home for dinner with President Everett Carlton Herrick, of Andover Newton Theological school, of Boston, and after dinner they went over with me to the meeting at this large negro school, named for one of our truly great Americans.

While waiting in the office for the meeting, I saw on the wall a quotation from Booker T. Washington, which reads, "Plan Your Work and Work Your Plan." This simple, but profound bit of philosophy seems to me to fairly well interpret the work that is being done in this wonderful evening school. Opening the meeting, we listened to a violin solo by Drew Days. Maseeret's "Meditation," with Johnson Hubert at the piano—an amazing exhibit of the mastery of technique, and withal a sense of interpretation that was sublime. They followed this with Borowski's 'Adoration." These young men had a plan—a plan to master the violin and the piano, and they worked their plan.

As I talked to those fine men and women composing the faculty of the evening school, I felt I was face to face with people who are deeply committed to a great plan—the plan and program of leading out the minds of their pupils to life's fullest and finest expression, by the will of God.

I was interested to find that they have 1,500 pupils in the evening school, ranging from the first grade through the twelfth, half of them being adults. The friend who escorted me to my car was John Bozeman, a man 52 years old, who works all day and goes to school at night. He is in the eighth grade. In this evening school they teach the regular courses of study with emphasis upon vocational courses in gardening, tailoring, sewing, cooking, home hygiene, etc. They will graduate 125 students in vocational work this year, and 65 in high school work. The day school has an enrollment of 4,000 students. C. L. Harper is the principal of the day school.

The progress of the negro race is one of the bright spots in our southern scene. We may well rejoice that our neighbor race is advancing according to the philosophy of Booker T. Washington—"Plan Your Work and Work Your Plan."

Criticize Atlanta U. Prexy For Prediction That Negroes Won't 'Crash' Dixie Colleges

"Times When Silence More Eloquent Than Speech", Dr. Rufus E. Clement Is Admonished

ATLANTA, GA.—Dr. Rufus E. Clement, president of Atlanta University, was criticized last week for stating publicly that the admission of Negroes to Southern universities "will probably not happen in your lifetime and mine."

Dr. Clement's statement was made to the education committee of the Georgia Interracial Commission, which had met to consider the Gaines-Missouri University decision as it affected Georgia.

"When you make the statement that Negroes will not be admitted to graduate schools in Southern State Universities in our lifetime, you simply say that no Negro leader or educator should ever express even if he thinks it," the university president was told in an open letter from John Wesley Dobbs, president of the Atlanta Civic-Political League. "There are times when silence is more eloquent than speech. By what stretch of the imagination can you now predict what the next few years might bring to pass in any southern State?"

Calls Statement "Hasty"

Dobbs accused the university head of failing to weigh carefully the import and consequences of his "hasty statement".

Dr. Clement told the committee there were six possible courses for Georgia to take: (1- admit Negroes—which he said "will probably not happen in our lifetime"; (2) establish separate graduate schools; (3) ignore the Supreme Court's decision; (4) grant scholarships; (5) establish regional schools in connection with private schools; or (6) strengthen the entire Negro educational school set-up.

Criticizes Compromise

"Some of the white members of this Interracial Committee seemed so eager and anxious to accept your six point plan of procedure that they informed you that they had already taken the liberty to have it printed and passed on to the members of the State Board of Regents for their consideration. When so informed you offered no objection whatever. Your acquiescence prompted me to take the same liberty of passing on to the members of our Race in America the stand you take on so important a question," Dobbs wrote.

"In this same meeting sat two Negro presidents of State-supported institutions and two other Negro presidents of privately supported schools, like the one you represent. Be it said to their eternal credit that nothing was observed in their utterances that would compromise a group of people in the face of this momentous decision from the highest Tribunal of the land in its noble effort to lead our Race along the road of education," he concluded.

Race Members Present

Colored members of the committee present included: C. A. Scott, of the Atlanta Daily World; John Wesley Dobbs, of the Atlanta Civic and Political League; B. T. Hits Shortage Of Grade "A" Negro Schools

Wilberforce Head Asserts Howard Is Only Capable Institution

NEW YORK, N. Y. (By Cleveland G. Allen for ANP)—"There is not a single Negro institution of learning capable of providing graduate work for Negroes," Dr. W. Ormonde Walker, president of Wilberforce University, Ohio, told a New York audience last Sunday. "Howard University is the only school now having a semblance of a program and the beginning of an adequate and efficient faculty for such work. To extend over a wide surface without sufficient depth may lead to the collapse of our educational effort."

Commenting on the possible admission of Negroes to graduate schools now closed to them, the Wilberforce University head stated:

"Negro institutions will live or die according to their ability to adjust themselves to the changing needs of our society. With the opening of schools everywhere to Negroes, the need of separate institutions of learning becomes less and less, and unless those schools for Negroes unite in certain definite fields of specialization so that they will be able to offer a definite type of training, the necessity for their existence will come to an end," he said.

Education For Negroes In South to Be Studied

WASHINGTON, March 8.—(AP)—House members learned today the office of education plans a two-year study of higher education for negroes in the south.

Published hearings of an appropriations subcommittee on the annual interior department supply bill disclosed Dr. J. W. Studebaker commissioner of education, testified negro colleges and universities were having "unusual difficulty" in financing their programs.

He said these institutions were being called upon to provide more varied curricula. They were handicapped also, Dr. Studebaker said, by the fact philanthropists and foundations were making stricter demands upon colleges.

These conditions, he said, have necessitated the formulation of a plan to make the negro colleges fit in with a broad general program of education that would eliminate duplication of effort by the various institutions.

Howard Leads in Planned Program

Oklahoma City

By CLEVELAND M. ALLEN

NEW YORK.—(ANP)—Dr. D. Ormonde Walker, president of Wilberforce university, speaking at the Founder's Day exercises of Wilberforce University club of New York last Sunday at Emanuel A. M. E. Church, defended his administration and scored those who are "misrepresenting" the policies of the institution. President Walker called attention to the improvements that had been made in both the physical and administrative features, saying that Wilberforce had never been in a more promising condition and was no longer an experiment of the ability of the Negro to manage his own affairs. He also said no Negro college is capable of providing graduate work.

Speaking of accomplishments during his administration, Dr. Walker said that he had succeeded in establishing the confidence of the people in Wilberforce so that its credit is good for any amount; had standardized the library and brought about changes which were making for a new school. He said that when he became president he found an indebtedness of $287,000, and it has since been reduced to $159,000.

"Those who are trying to attack the present administration are enemies of the race," said the president, and warned the alumni here not to be influenced by these erroneous statements. He praised the administration of Bishop R. F. Wright, and said he did more for Wilberforce than any other previous president.

"The country was astonished recently at the decision of the supreme court relative to the State of Missouri wherein it was declared that Missouri must provide equal accommodation for the education of all of its citizens," he went on. "I am sure that it was heartening to the liberal forces now in control of our democracy to note the attitude of Mr. Justice Black, who despite that such a decision will affect the State of Alabama out of which he came, nevertheless was most pronounced in his denunciation of the attitude of the State of Missouri in denying equal accommodations to its citizens.

"Now the problem that faces these state institutions run for the benefit of the Negroes is that they may be foolishly led into the acceptance of a program for which they are not prepared, both in physical plant and faculty, and if I were the president of any of these state institutions, I would continue furnishing undergraduate training on a higher level and more efficient plane before embarking upon the hazardous sea of providing graduate work for Negro students.

"There is not a single Negro institution of learning capable of providing graduate work for Negroes. Howard university is the only school now having a semblance of a program, and the beginning of an adequate and efficient faculty for such work. To extend over a wide surface without sufficient depth may lead to the collapse of our educational effort."

Dr. Walker said that the University of North Carolina should open its doors to all citizens of that state who desire graduate work, as should also every state institution.

"Negro institutions," said Dr. Walker, "will live or die according to their ability to adjust themselves to the changing needs of our society. With the opening of schools everywhere to Negroes, the need of separate institutions of learning becomes less and less, and unless those schools for Negroes unite in certain definite fields of specialization so that they will be able to offer a definite type of training, the necessity for their existence will come to an end.

"Love of race and racial enterprise is not sufficient reason to cause Negroes to send their children to Negro institutions, for education knows and recognizes no color. Truth never considers race. The Negroes, then, if they are to save themselves from extirpation, must have something distinctly their own to offer, and it is here that Wilberforce seeks to answer this challenge. Without Wilberforce, the incapacity of Negroes to manage their own institutions would still be a mooted question. But here we have a striking example of the Negro's ability to produce its own leaders and maintain them in that leadership."

Higher Education For Negroes In South Be Studied

Washington, March 8.—(AP)—House members learned today the office of education plans a two-year study of higher education for negroes in the south.

GRADUATE PROGRAM WILL BE DISCUSSED

PLANS BEING COMPLETED FOR NEGRO EDUCATION SESSION HERE

A delegation from the Georgia State College, currently going through one of its busiest periods, will be in Milledgeville tomorrow and Monday to attend sessions of the University Council.

One of the topics expected to come up for discussion is a graduation program for negroes, emphasizing social science and extension.

In the local delegation will be B. F. Hubert, president; J. H. Jackson, Jr. business division; A. H. Gordon, research; E. C. Curtright, instruction director; F. M. Staley, agriculture; W. K. Payne, education; Leroy Brown, industrial, and A. B. Dixon, home economics.

The president and Professors Jackson, Gordon and Brown will leave this afternoon in time to attend some matters in Augusta, and will then go to Log Cabin near Sparta for the night.

Examinations for the second quarte's study were completed at the college yesterday, and the new term will commence Monday morning. A goodly number of teachers and others expecting to complete degree requirements is already on the campus. President Hubert predicted the enrollment would be large, and representative of all sections of Georgia.

Another event of Monday will be an address at noon by Dr. L. K. Williams of Chicago, president of the National Baptist Convention, who will head a group of notable educators on a visit to the college.

President Hubert said arrangements were rapidly being completed for the annual convention of the Georgia Teachers and Educational Association at Georgia State April 12-15, an event which will attract several thousand teachers.

The current Herald, association publication, is now being mailed to 6,500 persons, announcing the convention. On the Herald's front cover is a picture of Lucy Laney, an outstanding educator who founded the Haines Institute at Augusta.

Exhibits for the convention are now being assembled. They will be in the college gymnasium, to be viewed by negroes and white alike.

The convention will feature Georgia progress and the Georgia negro, attempting to show what has been done and what can be done toward improving conditions in this state. President Hubert, who is also president of the association, said the exhibits would be the best the group had ever shown if present plans go through, and he encouraged entries.

Now closing at the college is a trade and industrial conference attended by some thirty persons from throughout Georgia. The group was entertained last night at the president's home. J. F. Cannon, state trade supervisor, who is in Savannah, indicated special courses might be offered at the college this summer in a trade and technical school.

At present the college is devoting a great deal of attention toward the Bethesda benefit concert to be given at the auditorium Wednesday evening. Rehearsals are being held regularly, and a complete program rehearsal will take place at the auditorium Tuesday evening.

Exhibits from industrial, trades and commercial departments of Georgia State, will be placed at the auditorium for the public to see.

A week from tomorrow a group of teachers and students will visit Brookgreene Gardens in South Carolina.

A CLEAR EFFORT TO DUCK AN ISSUE.

The plan of the South Carolina senate judiciary subcommittee to evade the Missouri decision with reference to educational opportunities for Negroes, or to postpone definite action, is too transparent, and probably unconstitutional. Under provisions of the committee's bill, as reported in the press, each applicant for admission to the law school of the University of South Carolina, the only such school maintained by the state, would be required to obtain the endorsement of two members of the general assembly before the university could admit him.

The idea behind the bill seems to be this: All members of the general assembly are white, and presumably, therefore, no two of them would give a Negro applicant the required testimonial. Or maybe the idea is merely to delay a square facing of the issue. A Negro has applied for admission to the law school of the University of South Carolina and perhaps the senators who support the bill think he can be stalled off until he, or some other applicant, can have this proposed device tested in the United States supreme court.

But what is to be gained by delay in facing an issue? Perhaps a little ill will outside the South, and perhaps a decision of the supreme court more sharply worded than the one concerning the Missouri Negro's application for admission to a state school attended heretofore only by white students.

EDUCATION- 1939
DISCUSSION

Our College Edition

AMERICA'S great and gracious First Lady voices our purpose in publishing annually a College and School edition when she says: ". . Anything which tends to promote an interest in education is worthwhile."

It is our sincerest hope that we have lived up in this year's edition to the confidence she expressed: "I am sure that an edition such as you are publishing will be the source of much information to those who are active or interested in this field."

That some measure of our purpose has been achieved by the publication of these special supplements each spring seems to be indicated in the following typical comments:

Dr. Channing H. Tobias: "Such a display of the colleges' services should be helpful in impressing new donors."

Mr. G. Warfield Hobbs: "Admirable for the purpose of interesting young people in the possibilities of the schools."

Dr. Guy B. Johnson: "Very thorough and valuable source of information on the status and trends in Negro education. . . . interesting picture of Negro education."

Professor Belle Boone Beard: "I know of nothing that would do more to build up a better understanding and appreciation of the accomplishments of the Negro."

Dr. F. D. Bluford: "Your educational edition is getting better every year."

To the participating institutions and concerns in the special edition we express our deepest appreciation. Without their cooperation the edition could not be possible, and the benefits resulting from it would be lost. To our special contributors our thanks also for the splendid and informative special articles. We take a justifiable pride in the exemplification of training and skill in the edition, and for this the several departmental staffs of the Journal and Guide are to be commended.

One notable observation impressing itself upon those watching the developments in the field is the increasing democratization of education. Almost universally the facilities, personnel, and scope of training are expanding, and more and more students are enrolling in the schools and colleges. This brings nearer the ideal, the American principle of education for all. We shall be false to our best traditions until the opportunity, at least, for education is denied to no young American.

After that the wise choice of the field for which to seek preparation is the next vital matter. That this year's special edition helps in that respect is our most cherished ambition.

Enrollment Found On Increase In Negro Colleges And Universities

WASHINGTON, D. C. — Enrollment in Negro colleges and universities in 1938 shows an increase of 5 per cent over 1937, according to a survey, report of which appears in the current issue of the Journal of Negro Education which was released this week. The report, by Dr. Martin D. Jenkins, of Howard University, includes the statistics of enrollment of ninety-nine undergraduate institutions and seven graduates schools.

Ninety-nine institutions report a total undergraduate enrollment of 35,438 students as of October 1938. When this figure is corrected to include the ten institutions for which figures for the present year are not available it appears that approximately 36,400 undergraduate resident students were enrolled in Negro colleges and universities during the fall term 1938-39. This represents an increase of 5 per cent over the previous school year. More women than men are in attendance, the female enrollment constituting 57 per cent of the total.

The 32 publicly controlled institutions report an enrollment of 16,138 students and the 67 privately controlled institutions an enrollment of 19,302 students. A total of 4,458 graduates from four year courses is reported for the school year 1937-38, an increase of nine per cent over 1936-37. Sixty per cent of the graduates are women.

All Schools Show Increase

Seven Negro institutions of higher learning are now offering work leading to the master's degree. During the fall term, 1937-38, these institutions enrolled 478 students, an increase of 20 per cent over the preceding year. These institutions conferred 117 master's degrees during the school year 1937-38. Women students constitute 54 per cent of both the enrollment and the number of graduates.

The largest institution has fewer than 1400 undergraduate students and only four other institutions report a total undergraduate enrollment of more than 1000 students.

In the report, attention is called to the fact that enrollments for the entire year will be much larger than those reported here, since the survey covers only enrollment during the first semester of the 1938-39 school year. Further approximately 3000 Negro students attend northern colleges and universities whose enrollment includes both whites and Negroes.

Federal Aid.

It is usually conceded that the states could have already secured federal aid for schools, if Southern congressmen had been willing to vote for such a bill. The South, having a large number of children and a small amount of property, stands to benefit more from federal aid than the rich industrial states of the North.

However, each time a bill was brought up in congress, the South broke out with the race question rash and Southern congressmen became aware of the fact that negro school teachers were paid less than the white teachers. It was feared that congress would require that no discrimination be made by a state, if it used federal funds for schools. So Southern congressmen, as a rule, were against all bills for federal aid; and many congressmen from other sections of the country were willing to vote for a bill only on the condition that there be no discrimination because of race.

The negroes of Virginia have gone to the courts demanding equal treatment for the teachers, and there is some talk of the same procedure being followed in North Carolina. These cases will eventually find their way to the supreme court of the United States; and if one studies the past record of the court on similar questions, it must be admitted that the court may find a way to hold that any discrimination is unlawful.

The South therefore must face the possibility that it may be required to pay, from its scanty funds equal salaries to both black and white, after refusing to accept federal aid for fear of this very possibility.

A bridegroom, Robert Taylor bemoaned the fact that he had to return to screen work making love to another woman—Hedy Lamarr. Substitutes are pouring into Hollywood.

Dobbs Charges Clement With Compromising Statement On U.S. Court Education Ruling

In an open letter to the press Monday, John Wesley Dobbs, Georgia fraternal and political leader, criticized President Rufus E. Clement of Atlanta University, for a statement made in Atlanta on February 21 before an inter-racial meeting in discussing the Supreme Court ruling in the case of Gaines versus the State of Missouri.

President Clement stated that the various Southern states having dual educational systems would probably adopt one of six courses as a result of the higher court educational ruling, saying first that the states could admit the Negroes to the State University System for professional training but significantly added, "that probably will not happen during our lifetime."

It was this latter statement that drew the fire of Mr. Dobbs, who said it was compromising Negro education. Other courses the educator said the states would follow were "to establish separate graduate schools, which he said would be tragic; to ignore the decision; to grant scholarships; to establish regional schools in connection with private schools; or to strengthen the entire Negro educational school setup.

"ONLY TWO COURSES"

Mr. Dobbs contends that the decision allows the states only two courses: they could either admit Negroes to the State University System or make available for Negroes in State Negro schools equal educational opportunities as those offered in the University for the white group.

His open letter in part follows:

"Mr. Charles Evans Hughes, Chief Justice of the United States Supreme Court, wrote that decision which was plain, even to the wayfaring man. He said, in that famous decision, in substance, that states, which maintain separate Educational Systems, were allowed only two alternatives—(1) Admit Negro students to the State University systems, as they now exist, or (2) Bring the Negro schools up to plane of equality, in every particular with the white schools as they now exist. This, in substance, is the essence of the Supreme Court decision.

"'Concurring with Chief Justice Hughes, in this decision, were six Associate Supreme Court Judges, among whom was Mr. Justice Hugo Black, a native of Alabama and a former United States Senator for that state. Mr. Black is quite familiar with racial and living conditions in Alabama and the Southland.

"Notwithstanding the fact that these seven erudit Supreme Court Judges, with every available kind of information at their fingertips; and, after very careful and deliberate consideration of every point and aspect involved, both immediate and remote, left the seventeen Southern States with but two roads to travel; you rush forward with six different possible avenues of escape from the justice involved in this decision.

"LIFETIME" STATEMENT

"You say in your first point, 'That the Southern states may admit the Negro to their universities'; but, in the same breath, you qualify that statement by saying, 'That will probably not happen in your time and mine.' When asked to clarify that statement, you said, 'In our lifetime.'

"It is with this, your first statement that I am taking issue. Your other five points do not matter anyhow, as each one of the five is just as debatable and far-fetched as the first.

"When you make the statement, President Clement, that Negroes will not be admitted to graduate schools in Southern State Universities in our lifetime, you simply say what no Negro leader or educator should ever express, even if he thinks it There are times when silence is more eloquent than speech. By what stretch of imagination, Sir, can you now predict what the next few years might bring to pass in any Southern State?

"You, Sir, are President of Atlanta University, an institution dedicated, from its very beginning, to the higher education of the Negro youth. Such an institution should ever be a Temple of Truth and Justice, where these immortal and enduring attributes of God are supposed to be taught, worshipped and forever held in high esteem and reverence. As President of such an institution, I feel that you should be very careful about your public utterances. I doubt seriously that your predecessor, the late John Hope, would have made such a compromising statement. I feel almost certain that former Presidents Ware, Bumstead and Adams would not have done so.

Clement Cites 6 Courses

Almost unanimously Negro members of the special committee on education of the Georgia Interracial Committee Tuesday afternoon expressed the opinion there should be no compromise with the Supreme Court decision in the Gaines case; that Negroes should receive full benefits under the education ruling either by being permitted to enter the present state university system or by being built a separate but equal educational system.

The committee, which met at St. Luke's Episcopal Church in further discussion of the Gaines decision as it relates to Georgia, decided to defer the question of what it would recommend until a meeting on March 3.

Citing six possible courses that states would follow as result of the high court ruling, President Rufus E. Clement, of Atlanta University, brought the criticism of John Wesley Dobbs, of the Atlanta Civic-Political League.

LEADERS GIVE VIEWS

President Clement said that admission to the state university was one possible course to solution of the problem, but added "that probably will not happen during our life-time."

To this Mr. Dobbs retaliated with the view that "No Negro should make such a statement; especially a leader." He said that question of education was similar as the question of slavery; that it was previously thought freedom would be a bad and impossible thing for slaves and that the emancipation came and has worked the same as it must work in education. Mr. Dobbs said that the states have abided and will abide by decisions of the Supreme Court, citing the Scottsboro case.

Other possible courses of states in the education solution as expressed by President Clement were; establishment of separate graduate schools, which he said would be tragic; ignore it; grant scholarships; establish regional schools in connection with private schools, or strengthen the entire Negro educational school setup.

Practically every member of the committee present expressed his opinion on the question.

RACE MEMBERS PRESENT

Colored members of the committee present included: C. A. Scott, of the Atlanta Daily World; John Wesley Dobbs, of the Atlanta Civic and Political League; B. T. Harvey, of the Association of Colleges and Secondary Schools; E. L. Brookes, of the Atlanta Branch of the NAACP; President J. W. White committee members present were: Mrs. Jessie Daniel Ames, of the Interracial Commission; Drs. Raper and Eleazer; the Rev. R. L. Russell, chairman of the Georgia committee; Dean Walter D. Program of Sex Education Urged by Social Workers

A strong plea for an adequate sex education program for children and young people was voiced yesterday by speakers during the second annual meeting of the Virginia State Conference on Church Social Work at St. Paul's Parish House.

With Frank D. Preston, executive secretary of the Children's Home Society, presiding, the conference attendants discussed the problem of "Reducing Illegitimacy in Virginia."

Figures showing a considerable increase in the number of illegitimate births since 1916 were quoted by Miss May O. Hankins, case supervisor, Children's Bureau, State Department of Public Welfare. Miss Hankins pointed out that a "fairly high percentage" of the illegitimate births occur among feeble-minded persons.

Declaring that much illegitimacy is caused by ignorance, W. Daniel Ellis, principal of Albert H. Hill School, told the conference that the schools can do much towards disseminating sex knowledge. But, he added, the training is worse than useless if the persons doing the instructing are not adequately prepared for such a task or do not have the proper wholesome view of sex.

Part of Church Discussed

Mr. Ellis lamented the fact that parents often object to having their children taught anything about sex. He said whenever one of his teachers attempts to do any constructive work along this line parents come to see him to complain.

Discussing "The Church as An Agency for Creating an Enlightened Public Opinion," Dr. Beverley M. Boyd, rector of Grace and Holy Trinity Church, advocated a "frank, free and full discussion" of sex matters in small groups within the church. He bemoaned the "stand-offish" attitude of some Christians toward persons who have been guilty of adultery, declaring that such persons need the guidance of the church.

Dr. Abner Robertson, executive secretary of the Co-operative Educational Association, said the time to start sex education is the time "when children start asking questions." He warned that if parents give false answers to children's queries, the children will attempt to get information from their playmates.

One Note of Discord

One note of discord crept into yesterday's discussion. Admitting that his statement would be "unpopular" in the conference, Dr. Cary Montague, rector of the Church of the Holy Comforter, declared that the figures quoted by Miss Hankins showed that illegitimacy had increased along with the increase in sex education. Apparently, sex education was doing harm instead of good, he said. Other conference attendants answered Dr. Montague by maintaining that other factors, including bad economic conditions and the increase in the number of automobiles, had accounted for the increase in illegitimate births. Judge J. Hoge Ricks of the Juvenile and Domestic Relations Court said that the trouble was that there had been no "real sex education." He urged emphasis on moral values as a part of a sex educational program.

"You White Folks" Blamed

T. C. Walker, well-known Negro social worker, laid the blame for the high illegitimate rate among Negroes at the door of "you white folks." Negroes, he said, are badly in need of instruction and guidance from white people. He pointed to poverty as a cause of sexual delinquency, explaining that when "you pay your maid $3 or $4 a week" she is unable to maintain a decent standard of living. The speaker pointed also to Negro dance halls and beer gardens as bad influences among members of his race.

Declaring the W. C. T. U. and the Anti-Saloon League have passed the point of their greatest effectiveness, the Rev. Garland Hopkins, pastor of Lekies Memorial Methodist Church, Norfolk, told the conference last night that he advocated the merging of these groups and all others interested in promoting temperance to form a new, strong organization.

Leaders of the new movement should be persons who were "not too closely identified" with previous fights on behalf of temperance, he declared. These former leaders, whom he praised for their efforts in the past, should remain in the background as advisers, the Rev. Mr. Hopkins said.

Why Prohibition Failed

Discussing the failure of prohibition the Rev. Mr. Hopkins said the law went further than the people were prepared to go at that time. He warned against pushing for new legislation until the citizenry has been educated to the point where it will accept such legislation.

More important than legislation at present are education and moral suasion, the speaker said.

The Rev. Mr. Hopkins expressed regret that the church sometimes treats rather harshly those who have fallen prey to the liquor habit. Every drunkard should be made to realize that the church loves him and wants to help him, the speaker added.

Mr. Hopkins said he believed each member of the ABC Board should be a Christian gentleman whose greatest satisfaction "would be in losing customers and revenue."

Dr. Flannagan Speaks

Dr. Roy Flannagan, medical adviser of the State Department of Public Welfare, discussed the care and treatment of inebriates, urging the church to become more interested in the problem. Dr. Clarence W. Cranford, pastor of Second Baptist Church, presided at last night's session.

Yesterday morning the conference considered marriage and divorce laws in Virginia. A resolution was passed calling on the conference findings committee to consider trying to persuade the General Assembly of Virginia to pass a law requiring a three-day notice of intention of marrying in the State. The resolution also urged the committee to work toward securing legislation to require medical examinations of persons applying for marriage licenses.

The morning session was presided over by Dr. Raymond B. Pinchbeck. Speakers were Dr. Theodore F. Adams, pastor of First Baptist Church; Ernest A. de Bordenave, rector of St. Paul's Church, Alexandria; Frank Moncure, Stafford, former member of the House of Delegates, and Fleet Dillard of the Division of Statutory Research and Drafting.

"Probation and Parole for Virginia" was the topic discussed when the afternoon session convened. Speaker was James Chappell, supervisor of probation for the United States Department of Justice, who defended probation and parole as aids in meeting the crime problem. He urged churches to arrange their programs to attract parolees in order that these persons might receive the benefit of religious influence. Judge Ricks presided at the session.

Dr. J. C. Faw of Richmond was elected president of the conference for the coming year. Other officers named were Dr. E. L. Fox of Randolph-Macon College, first vice-president; Judge Ricks, second vice-president; Brigadier George Rose of the Salvation Army, Richmond, third vice-president; the Rev. Paul Crandall of Richmond, fourth vice-president; the Rev. A. W. Newell of Richmond, fifth vice-president; Mrs. G. B. Ingraham of Richmond, secretary-treasurer, and the following members of the executive committee: Dr. Dwight Chalmers of Charlottesville, the Rev. J. Mitchell Hoye of Ashland, T. C. Walker of Gloucester, Miss Ruth Carrier of Norfolk, Dr. Allen Strange of Danville, the Rev. Mr. de Bordenave of Alexandria and the Rev. Henry Lee Robison Jr., retiring president, ex officio.

Dr. Davis Advises U.S. Aid for Schools

INSTITUTE, W.Va.—(ANP)—"Only through Federal aid to State education will educational inequalities in the South be erased," said Dr. John W. Davis, speaking to delegates at the first meeting of Business Officers of Colored Schools.

The West Virginia State College president continued: "Colleges and university for colored people are mainly in the South. The South is coming to resent the implications and charges that it is the No. 1 economic problem in America. This will result in educational good for all people in the South."

Seek To Educate All Southern Women

NEW YORK.—The object of the Woman's College of the University of North Carolina is to educate all the women of the South, white and colored, according to a statement by Dr. W. C. Jackson, dean of the college, last Friday.

Dr. Jackson was the principal speaker at a meeting sponsored by the Bennett College New York Alumni. Members of both the white and colored races comprised the audience.

It was revealed that the Bennett College student body has grown from 10 students in 1926 to 311 today. A yearly budget of $44,000 in 1926 is paralleled by a budget of over $152,000 this year.

Mrs. Henry Pfeiffer, of this city, has matched the general education board's grant up to the half million dollar level.

EDUCATOR DISCUSSES FINANCIAL AID TO NEGRO EDUCATION

INSTITUTE, W. Va., Oct. 12—(ANP)—Addressing delegates to the first meeting of the Association of Business Officers in Schools for Negroes, Dr. John W. Davis, president West Virginia State college, told of the financial aid, past ond present, given for higher education among Negroes by various philanthropic foundations and funds. Dr. Davis said, in part:

"The 1936 Educational Directory of the United States Office of Education lists a total of 1,072 degree-granting institutions. The highest number of these institutions to receive grants in any one year since 1929 is 103, and in one year the total was as low as 37. It seems that only 453 different institutions have received one or more grants from any foundation since 1920. . . . It would seem logical to assume then that about 600 colleges might well not expect to receive grants from philanthropic bodies.

"The future of philanthropic foundation with respect to grants and bequests is non-predictable. Of one thing we are certain; the service which philanthropic bodies have to date rendered the cause of Negro education defy calculation and measurement. Philanthropic foundations are on the increase in America and have yet a important part to play in improving the educational lot of America and of Negroes. I believe that they will do their part by our institutions. We might keep in mind that if university costs continue upward, foundation funds may continue, as they have since World War 1, to become a progressively smaller part of university expenditures.

"Education in America continues to be a function of the state. Colleges and universities for Negroes are largely in the South. From this section there is now evident a sign of real encouragement in that its people resent more and more the implications of charges that the South is regarded as the country's Number One economic problem. This resentment will, I believe, result in educational good for all people of the South. . . . Federal aid to education will help to clarify this situation. Thus a better and more willing spirit and the hope that some Federal aid to the states may erase some of the glaring educational inequalities in the South, may point to more adequate support for higher education among Negroes." field of intellectual activity in which professors, teachers and students may engage to encourage applications from those interested in any field of learning, facilities for which may exist in the country in which the applicant is interested.

WASHINGTON, D. C. — (ANP)—The Department of State, in conjunction with the United States office of education, Federal Security agency, has perfected plans which will set in motion the official exchange of professors, teachers and graduate students between the governments of the United States and the other American republics which have ratified the Convention for Inter-American Cultural Relations.

To date, the governments of Brazil, Chile, Costa Rica, the Dominican Republic, Guatemala, Haiti, Honduras, Nicaragua, Panama, Peru, Venezuela and the United States have ratified the convention.

Leaflets and application forms have been prepared explaining the provisions of the convention. These will immediately be distributed by the Office of Education to the colleges, universities, scientific institutions and technical schools of this country for rofessor, teachers and graduate students interested in submitting applications for official exchange professorships and fellowships. These exchanges ahe available for professors, teachers or graduate students in the humanities, natural sciences, social sciences, law, medicine, pharmacy, journalism, technology and engineering.

Ready for Applications

All preliminary work in the selection of nominees for professorships and fellowships will be handled by the Office of Education and that agency is now prepared to accept and evaluate applications of those seeking exchange professorships and fellowships. "Teachers" as distinguished from "professors" is understood to refer to teachers in primary or secondary schools.

No limitation as to color, sex or creed will be made in the nomination for the exchange posts. The utmost possible latitude has been allowed in the Expenses involved in the exchange program are shared by the participating governments. In the case of fellowships, the nominating government will pay the round trip travel costs to the country chosen, together with other incidental expenses of the graduate students or teachers selected. The receiving government, will pay tuition, subsidiary expenses together with board and lodging at the institution designated. Exchange fellowships will cover a single academic year. Under unusual and exceptional circumstances, they may me renewed for one additional year.

Governments Pay Expenses

All expenses incident to the exchange of professors will be met by the sending government. Such expenses will include travel to and from the country to which exchange professors are sent as well as maintenance and local travel costs during the period of residence in the foreign country. The term of an exchange professor will not exceed two years, unless he shall have been included on the next list after first being selected, and thereafter again selected.

By agreement between the two interested governments, the term of an exchange professor may be limited to less than two years and another selection made from the current list. Vacancies caused by the voluntary withdrawal of an exchange professor, or by his death or disability to continue service, will likewise be filled from the current list.

NATION'S POOR PEOPLE IN DIRE NEED OF SCHOOL FACILITIES, SAYS LEADING MAGAZINE OF COUNTRY

Survey Graphic Calls for Federal Aid to Assure Equalized Opportunities for Future Citizens

NEW YORK CITY, Oct. 12 (ANP)—In a special number devoted entirely to the challenge to the world crisis to the school system of the United States, SURVEY GRAPHIC, a magazine of social interpretation (out Sept. 29), asserts that democracy may be lost in the classrooms of the nation if our educational system does not produce in greater quantity and better quality the mass enlightenment upon which self-government depends.

The number, published in place of the regular October issue of the periodical, represents the collaboration of a group of outstanding educators, economists, social scientists and journalists, under the direction of Beulah Amidon, associate editor of SURVEY GRAPHIC.

In an analysis of educational theory and practice in the United States, the studies published by SURVEY GRAPHIC reveal striking inequality of educational opportunity. "More than 4,000 poverty stricken school districts serving 3 million children are forced to curtail their school year by three months," the magazine states. "2400 schoolhouses are actually locked for the year; 12,000 more schoolhouses will be locked if teachers demand full payment of salaries; 1,400,000 pupils sit in schoolhouses condemned as unsafe or unsanitary; 1 million attend classes in tents, lodge halls and stores; 500,000 go to school only half a day because of lack of space; 800,000 attend no school because their neighborhood is too poor to provide one or they are too poor to go; In Iowa the resources per child in the richest district are 275 times as great as the resources per child in the poorest district."

But, according to SURVEY GRAPHIC, quite as serious as the problem of economic or racial discrimination in education, are the problems of inadequate aims and inept teaching and the "tragic failure inherent in the fact of idle youth, four out of ten not in school jobless, ready tinder for demagogues."

"By what failure in the educational process," the magazine asks "are young people turned out, so insecure and so undiscriminating that they flock to rabble rousers. What educational gaps let in hate and prejudice? What quickens curiosity? Strengthens integrity? Distinguishes truth from propaganda Encourages neighborliness and good will? Turns knowledge and training into the stuff of action. Here are concerns more enduring than military communiques and diplomatic moves. The strengths and the weaknesses of the democratic way of life he within our own borders. Mightier than armies with banners, the quiet, undramatic forces of education are the safeguards of freedom, tolerance, human growth."

The conclusion reached by a number of contributors to the special number of SURVEY GRAPHIC is that "It is everybody's business and the republic's concern that the future population of our cities is being drawn from the educationally underprivileged sections of the country." For self-protection, if for no humanitarian reason, an expanding program of federal aid to education is predicted as inevitable.

THE NEGRO STEPS OUT

Following close upon the heels of the decision of the United States Supreme Court in a case from the State of Missouri, wherein that tribunal held that the State must provide equal educational facilities for whites and negroes, a professor in one of the negro colleges in Columbia addressed a letter to Speaker Solomon Blatt, who is also actively identified with the University of South Carolina, urging that his committee render a "fair and impartial decision" on the application of a young negro man to enter the law school at the University, and only a few days later several negro organizations in Columbia sent a telegram to President Roosevelt protesting against any federal appointment for Governor Olin D. Johnston because of what they term a prejudiced attitude toward the negro on the part of the State's chief executive.

Such actions, of course, have been encouraged by the sympathetic attitude of the Roosevelt administration toward the "brother in black." It is satirical that the fight for white supremacy in the South should be aggravated in this manner during the governance of the Democratic party, long regarded in these parts as "the white man's party." No longer can it be so regarded nationally.

Of course, no one believes that the negro applicant will ever enter the University law school. The solution will probably be to provide a law teacher at the State negro college in Orangeburg, but as soon as that is done there will be applications to enter other State-aided institutions. In fact, it is reported that five negroes have applied for admission to The Citadel. The People-Sentinel does not believe that these applications represent yearnings for higher education, but are merely a part of a preconceived plan to embarrass the South in an abortive attempt to force racial equality. And such action on the part of Southern negroes, aided and abetted by Walter White and his cohorts in the North, can render the negro no good service. White supremacy in the South triumphed over Reconstruction and, please God, it will be maintained long after you and we have returned to the dust, dear reader.—Barnwell People-Sentinel.

The South Will Have To Train Negroes

By CLARENCE OUSLEY

Texas and other Southern States may as well face the prospect of being compelled sooner or later to provide training for Negroes in law, medicine and other professions similar to the training now furnished to whites.

That is the clear meaning of the decision of the United States Supreme Court in the case of the Missouri Negro demanding the right under the Federal Constitution to enter the State's law school, and I do not question the correctness of the interpretation. I see no occasion for haste in directing Negro schools of instruction in the learned professions, and I heartily wish that our Negroes might forego the constitutional right, for our burden for higher education is already heavy enough. The insistence of some Negroes in Dallas upon the right to serve on juries is plain indication that some of the race in this State entertain notions of so-called equality that are apt to vex us or put our obedience to the constitutional authority to the test.

Perhaps there is need for Negro lawyers, doctors and dentists — a need at least to satisfy the aspirations of the race which too often take an artificial view of equality before the law. We have successfully and wisely escaped racial embarrassment in the matter of transportation, common school education and voting in our political party primaries, but I do not see how we can escape the embarrassment of professional schools for Negroes whenever the issue is directly raised. It seems not to have dawned upon the intelligence of Negroes demanding such rights that if they were admitted to any schools for whites they would be social outcasts, and so would utterly fail to attain the status of social equality which an inferiority complex induces many of them to attempt. I use the phrase "inferiority complex," as descriptive of the fact proved by all tests of intelligence that the Negro is an inferior race—a fact which a few Negroes of my acquaintance have acknowledged.

Appreciation of the Negro

I believe I have due appreciation of the Negro. My father owned Negro slaves, and I have always felt that I owe a debt to the race because of his employment of their service without pecuniary reward. Slavery was an economic blunder, as perhaps it was a moral sin, but the slave owners thought they profited by the confiscation of Negro labor, and I believe that the Negro was benefited as a race by the rescue through slavery from his hopeless lot in the jungles of Africa. At any rate I have tried always to discharge my debt to the race, and I applaud its progress since emancipation in the arts and privileges of freedom. I believe it has proved itself to be worthy of freedom.

Now and then individuals of the race have reverted to the bestial passions of their barbaric forbears, and it will not be denied by any intelligent observer, even intelligent Negro they rate far lower in mentality and moral behavor than the white race. But I count these delinquencies as manifestation of racial atavism, or flingbacks to ancient ancestors, which is not an unusual phenomenon among animals, and the achievements of the higher types of Negro—achievement in commerce, industry and and the fine arts—are proof enough that in due course the Negro will attain a far more enlightened and efficient status than he now occupies. I wish him Godspeed in all such progress, and I have no fear that he will ever overtake and outdo the white man. They started 1,000,00 miles apart and while both are progressing, the distance between them remains about the same. I would not deny the Negro any right that affects his real welfare, though I deplore his inability to understand that social equality is a matter of the free choice of the socially superior. We select our social companions; we do not admit them on any mandate of law. When the Negro recognizes that fundamental principl of social contact he will save himself from much grief.

Experience With Illustrious Negro

Irelate an experience with an illustrious Negro which will make my meaning clear and at the same time exhibit in practice the validity of the principle of social selection.

I enjoyed the friendship and the confidence of one of the greatest Negroes Texas has ever known, E. L. Blackshear, long principal of the Prairie View institution of higher learning for Negroes. While I was residing in Houston in the early eighteen-nineties, Blackshear came to me with a committee of prominent Negroes and asked me to introduce Booker T. Washington, the great Negro who founded Tuskegee Institute, to the Houston Cotton Exchange where he was invited to make an address, and I cheerfully complied.

Some week or months later, President Theordore Roosevelt entertained Washington at luncheon in the White House, and I wrote an editorial rebuking him for the act. Blackshear on his next visit to me expressed surprise and remarked that I had introduced Washington on a public occasion, as if to say that the two acts equally implied social equality. I answered him: Blackshear, if you and Washington were the only Negroes in this country, I could well afford to sit with you at table, for you or both gentlemen of culture and lofty character, but if I should do so, every black brute in the Brazos bottom would assume the right to accost and fondle my wife or daughter.,, Blackshear saw the point. He had a fine sense of discrimination between the intelligent and respectable Negro and the Negro devils whom we are compelled at times exercises. I have encountered few Negroes who have that sense of discrimination, though I trust that the proportion is increasing and that in course of time we will be able to maintain relations of due regard and strict equity in all real values with "our brother in black."—Ft. Opposing Camps In Texas Weigh Negro Graduate Education

Austin, Texas, Jan. 10—(By Elaine Ellis for CNA)—Negro graduate students in Texas may have their educational facilities provided for them in the future by legislative enactment, but support for such a measure runs in two different channels. On one hand is the growing sentiment on the part of both Negro and white citizens who are desirous of seeing Negro students have the better opportunity to which they are justly entitled; the other hand are leading officials who are compelled to support a measure for state aid because they fear, particularly since the U. S. Supreme Court decision on the Missouri case that Negro students will try to enter all schools of Texas. George Allen, a Negro graduate student who enrolled in a Texas University salesmanship class by invitation, was forced by authorities to withdraw when his race became known.

Governor James V. Allred has announced that while Negro students are entitled to higher educational opportunities, he considers that state aid should be provided for individual Negro students for facilities outside of the state. At present, Negro teachers and others with degrees are prevented from going even at their own expense because their miserably low wages will not cover the cost. Therefore, the only difference, under a state provision, would be an appropriation which, although it would cover the cost, might also provide for only a limited number of students.

However, this method, in the estimation of Governor Allred, would be "more satisfactory" than the expansion of facilities within the state. His reason for this choice is obvious in his assurance to the taxpayers that "appropriate safeguards" will be incorporated in the legislative bill to "properly protect their interests," and that "It will not require the outlay of any tremendous sum."

He declared that his suggestion, which was made before the decision on the Missouri case, would not be altered in any way.

Dr. Ira P. Hildebrand, dean of the University of Texas Law School is not pacified by the governor's suggestion. Fearing that Negro graduate students might eventually get past the portals of this Jim Crow university, particularly in the case of his own department, he has advocated the establishment of a law school at the Prarie View State College for Negroes.

Southern Whites Laud Speech By Dean Wm. Pickens

GASTONIA, N. C.—(A N P)—A speech evoking considerable discussion here was delivered here recently by Dean William Pickens, director of branches, NAACP, his topic dealing with "Educational Equality" decision handed down a fortnight ago by the U. S. Supreme Court in the Gaines-University of Missouri discrimination suit, and which helld that the university must permit Gaines to enroll as a student.

Discussing the decision from every angle, including its effect on Southern states generally, Pickens called uncompromisingly for equal appropriations for education for Negro students. Under such logic, he said, the white Southerner is expected at best to be tolerant, especially when the spirit is friendly.

Impressed by Dean Pickens' address, all of the white persons present joined the NAACP and three of them made commendatory speeches—the secretary of the Chamber of Commerce, the editor of the daily paper and a prominent minister. The latter said: 'Dean Pickens certainly impressed me when he said that 'the only way in the world for one man to keep another man down is to stay down on him.' White as well as black will be benefited by getting the black man up and encouraging his advancement."

Pickens described the Supreme Court ruling as "The greatest judicial lift ever given to Negro education in our public schools."

Some Problems In Graduate Education

By J. FRANCIS PRICE

ALL Negroes, and especially those in educational activities, should rejoice over the recent Supreme Court decision in the Missouri case. The implications of the decision are so far reaching that many might regard it as a sort of second emancipation. Now that the long sought for goal has been reached from a legal and theoretical point of view it may not be amiss to meditate over the application of the principles involved.

Presidents of Negro state institutions are in an unusual position in this matter of added graduate and professional study to their curricula. On the one hand a large proportion of popular opinion will request that immediately as a result of the legal requirements for graduate and professional study for Negroes in the several states graduate schools, medical schools, colleges of pharmacy and schools of law should spring up like mushrooms.

The opportunity for becoming a lawyer or a doctor should be at hand and the best groups of our young men and women should begin tomorrow to realize in their own states their ambitions to become trained doctors and lawyers under the direction and instruction of members of their own race.

LIBRARY FACILITIES

On the other hand the college presidents themselves know how inadequate are the library facilities with which their students have had to work in undergraduate schools; they realize how limited is the mature scholarship necessary for graduate instruction; they know that only through years of careful and mature thinking can we develop a library sufficient for research which may be equal or superior to that now being done in accepted graduate schools.

The president must face still another problem. He is aware of the great strides of education since the Civil War when in the outset Negro "universities" almost without exception offered only grammar school courses with the highest work being done in the seventh grade. He knows, too, what has been done since 1917 when the Thomas Jessie Jones Report began to stimulate Negro colleges to curtail their high school offerings. He knows what work was involved in reaching the present place at which approximately 30 per cent of our four-year colleges continue to offer high school work. And no one knows better than the college president what may be our needs in developing now our four-year colleges to the extent that their bachelor's degrees may be considered of the highest order.

GRADUATE REQUIREMENTS

Libraries which are necessary are, as the college president knows, the result of long years of continued work. Mature scholarship is the result of long study and living in an atmosphere of scholars. Only students who have done better than average work in earning a bachelor's degree of the best grade are as a rule able to pursue work of the high and respected graduate level.

Without adequate libraries, without adequate instruction and without a large enough number of Negro students for separate graduate and professional schools, the college president sees the need to concentrate and redouble his efforts on providing the above mentioned necessities for a desirable undergraduate program as his first step toward preparation for the graduate and professional work which must come.

In spite of these facts nevertheless, he will be forced on to this higher level by the strong and almost irresistible pressure of a loyal Negro group clamoring for the honor and prestige of professional men and women trained in Negro institutions and far sighted unfriendly people of another race who understand already that a real but legal inequality of training may be obtained by having the Negro hasten to a sort of superficial realization of the aim which we should approach with much deliberation.

MUST BE GOOD

Mr. College President of a state school knows how proud we shall be of great and good graduate and professional schools for Negroes and of the well-trained Negro graduate who will earn his spurs in these schools.

But he knows as well that we shall be proud of these institutions and our sons and daughters only if the schools are good and the graduates well instructed and well-trained.

May those in office, therefore, move toward their goals cautiously, deliberately, and with great care. Often the good which may be derived from a good cause becomes a force of damnation and destruction in the manner of handling the instruments of the cause.

AL SMITH SAYS RACE PROBLEM SOLUTION LIES IN EDUCATION

NEW YORK, Feb. 9 — (ANP) — Alfred E. Smith, he of "Brown Derby" fame and Democratic candidate for president in 1928, made a strong plea for better educational facilities for Negroes and called upon the nation at large to help solve the racial problem at a Lincoln University luncheon given Wednesday at the Empire State club by J. Frederic Talcott, a member of the university board of trustees.

Mr. Smith, also a former governor of New York, pointed out that "the number of Negroes has trebled since freedom came to the race" and added "there has been talk about the Negro problem ever since then."

"But in the first place," he said, "part of what we call the Negro problem is a white problem. The white part of the population hasn't done what it could to help the Negro on his long upward climb. Today we are trying to make our institutions serve them better and give them more opportunities.

Atlanta Negro College Gain

Atlanta is rapidly becoming the center of higher education for negroes in the South, Dr. Noble Y. Beall declared at the recent monthly meeting of the Baptist Home Mission Board.

The board's field secretary, under whose supervision 12 teacher missionaries are employed in a dozen colleges in a program of negro ministerial education, commended especially the work of Dr. George D. Kelsey in Morehouse and Spelman Colleges.

"The Atlanta University System with its scholarly faculty," he said, "is attracting students from all over the nation."

North Carolina University Head Speaks His Mind

Tells About State's Plans For The Negro

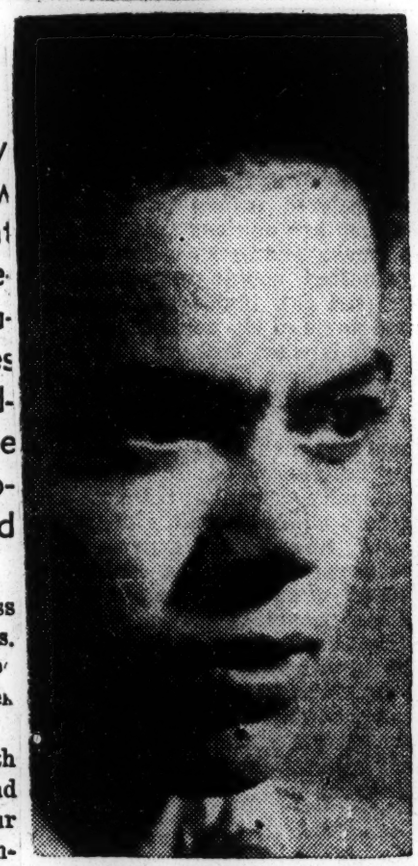
N. C. Legislature Working On Plan of Education

Dr. Frank P. Graham, widely recognized liberal, president of the University of North Carolina, and chairman of the Southern Conference on Human Welfare, has written the following frank discussion of the problem of education of the races in this state to Miss Pauli Murray, whose application for admission to the university re-focused attention on the matter.

I wish to thank you for your letter and the spirit which runs thru it. I have been on a night and day schedule in connection with the proposed budget for the University of North Carolina, which, if carried through, would heavily damage this institution. I am just now taking time off from the legislative sessions to catch up in my correspondence. 2-18-39

Miss Murray's Reply

This is the letter which Miss Pauli Murray native of Durham, N. C., at present located in New York City, wrote to Dr. Frank P. Graham, president of the University of North Carolina, in the most recent exchange of letters growing out of her application some months ago — and prior to the Gaines case decision by the U. S. Supreme Court — for admission to the university's graduate school. The letter of Dr. Graham's to which it is a reply, is published in the adjoining column. His letter was dated February 3 and Miss Murray's February 6.



At left Miss Pauli Murray and above Dr. Frank P. Graham. Miss Murray, who applied for admission to the University of North Carolina, has written an interesting reply to the interesting letter of Dr. Graham on the subject of education of the Negro. Both letters are printed on this page.

I appreciate your very fine letter of February 3rd, and in fairness to those who hold your point of view am releasing it to the Negro press.

The issues which you have raised extend beyond the walls of the classroom and will require further study on the part of those who seek the best possible solution to the problem.

This much is certain, however. That the Constitution of North Carolina is inconsistent with the Constitution of the United States and should be changed to meet the ideals set forth by the first citizens of our country. How this change can be brought about, and what the consequences will be is a vital question which cannot be tampered with.

We of the younger generation cannot compromise with our ideals of human equality. We have seen the consequences of such compromises in the bloody pages of human history, and we must hold fast, using all of our passion and our reason.

I am making a study of the Report of the Governor's Commission and will comment upon it at a later date.

I am aware of the inequities which you point out. Many months before the Gaines decision, the wise governor of the state appointed a commission to study the whole question of Negro education in general and professional graduate work for Negroes in North Carolina. This commission, of which ex--Senator Noel of Person County is chairman, and Mr. N. C. Newbold is secretary, has made its report and the Legislature has set up a committee to consider the recommendations made in the report of the Governor's Commission.

BEFORE LEGISLATURE

This committee, in a very serious way, is now considering the whole question of graduate and professional work for Negroes in North Carolina as a clear responsibility of the Legislature of the state. Mr. Victor S. Bryant, representative from Durham County, is chairman of the committee considering the matter for the Legislature. Mr. Walter Murphy, of Rowan, as a member of Mr. Bryant's committee, is working on a bill with Mr. Bryant.

The Legislature will make its decision within the next month or six weeks. The legislative committee, as I understand it, is taking into account the following facts:

POINTS CONSIDERED

1. The provision in the Constitution of North Carolina requiring the separation of the races in public education;

2. The decision of the Supreme Court that the state must make substantially equal provision for graduate and professional work in the separate Negro institutions or admit Negroes to the state university;

3. The Constitution of the state prevails up to the point where it is overruled by the Constitution of the United States as interpreted by the Supreme Court;

4. The only way to obey both the state Constitution and the United States Constitution is to make adequate provision in the separate Negro institutions;

5. If the state Constitution is not overruled by the United States Constitution, then the only way to change a provision in the Constitution is by referendum of the people.

AGAINST REFERENDUM

The Negro leaders in this state and the white leaders who have been the friends of the Negroes in the struggle for justice are strongly of the opinion that the most unfortunate thing that could happen at this time would be a popular referendum on the race issue. The possibilities of an interracial throwback do not have to be emphasized in our present world.

The hundred years progress of the southern Negro is perhaps without parallel in history. A study of the advances made by North Carolina toward more equal provision for Negroes in the public school and in the state colleges is encouraging.

A comparison of appropriations

both for maintenance and for buildings clearly shows that we are moving ahead in North Carolina in this very basic matter of fairer treatment of our Negro fellow-citizens. We must move forward. We must not be unwise in the present critical situation and cause a throwback into a darker time with losses all along the line. It is the millions who suffer in such a throwback.

NORTH GUILTY, TOO

You realize that interracial inequalities are not confined to the southern part of the United States. In the northern universities, though not under the prohibition of the w. there are. I understand. no Negro professors. It seems that the only career open to the Negro professor in institutions of higher learning is in the Negro colleges of the South.

Taking account of the Constitution of North Carolina, the decision of the United States Supreme Court and the clear intent of the Legislature of North Carolina, I have pledged as far as my lawful responsibility permits, the cooperation of the University of North Carolina with the North Carolina College for Negroes toward a more adequate provision for Negroes in the public schools, higher standard Negro undergraduate colleges, and a substantial beginning in the provision for graduate and professional work.

ALREADY UNDER FIRE

This may seem to you to be an inadequate and minimum program but it is going to take the cooperation and the struggle of us all to bring it to pass. The present alternative is a throwback against whose consequences we must unceasingly be on guard in the best interests of both races, who after all go up or down together.

As you may know, I am under very bitter attack in some parts of North Carolina and the lower South for what little I have tried to do in behalf of Negro people, organized and unorganized workers, and other underprivileged groups. I realize I am also subject to attack because I understand the limitations under which we must work in order to make the next possible advance.

NAACP Votes To Support Application Of Students To U. Of Georgia System Body Will Seek Full Rights

Negroes Entitled To Freedom, All Leaders Agree

ATLANTA, Ga.—(SNS)—

In one of the best attended and most spirited meetings it has held in recent months, the Atlanta Branch of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People convened at the Butler Street YMCA Tuesday night and voted unanimously to seek for Negroes equal professional education in the State of Georgia guaranteed them by the United States Supreme Court in its ruling December 8, 1938 in the case of Lloyd L. Gaines, law student making application for entrance to the University of Missouri.

The body went on record as supporting the application to the University system for admittance of any qualified Negro professional student who desired to go there.

EXPRESS OPINIONS

The action of the local NAACP Branch followed a series of firmly expressed opinions of outstanding Atlanta leaders regarding their personal convictions as to the course of action Georgia Negroes should take in the light of the recent decision by the highest tribunal. Prominent among those voicing their views were Forrester B. Washington, president of the Atlanta University School of Social Work: Attv. T. W. Holmes, Prof. E T. Harvey, C. A. Scott, general manager of the Atlanta Daily WORLD; H. S. Murphy, local business man; John Wesley Dobbs, president of the Atlanta Civic and Political League; Dr. C. D. Hubert, acting president of Morehouse College; B. J. Davis, former Georgia politician; and the Rev. M. L. King, pastor of Ebenezer Baptist church.

Mr. Washington said there should be no compromise in the Negro's fight for equal educational opportunities. He advised against accepting "half loaves."

LEGAL IMPLICATIONS

Atty. Holmes reviewed the legal implications in the Lloyd L. Gaines case and compared them to those of the Donald Gaines Murray case in Baltimore, Maryland. He showed wherein existed the legal principles upon which the NAACP was able to make a successful case against the State of Maryland.

Professor Harvey read recommendations of the State Department of Education in an annual report in which some provisions, which he admitted he considered inadequate, had been made for higher education for Negroes of Georgia. It was pointed out that the report was of October, 1938, whereas the U. S. Supreme Court decision in the Gaines case resulted two months later. He said that probably accounted for the fact that the recommendations of the Georgia Education Department were based upon the precedent set in the Murray case in Maryland.

Mr. Scott presented for the intelligence of the group prevailing reaction he had heard expressed by both white and Negro leaders. He firmly advocated an uncompromising stand by Negro professional students in this state for entrance to the University of Georgia or any other state-supported institution of graduated rank they desired to enter. He asserted that it's too expensive for the state to set up a separate institution offering equal educational opportunities for the limited few qualified Negro students who would seek the technical training offered.

From both a standpoint of economy and that of citizenship rights, the journalist asserted, the Negro professional student is entitled to enter any state-supported institution. He also said the scholarship plan would not meet the ruling of the U. S. Supreme Court.

Mr. Murphy said that, especially in view of the fact that Atlanta's own Walter White led the way in making a "test" case of the Gaines application for admittance to the University of Missouri, thereby making possible the recent U. S. Supreme Court ruling, we Atlantans and the local NAACP Branch could not, in fairness to him, go on record as accepting any form of compromise.

Miliantly, Mr. Dobbs decried the tendency on the part of any thinking Negro to lean toward the idea of compromise in the fight for equal educational opportunities. He urged the strategic fight within the channels of the law for these high principles for which the Negro, like all other American people, pays taxes for the right to exercise.

Dr. Hubert said it should ever be the privilege of a full-fledged citizen to enter any institution he chose so long as he qualified to and with the standards for entrance. He cited cases of Negroes alreay studying at southern or border institutions where there is no friction. He mentioned one Negro student who, because of his fine graduate record, was invited by the University of Missouri to continue his study there.

Says Spiritual Teaching Has Much To Give

"Let knowledge grow from more to more, but more of reverence in us dwell", thus Tennyson expresses the dual nature of the pedagogical ideal. But unfortunately agnosticism or religious indifferentism has invaded the academic mind, and the intellectual component has all but excluded spiritual values.

American Colleges and Universities grew out of spiritual aim and objective. The salvation of the soul was valued beyond all other consideration. The motto of Harvard University, our oldest and best known institution of learning reads "For Christ and His church", this motto represents a curious survival in light of present day attitude and tendencies of "Fair Harvard".

The rise of science, discovery, and invention, and their practical application to industrial and economic life have all but choked the strivings of the soul struggling for expression. The impulsion of the present day collegian to make a living pays scanty regard to higher values of life.

It is but natural that Negro colleges should follow in the wake of the collegiate world whose trend is away from religious ideals. Negro colleges and universities are in a peculiar sense the creature of the Christian Church. Following in the wake of the victorious Union Army Northern missionaries bubbling over with the love of God and of man planted schools and colleges throughout the South, primarily for the Christianization of the freedmen who had been so long depressed beneath the level of Christian and civilized life. They were chiefly concerned with the well-being of the Negro on the Heavenly side. The salvation of the soul meant more to them than social salvation. In the earlier days of Fisk, Atlanta, Howard, Lincoln, and the rest, there was more joy in the faculty over one sinner that repented than over ninety-nine students who got their lessons well. School would adjourn for two or three weeks to conduct a revival in which the benighted Negro pupil might be transformed from darkness unto light. The definite objective of the Negro college was first of all to make the student a Christian and impart to him sufficient secular knowledge to make him serviceable to his race. When the Northern Missionaries let go the intimate control of the educational life of the Negro, they emphasized beyond its place of importance in the life of an awakening race. Naturally enough Negro colleges are dependent and deferential. They are satisfied to imitate the degrees, standards, methods, and aims of the white colleges, especially those of the highest repute and standing. If Harvard, Yale, and Princeton have shifted the stress of emphasis from sacred to secular values why shouldn't Howard, Fisk and Atlanta? It is enough for the servant to be as his Lord.

But let us not unduly condemn the Negro college for its apostacy from the Christian ideal. Howard, Fisk and Atlanta perhaps do not lag behind the religious ideals of their Founders anymore than do Harvard, Princeton and Yale. The great denominational institutions which were founded and are still supported by religious denominations find it difficult almost to the point of impossibility to have their students toe the religious landmarks which their founders set. Schools and colleges, white and black, alike are drifting with the age away from these things which look Godward!

We are attempting to educate a generation without religion, something new under the sun in human pedagogy. No one can tell what the end will be, for we have no lamp to guide our pathway.

Many years ago, I wrote an article for "Education," entitled "Moral Pedagogy" in which I attempted to sustain the thesis that morality cannot be taught without religious sanction. The moral precept is the cannon ball, the religious emotion is the gunpowder. Will our secular pedagogy be able to imbue the coming generation with the principles of morality without the underlying religious background? This is not only the most serious question which confronts modern pedagogy but modern civilization as well. These general considerations apply to white and colored alike. But the peculiar circumstances and situation of the Negro race require specialty of application. Here we have a new race, which is being grafted upon civilization for the first time. As a group the Negro is without historical background or cultural tradition. The white race will be kept in the right path, for a while at least, by tradition and inertia, even after active principle has become a spent force, but the Negro has no such moral direction and guidance.

If the Negro eschews the religious tenets which have safeguarded the human race thus far, and places his reliance instead upon a Godless pedagogy, we can only shut our eyes and shudder when we contemplate the abyss to which we are drifting.

When I took my pen in hand to indite this release, I had fully in mind to delineate the life, work and worth of the late Professor Benjamin G. Brawley who illustrated in a unique sense, the cultural and religious ideals which lay at the basis of Negro colleges and universities. But now that I have devoted so much space to general considerations, I must reserve the life of Benjamin G. Brawley for my next release.

FEDERAL

FEDERAL EDUCATION A

Bills are pending in both houses of Congress which would provide federal funds for education in the several states. In fact to be more accurate, they propose to equalize educational opportunities in the several states.

Most northern and western states are in the lead of southern states in providing educational opportunities for their citizens. And of course poverty is the cause assigned officially but along with that goes the refusal of those states to appropriate adequate funds for Negro children in seperate schools.

The federal government has been in this field a long time but has confined its grants to agricultural and vocational work. And in spite of the fact that all citizens pay their share of the taxes Negroes have not received a proportionate amount of these grants. In fact, the distribution has been as one-sided as is the case with money provided by these states for educational purposes.

A strong effort is being made to include in this proposed legislation safeguards so that where seperate schools prevail, Negro children will be placed on the same basis as whites. This should be done and unless so provided we shall have endless trouble with unfair officials who don't believe that the Negro children are entitled to the same advantages as whites.

This legislation should pass but by all means with proper safeguards for minority groups.

Startling Revelations on Virginia Education

OUR Virginia state superintendent of public instruction, Dr. Sidney B. Hall, recently released some statistics on school conditions in the Old Dominion state that are nothing short of startling.

First item to bring the reader up short is the fact that 147,000 children of school age in Virginia are not even enrolled in a school and that a considerably larger group does not attend regularly.

Then before you get over that surprise you are informed that the commonwealth spends four to five times more for education per student in the white school system than it spends on educating a colored student. This condition is not new or unknown, however.

There are sixteen other conditions disclosed by the superintendent which, he says, gave Virginia a low rating in the sphere of education among the states of the Union.

It is reasonable to assume that a great proportion of the children who are not enrolled in any school are colored, and that a great percentage of those who do not attend regularly are colored.

It can be further deduced, with a fair degree of accuracy, that this first alarming fact is the direct outgrowth of the tremendous differential in educational facilities made available for white and colored students referred to in the second.

Dr. Hall points out that there is no apparent justifiable reason for such great differences and we heartily agree. However, we would add that there is both apparent and justifiable reason for the adjustment of these unfair differentials over and above his natural desire to have his department rank foremost among the states of the Union.

As long as 147,000 school age children don't get a chance to enroll and fully 33 per cent of the school children do not attend, not only will the educational department rank low but the state will rank low in any economic or social consideration and will classify as a backward commonwealth.

Thousands of these colored children have no busses, many actually find no schools within their counties. Frequently the schools are one-room frame structures where the overcrowded teacher gets no chance to give adequate training or to sufficiently interest the student to keep him attending after he enrolls.

The figures quoted by the frank Virginia superintendent exist in virtually every southern state. Virginia could be a pioneer if it would back its broadminded superintendent and improve these conditions.

An Ancient Wrong

IN RESPONSE to a mandate of the Supreme Court of the United States, the North Carolina Legislature wisely and properly writes a law providing means for professional and graduate courses for Negro students in the state institutions conducted for the colored people of the state.

This meeting of the alternatives in the issue posed by the Missouri case in the Supreme Court will appeal to the best judgment of whites and blacks, in this newspaper's opinion.

In another proposal concerning Negroes, which is now before the legislative delegation of Buncombe County for consideration, the mandate of public opinion throughout the state ought to be sufficient.

The question thus raised is legislation protecting qualified Negro voters in Buncombe County from disfranchisement at the hands of the registrars.

Of course, everybody knows that all over the state qualified Negro voters are denied the right to vote, contrary to law, contrary to all the principles of every-day justice.

But of course, everybody who really knows the whole story of the South over the last 100 years also knows the important explanations of how these today unjust things came to pass.

Let us not recite again the story of those "old, far-off unhappy things and battles long ago." This is neither 1868, nor 1878; not the later aftermath of Reconstruction days when "White Supremacy" was in some sections of the South a real issue, though mainly a political issue between the two great parties, as they sparred for political advantage and control.

Since all that is passed, it is time also that this naturally acquired political habit of automatic disfranchisement of all Negroes should be discarded.

The habit has gone so far, that, according to the statement of one of the best known Democratic members of the Buncombe County Bar Association, he has seen some of the most respectable, worthy and well-known Negroes in Asheville refused registration by a Democratic registrar when all that was asked was an opportunity to vote for a Democratic President.

Public opinion, to repeat, ought to correct such a public wrong without statutory compulsion. Yet, if remedial legislation is necessary, it should be promptly enacted.

This petition to the Buncombe County legislators is presented by the Asheville-Buncombe County Negro Teachers' Association.

Are we content to contemplate a situation under which the State of North Carolina sends colored teachers into the school-room to explain the laws, the customs, the achievements and the glory of the state to students who can not understand why, then, their teachers are deprived of the ballot contrary to law?

This sort of disfranchisement—is this the way to inculcate the principles of law and order, of respect and love for the state among these colored citizens?

The time has passed when the emergency justified such conditions. Today this disfranchisement is a political anachronism, to begin with. And it dulls the sense of civic righteousness in all who practice such things or who behold them without publicly condemning them.

Will we wait until perhaps some day the issue goes before the Supreme Court at Washington, and we are compelled to grant what now conscience and justice alike demand as the way of democracy in dealing with a minority race that has made valid its Americanism in peace and in war?

Editorial of the Day

TENANT CHILDREN.

(From the Columbia State).

A study of white schools in ten South Carolina rural school districts shows these facts:

Two-thirds of the pupils in the first grades are from tenant farmer families.

One-half the pupils in the seventh grades are from tenant farmer families.

In high schools seven per cent of the pupils are from tenant families.

But the number of pupils from the owning families does not increase after the first grade. In fact, as any one could guess, the number decreases. Yet the children of the farm owners, a one-third minority in the first grades, become a majority of 93 per cent in the high school.

What has happened? The tenant children have dropped out, that's what has happened. They abandon school, and are abandoned by schools. Yet they are the children who are in greatest need of education. They come, as a rule, of relatively uneducated parents. Their home lives are not inspiring.

South Carolina cannot afford to perpetuate rural poverty by allowing rural ignorance to continue unabated. South Carolina, when it is saved economically, will be saved from the bottom. That's where the work must be done. That's where the public money is needed. Investment in rural education of the right kind—the practical kind—probably would yield enormous dividends to this generation, and to its successors.

Soil acidity is a result of ignorant farming methods. Soil erosion is a result of ignorant use of the land. Dependence on one or two crops is a result of ignorance—we have not known how to use our soils for other crops, how to grow them, or how to market them. Study this rural problem as long as you like, and the guess is that you will come up with this conclusion: ignorance is the most powerful factor in rural failures. And with this one: ignorance is not confined to the negro race.

South Carolina's fundamental need is for improvement of its people of both races. Other needs are relatively superficial.

More Men Than Women In Colored Colleges

WASHINGTON, D. C., May (ANP)—Of the 1,458 graduates from four-year courses (1937-38) in Negro colleges and universities, 61 per cent were women, a survey made by Dr. Martin D. Jenkins of Howard university shows. The total number of grads was also an increase of 9 per cent over the previous year. The 32 publicly-controlled institutions covered by the survey reported 16,138 students, the privately-controlled schools 19,302.

Columbia, S. C. Record

Unavoidable.

It is unfortunate that the efforts of legislators to work out a solution of the problem of professional education for negroes have apparently been abandoned.

The house began with an honest attempt to find a solution when early in the present session it passed a bill to establish a law school at the state negro college at Orangeburg. The senate hit upon a sort of "grandfather clause" for education and substituted a bill that would require the endorsement of two legislators before any applicant for admission to the university law school could be accepted, the idea being that no negro could win the legislators' indorsement. With the house and senate disagreeing the whole matter was referred to a free conference committee. There it has been allowed to rest.

South Carolina cannot avoid making some provision for the legal education of its negroes similar to the facilities now provided for the whites. It may well recognize this fact now. To attempt to evade the matter by providing legal technicalities for the admission to the law school at the university as provided in the senate bill is both silly and futile. The problem must be solved and the legislature may as well be honest about it as has the legislature of North Carolina and avoid unnecessary embarrassment.

DISCUSSION

"Land of The Noble Free"

By LAYLE LANE

"For the strengths and weaknesses of the democratic way of life be within our borders, not outside. Mightier than armies with banners, the quiet undramatic forces of education are the safeguards of freedom, tolerance, human growth." So writes Beulah Anudon in the editorial foreword to the second "Calling America" number. The October issue of the survey Graphic is devoted entirely to "School," the challenge of democracy to education, and its contents are incentives to incisive thinking on education and a good life for all the people.

Should anyone want a comprehensive analysis of American education. Its failures, its promises, it is there to quote at length.

"We begin our exploration with major problems. First, a critique of inadequate aims and a resolute facing of democracy's goals. Second, the tragic failure yours and mine—inherent in the fact of idle youth, four out of ten not in school, jobless, really tinder for demagogues."

"Next, this number shows the current school scene, the big business totals of capital invested, operating budget personnel, numbers enrolled; the gap between the scientific knowledge of children's needs and what we do for children; the old patterns and the new trends in the grades, in the high schools and the colleges; adult education in terms of democratic opportunity.

"Any such review reveals where we must take hold; if schools are to measure up to the responsibility we lay upon them."

Gould Beech, an Alabama newspaper man contributes a splendid article on "Schools for a Minority" which not only discusses inequalities in education but the economic and social consequences of these both to the Negro and to the South. The inequalities Mr. Beech relates are known in a variety of ways to all of us but a few need emphatic repitition.

"The Southeast has 12% of the nation's wealth to educate 25% of the nation's children."

"Due to differences in background and in educational opportunity——almost half of the Negro pupils in the South are enrolled in the first and second grades."

If any improvement is made in education for poor rural Americans—either white or black—a national program as well as extensive national support of education is imperative. There are reactionary groups whose interest wouid be hurt by such a program but one of the greatest obstacles to its enactment is the illusion held by many liberals and progressives that local initiative would be crushed. Actual conditions though reveal local initiative is in the hands of the local banker and the largest tax-payers, who do as good a job of crushing as any reactionary wants. The Federal Theatre, art music, and Writers Projects—have revealed far more initiative and creative ability in the crossroads of America than anyone ever dreamed of and give overwhelming refutation to this illusion.

The difficulties Negro education is facing are made clear in the case of Bethune-Cookman College which on October 7th held Bethune-Cookman Day in the Fashion and Arts Theatre at the World's Fair.

A program of speech, song and slides of the college revealed what a splendid work this institution is doing. It showed too the concrete needs of the school in order to maintain a rating of A in the Junior College Division.

These needs are a new library with added collections of general and special reference books and current magazines; a training school building on the campus for practice and finally, $135,000 to provide for an endowment of $200,000.

During these depression years the securing of funds for private schools has been doubly difficult and especially for Negro schools. Private philanthropy is using the alibi of high taxes for its decreased contribution; then too, it feels it's about time for Negro education to grow up and support itself; and in the case of Bethune-Cookman a political bias has been introduced as some Republican donors feel Mrs. Bethune, as head of the Negro Division of the N. Y. A., is a Democratic partisan. Apropos of the N. Y. A., I've always felt that the crowning achievement of Mrs. Bethune's struggle and sacrifice for education would be the placing of a qualified graduate of her institution in her present job as head of the Negro Youth Administration. This would leave Mrs Bethune free to make secure and permanent her life's work

This can be done only in two ways; first, mobilizing mass support, especially in the South, for national aid to educate and making this an issue in every local and congressional election 'till secured. Secondly, by so developing an educational program which aims directly toward enabling Negro masses to create wealth.

The first method needs no explanation; the second does. Land is the chief source of wealth. Negro masses whose history in America has been associated with the soil are either losing their land or else leaving some one else's to crowd into cities. It is the task of Negro education to get down to fundamentals to get back to the soil in its efforts to educate students in the meaning of a rich life and ways to attain it. All the knowledge of domestic science will avail little if one can't sell one's labor power to secure food to prepare; the knowledge of literature, art and music will become sterile without a public understanding and sympathy enough to support it. Public support will come when education has found a way to improve the economic status of the masses and bridge the cultural gap between them and the academic world.

To give a concrete example, the United States government spends on the dining department of the Veterans Hospital at Tuskegee about $200,000 a year. Assuming half of this goes to salaries and replacement of equipment, there is left $100,000 which could easily be directed into the pocketbooks of Negro farmers of Alabama. With low transportation costs, a long growing season and a salesman's advantage of being on the scene, the Negro farmer. if organized into cooperatives, could without doubt be the lowest bidder for any of these government contracts. Tuskegee Institute would not be relieved of all its financial problems by any means but it would certainly have about it a Negro community more ready and willing than it is at present to help support it.

If Negro masses of Florida, through the direction and aid of Bethune-Cookman were organized to supply Negro institutions and restaurants with just the citrus fruits they need, there would be few financial worries for the institute.

This does not mean developing a separate Negro economy which is neither possible nor desirable in America. Neither does it mean that Negro education must be confined to purely bread and butter studies.

EDUCATION WEEK

This is American Education Week throughout the United States, the observation of the week having begun on Sunday, November 5 and will close Saturday, November 11.

The observance is a project sponsored by several organizations, including the United States office of Education, the National Education Association, the American Legion and the National Congress of Parents and Teachers.

Proper topics upon which to base discussions on education have been sent out to schools, colleges, ministers and newspapers. That service has been rendered in Nashville by Supt. W. A. Bass of the Nashville Public Schools.

The central theme for the week, and the one upon which it is hoped sincere thought is being given is, "Education for the American Way of Life." It is to be hoped that no teacher in Nashville has failed to take advantage of such a timely topic as the "American Way" is for impressing upon the youth the advantages they enjoy as Americans in contrast to what their lot would be in that greater part of the civilized world which seems to be ready to turn its back on the finer things of life and to plunge into the horrors of war.

The favored position enjoyed by an American is that of being a citizen of a country which definitely and sincerely is making progress toward democracy. No such claim can be made by the imperialist nations which constantly undertake to have themselves honored and respected as governments of, by and for the people.

Our country was born in the stress and thunder of a war, the purpose of which was to establish a nation of free institutions and free men. The fact that this nation has become the greatest in the world is the best proof possible that the "American Way" desserves to be improved and perpetuated not only for our own continued advancement but also as a model for the entire world.

Members of the Negro race, can with pride and inspiration pause in the observance of American Education Week to take stock of our own place in these United States. The story of what the Negro race has accomplished through the blessings of God, the assistance of devoted friends of the white race and by the courage and industry of members of the race is one of the finest chapters of American history.

We need to ignore the fact that for the most part school textbooks have been unfair in their appraisal of what the Negro has done to make this country great. We need to read more of the splendid books in our libraries as well as our own periodicals. We need to read those periodicals of the white race which fairly give our story to the world. We need to cease spending our hard earned money patronizing those publications which deliberately undertake to picture the Negro race as one composed of clowns and criminals.

To help make the "American Way" all that it is intended to be we must give more concern than ever to education and see to it that the youth of the race becomes educated in the fullest meaning of education which fits an individual for "complete living." No system of education has yet been devised which transcends in value the kind which stresses the importance of training the heart and hand as richly as we train the head. Much of the thoughtless and expensive frivolity in which both old and young now engage could be dispensed with for religious training and technical training in industry and business. We should stress realism and need rather than mere fashion in our educational plans and activities.

Verily, "Education for the American Way of Life" is terrific as a text for sermons, addresses and intelligent conversation. Attention to it should not cease at the end of the "week" now being observed. It affords food for thought and suggests plans for action for the entire year.

EDUCATION- 1939
DISCUSSION

Charleston, S. C. News & Courier

Good Fortune of Negroes

Many a time The News and Courier has protested that South Carolina is unjust to the negro population in the matter of schools. True enough, the negroes pay not much, relatively, in property taxes, and, being poor people and small consumers of luxuries, their contribution in indirect taxes is not nearly so large as is that of the white people. Their purchases of gasoline, for example, are inconsiderable.

Still, the negroes should have from the state two or three times as much for schools as they are given, and The News and Courier has had no sympathy with the disposition of the white majorities long reflected in legislation to "keep them down."

Now we are having a singular and interesting revelation. The white people have completely changed in their attitude toward taxing themselves for the benefit of the colored folk. They can't have "social security" from the federal government without contributing to it, and the distribution of the federal funds is and must be without discrimination as to race.

The aged or the blind negro is entitled to as much as the aged or blind white and will get it. The federal government will see to that.

The negroes are about five in twelve of the inhabitants of South Carolina, and in at least that ratio they will have "benefits." They will, in the long run, have more proportionately than the white people, because their proportion of poor is much larger than is that of the whites. So of relief, of all the gifts from Washington, the negroes will have their full share—just as veteran soldiers among them have their just share of bonuses and pensions.

The white people of South Carolina are taxing themselves for the benefit of the colored population, assuming new burdens for them. The News and Courier is offering no objection. It is pointing to the fact. The fact is humanitarian. It is Rooseveltian. It is unavoidable and inevitable when Washington becomes the guardian of the people and takes over the rights and duties of the states.

The white South Carolinians, who will continue to pay most of the taxes, will send to Washington at least as much as Washington sends back to them, and the negroes will be in luck. As Senator Byrnes has said, the negroes control the Democratic party.

COCHRAN and Cochranites

February 13th was not bad luck for three matrons of Cochran. They had the opportunity of visiting five of the county schools to observe the improvements made by the County Board of Education with the help of W. P. A.

This program furnishes all the labor and gives 20% of payrolls added to materials furnished by the county in free material.

About five or six years ago I happened to visit one of the negro schools in the county. It was a bitter cold day so the door was closed. The building was an abandoned smoke house or store room some one had been kind enough to lend. There was no window in this room, no desk for pupils or teacher and the only equipment was a few benches. The few pupils were huddled around the teacher trying to read with the book turned toward the light coming from the fire. It was a pitiful, never to be forgotten, picture.

The negroes have proven that they want an education so the picture is quite different today. All over Bleckley County you will see the American flag and the state flag flying outside the little white and green school buildings.

The new Oak Grove School in Tripp-ville district is a beauty. It has been built on topof a hill with beautiful pine trees as a back-ground. It has double floors. The ceiling is made of lumber too pretty to stain or paint but Mr. Robert Harrison, supervisor, says it will have to have one or the other to preserve it. The roof is of asbestos shingles and guaranteed to last over 25 years. There will be 30 or more happy ambitious pupils and one teacher to move into this new school.

Next we had a peep at Union Hill, the only school for white children visited. I have never seen such housekeeping anywhere. With 228 pupils there was not a visible piece of paper, orange peel or other trash to be seen in the yard or school rooms. How this training at school must help the mothers keep house at home.

We were delighted with the new light fixtures and new red velvet curtains in the new auditorium. (The teachers and pupils made $375 to purchase these lovely curtains). The 965 volumes of books in the library, the well heated class rooms, the interesting bulletin boards in each room, the laboratory, the Webster dictionary in each room, the basketball courts and other play ground equipment were interesting. Best of all the discipline was just about perfect; not one word was heard in any room even with the teacher out of it.

The Union Hill community is very fortunate in having Miss Merle and her splendid staff of teachers.

There are 16 colored schools in the Bleckley County system and all have been improved or built new with the exception of five. It is hoped they can be improved also. The schools that were stained green are being painted white now so as to preserve the wood better.

Light shades of cream are being used inside for better lighting effect. At Wimberly we found 68 children on roll with 50 attending regularly. They were clean with bright happy faces. The lunch boxes were mostly syrup and coffee cans but each child had something. The children were thrilled to tell me that those cans contained flour bread, meat and syrup. There is more energy in white side meat than any other food. Wonder how the negroes found it out.

I hear Salem is one of the best wooden school buildings to be found in the state. Each class room opens outside and has cement steps and entrance. I am anxious to see the improvements there.

Every white school has electricity with the exception of Limestone and it is not available there.

The County Board and Supt. have taken advantage of all the W. P. A. assistance available and much credit is due them for their progressiveness.

Theme Of Educational Conference Announced

Dr. Theodore R. Speigner, president of Martin Luther Institute and re-elected chairman of the High School Department of the Alabama State Teachers Association, announced recently that the general theme for the fifty-seventh annual convocation of the teachers association will be "Educational Opportunities for Life in Alabama." The association will meet in Montgomery, March 23-25 on the campus of the Alabama State Teachers College.

Dr. Speigner said "we hope to see if conditions show that we are making the very best of what educational opportunities we have, for improving our living conditions as well as making more satisfactory occupational adjustments."

Several competent local educators will appear on the high school program. Professor Charles Orr, principal of Industrial High School, will read a paper on "Educational Opportunities for Improving the Living Conditions of Negroes in Alabama." Professor Ruth Simpkins of Stillman Institute will present a paper on "Vocational Guidance a Necessity in High School for Negroes."

There are many outstanding educators from all sections of this country who will speak to the teachers during the convocation. The president of the Alabama State Teachers Association is anxious to increase the enrollment this year to 2,000. Therefore, all teachers should plan to attend the meeting in Montgomery.

Contribution Of Private Schools To Negro Education In South

By WILLIAM E. CLARK

TUSKEGEE INSTITUTE, Ala.—There has been a radical change in the lineup of Negro educational institutions within the past decade. Where ten years ago the private schools such as Hampton, Fisk and Tuskegee found themselves in much the stronger position financially, today the state supported schools, the land grant colleges and Howard University have overtaken and in many cases passed them, financially.

Through grants from PWA funds and other federal and state aid, such schools as Florida A. and M. College, the N. C. College for Negroes at Durham, Lincoln University of Mo., S. C. State at Orangeburg and other similar institutions have been able to rebuild their physical plants and add many new builings and necessary equipment. This aid has recently been augmented by state funds with the ided on the part of state educational boards of lourbing agitation for equal opportunity for professional training within the state nade possible by the U. S. Supreme Court in the Gaines case.

The private schools, on the oth er hand (which have depended largely on private philanthropy ind their income cut from two sources. In the first place, riel philanthropists and educationa boards have not been giving mon ey as freely during the depressior as they did prior to 1929. And in the second place, the endowmen income of these institutions ha: been curtailed by the reduced div idends from their investments Much of these endowment funds are invested in railroad bonds and stock, and everyone knows that the railroads have not been making the money they formerly made.

Thus we find that Hampton and Tuskegee and many of the other private colleges are being forced to adopt a program of retrenchment, cutting down their budget and cutting out many extra curricula activities. In some cases this means the loss of jobs to efficient and faithful workers, and a loss of opportunity to many deserving students in the Southland.

Many Negroes are unacquainted with the work that these schools have accomplished over a long period of years. True, they know the more spectacular details of the life of Dr. Booker T. Washington and the accomplishments of Dr. George W. Carver and others whose fame has spread abroad, but few of them know of the loyal service of a large number of colleagues and assistants to these men.

To my way of thinking the greatest service the private institutions have rendered has been to serve as an example of what can be accomplished. Travelers have often noted the similarity of other large cities to New York. And in like manner, they may note that today the physical plants of nearly every Negro institution of learning in the South is patterned after Tuskegee, which over a period of nearly sixty years has met the practical needs of the Negro in the particular area it serves.

Tukegee not only teaches agriculture and trades and offers a teacher-training course, but it pioneered in the field of health education, better homes, and extension work for farmers, etc. It has served the nation through its department of records and research, which is now copied but not equaled in many other parts of the country. The crisis that Tuskegee and other private schools nw face could be much alleviated if Negroes who are able would feel it their duty to contribute financially to their support at this time. We can gain more respect if we do more to help ourselves. While we are pleased to see the progress made by the state colleegs, we also feel that we should concern ourselves to see to it that the private schools are maintained and not allowed to die. Their contribution has been in pioneering and popularizing Negro education. They must go on.

HISTORY AND PHILOSOPHY OF EDUCATION

FOUNDING OF UNIVERSITIES

In southern Italy where Saracens, Norman, and old Greek were intimate, there had grown up in the monastery of Salerno an interest in the study and practice of medicine. This was stimulated by the knights returning from the Crusades. Under the shadow of monastic training grew up what became the first university. In 1224 it was united with the school of the neighboring city of Naples and was called by Frederick II, the University of Naples.

At this time the cities of northern Italy were struggling with German emperors for their rights. A vital interest sprang up in Roman law and there grew up in several of these cities the study of law. The University of Bologna became famous and large numbers of students collected there. These schools were given charters, thus schools passed from the church to state control. Bologna, 1158; the University of Paris, 1180; Oxford and Cambridge, somewhat later.

In the 13th Century this kind of school multiplied rapidly. The charters exempted students from official and military training. These schools were given power of internal regulation and the right to try their members—license to teach, and the right of striking, or moving the university if its privileges were infringed. Oxford dates from a migration from Paris, Cambridge from a disturbance that arose at Oxford in 1209.

At first students and masters organized in groups according to their national affiliations. In Paris were four nations, the French, Normans, Picards and the English. At Bologna at first there were four universities, then two. The Cisalpine consisted of 17 nations and the Transalpine, 18. Finally all were amalgamated into one university. The term university referred to knowledge but finally came to mean departments of study and a body of men who have taken their degrees.

A procurator or counsellor was elected annually with a faculty, a dean and a rector of the university. The official head had once been a student. By the 16th century these head officials had become for the most part political appointees. In chivalric education, the training was seven years for a page and seven more to become a squire, the pinnacle of knighthood. In the crafts or a mercantile pursuit youth server seven years, then received journeymans' wages. Finally he became a master with full rights of the guild.

In the liberal arts, a youth of 13 or 14 years when he appeared at the university was obliged to enroll with a master who for time being was responsible for him. Here he served an apprenticeship of seven years until he learned to read the ordinary texts in grammar, rhetoric, logic; to define words and determine the meaning of phrases, the uses of terms and their classification. When he became a journeyman workman he gave instruction under the guidance of one of the masters to the younger boys.

In a further period of study he familiarized himself with required texts and learned to carry on logical disputations. Last he was called upon to prove his ability, as a journeyman workman makes a masterpiece, by defending in public a thesis. His opponents were the members of the faculty who already possessed degrees. They were masters of the arts which he professed. If he was successful he was given a degree. Master, doctor, professor were synonymous terms then.

After the 13th century, the curriculum was the logical study of the works of Aristotle, his ethics physics, metaphysics and treatises on the soul. Pupils spent long hours in lecture rooms listening to endless discussions or participating in them. Up to the middle of the 15th century Aristotle controlled the schools. The study of logic dominated. Rhetoric was given no attention whatever. Geometry and astronomy had made some progress in the University of Vienna.

Professional texts were a few fundamental studies with innumerable commentaries upon their meanings. Early university education was wholly bookish, with no experimentation. The texts were supposed to be absolute and ultimate authority. We have such minds today. Training then sought mastery of form and power of formal speech especially in argumentation. Little was thought of acquisition of knowledge or the pursuit of truth.

The influence of the universities was marked. They furnished the first examples had democratic organization. Freedom of discussion in the West here found its first home. They had won the privileges of favored classes; yet they often became the mouthpiece of common people in opposition to the king or priest craft. The right of the university to a seat in the government, to a voice in the parliaments of France, England and Scotland shows that the university had become a great estate.

Questions of state and of controversy between church and state such as the divorce of Henry VIII of England and of Philip of France were submitted to the arbitration of the universities. The university often spoke for the nation in opposition to Papacy. In one case the King of France and the University of Paris compelled the Pope publicly to recant his views. They settled disputes on doctrinal points and determined questions of heresy.

These universities tempered the extreme view of Papacy and mitigated the operation of the Inquisition in northern Europe. The university, though possessing then little more than a formal life provided a retreat for rare genius, kept alive the intellectual faculties and so maintained a harbor for the true educational spirit when it did come. It kept alive the spirit of inquiry and out of it came such men as Bacon, Dante, Petrach and other men who brought us the spirit of our times and modern thought.

FINDING A WAY OUT OF A HOLE

Governor Lloyd C. Stark, whose Presidential aspirations have received considerable inflation lately, has cut off his political nose to save the face of prejudiced Missouri white folks.

The Governor has just signed the Taylor bill which is an elaborate Machiavellian scheme to save the University of Missouri from being embarrassed by Negro students as a result of the recent U. S. Supreme Court decision. We shall not forget Governor Stark.

The Taylor bill directs the directors of Lincoln University, Missouri's tax-supported Negro college, to make it equal in standard to the University of Missouri (which is likewise tax-supported and hitherto attended only by whites) but neglects to specify how this equalization is to be brought about.

A separate but accompanying appropriation bill provides $200,000 with which the Lincoln University directors are to do the trick; but the same legislature has handed over $3,000,000 to the University of Missouri for its maintenance, and that university's plant is already erected and its faculty established.

Until such time as Lincoln University is equal to the University of Missouri, says the Taylor law, Negro students who apply for graduate and professional training will get scholarships to universities IN OTHER STATES.

Of course Lincoln University cannot be made a university with $200,000, and even if it had adequate funds for this purpose, could not for some time equal the standard of the University of Missouri, which is none too high.

This is merely a scheme of the "Honorable" Governor Stark and the Missouri legislators to get around the recent U. S. Supreme Court decision and continue taxing Negroes for education while refusing to give it to them.

This move gives satisfaction to Missouri Negrophobes and to the Nazi and Fascist newspapers abroad, but it has made Missouri colored people fighting mad and they intend to do something about it.

The American educational world, especially that of the South, is watching this Missouri effort to find a way out. If it succeeds, they know that the jim-crow educational system with its enforced inferiority will be forever safe.

But the Negroes of this country are determined that IT SHALL NOT succeed!

WPA Survey Lists Conditions in New Report; South Carolina is "Worst Offender," Figures Show

WASHINGTON, D. C.—The second volume of Index of Research Projects issued by the Works Progress Administration, in cooperation with the National Resources Committee and State Planning Agencies, includes the situation of the Negro as shown in the educational surveys made by State Planning Agencies in several Southern States.

Many of these research activities have been made possible by the assistance of WPA research projects employing trained white-collar workers taken from the relief rolls.

'The ratio of population to teachers in 1934-35 was 25.5 for white and 29.2 for Negro,'' the WPA Index reveals in its digest of the report of the Florida Sschool Code Committee. Within the Everglade State the average monthly salaries for Negro teachers during the 1934-35 period was $51.44 a month, as against the monthly salary of $104.14 paid to white teachers.

Surveys in North Carolina completed in 1936 by the Department of Conservation and Development strike a more encouraging note in Negro educational welfare, according to the WPA Index. The number of accredited Negro high schools in the State increased from eleven in 1920, with an enrollment of 1,500, to 120 in 1934-35, with 25,000 enrolled. During the 1920-35 period, the enrollment of five institutions of higher learning for Negroes increased from less than 100 to more than 2,000. The State of North Carolina maintains two standard four-year colleges for Negro students, in addition to three normal schools for Negroes, the Index points out.

South Carolina presented a less favorable picture for Negroes in the realm of education. Summarizing the findings of the South Carolina State Department of Education completed in 1937, the Index states:

''Overcrowding was found in 1,417, or 22.5 per cent, of the white classrooms, and in 2,209, or 71.8 per cent of Negro classrooms. The median age for public school buildings for whites was 14 years; that for Negroes was 16.5 years. Sixty buildings for white and 204 for Negroes were at least 40 years old. The average number of classrooms per building for whites was five and that for Negroes two. Facilities for school lunches were found in 518 white and 319 Negro schools. Oil lamps were found in approximately one thousand classrooms. Thirty-seven white and 1,327 Negro schools were using homemade benches, 153 white and 372 Negro schools homemade desks.

The Building Survey Report for the South Carolina State Department of Education also indicates that no heating facilities were found in 99 Negro schools. Steam or hot water heat was reported in 29 percent of white schools and in 45 percent of Negro schools.

The reports of these research projects contain many facts of general interest on the whole school situation. It is clear that in a good many States the educational facilities are inadequate for both white and Negro children. And it is where there are poor provisions for all children that Negro children suffer most from lack of educational opportunity.

An important feature of recent educational history is the construction, repair and modernization of school buildings by the WPA. In the last three years, WPA workers have constructed over 2,200 new school buildings and have extensively improved and repaired over 22,000 more throughout the country. The picture given above of South Carolina conditions can be supplemented by the report of the United States Community Appraisal Committee in South Carolina, which says:

''Many who considered our educational future hopeless from the standpoint of physical facilities are now beginning devoutly to hope that with Works Progress assistance every child in this State may, at not too distant date, have the opportunity of attending school in a publicly owned building that is comfortable, safe and adequate. To this end much has been done in the past two and a half years, but much remains to be done—particularly among Negro schools.

In addition to listing and summarizing the educational situation of the Negro in various States, the Index is a guide to information about the condition of the Negro contained in the Planning Agency Project reports on health institutional care, housing, farm management, population and migration, social problems and crime. In most instances the WPA Index points to the Negro as an integral part of the important problems awaiting social and legislative solution in the South.

Negroes and Education

Lieutenant-Governor Horton was right when he told members of the graduating class of Winston-Salem Teachers' College that the gains of their race have been largely in the field of educational opportunity.

Slowly but surely the doors of educational equality have been opened to the Negro in the South. And little short of amazing has been the eagerness with which Negro youth has seized his opportunities in education and emancipated himself from the thralldom of illiteracy.

That many members of the race have failed to make the most of the facilities available to them is a regrettable circumstance. But the proportion of Negroes taking advantage of opportunities open to them within the comparatively brief span of years stretching between the present and slavery days is remarkably high.

Owing to poverty and other factors the white South has been remiss in the task of providing proper educational facilities for both races. And no doubt the Negro group has suffered to some extent from discrimination. But that unfortunate phase of the situation has about disappeared. During recent years the outlook for Negro education in the South has grown increasingly bright.

The substantial enlargement of the Teachers' College here offers concrete evidence of the interest of the community and state in the welfare of the colored citizen, in addition to the suggestion it makes in behalf of the vision and energetic leadership of the college officials.

The great hope of the whole South lies largely in the education of its people. In a majority of instances education is another synonymn for energy, for a knowledge of what is lacking and what ought to be done frequently impels one toward the task at hand. The ignorant man may walk over acres of diamonds without stooping to pick up a single stone, but as soon as he is informed of the value of those things which lie at his feet the impulse to act will in a normal man become irresistible.

In making progress in education the Negro is moving toward prosperity.

Most Important Now

Vocational education—the kind of training that does most good for Georgia schoo boys and girls—has been abandoned by Sumter county because of the financia crisis facing the state's school system.

The only apparent reason for dropping the vocational program is that it was instituted in all Georgia schools after other things—like Latin and French and advanced algebra—had been taught for decades. Not that these things are unimportant. They are important. But they seem less essential than vocational guidance—which means simply teaching boys and girls how to live and make a living for themselves.

The Sumter board also dropped two training schools for Negroes and the Negro home demonstration agent in an effort to cut expenses to meet loss of state funds.

The most alarming thing about the situation is that many other county boards of education may follow Sumter's example, taking away from hundreds of Georgia school children the training they deserve and which is best for them. Other counties might say "We will have to do the same thing." and they will—unless the legislature does something about supplying funds so schools can reopen next fall with all departments in full-time operation.

The News predicts other schools will be forced to curtail their activities—in one department or another—if the legislature fails to make adequate provision for the schools before September. And it appears now that sentiment of the legislators has changed little since they met in Atlanta from January to March and refused to help the schools, the aged, the insane and the dependent children.

And the economy committee's report offered little comfort to the people who teach your boys and girls how to read and write—and more important: how to make a living.

COMMENCEMENT SPEAKERS

The thrill that comes from having completed a course of study at college is scarcely greater to the graduate than that of hearing the baccalaureate sermons and the commencement addresses that are delivered by successful men. With the colored graduate it is doubly thrilling to listen to an address from a sincere and successful member of the graduate's own race.

There is nothing a college can offer at commencement of greater value to the graduates, students and the assembled host of alumni and friends of the college than an opportunity to see and hear the eminent Negro men and women who are making contributions to the advancement of our nation. After a year of dinning into the ears of the students the facts of school books and pointing to the opportunities for service and great achievement that lies before those who battle their way to graduation, how eminently fitting it is for one to the young people at commencement time proofs of the lessons taught in the personalities of individuals who have attained success. And how realistic and doubly inspiring it is, in the particular case of a commencement at a Negro college, when great Negroes preach the sermons and deliver the graduating addresses!

In the rarefied atmosphere of college life it is possible for the student to become so impressed with the teachings about the brotherhood of man, the equality of opportunity and the glories of American democracy until he might become discouraged and disillusioned after graduation upon finding that much of which he learned in school did not take into consideration the fact that there are barriers to the attainment of these blessings for members of the Negro race.

Graduation day offers an opportunity to our colleges for practical demonstrations in how the incident of race cannot fully defeat the graduate who wants to succeed. The chance to see Negro men and women who have attained eminence despite handicaps provides these young people with a kind of inspiration impossible for them to receive from any other source.

In these United States, for better or for worse, we have Negro Education, Negro Business, Negro Religion, Negro Journalism and Negro Politics, to mention only a few of the branches of service in which members of the race are engaged. We have our specialists in all of these services, and our graduates will most likely find in these services their chance for making a livelihood and a life.

Our college officials should never grow weary in the well doing represented in the fine, realistic service they render their students and the general public when they schedule for commencement addresses the most eminent Negro leaders obtainable.

The Governor's Message

FRANKLY, sincerely and helpfully, Governor Hoey recommended in his address to the Legislature especially these things:

A balanced budget; a permanent tax measure which would let the public, industry and business know approximately what the tax policy of the state is to be; a deaf ear to petitions for a constitutional amendment prohibiting diversion of highway funds, although the Governor is unalterably opposed to diversion; increased salaries for teachers; the twelfth grade; larger tuition at the state educational institutions; special courses for Negroes in law, medicine and pharmacy—to conform to the United States Supreme Court's recent decision; revision, but not abolition of the absentee ballot law and general improvement of election laws to strengthen the guarantees of fair elections; a $5,000,000 bond issue to standardize and modernize the state highways; a retirement plan for all public employees; a special act against lynching; enlarged programs for public health, vocational education, school libraries; legislation urged by the North Carolina Bar Association relating to selection of magistrates and to rules to be made by the Supreme Court for procedure in the lower courts; continuation of the state advertising appropriation; public aid in the crime problem, and the aid of individuals and clubs in helping persons paroled or discharged from prison find employment.

It was a survey of North Carolina's present condition and its prospects proving Governor Hoey's intimate familiarity with the state and the needs of the people.

OPINION

Jim Crow Educational Appeasement

In a clean cut decision in the case of Lloyd Gaines vs. Canada, registrar of the University of Missouri, the U.S. Supreme Court gave Missouri and all other Southern States the choice of opening State universities to all citizens or erecting separate, but equal, universities for colored people.

Since then, white presidents of white Southern schools have been holding conference to decide how this mandate shall be met.

It would be supposed that college presidents, whose job it is to teach young America respect for law, order and the Constitution, would have met to find the best way to carry out the decision of the highest tribunal in the land. But what they have been doing has been to seek, by hook or crook, to prevent its enforcement.

One proposal, said to have the endorsement of so important an agency as the General Education (Rockefeller) Board, would set up regional universities at some existing schools—at Howard in Washington, Fisk in Nashville, Dillard in New Orleans, and Atlanta University.

Under this scheme these institutions would give up undergraduate work and become graduate schools to take care of colored students from States which would enter into contracts jointly to support them.

This would be a blatant attempt to violate the Constitution and override the U.S. Supreme Court, which, in the Gaines case, said this:

> By the operation of the laws of Missouri, a privilege has been created for white law students which is denied to Negroes by reason of their race . . . . That is denial of the equality of legal right to the enjoyment of the privilege which the State has set up, and the provision for the payment of tuition fees in another State does not remove the discrimination . . . .
> The obligation of the State to give the protection of equal laws can be performed only where its laws operate, that is within its own jurisdiction . . . . That obligation is imposed by the Constitution upon the States severally. . . .
> We find it impossible to conclude that what otherwise would be an unconstitutional discrimination, with respect to the legal right to the enjoyment of opportunities within the State can be justified by requiring resort to opportunities elsewhere

Summed up, what the court said was:

1. That the basic consideration was that Missouri itself was furnishing opportunities to white students which it must provide also for colored.
2. That these opportunities may be furnished separately but equally.
3. That they must be furnished within the State (of Missouri).
4. That they must be furnished, no matter how few the applicants, because even one individual is entitled to equal protection of the law.

The jim crow States which have separate schools are the poorest States and least able to support two separate school systems. But their prejudice is so great that they refuse to listen to any economic reasoning in the matter. And if they are so intolerant that they demand these expensive, separate educational setups they should be willing to pay for them without singing the blues.

Experience has shown that there is no reason why every law school in the United States should not open its doors to all races. Those behind the regional university plan know that it would violate the law. What they hope is, that by offering a little more money to colored colleges, and by spreading good doses of flattery among presidents of these schools, they can sugar-coat this jim crow plan and make it so attractive that colored people will swallow it.

There was a man who sold his birthright for a mess of pottage, and we would not be surprised if some of our leaders do the same thing in the jim crow educational appeasement matter.

An editorial in The Missouri Student, student paper of the University of Missouri, for instance, has this to say:

> We who are students will have no say as to what will be done about (Lloyd Gaines) attending school, but it is we who will go to school with him. Few will have the money to come, and those who do will come for an advanced education, and for the most part will be a superior Negro.
> Our actions in accepting him will define our status as Americans. Our pilgrim, continental, Gettysburg tradition is freedom and racial equality for all. It is our cue to pioneer the nation out of this last frontier of racial prejudice and superstition.

Tragedy at Meharry

THE CIRCUMSTANCES under which 34-year-old Eric Williamson, Meharry Medical College junior, shot Professor W. E. A. Forde to death and then turned the weapon upon himself, are tragic.

According to the story in this issue of the AFRO-AMERICAN, Williamson, facing failure and disgrace when caught cheating in an examination, took this way out.

Aside from the more unfortunate aspects of this incident, one cannot help being reminded of how much more difficult the study of medicine has become. The same thing is true of other professions.

Time was when almost anyone with a high school education could enter a medical school with a fair chance of graduating and passing his State board examinations. Now, many college graduates without special aptitudes are hard pressed to complete medical courses with any degree of success.

The fact that Williamson failed at Howard University before entering Meharry raises the question as to whether he should have been received at the latter institution. It has often happened, however, that a student who fails at one college pulls himself together and makes good at another.

Of course much moralizing could be done in this Meharry tragedy. It appears that he simply cracked up under the realization of another failure and the knowledge that he would be dismissed for cheating.

INCIDENTALLY, the Meharry suicide follows hard upon a similar incident a few days ago at Tuskegee when Tracy Brannon, assistant postmaster, shot himself to death when he found he would not get what he felt to be a merited promotion.

This was the fourth tragic episode at Tuskegee. Several years ago Miss Mary Booth, sister-in-law of Dr. R. R. Moton, was slain under mysterious circumstances. A year later Mrs. Helen Howard, a nurse was mysteriously killed. Then came the killing of Professor Russell Atkins, assistant principal, who was slain by a cafe owner.

Recurrences of murders and suicides, not usually occurring at seats of learning, sent a shiver around the country.

Booker T. Washington used to boast that no graduate of Tuskegee had ever been convicted of a serious crime.

IT ALL SEEMS to indicate that as civilization becomes more complex, fewer of us are able to stand the strain of the increased pressure and competition, and that to some suicide or homicide becomes increasingly attractive as a way out.

The growing tendency to end life may have an even more significant implication. There was a time when the strong religious belief that suicide was an unpardonable sin, made it almost unknown among us. There was also a time when fundamental optimism, a deep-seated sense of humor and "a desire to go to heaven" helped us to suffer the ills we have.

Evidently more of us are coming to be less sure of how much of a sin it is, or whether after all, Divine Justice balances the accounts of human relations on the earth.

For example, a youth survey among 50,000 boys and girls in New York recently showed that Adolf Hitler was the most hated man, and Mussolini came next, and the devil was a poor third.

President Roosevelt was voted as the man they believed most loved. God came second.

THERE ARE SOME THINGS EDUCATION CANNOT DO FOR MAN

Education cannot do everything that needs to be done for us, though many of us seem to think so. We expect too much of the education we receive in school, per se. We tax it too heavily, leaving self out, and expect education, to do things for us, that it cannot do independently of the man per se. Education is a process of developing whatever is inherently in the man. It puts nothing in the man, but takes out and broadens whatever God puts in the man. If you do not carry much to school when you enter, you will not bring much away when you finish.

Education is like depositing money in a bank, you cannot check out any more money than you deposit to your credit. Going to college you need not expect to bring away any more talent than you put in, in native ability, when you entered college. That's commonsense. There are many things that education cannot do for us, though we may think differently. Education is not a collective proposition, but an individual problem, that must be tackled and solved personally, by each individual for himself. The young mind gets confused and speculative, because it does not understand what education is, nor its purpose.

We go to school to learn how to work and what work means and its purpose. But too often leave school with no idea of work, or what it means, how to look for a job, or when we find one, what to do with it. When we come out of school we are unprepared for useful citizenship, or home life. Why? Our whole educational theories and curriculum, are theoretical and void of commonsense, and instead of preparing the youth for useful and practical citizenship, it unprepared him to fit into the religious, economic, industrial or political philosophy of today, in the light of his opportunity. He comes out of school with no intelligent or moral conception of his duty to church state or society. Our whole school curriculum needs re-construction, so as to develop the abilities of the youth in working together, in modern industries, economic and political life, and in taking a part in self-restraining, self-governing government, where all men enjoy in common, the protection of the law, equal rights and opportunities to labor and vote their convictions without the fear of molestation from any source whatever.

Negro teachers and educators, in common with white teachers and educators, ought to impress upon the youthful mind, something more than mere instructions from books. We spend too much time preparing our children for college, when in fact not more than ten per cent of them ever see inside of a college door. There is not enough practical training taught in our schools for the ninety per cent, who stay at home to get the most out of the local environment they must live and die in.

"The high school graduate has little or no idea of political theory, sociology or economics, and yet only a small per centum of them will go ahead and obtain this in college. The great majority of them will seek a job for which they aren't trained and will try to evaluate their own political and economic theory, without any educational background as assistance, or any inherent qualifications to build their career upon." So, if we examine carefully things practical and things theoretical, we will find in truth, many things that education cannot do for us but will go further than anything else in developing what we are best fitted to do.

OPINION

Tragedy at Meharry

THE CIRCUMSTANCES under which 34-year-old Eric Williamson, Meharry Medical College junior, shot Professor W. E. A. Forde to death and then turned the weapon upon himself, are tragic.

According to the story in this issue of the AFRO-AMERICAN, Williamson, facing failure and disgrace when caught cheating in an examination, took this way out.

Aside from the more unfortunate aspects of this incident, one cannot help being reminded of how much more difficult the study of medicine has become. The same thing is true of other professions.

Time was when almost anyone with a high school education could enter a medical school with a fair chance of graduating and passing his State board examinations. Now, many college graduates without special aptitudes are hard pressed to complete medical courses with any degree of success.

The fact that Williamson failed at Howard University before entering Meharry raises the question as to whether he should have been received at the latter institution. It has often happened, however, that a student who fails at one college pulls himself together and makes good at another.

Of course much moralizing could be done in this Meharry tragedy. It appears that he simply cracked up under the realization of another failure and the knowledge that he would be dismissed for cheating.

INCIDENTALLY, the Meharry suicide follows hard upon a similar incident a few days ago at Tuskegee when Tracy Brannon, assistant postmaster, shot himself to death when he found he would not get what he felt to be a merited promotion.

This was the fourth tragic episode at Tuskegee. Several years ago Miss Mary Booth, sister-in-law of Dr. R. R. Moton, was slain under mysterious circumstances. A year later Mrs. Helen Howard, a nurse was mysteriously killed. Then came the killing of Professor Russell Atkins, assistant principal, who was slain by a cafe owner.

Recurrences of murders and suicides, not usually occurring at seats of learning, sent a shiver around the country.

Booker T. Washington used to boast that no graduate of Tuskegee had ever been convicted of a serious crime.

IT ALL SEEMS to indicate that as civilization becomes more complex, fewer of us are able to stand the strain of the increased pressure and competition, and that to some suicide or homicide becomes increasingly attractive as a way out.

The growing tendency to end life may have an even more significant implication. There was a time when the strong religious belief that suicide was an unpardonable sin, made it almost unknown among us. There was also a time when fundamental optimism, a deep-seated sense of humor and "a desire to go to heaven" helped us to suffer the ills we have.

Evidently more of us are coming to be less sure of how much of a sin it is, or whether after all, Divine Justice balances the accounts of human relations on the earth.

For example, a youth survey among 50,000 boys and girls in New York recently showed that Adolf Hitler was the most hated man, and Mussolini came next, and the devil was a poor third.

President Roosevelt was voted as the man they believed most loved. God came second.

THERE ARE SOME THINGS EDUCATION CANNOT DO FOR MAN

Education cannot do everything that needs to be done for us, though many of us seem to think so. We expect too much of the education we receive in school, per se. We tax it too heavily, leaving self out, and expect education, to do things for us, that it cannot do independently of the man per se. Education is a process of developing whatever is inherently in the man. It puts nothing in the man, but takes out and broadens whatever God puts in the man. If you do not carry much to school when you enter, you will not bring much away when you finish.

Education is like depositing money in a bank, you cannot check out any more money than you deposit to your credit. Going to college you need not expect to bring away any more talent than you put in, in native ability when you entered college. That's commonsense. There are many things that education cannot do for us, though we may think differently. Education is not a collective proposition, but an individual problem, that must be tackled and solved personally, by each individual for himself. The young mind gets confused and speculative, because it does not understand what education is, nor its purpose.

We go to school to learn how to work and what work means and its purpose. But too often leave school with no idea of work, or what it means, how to look for a job, or when we find one, what to do with it. When we come out of school we are unprepared for useful citizenship, or home life. Why? Our whole educational theories and curriculum, are theoretical and void of commonsense, and instead of preparing the youth for useful and practical citizenship, it unprepared him to fit into the religious, economic, industrial or political philosophy of today, in the light of his opportunity. He comes out of school with no intelligent or moral conception of his duty to church state or society. Our whole school curriculum needs re-construction, so as to develop the abilities of the youth in working together, in modern industries, economic and political life, and in taking a part in self-restraining, self-governing government, where all men enjoy in common, the protection of the law, equal rights and opportunities to labor and vote their convictions without the fear of molestation from any source whatever.

Negro teachers and educators, in common with white teachers and educators, ought to impress upon the youthful mind, something more than mere instructions from books. We spend too much time preparing our children for college, when in fact not more than ten per cent of them ever see inside of a college door. DISCUSSION

Applicants Plan to Swamp Virginia U.

(Staff Correspondence)

RICHMOND — Dr. J. M. Tinsley, president of the local and State Association of the NAACP, announced, Saturday, that as a result of a series of articles appearing in the AFRO-PLANET on the stand of Virginia in regards to the Gaines-Missouri case decision, the association has received many applications from persons interested in registering at the University of Virginia, next month.

The names of the applicants will not be released until after the meeting of the State board of education, Thursday, at which time it is expected that some decision will be reached as to what course Virginia will pursue in carrying out the edict of the Supreme Court.

Discuss "Equalities"

At a meeting of the Virginia interracial Commission, last week, the problem facing the State in dealing out "educational equality" to its colored population was discussed, but no definite plans made.

Officials of the organization when interviewed declined to make any statement.

EDITOR'S NOTE: The Interracial Commission, at a meeting called soon after the Louis-Schmeling fight to settle the so-called riot after the bout in which a white motorist was accused of running over five colored persons, also refused to commit itself then by not furnishing its findings for publication.

When asked for personal opinion, executives declared that the matter was left entirely up to the State board of education for disposition.

Among those who attended the meeting were:

Tennant Bryan, L. R. Reynolds, Dr. Garnett Ryland, the Rev. Churchill, J. Gibson, Dr. W. J. Clarke, all white; Dr. John M. Gandy, Dr. J. M. Ellison, T. C. Walker, Dr. W. H. Hughes, Wiley A. Hall, John Charity and Mrs. J. P. Barrett.

Grievance State-wide

Complaints continue to pour in to the NAACP from individuals and organizations outside of Richmond, airing the adverse conditions in colored schools.

From Chauncey Harmon of Pulaski, came a letter which in part reads:

"Our school stiuation, as you already know, is far less than satisfactory. It is for this reason that we are willing to exhaust every posible means to obtain our rights.

Questions Walker Attitude

"Mr. T. C. Walker was here not long ago investigating but recently I received a very discouraging letter from him stating that there was nothing possible under the present law that could be done about it.

"Is this a fact? Certainly the recent decision of the Supreme Court is contrary to Mr. Walker's reply.

"I hope Mr. Hewin will find it possible to enter this county as soon as possible, but I am wondering if it will be possible to combine this court action into a dual or triple suit.

Have $100 Ready

"I am rushing to you some information which I feel of much importance at this particular time. Although these colored citizens are poor and their work is scarce, they have about $100 that they are willing to contribute to any organization, preferably the NAACP, in order that their cause might be fought.

Have No School

"As you know we do not have a school. The present plans call for a $37,000 eight room building with auditorium, and a gymnasium for the whites only, at the cost of $48,000. We know this is not equal or near equal.

"Our bus system is valued at $12,000, and our colored patrons send their children to school on the Greyhound line and in cars at their own expense.

"The school board definitely refuses to transport colored children. There has never been a high school for colored in this county, and only one or two colored children are sent to a high school out of the county, by the county.

"What high school work we do, we are forced to do it in an eight-room building, where the elementary grades are housed at the same time. We feel that now is the time. Please let me hear from you immediately, for we are ready to do the most drastic."

File Petition

Residents of Surry County, in the meantime have taken a forward step in the matter of having the same transportation facilities as whites and directed a petition to the school board of that county, last week.

NAACP to Act

The NAACP, it was learned, Saturday, has taken the matter of the Surry County transportation case under consideration and is already launching a program with litigation, as a last resort if necessary, in order to obtain the desired results.

To Seek Injunction

Colored citizens of Covington are also on the verge of seeking a court injunction, in trying to prevent officials of that section from continuing a school building which they consider to be far below the requirement standards, and also, they are opposed to the site on which it is to be erected.

A letter to the NAACP from the Watson Training School Parent-Teacher League, in part reads:

Federal Grant

"On August 23, 1938, an election was ordered by the circuit judge of this district for the people to decide whether or not bonds should be issued to finance the erection of a high school for whites, and a consolidated school for colored.

"The above was made possible through Federal grant of $122,576, which represents 45 per cent and a bond issue of $150,000, which represents 55 per cent, for the erection of the two structures, totaling $272,576.

Distribution Unequal

"The colored school has been let to a contractor for $44,743, with an additional $15,000 for excavating, concrete, filling, and other equipment, making the total approximately $60,000.

"In the first place the colored patrons here feel that this is a very unequal distribution of the funds; in the second place, they realize that it is contrary to the last ruling of the Supreme Court.

"Thirdly, the school board selected an undesirable site, over the objection of a majority of the colored people, and is erecting a building there without adequate facilities.

Whites Considered

"Near the present site, adjacent property, sufficient for the erection of the new school, could have been secured at a small cost. The whites have been granted an extension and there is a consideration of several sites yet in progress.

"The county officials have planned an election for the purpose of deciding on location for the whites. We have in mind an injunction to prohibit further work on our project."

Lee Honored

While these complaints of alleged racial inequality continue to flow in from all sections of the State, students and members of the faculty of the new Maggie L. Walker High School and Armstrong High School observed Lee-Jackson Day, Thursday.

A picture of Lee and Jackson was unveiled at a ceremony at the new school for that particular occasion, and later placed in the school library.

The Rev. Churchill, J. Gibson white, rector of St. James Episcopal Church, the main speaker said, "I definitely would not leave a heritage of hate as a legacy to the next generations."

In conjunction with the general education shake-up in the State the AFRO-PLANET will begin its survey in the Richmond public school system, next week.

DR. DAVID D. JONES TALKS IN LOUISVILLE

Local College Head Addresses Association of American Colleges.

LOUISVILLE, Ky., Jan. 15.—Speaking on the subject, "The Faculty Member As a Cultural Force In the College," President David D. Jones, of Bennett college, Greensboro, represented the negro liberal arts colleges of the country before the annual meeting of the Association of American Colleges here today. The conference which convened Thursday and Friday, yesterday and today, with its president, Dr. Guy E. Snavely, directing, had as its general theme "The Cultural Obligations of the College Faculty."

Basing his discussion on a definition of John Dewey, "Culture is the capacity for constantly expanding the range of accuracy of one's perception and meanings," President Jones pointed out the double obligation of the negro faculty member who is called upon to guide the young negro in the ever widening field of learning and accomplishment.

President Jones enumerated contributions to the general culture of the country that have been made by Booker T. Washington in his early emphasis on vocational education; works of the late James Weldon Johnson and of Dr. R. Nathaniel Dett, in the fields of American literature and music respectively; accomplishments of Dr. George Washington Carver with the products of the deep south; scholarship of Dr. E. E. Just, biologist; scientific research of Dr. William Augustus Hinton in the cure of venereal diseases, and the social and economic research being made under the directorship of E. Franklin Frazier, Abram Harris, and Charles S. Johnson.

"The task that lies ahead of us as negro teachers," said the college president, "is first, to see that we have an understanding of the capacity for expansion of our students—that they are familiar with the activities, customs and beliefs of our day, realizing, as Parks says, that "Cultural traits are assimilated only as they are understood, and they are understood only as they are assimilated;" second, that we determine to ever increase the range and accuracy and understanding of our students, keeping in mind the fact that they are members of a larger society; and third, that we work at our task in a realistic manner, taking things as they are and working toward the goal of things as we wish them to be."

Teachers And Students Suffer From Gross Discrimination In Southland

WASHINGTON, June 9—Appalling educational inequalities for white and Race students in South Carolina and Florida were revealed this week in the WPA Index of Research Projects.

The most outstanding discrepancy in the survey was found in Florida where white teachers received more than 100 per cent more pay for their work than Race teachers of the same qualifications. The figures show that while the average monthly salary for Race teachers in 1934-35 was $51.44, white teachers were receiving $104.14.

Use Oil Lamps

South Carolina presented a discouraging picture of overcrowdedness and poor classroom facilities including the old fashion oil lamps which were found in more than a thousand building units.

In contrast to South Carolina and Florida, North Carolina shows hopeful signs of educational progress The number of accredited high schools in the state for Race students increased from 11 in 1920 to 120 in 1935; the enrollment increased from 1,500 to 25,000.

North Carolina also leads the other states in promoting higher education. It maintains two standard four-year colleges and three normal schools.

Other facts revealed in the survey show that 60 buildings for whites and 204 for members of the Race in South Carolina were more than 40 years old.

Marked Advance in Negro Education is Revealed by Survey

WASHINGTON, June 14—(AP)—A government survey disclosed today that negro education made marked advances in the last 20 years, but still lagged behind accepted standards.

Estimating the number of 1935-36 graduates from negro public high schools in 18 southern states at 18,500, office of education experts said that number was 50 per cent more than all the negroes enrolled in high school in 1915-16.

Then, only 53 per cent of the negro children 6 to 14 years old were attending school. In 1930-31, the percentage was 84.

Between 1931-32 and 1935-36, the negro elementary school enrollment increased 1.5 per cent to 2,250,045, and negro high school enrollment increased 39 per cent to 133,936.

Southern Educators Study Negro Educational Issues

Opportunity Must Be Provided In South For Study of Law, Medicine and Other Advanced Work

ATLANTA, Oct. 31.—(AP)—A Supreme court ruling that a state must provide negroes the same opportunity to study law, medicine and other advanced subjects as white residents came before southern educators for study today.

"We must do something quickly," asserted President Harmon W. Caldwell, of the University of Georgia, discussion leader at a conference of representatives of 41 colleges and universities situated in 13 states.

"Already the University of Georgia has received applications for admission from three negroes and I understand a hearing is to be held soon on a petition for a mandamus to force the University of Tennessee to admit six negroes, four to its graduate school and two to its law school. Similar situations doubtless exist in other southern states."

The Supreme court held in a Missouri case that if a state did not furnish negroes adequate facilities for graduate study it must admit them to the state universities and graduate schools. Dr. Caldwell said he did not believe it is feasible "just now" to admit negroes to southern institutions used by white students.

Practical Solution.

"The most practical solution," he continued, "would be the setting up of regional negro universities to which all states in the region would contribute. This arrangement would save the states of a tremendous—if not prohibitive—cost of setting up separate graudate schools.

"However, if it should not meet Supreme court requirements—and it might not—two other possible solutions suggest themselves:

"1. Expansion of negro state colleges to provide for adequate instruction in law, medicine, teaching, the ministry, social work and other such subjects.

"2. Financial aid to privately-owned negro colleges and universities to accomplish the same purpose, provided state laws will permit this."

Dr. Caldwell observed that development of high school and college education for negroes had contributed to bring about a "greater need than ever before" for advanced training. In 1903, for example, he said, there were less than 4,000 negroes in colleges in the United States; now, there are approximately 40,000. "We must meet that need some way or another," he said.

Radiorator Discusses "Negro In American Education"

Doxey Wilkerson Tells of Conditions in South and North and How To Improve Them

WASHINGTON, Nov.—(ANP) An interesting word-picture of American education as it affects Negroes, North and South, was given over NBC's Blue Network last Wednesday by Doxey A. Wilkerson, the address being part of the American Teachers Association observance of education week.

Wilkerson, well informed on the subject of education as a member of the faculty of Howard university, is now engaged in a study of "The Negro in America" under auspices of the Carnegie Corporation of New York and has recently completed a study for President Roosevelt's advisory committee on education. Excerpts from the Wilkerson radio speech:

"The theme for this week's national observance is "Education for the American Way of Life." What does this theme imply for the Negro in American education? Attention is here called to three important considerations. They relate to the education of Negroes in the South, the education of Negroes in the North, and the education of white Americans about Negroes throughout the United States.

"First, with regard to the education of the 9 million Negroes who constitute one-fourth of the population of the South. Some 2,500,000 Negro youth are enrolled in schools in the southern states. They are required by law to attend segregated Negro schools. For the most part, these schools are ramshackle, outmoded structures which are sorely in need of replacement. Public elementary and secondary schools are kept open for terms that are from one to two months shorter than those for white schools in the same communities. Teachers in these schools are greatly overloaded.

"Some 20,000 additional Negro teachers would have to be employed to reduce the pupil-teacher loads in Negro schools to the level for white schools in the same communities. The salaries of Negro public school teachers about $500 per year, just about one-half as much as the average salaries of white teachers. In many communities with sizeable Negro population, there are no public high school facilities for Negro pupils; and there are practically no public facilities for the graduate and professional education of Negroes in the entire South. On the elementary and secondary school level, the Southern states spend approximately $50 per year for each white pupil in average daily attendance, as compared with $20 per year for the average Negro pupil.

"Second, regarding the education in the North. Approximately 500,000 Negroes go to school in the Northern States. For the most part they attend mixed schools. In some sections, however,—for example, certain communities of Illinois, Indiana, Pennsylvania and New Jersey,—Negroes in the North are required to attend separate schools. Further, there is a tendency in some sections of the North toward the spread of school segregation. Educational opportunities for Negroes in the Northern states are by far more adequate than in the South. Yet, even here one observes practices which are hardily in accord with what we like to think of as "the American way of life."

"To check the spread of school segregation, with its implications of social-civic "inferiority," and the division between white and black Americans which it tends to perpetuate and extend; to eliminate the subtle and unwholesome distinctions which are commonly made in the curricular programs of white and Negro youth; and to further the integration of Negro children into the full life of the school—these are among the requirements of our democratic ideal for the education of Negroes in the North.

"Finally, for white and black Americans in the schools of our nation at large, there is pressing need for instruction which bears a definite social orientation towards interracial understanding and good-will. Negroes, themselves, learn very little in school about the role of their people in American life. White youths learn even less; and, what is worse, their schools often help them to acquire clearly un-American attitudes of racial intolerance.

"Organized efforts toward interracial understanding and goodwill, within our schools and without, is a requirement of enlightened self-interest for all Americans, regardless of race. Every success toward this end is an important blow at reaction which even in America, severely threatens to undermine the civil liberties and the representative political institutions of the nation.

EDUCATION- 1939
DISCUSSION

AMERICAN ASSOCIATION OF SCHOOL ADMINISTRATORS

American Ass'n Public School Administrators

Febr. 25th To March 2nd. Many Prominent Educators On Program. Gaines Decision Factor Among Negro Delegates.

CLEVELAND, Ohio, (Special To The St. Louis Argus)—Principal G. D. Brantley of Sumner High School attended the sixty-ninth convention of the American Association of School Administrators held in Cleveland, Ohio, Februar 25th to March 2nd. There were approximately seven thousand school administrators registered, and with those meeting with allied educational organizations, more than ten thousand visitors were registered. The meetings were held in the Public Auditorium with sectional meetings in the Hotel Cleveland and Hotel Statler and other places.

The convention theme "The Foundations of American Education" was discussed over a national radio chain by Honorable Harold L. Ickes, Secretary of the Interior who spoke at length on the history of the conservation movement and the need of teaching conservation of natural resources in the schools. He said in part: "I had not thought to discuss government reorganization tonight, except as it bears on the special subject of conservation, but let me take this occasion to say that the way the Congress meets this issue this year, will indicate how our government is going to meet the critical problems of the next few years. "We cannot go forward politically or economically", he continued, "in the kind of world we live in, leaving our destinies to the negative decrees of those who have closed their eyes to the problems of the nation."

Dr. E. E. Day, President of Cornell University, reported the views of American youth on schools, employment, democracy and world peace. Superintendent Mary B. McAndrew of Carbondale, Pa., presented a scholarly address on "Human Resources and Their Development." She said in part that school administrators must consider in their "preparation for tomorrow" certain outstanding factors. She blasted "family limitation" and birth control, saying that birth control "rapidly is breeding the brains out of American people."

Dr. George D. Strayer of Columbia University spoke on the changing conceptions of Educational Administration. Dr. John A. Sexson, President of the Association, who is Superintendent of Schools, Pasadena, California, said before the advisory committee on the education of Negroes that "education should be concerned with the problems of all people". He advised that young people be encouraged to fit themselves to serve in any job because one cannot pick a life's work during these times.

The Department of Secondary School Principals with headquarters in Hotel Cleveland discussed the theme—"The Modern Secondary School at Work." Dr. E. K. Fretwell of Columbia University conducted a panel of Cleveland High School pupils in a discussion of The Philosophy and Purpose of an activity program. Dr. F. T. Spaulding of Harvard led a discussion in Educational Problems causing administrators the most concern during the past two years. The Sumner High School submitted one problem treated by Dr. Spaulding in response to an invitation at an earlier date.

At the convention were many Negro educators and administrators in charge of Negro schools. Among those present in addition to Principal Brantley were: Dr. Ambrose Caliver of Office of Education in Washington; President Clement of Atlanta, Principal and Mrs. Cook of Kansas City; President Trenholm of Alabama; President Lee, Florida; Principal Anderson of Oklahoma; Supervisor Wood of Baltimore; Dr. Wesley, Howard; Dr. Thompson of Howard University; Principal Hodge of Kansas; Principal Collins of Kansas; Principal M. O. Bousfield of Chicago; Dean Jason and Principal Reedy of Lincoln University; President Davis, W. Virginia; President Jones of Fisk; President Atwood of Kentucky; President Howe, Hampton; President Gaudy, Virginia; Dr. Derbigny and Prof. Washington of Tuskegee; Dean Lane of Louisville; Supervisor Wells, W. Virginia; Board Member Powell, W. Virginia; Principals Hill, Moon and Johns of Oklahoma, President Watson of Arkansas; Dean Bond of Fisk, Pres. Grossley of Delaware et al.

With the convening of the Negroes, Walter White and Charlie Houston called two meetings in behalf of the N.A.A.C.P. for a discussion of the Gaines decision. It was evident that the Gaines decision is far-reaching in its implications. It is an inescapable fact that the decision will result in a more equitable distribution of public monies for the education of Negroes throughout those states with separate school laws. The discussions were provoked in an effort to arrive at some agreement concerning the attitude Negro educators should assume. It was evident that those in the discussion believed Missouri, West Virginia and possibly Kentucky should admit Negroes uncompromisingly to their graduate and professional schools. In other states tradition will govern

Educators Hit For 'Wishy-Washy' Stand In Gaines Case

CLEVELAND, O.—(ANP)—Main criticism of last week's session here of the American Association of School Administrators and directed against the representatives of Southern Schools, was that they were lukewarm and "wishy-washy" in not going on record as favoring a spirited fight for strict application of the favorable Supreme Court ruling in the Lloyd Gaines-U. of Missouri case.

It was maintained that the educators, representing for the most part, Southern Land Grant colleges, evaded the plea of Walter White, NAACP secretary and Charles Houston, NAACP chief counsel, that they present a united front in demanding full equality for colored students of the South.

At the administrators' morning session, held at the YMCA, a three-hour discussion of the problem was held, during which both Houston (co-counsel for Gaines in the Supreme Court hearing) and White were bombarded with questions by the educators.

Houston explained the legal effect of the ruling while White pointed out the necessity for fighting for application of the ruling in Southern states. Such a fight at present, he said would offset possibility of having the ruling amended as a sop to reactionary Southerners who declare they will never "agree to permit Negroes to attend the same schools and sit in the same classes with white students."

Many educators of the North and East reportedly expressed themselves as convinced that the brunt of the fight to enforce the High Court ruling will fall on them, were plainly displeased with the "panicky fear" of some Southern educators that hasty action on their part might discredit them with the "white folks" back home

At the meeting's close a resolution was passed, referring the matter to a special committee "for further consideration."

Social Sciehce Teacher Group In Negro Schools Hold Conference Here

The fourth annual conference of the Association of Social Science Teachers in Negro Colleges convened this morning at 9:30 o'clock in the science hall, Bennett college, with Dr. Charles H. Wesley, dean of the graduate school, Howard university, Washington, presiding. Twenty-seven colleges are represented at the meeting.

President David D. Jones, of the college, extended the greetings of the conference host to the representatives of the colleges assembled. He discussed the importance of the meeting from his viewpoint and expressed the pleasure which Bennett college had in making the group welcome. Dr. Wesley stated the objectives of the conference, advising that two other meetings of the association were held at Johnson C. Smith university, at Charlotte, and the third was held at Atlanta university, Atlanta, Ga.

Prof. Lawrence B. Wilson, professor of history and political science, Philander Smith university, Little Rock, Ark., read a paper on "The Origin and Contemporary. Significance of the Fourteenth Amendment," in which he described the background for the amendment and noted the significance which it had for the day. He called attention especially to the recent case of the University of Missouri, in which a negro applied for admission to the school of law and had been denied admission. This resulted in the court decision declaring for an equality of opportunity in educational opportunities for negroes.

Prof. Samuel Scott, of the department of history, Virginia Union university, Richmond, Va., led the discussion which followed. A paper on "The Subsequent Interpretations of the Fourteenth Amendment" by Prof. W. T. Gibbs, an A. and T. college dean, followed. The discussion on the subject was led by Prof. J. Errol Miller, of Lincoln university, Jefferson City, Mo., and Prof. James T. Taylor, of the North Carolina College for Negroes, Durham.

HARRISON BILL

Colored Schools Suffering Urge Immediate Passage Of Harrison Bill

WASHINGTON, D. C.—(SNS)—Church and philanthropic foundations are supporting the development of education for Negroes on a gradually diminishing scale, and this has forced the federal government to step in more and more, especially in the southern states where segregated schools exist, because the states themselves are too poor to carry on the work.

This was the statement made by Charles H. Houston, special counsel for the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, March 3 before the Senate Committee on Education and Labor, in support of the Harrison-Thomas federal bill to aid education in the states.

The bill provides safeguards for equitable distribution of federal money in states where the races go to separate schools.

Mr. Houston stressed that the drying up of funds from the church and private philanthropies necessitated a corresponding increase at least from public funds and under the present, economic condition in the South the state's were unable to go forward with the increased educational load. The only sort of increased revenue in sight is federal funds.

Mr. Houston also stressed the fact that the states would have to increase their support of Negro Negro graduate and professional education under the Gaines case, the decision in which was rendered by the United States Supreme court against the University of Missouri on December 12, 1938.

Mr. Houston said that the bill would benefit the entire nation on the ground that democracy depends for existence on the intelligence of its citizens and that the nation could no more exist today one-half educated and one-half untrained than it could exist in 1861 half free and half-slave; that it is better for the Government and the states to build schools rather than hospitals and jails.

Interracial Group Endorses Federal Aid for Schools

Unanimous endorsement of the Harrison-Thomas bill proposing federal aid for education in the states was voiced Friday night at a state-wide conference of the Georgia Committee on Interracial Co-Operation. Messages urging enactment of the bill were dispatched to members of Congress.

The interracial workers also adopted resolutions expressing approval of Georgia's educational gains and urging state legislators to take no backward steps. They cited serious needs of negro schools, for equalization of salaries and school terms, improved housing and additional facilities for transportation of students.

Dr. R. L. Russell, pastor of the First Methodist Church of Gainesville, presided at the conference, which was held in the Atlanta University library.

Principal speakers were Dr. Comer Woodward, of Emory University; Judge Orville Park, of Macon; Dr. Walter D. Cocking, of Athens, and Professor Aaron Brown, of Fort Valley.

Federal Aid To Education

THE United States Senate Committee on Education and Labor has voted approval of the Thomas-Harrison bill, S 1305, providing for Federal assistance to States for public education.

Florida Times-Union
March 7, 1939

The initial appropriations authorized by the bill would begin during the next fiscal year at approximately $75,000,000, increasing to about $208,000,000 in the sixth year.

The Federal government, in making any grants under the provisions of the bill, will not interfere with local control of the schools.

If the bill is passed, grants will be made for improved teacher preparation, construction of school buildings, administration of State Departments of Education, adult education, rural library service, cooperative educational research and demonstrations, and educating children residing on Federal reservations and at foreign stations.

In the form approved by the Senate committee, the objections of the colored citizens to the Harrison-Fletcher bill, for which it is a substitute, have been removed. The interests of minority racial groups are protected, and States which maintain separate schools for separate races are required to make just and equitable apportionment of any Federal grants.

We should let our Senators and Representatives know that we desire the protective clauses retained in the bill, so that colored children may reap some of the benefits of the huge proposed federal program.

The Larrabee Bill

CONGRESSMAN William H. Larrabee of Indiana has introduced a bill in the House which calls for the distribution of funds by the Federal government to the several states for the purpose of equalizing educational opportunities. The bill asks for an initial sum of $40,000,000 for the first year which is to be graduated up to a maximum of $140,000,000. It has certain commendable features and if enacted into law we see no reason why it should not improve the standards of educational facilities for Colored people.

A section of the bill sets out the following explanation: "A just and equitable apportionment or distribution of the several funds, provided under this act, for the benefit of a minority racial group in a state which maintains by law separate educational facilities for such a minority group, means any plan of apportionment or distribution which results in the expenditure of safe funds not less than the proportion that each minority racial group in such state bears to the total population of that state."

If the measure becomes law it will be a forward step by our government to confer upon Negroes equal educational opportunities so long denied.

In the south, colored teachers are paid less than the white for the same work. Many colored children go to school only three or four months a year because during the cotton picking and cotton chopping seasons the schools are closed and the pupils are sent to the fields. But at the same time the white children attend school nine months a year. Many of the colored children must walk several miles to a one-room school house where a single pedagogue teaches all the grades from ABC's to high school. Many of the books supplied the colored schools are used ones sent from the white schools after they have been supplied with new ones.

The Larrabee measure gives promise of hope for the Negroes in obtaining equal educational advantages. It should be supported by colored people throughout the nation.

NEW MEASURE PROVIDES FOR EQUAL QUOTAS

All Institutions To Share State Allotments In Proportion To Size

WASHINGTON, Feb. 10—Protection of the rights of Race school children is provided for in the bill introduced by Congressman William H. Larrabee of Indiana on January 31, to provide federal funds for education in the several states.

The bill, H. R. 3517, provides for an initial sum of $40,000,000 for the year ending June 30, 1940, with increased amounts for each subsequent year until a maximum of $140,000,000 annually is reached.

The bill provides for the distribution of this money among the several states for the purpose of equalizing educational opportunities.

The Larrabee bill with its companion bill to be introduced in the Senate by Senators Pat Harrison and Elmer Thomas, contains the safeguards necessary for the protection of the Race which have been urged upon congress by the N. A. A. C. P. since the introduction of the first federal education bill in 1937.

The bill, first introduced, S. 419, did not provide safeguards for minority groups. Since that time the N. A. A. C. P. and the National Coordinating Committee for Equitable Distribution of Federal Aid to Education have been maintaining a sustained campaign to amend the federal education bills to safeguard the Race.

The new bill has been drafted so as to provide for an equitable distribution of funds to the Race in states which have separate schools established by law.

Similar provisions appear in the several sub-sections of the bill, each requiring an equitable distribution of funds where separate schools are required.

New Education Bill Provides For Negroes

WASHINGTON, D. C.—An education bill S-1305 to provide federal funds for education in the several states was introduced in the Senate February 17 by Senator Elbert Thomas (D), of Utah.

The bill, companion measure of the Larrabee bill, introduced in the House, January 31, by Representative William H. Larrabee, of Indiana, provides the necessary safeguards for Negroes and other minority groups in the distribution of federal funds for education by the states with separate schools.

All negro employes and laborers are invited to attend the meeting, to which no admission will be charged.

"Understanding" is the motto of the organization, which was founded by Bishop Joseph J. Higgs, D. D., 30 years ago.

The bureau seeks to teach the following principles:

"That the South is the natural home of the negro.

"That the Southern white man is the negro's friend.

"That we need to know and to understand and to appreciate this fact and any man or woman or foreigner who would teach otherwise is an enemy to the negro's welfare and progress.

"Understanding creates friendship and good feeling—the white man understands the negro from the fact that he has spent 265 years with the white man in the South and this period has undoubtedly created instinctive friendship. It would be cruel to teach otherwise.

"It is very fitting therefore for the negro to remember and to understand that it took the white man 5,000 years to arrive at his present standing in the world.

"'About 265 years ago he brought the negro from a savage and heathen state to his present standing in the world.

"Our stay with him has resulted in education, refinement, prosperous and desirable citizenship.

"It is said that we have outstripped any dark race in the world in so short a time.

"We owe this to the American white man.

"Let us be patient and not hasty, lay down undue suspicion and become self-controlling, respect everybody and practice to the greatest degree politeness gratefulness to every man and God and angels will bless us.

"Communism is dangerous and destructive to American principles and citizenship.

Educator Proposes Farm Schools For Boys Who Do Wrong

11-12-39

To The Commercial Appeal:

I thank you for the interest you have taken in the work of the National Rural Industrial Association Inc. that we are trying to carry on over the entire South.

I am now touring the South, studying conditions, lecturing to and advising my people, the negroes, and conferring with the leading people. I find crimes are being committed as never before, largely among the younger set. Authorities tell me that boys as young as five years are often arrested for stealing, that they are at sea as to what is best.

Memphis Press-Scimitar

There is a cause for all of this and there is a remedy; I am afraid that my people will not accept the remedy. Of my more than 50 years as a teacher and preacher, I have tried to apply the remedy, but my people refused to take the work.

Prisons are crowded with young men and women of my race. The only remedy is plans as outlined by this association. During my many years as a teacher and preacher, I have not found a criminal coming from any school carried on by plans as outlined by this association.

The home, the farm and the church are only Divine institutions and no race can succeed that neglects these institutions. Every community should have good homes, good churches and good schools, with good Christian teachers and preachers who are community builders, taking the children to Sunday School and church every Sunday.

Every county should have a reform school, as it will do more good than a state reform school. This school should have 20 to 40 acres of land. Every child attending school in the forenoon and morning should work on the farm in the afternoon. If properly conducted, it will soon become self sustaining and be an asset to the county and country.

This work is claiming the attention of the entire South. I will leave in a few days for Alabama, Georgia and South Carolina where I am called to speak and explain this work.

I am asking every person to take a hand in this work, the greatest work ever launched to help my people, the negroes. They are a child race, just from heathenism and slavery and they must have special attention. The Christian people of America cannot withhold their help.

VALIENT DISCUSSES COLORED WORKERS

Fisk University Professor Says Negro Is Number 1 Employment Problem

Negroes at last night's forum of the People's college in Judge Miller's courtroom heard a statistical analysis of "The Social Background in Occupational Experience of Tennessee White Collar and Skilled Negro Workers," by Prof. Preston Valient, of the social science department of Fisk university.

The speaker said that "whether or not the south is the No. 1 economic problem of the nation, there is no denying the fact that the Negro is the south's No. 1 economic problem in job training, job getting and job holding," and stated that "the group must be trained in the crafts and made proficient to hold the white collar jobs that come to their race in this rapidly changing era."

Prof. Valient, who has done special work for the department of the interior under Dr. Robert C. Weaver, declared that of 5,600 job schedules filled out in Tennessee by Negro workers, almost half (46 out of every 100) were men in the skilled occupations, and in the white collar jobs they were 1,306 women and 1,324 men, in their most productive period between the ages of 25 and 44.

He quoted from a study of fifty white collar and fifty skilled cases recorded in Chattanooga and revealed that forty were born in Tennessee, thirty-five in Georgia, twenty in Alabama and the rest were natives of various southern states.

He advised early training in the crafts and for white collar work, because "the average white collar worker has finished high school, but the skilled craftsman averaged only the fifth grade."

Community singing was led by B. Cortez Tipton, of the Bonny Oaks industrial school. Alphonso Robinson, worker at the field office of the College Hill low-cost housing project, presided and introduced the speaker.

The Southern Leadership Training System, which operates two institutes in the South to train Negroes in sound principles of leadership and education, was founded by Dr. W. H. The schools teach courses in "practical Christianity" and other specialized fields. The Birmingham faculty includes W. G. Young, Talladega College graduate and executive secretary of the system; Ben H. Craig, instructor in citizenship, and Dr. J. J. Gandy, Fisk University, professor of sociology.

Year's Work Ends In Leadership Schools To Aid Negro Race

More than 150 students were enrolled in the different branches of the southern leadership training school system for negroes according to Dr. W. H. Lewis who is in Montgomery today. These leadership schools are located in Alabama and Mississippi and are said to be doing an important work in lifting the standards of the race. They teach three major courses; leadership education, good citizenship and practical Christianity.

The Alabama state school is located at Birmingham. Dr. J. E. Bryan, superintendent of education for Jefferson county, was the commencement speaker at the graduation exercises just closed. Like Mr. Paul Fuller, who was a speaker at the Montgomery exercises last year, Dr. Bryan expressed his belief that the southern leadership training school system offers definite solution to the social and economic problems of the southern negro and that Dr. Lewis was making a contribution to the progress of his race through the establishment of these schools.

The schools are not supported by state funds, the only source of income being through collections and public subscriptions. The work is supported by the business and industrial interests throughout the Montgomery districts. Dr. Lewis and his associates believe the work will some day rank with Tuskegee institute and other great institutions for promoting the welfare of the race.

Interest is being focused upon the Summer School for the Study of Race Relations, which will be held in Birmingham, July 6-20. Registrations are being received from all sections of Mississippi and Alabama, according to a report released by Margaret L. Lewis, registrar for the session. This school, the first of its kind to be conducted in the South, is part of a four-year course prepared especially for ministers, teachers and other aspiring leaders in the negro race.

The movement has met with strong endorsements from white and negro organizations, the Negro Welfare and Social Service Work, Incorporated, having agreed to underwrite all expenses in connection with this "adventure in race relations," according to information made public through the office of the Rev. L. R. Hickman, general manager and vice president of the organization.

A competent corps of teachers has been secured to direct the courses, which will include reports, research, surveys and open forums. Lectures from outstanding white and negro authors will also feature the session. Dr. W. H. Lewis, president of the Southern Leadership Training School System for colored people said: "While nobody seems to do anything about the weather, the South is doing something very definitely about better inter-racial understanding and cooperation. The problems of the South must be solved by the people of the South.

A number of persons have already registered from the Montgomery district. Others desiring to get in for the term must have their applications in before July 5 as registrations will positively close July 6. Persons interested may address their communications to Margaret L. Lewis, 707 First Place, South, Birmingham, Ala., and particulars will be forwarded. The school has been authorized to give tuition, books and other incidentals free. Pause For Thought

More than 600 young men and women this week were graduated from the white high schools in Birmingham, and more than 200 Negro youths have received high school diplomas.

Many of these young people after a brief pause will go on to colleges or enter the fields of business. Some of them will have a long time for thought. Some of them will not go to college and may not find it easy to find jobs. But all of them, it is to be hoped, will pause from their youthful and enthusiastic activities to give thought to this world of which they have become a vital part.

How many new high school graduates have followed seriously the problems of facing the governments the world? None, we hope, has worried too much about these problems. And we feel pretty sure that none has. But young people beginning in the business world and those entering colleges can afford to do a little serious thinking about their government these days—even if it is nothing more than actually developing a healthy curiosity about what makes the wheels turn.

Shamefully enough, too many people from 18 to 80, remain strangely satisfied to let others assume the responsibility for running their government. Too many people have developed no curiosity about "their" government.

In 1928 commencement speakers did not pay much attention to government. For in those days naive successful business men and educators believed that if business operated at full capacity government would get along by itself. Now they know that the problems of business and government cannot be divorced, that one is as important as the other.

Donald Comer Deplores Need To Leave City To Find Work

Addressing 207 mid-term graduates of Industrial High School, reputedly the largest Negro high school in the world, Donald Comer, Birmingham industrialist and member of the Board of Education, Friday night deplored the necessity of many Negroes educated at Birmingham's expense to leave for other cities to find work.

"I am tremendously concerned in bringing industries to Alabama," he said. "We have industries here paying members of your race from 45 to 60 cents per hour. . . . We want more of that."

An impressive program of oratory and music was presented by graduates in an all-student program. Several spirituals and classical selections were sung by a highly-trained choir. Harry Washington, class president, had charge.

Erskine Ramsay, president of the Board of Education, told a large audience that he believed "we have a pretty good chance to get funds to run schools a full nine-month term."

He said Birmingham was educating children at a lower cost per capita than any other city in the United States in the same class (100,000 population), and praised teachers and the administration for keeping students' standards above the national average.

Dr. C. B. Glenn, superintendent of city schools; Mrs. J. A. Dupuy, Board of Education member, and Dr. Marvin A. Franklin, pastor of Highlands Methodist Church, joined in praise of the school and its principal, A. H. Parker.

Second Semester White Institutions Disclose Increase Of 306

There was an increase of 306 students enrolled in the city's white high schools at the end of the first week of the current second semester over the number at the same time last year, according to tabulation released by school authorities Monday. The figures were given as of Feb. 3, 1939, and Feb. 4, 1938.

There was only one white high school showing a decrease. Paul Hayne's enrollment on Feb. 3, this year, was 334, compared with 515 at the end of the first week of the second semester last year, for a decrease of 181 students.

A decrease of 998 in white elementary schools was recorded, figures being 20,378 for this semester and 21,376 for last year's second semester's first week.

For all white schools, high and elementary, the current enrollment was given as 29,949 as compared with last year's 30,641, for a decrease in total enrollment of 692.

Total enrollment for Negro schools, high and elementary for the current semester was given as 18,505 compared with 17,770 at the same time last year for an increase of 735.

With the 692 decrease in all white schools and the 735 increase in Negro units, there is a 43-student net increase for all schools.

What Negroes Are Doing

BY OSCAR W. ADAMS

There has been no greater celebration by the citizens of Birmingham, and especially Negro citizens than the impressive ceremony in honor of Dr. A. H. Parker, of the Industrial High School, held last Sunday in the main auditorium of the school.

People representing every walk of life found their way to the auditorium to give honor to a man who has and does mean so much to the life and security of the Negro people of this municipality. A large delegation from Chicago and other points out of the state took part and witnessed the ceremony.

Dr. Homer P. Cooper, one of the earlier graduates of Industrial High School, and now serving in Provident Hospital, Chicago, delivered the address. Other speakers on the program were Erskine Ramsay, of the Birmingham Board of Education, Dr. C. B. Glenn, superintendent; Dr. Henry M. Edmonds; Mrs. B. H. Hudson, represented the citizens of Birmingham; Miss Ruby Richards, the student body; Miss Marjorie Brown represented the Birmingham teachers. The A Capella Choir rendered appropriate music.

W. B. Johnson, who has been assistant to Dr. Parker, was master of ceremonies.

It was clear in all the expressions that Dr. Parker during the past 50 years has rendered the city of Birmingham an unparalleled and constructive service. It is well that the celebration could be held in the auditorium of the Industrial High School because here was seen the physical monument to his work and worth, and here it is where the Industrial High School spirit radiates to practically every state in the union.

Dr. Parker made a fitting response to the many fine expressions of his work during the past 50 years.

Dr. C. B. Glenn, superintendent of education, announced the name of the school had been changed from Industrial High School to the A. H. Parker High School, and that W. B. Johnson who has served for a number of years as assistant principal of the Industrial High School would be principal of the A. H. Parker High School beginning with the next school term.

PRINCIPAL OF FAMED SCHOOL

Upon the retirement of Dr. A. H. Parker as principal of the Industrial High school (now the A. H. Parker High school), Birmingham, the announcement that he would be succeeded by Prof. W. B. Johnson, assistant principal, met the approval of hundreds of persons who gathered to pay tribute to Dr. Parker on the occasion of his Golden Educational anniversary Sunday, May 7.

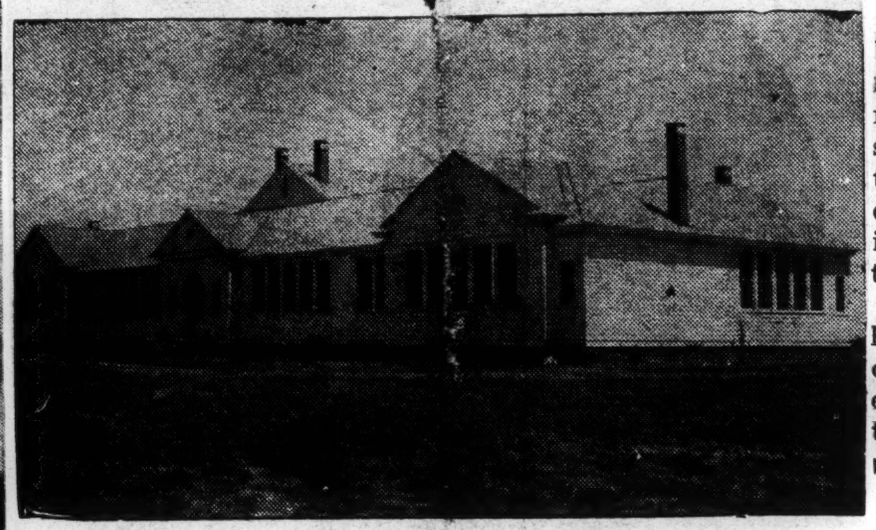
NEW BUILDING FOR COFFEE COUNTY TRAINING SCHOOL



ONLY NEGRO HIGH SCHOOL IN COFFEE COUNTY

In the early years of 1904 and 1905 the community of Negroes living two and one-half miles east of Enterprise, Alabama, on the old Daleville road, began to feel the need of providing facilities for the education of its children,and began a movement to build a school to serve the community.

In the year 1906, under the leadership of S. P. Pryor, presiding elder of the Ozark District of the African Methodist Church, S. U. Clark, A. T. Fleming, C. C. Wilkerson, B. R. Sconiers, Father Fleming, S. Griffin and several other members of the church connection raised enough money (chiefly through solicitation) to purchase 18 acres of land from the Henry Edwards estate to be used for school purposes. The land was laid off in lots and sold in order to raise money to build, in 1907, The Pryor Industrial Institute. The corner stone of the school was laid by Bishop Lynn J. Coppins, and thereafter this community has been known as Coppinsville. School was opened in the fall of 1907.

About that same year the Salem Enterprise Baptist Association appointed a school board to raise funds to build another school in Coppinsville. With B. F. Prestwood as president of the board, W. M. Donald, secretary, S. Tindel, treasurer, and with the help of Bud Brown, Amos Tindel, Henry Saunders, Major Mathews, Mose Adams, J. W. Harper and many other negro Baptists, enough money was raised to erect, in 1909, the Southeast Alabama Industrial Institute on a site purchased from the estates of Major Mathews and Frank Gilley. School opened that fall.

For several years these two schools ran independent of public school funds. Each year it became more and more difficult for the people to support the two schools. The difficulty became so great that in 1918 it was decided best to consolidate the schools and begin a County Training School. This was done by deeding the property of the two schools to the State for school purposes.

School opened in the fall of 1918 as the Coffee County Training School, with E. H. Tindel as principal.

In 1920 the old Pryor Industrial Institute was razed and the material used to construct a vocational agriculture building. In 1923, with public school funds supplemented by funds raised by patrons and friends of the school, a teachers' cottage was built on the campus.

E. H. Tindel was succeeded as principal by J. B. King, (1920-22), J. W. Dobbs, Jr. (1922-26), J. L. Odum (1926-28), Whisington (1928-29), S. T. Wilson (1929-36), A. R. Stickney (1936-38).

In January, 1938, the main building was destroyed by fire. School has continued in the vocational building, teachers' home and two churches.

When school opens in September there will be a beautiful new six-room building with an auditorium to house the only negro high school in Coffee county. The picture above shows the front view of the building. In the rear there is an adequate and modern auditorium.

F. M. Hildreth, local contractor, has superintended the construction of this building, from beginning to end, and this being so it is needless to say that it is as good as could possibly be erected.

Negro High School Principal Appeals For Book Donation

Officials of Lincoln high school, local negro institution, have appealed to the public for contributions of books to build up the school's library.

"Our high school is making progress, but we are seriously handicapped because we do not have adequate books in our library," Gilbert Porter, principal, said.

"No doubt many of our white friends have books in their libraries that are not being used any more.

"Sometimes the thought of a writer in a book will encourage a boy or girl to be a good citizen instead of a convict. If we give our boys and girls good books to read from day to day, no doubt we can expect to find better citizens in our community in the near future."

Porter said books are needed on these subjects: agriculture, home economics, industrial arts, sciences, history, government, economics, sociology, geography, biography, fiction, poetry, drama, music, travel, recreation and etiquette.

Persons who wish to donate books were asked to call Porter at the school, 1092-K.

BTW Students Celebrate As Cafeteria Is Opened

Impressive Ceremonies Held Monday

By LENA LeVINE

Impressive ceremonies Monday morning marked the dedication exercises of the new cafeteria of Booker T. Washington high school.

The program was presided over by Miss Annie Lou Ware. Rev. S. J. Saxton offered prayer.

The main speaker, Mrs. Maurice Abercrombie, was introduced by Principal C. L. Harper.

Mrs. Abercrombie, loud in her praise of the untiring efforts Miss Ware has put forth and the hearty cooperation which has been given by the principal, let fall many vital points relative to the work throughout the city. In dedicating the cafeteria, she intrusted it to the care of the fine corps of teachers and thousands of students, who will have the privilege of assemblying for not only wholesome meals but exercises, which will be educational and cultural.

Responding to the dedicatory address were Clarence Eagleton, student government head, C. C. Gaines, faculty representative, Mrs. Dollie J. Alexander, P-TA president, and Dr. E. G. Bowden, representing Atlanta citizens.

Of special significance was the acceptance of Mrs. P. J. Coggins, who, as one of the first teachers, reviewed the history of the "lunch room" at the school of 1924.

Mr. T. W. Clift and Dr. H. Reid Hunter, assistant superintendents in charge of business and high schools, respectively, made timely remarks, complimenting the faculty and students and pledging their support in obtaining the best possible conveniences and equipment for the youth of Atlanta.

Mr. Clift, commenting upon the agencies, which have been of unusual service spoke commendably of the W. P. A. workers, who had erected to themselves a monument in the building of the cafeteria.

Dr. Hunter stated that his interest has been manifested in the completion of such a structure since 1924, when the school became a reality. He urged the students to learn all they could and take care of the property, which had been placed for their development.

Other platform guests, some who made brief remarks, were Miss Jester, supervisor, who praised the architect for the artistic structure, Mesdames C. L. Harper, L. Brown, Birdie Gaither, L. Lawless, heads of the departments, Col. R. E. Pharrow and others.

Special music for the occasion consisted of a solo by Miss Mattie Witherspoon, who represented the students and Miss V. E. Nichols, who represented the faculty.

Mrs. E. M. Groves, director of choral music at the school, had charge of the music, which was effectively rendered.

CARVER SCHOOL DRAWS ATTENTION

Built By Henry Ford for Negro Education

BY CHRISTINE STEWART

The George Washington Carver Consolidated School near Ways Station is receiving a great deal of attention on the part of education in all sections of the Southeast.

Negro educators are particularly interested because they feel that this will be the first opportunity that the automobile magnate has made a definite attempt to develop a program of education for colored in the distinctly rural communities. They are watching to see just what new ideas of education Mr. Ford will initiate and sponsor. When Mr. Ford was at Georgia State College on an inspection tour last spring he was heard to say that he felt that all of the schools in the rural districts should have the same type of educational program that is carried on at Georgia State College, but of course on a much smaller scale, with changes to suit the different needs of the communities to be served.

A large group of educators and religious and social leaders of Savannah meeting at Bryan Neck Baptist Church visited the school, church, and the people the school is supposed to serve. It was the day for installing the new pastor, Rev. Thomas, who had served during the past year. The Rev. J. A. Wilson, pastor of the First African Baptist Church in Savannah, was the preacher for the occasion. President B. F. Hubert of the Georgia State College was asked to speak. He called attention to the fact that negroes in Bryan county have a great opportunity. Among other things, he said, "Wherever negroes own farms that they know how to appreciate and operate the independent negroes can never find any other business or place where they will be as independent as on the farm. You should teach your children to love country life. This can best be done by setting the right example in and around your homes and then having teachers in your school with sufficient common sense to know that they should love and respect the people in the place where they have an opportunity to earn a decent living and by their example, continue to inspire and encourage the children to build up their own communities."

He called attention to the fact that the George Washington Carver school is concrete evidence of the fact that the community had the interested cooperation of one of the great industrial leaders. He urged them to express their appreciation by taking advantage of every opportunity offered by improving their homes and farms and making life more attractive and worthwhile to their families.

O.K.'S MOVE TO ACQUIRE NEW SCHOOL SITE

Citizens Laud Action

Parents and interested citizens residing in the district which DuSable high school embraces are this week applauding the action of the Chicago Board of Education, James B. McCahey, president, which on last Wednesday approved condemnation proceedings to acquire additional property for the enlargement of the school.

JAMES B. McCAHEY

The board's action coming after a long-waged fight to alleviate the overcrowded condition existing at the southside high schools, clears the way for the razing of real estate lying between 50th and 51st streets, Wabash avenue and State street.

Recommendations that the title of the real estate lying in this area be acquired for school purposes, were approved at a meeting of the board last week, and condemnation proceedings were ordered instituted against the owners of the required property. The board's action, it was reported, followed their refusal to accept proposals for the sale of the property.

School Overcrowded

DuSable high school, constructed in 1934 at a cost of $3,450,000 was only expected to accomodate 2,400 students. Its enrollment has reached and exceeded the 4,000 mark. The school is overcrowded to the point where classes are being held in lunchrooms, store rooms, corridors and anterooms.

Such a condition, it has been pointed out, is not only injurious to the health of students and teachers, but is also harmful to the morals of the school. Such an atmosphere not only makes discipline difficult, but hampers both teaching and learning.

The possibility of the overcrowding condition was seen and predicted by many, when DuSable was erected. The original specifications called for a high school building which would a capacity of 3,400 pupils. Plans for a smaller school were substituted.

Negroes Raise Funds For New School Bus To Transport High School Pupils

Total of $977.75 Reported At County-Wide Meeting, Largely Attended, Sunday Afternoon At Sunbury; H. L. Mitchell Leads the Campaign

The colored people of Gates county for the past month have worked in a united effort to secure funds for purchasing a school bus for transportation of hgih school pupils to Gates Training school, Sunbury. At a meeting held at the training school Sunday afternoon, beginning at 2 o'clock, it was reported that a total of $977.75 had been collected.

The Negroes are asking that the county purchase another school bus, in addition to the one for which they secured funds, which would provide transportation from most parts of the county. The county will not take action on the purchase until the budget for next year is planned.

At the close of the devotionals Sunday afternoon a welcome was given the audience by Professor T. S. Cooper, principal of the Gates Training School, Sunbury. The Rev. H. L. Mitchell, president of the Gates County Education Association, who conducted the campaign, called the roll of teachers in the county after making remarks relative to the campaign. Each teacher responded with more than was allotted.

The president presented Professor H. D. Cooper, principal of the Ahoskie high school, who introduced the speaker of the occasion Wm. R. Johnson, consultant and field agent on Negro work, State Board of Charities and Public Welfare, Raleigh. Mr. Johnson highly complimented the people in the county on their achievement and urged that they give children training in home and educational opportunities in schools so that they may become worthwhile citizens. Throughout his address, he stressed the importance of giving boys training. "Since the men are to become heads of families, they should be trained to master this great task," Johnson said. He also urged the parents to make their homes so that the children will love to stay in them, and have a desire to carry them on when they are gone.

There were many visitors present who gave encouraging remarks during the meeting. Some of them were: Dean S. D. Williams, of the State Teacher's College, Elizabeth City; W. C. Davenport, County Agent, Hertford County, Winton; and H. E. Reid, County Agent, Nansemond County, Suffolk, Virginia. Others who took part on the program were: Rev. S. R. Hill, Rev. I. Benj Pierce, Miss Elreta Melton, Director of Music, Gates Training School; Mrs. L. C. Smith, Gates Training School.

After the final collection, the finance commmittee, Professor T. S. Cooper, treasurer of the Association, P. J. Gatling of Gates, J. A. Jones of Hobbsville, R. S. Cooper, secretary of the Association, Sunbury, Alex Polson of Corapeake, and J. C. Savage of Gatesville made a report that $977.75 was collected during the day. Other contributions that are expected within the next few days bill bring the total above $1,000.

The amount raised by each school in the county is given as follows: The names of individuals making contributions will be in the Gates County Index for next week.

Aerial School, Mrs. L. Williams and Mrs. V. D. Redd, teachers, $53.00; Ballard's School, Miss A. D. Smith, teacher, $27.50; Beautiful White Oak School, Mrs. C. B. What Others Say—

Literacy Moves Ahead

Until the next census is taken in 1940 it will not be possible, of course, to reckon the progress in wiping out illiteracy in North Carolina. It is safe to say, however, that tremendous strides are being made daily in raising the educational status of the whole State. In some districts 100 per cent literacy has been achieved within the last year, and one of them is in our own mountain region.

The initiative in this splendid work has been taken by the Works Progress Administration through adult night classes in vocational training and such related enterprises as home-making opportunities. Thus it is with evident justification that an additional appropriation of $428,000 has been made by the Federal Government for continuing the WPA campaign to stamp out adult illiteracy.

The popular definition of literacy has certain limitations. The literate is defined as a person ten years of age or older who can write in any language. A literate person is not necessarily an educated one. Education is merely the second step in the process of creating a more useful citizen. Yet, with the banishment of illiteracy the icy grip of ignorance is broken. The emphasis put upon such training is therefore most logical.

North Carolina's showing in the statistical record of illiteracy is unfortunately a poor one. Between 1920 and 1930 illiteracy was reduced from 13.1 per cent to an even 10 per cent. Nevertheless, the State still ranks near the bottom for the national average, surpassing only South Carolina, which is first, Louisiana, New Mexico, Mississippi, Alabama and Arizona. All but one of these States are in the South and have large Negro populations. Negro illiteracy exceeds white illiteracy by a wide margin for the whole nation. Yet it is by no means entirely accountable for the standing of the Southern states. The national average of native white illiteracy, for instance, is only 1.5. North Carolina's white illiteracy is 5.7, a figure incidentally twice as high as white illiteracy in Mississippi, which ranks as a State three notches below our own.

Thus it is evident that there is much ground yet to be gained both in the raising of the standards of our white and our negro populations. North Carolina, which has always placed such a high premium upon education, will welcome this additional grant of Federal funds to wipe out the blight of illiteracy, confident that when the census-taker makes his rounds a more literate population will enable us to take renewed pride in our accomplishments.—Asheville Citizen.

Ground Broken For New Negro High School Unit

At a special ground-breaking ceremony last Friday afternoon, the first scoopful of sod was removed from the site of the new Ararat colored high school by Principal Leon Jones, of the Mount Airy colored school, and construction work on the project was formally begun.

Hon. John H. Folger, of Mount Airy, member of the state school commission, acted as master of ceremonies in the absence of Prof. L. B. Pendergraph, who had to be out of town on that day. Mr. Folger spoke to a good-sized crowd of both white and colored people, stressing the past and present need and now the availability of a modern institution for the colored students of this locality.

WPA workmen are busy this week razing the old Salem school on the Ward's Gap highway near where the new colored school will be built, and much of the material in the old structure is being moved and used in the construction of the new building, which will have 8 modern classrooms and sufficient room for the care of all the city's colored student population. An appropriation of $29,273 was granted for the erection of this building, which is expected to be completed in about eight months.

Plans for the building of this new structure were approved by WPA headquarters only after considerable discussion. Surry county is sponsoring the project.

Mount Airy colored students are at present attending school at the elementary unit on Virginia street, which is definitely lacking in room to care for the entire student body. At the present time, the classes of the grade school are held each morning and the high school students attend school during the afternoon. The same faculty is used. It is understood that, upon the completion of the new building, all high school students will be sent there and only the grade school students will attend the Virginia street school here in town.

Negro School Will Be Built Near Mt. Airy

(Special to The Journal)

Mount Airy, May 5.—A new high school for the Negroes of Surry county may be constructed in the immediate future on the White Sulphur Springs road three miles north of Mount Airy.

The plans call for construction of the new school on the site of the Ararat Elementary School for Negroes, which was destroyed by fire some weeks ago.

The proposal for construction of the new Negro high school was offered the Surry county commissioners this week, the plan calling for the tearing down of the old Salem school building on the Ward's Gap road and the removal of the materials to the Ararat site for use in the new structure. The Salem school, a former white elementary unit, is a one-story brick structure.

The Negro high school would be a portion of the Mount Airy city schools system, but present state laws require construction of all school buildings as county projects. Therefore, both the Mount Airy and Surry county school officials are interested in the proposal to use the materials from the Salem building in a WPA project on the Ararat site.

The Surry commissioners, upon hearing the proposal this week, authorized the WPA forces to tear down the Salem building and move the materials to the Aararat site, but nothing definite can be decided until funds are available for architect's drawings of the new Negro high school, making possible an estimate on the cost of the proposed WPA construction project, which would also include the remodeling of the present Mount Airy Negro school as an elementary unit.

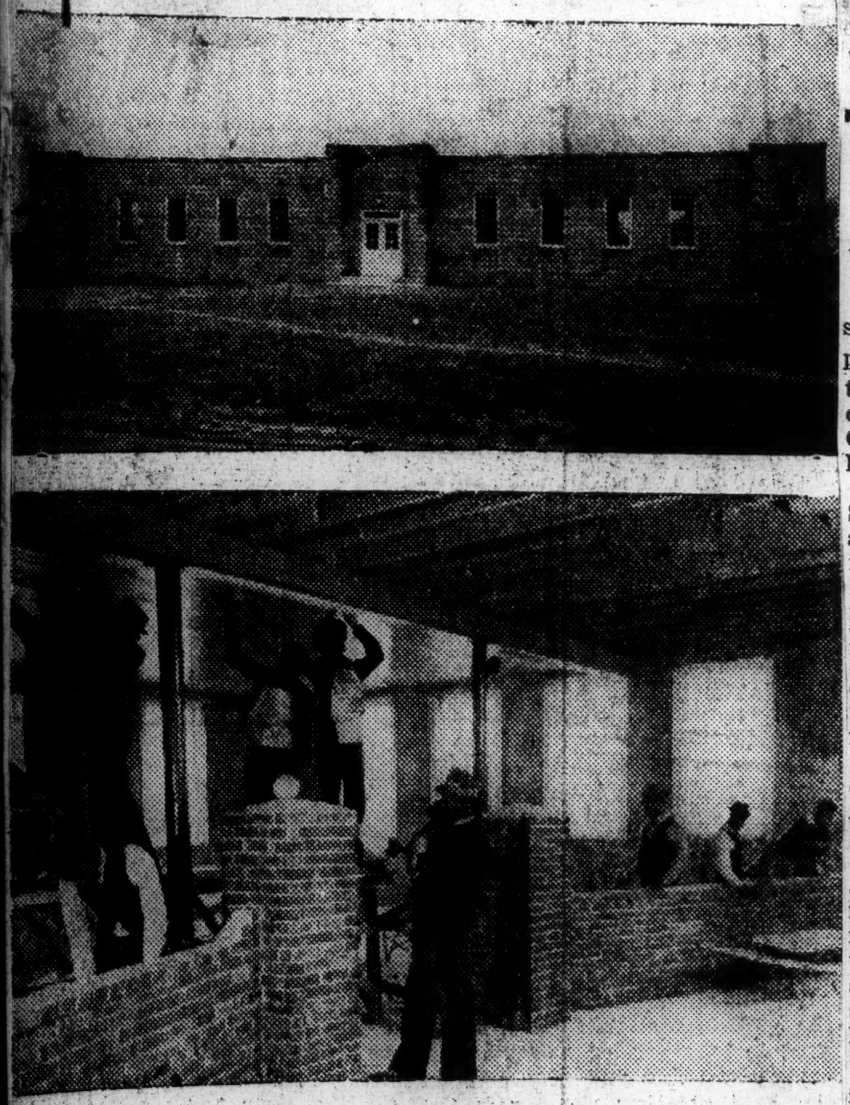
BUILDING TO BE DEDICATED



The Vocational Education Building at the negro high school will be dedicated April 17 at 3 o'clock, the only negro member of the House of Representatives, Arthur W. Mitchell, making the principal address.

Much has been said about the negro vocational building. It was erected during class hours by the high school boys in their vocational trade work. This project has been recognized as the finest work of its kind in the state. The Board of School Trustees is to be commended for the progress that is being made in the negro high school in substituting practical work for the classical subjects taught and never used.

In instituting vocational education in the Washington Negro High School, the Board of School Trustees is two years in advance of the recommendation of Governor Hoey's educational commission in this particular field.

It is hoped that many of the citizens of Washington, both white and colored, will attend the dedication of this building. It is an insporation to anyone to visit the building and to observe the fine work which the negro pupils are doing.

Two Negro High Schools Are Named After Leading Educators

Naming of two rural negro high schools after negro educators who pioneered high school and elementary education in Cumberland county was announced today by County Superintendent A. B. Wilkins.

Cumberland County Training School henceworth will be known as Armstrong high school after its first and only principal, E. A. Armstrong. This to date is the first, oldest and only negro rural high school in Cumberland county. It has been in operation in Eastover township for four years, serving the entire county, and its enrollment has grown from 60 to 418.

In changing the name the board of education recounted that Prof. Armstrong had graduated from the State Normal School in 1922 as valedictorian; graduated from Johnson C. Smith University, magna cum laude in 1926, completing five years work in four years; matriculated for an A. M. degree in administration and superyision of schools at Columbia University; holds a diploma in religious education; and is a member of the governor's, the national and Columbia University's inter-racial commissions. Before coming to the county schools he was a teacher at the E. E. Smith high school in Fayetteville for nine years.

The new negro high school which is being completed in Seventy-First township on the Raeford road was named the Chestnut high school in honor of former Jeannes Fund supervisor, Annie Chestnut. As supervisor she helped promote elementary education from 1916 to 1936 when she resigned to accept a teaching position in this county. Previously she has served as teacher in Fayetteville and Wilson.

She was graduated from the State Normal School in 1901 and since then has spent many summer sessions at Hampton Institute. In this county she served with Superintendents McBryde, Funderburk and Wilkins and helped organize a number of schools, among them seven Rosenwald schools.

According to the new plan all students on the east side of the river next session will attend Armstrong school and all on the west side Chestnut school.

Prof. Armstrong has consented to serve as principal of the Chestnut high school and will attempt to place it on the list of accredited high schools next year. It will carry a four-year course and have six teachers. The two-room elementary school located on the same grounds will be combined with it. Teachers will be P. N. Robinson, Permilla R. Flack, T. J. Ware and two more teachers to be named later to teach home economics and library science.

Prof. J. H. Lewis, who came into this county four years ago, will serve as principal of the Armstrong high school. He graduated from Livingstone college and attended summer school at the North Carolina College for Negroes at Durham. He has served as principal of graded schools at Wade and Manchester. Other members of his faculty will include J. Hollingsworth, Isaac McNatt, M. E. Robinson and two more teachers to be named later.

Johnson Gymnasium-Auditorium Is Dedicated at Exercises

Four thousand persons were present at Booker Washington high school yesterday afternoon at exercises dedicating the newly constructed Johnson gymnasium-auditorium.

The John Work chorus, composed of more than 300 student voices, presented its seventh annual program of Negro spirituals. The program was initiated by a 30-piece band under the direction of Harold June.

The chorus, under the direction of E. V. Collins and B. G. Baskin, rendered well known spirituals according to the arrangements of John Work, R. Nathaniel Dett, Hall Johnson and other famous Negro composers.

The new building was dedicated the "Johnson gymnasium-auditorium" in honor of C. A. Johnson, former principal of Booker Washington school and at present supervisor of Negro schools in Columbia.

The keys to the building were presented by A. C. Flora, city superintendent of education, and were accepted by J. Andrew Simmons, principal, and Margaret Abner for the student body. Charles Pearson, president of the senior student council, was master of ceremonies.

The structure, erected and equipped at a cost of $50,000, was obtained with PWA aid and is receiving additional equipment from the students. The building when used as a gymnasium will seat more than 600 persons and have a large area for basketball, indoor tennis, and other activities. When used as an auditorium the building will accommodate approximately 1,500 persons.

The following is a life sketch of C. A. Johnson as written by George Halcombe, a member of the senior class.

"Many people may know the Professor Johnson of recent years but do not know his past history. He is the son of the late Rev. M. G. Johnson. After his birth in Greenville, his father and mother moved to Columbia, his father having accepted the call to become pastor of one of the most outstanding churches in this city, the Ladson Presbyterian church, at which he remained more than 47 years. When Cornell Alvir Johnson became of school age he attended the old Howard school. His father later sent him to Biddle university, known today as Johnson C. Smith university. After his graduation he accepted his first position to teach in Oxford, N. C. After teaching there one year he came to the Columbia public school system under Principal N. J. Frederick, late attorney of Columbia. At the end of three years he became the principal of a new and modern high school at Marion and Blossom streets known as the Booker Washington school. He served as principal until 1930 when the present A. C. Flora, city superintendent of education, advanced him to the position of supervisor of Negro schools in Columbia. He received his college degree from Biddle university, his master's degree from Columbia university, and did post graduate work at Harvard university. He is a faithful member and elder of the Ladson Presbyterian church of Columbia.

"As students we are proud of him and hope that there will be more like him in our race. The name of the gymnasium-auditorium is not enough to honor this worthy man. We hope that he will continue to do the same kind of work that he is now doing."

Rural Negro High School Discovers Its Community

Macedonia, Blackville Trains Its Pupils Realistically for Lives Most of Them Will Live

To the Editor of The State:

Macedonia high school, Blackville, is trying to discover its immediate community in order to know the problems and meet them through the school. We feel this to be necessary so that the school will not be guilty of what Dr. Carter G. Woodson has called "miseducation of the people." We are planning and building our program under the impelling conviction that we are living in a rapidly changing scene. The school, we feel, must make a shift to meet the demands of a new day. We are shifting the gears economically, consequently, we must shift gears educationally to fit the rising generation in South Carolina.

Macedonia high school has begun, therefore, to fashion a school program around the functional idea in education. We understand a "functional education" to be one that recognizes the needs of the particular area in which it seeks expression. For example, we are located in a section of South Carolina that is exclusively agricultural; we are trying, as a result of the recognition of this fact, to meet the needs of a rural people. Our watchword is "Educating to Live in the Blackville Community." We have realized that the Blackville community and Barnwell county are exclusively agricultural. We have come to the conclusion that the 450 students we have enrolled will, in the main, do two types of work. Our students will work as farmers and domestic workers. We are shaping our program to meet the need of these two occupations. Thus our functional education program is centered around these two occupations in which Negros are engaged in our community, and state, too, for that matter. We want the school to produce intelligent, well trained men and women who can meet the demands of a new day in the occupational realm.

To make the school and the community conscious of the practical emphasis in carrying out a functional education, we had as a theme for 1938-1939: "Live-at-Home."

The entire program for the session was centered around this functional community theme. In following this theme for the year, we can truthfully say that we had a very definite purpose for the year. The unit or project activity of the first five grades was definitely and pointedly centered about the theme. The first grade had the home as a unit of study; the second grade had the garden as a unit of study, the class planted a garden on the school grounds in which they grew a variety of vegetables and they also had several classroom hotbeds; the third grade had poultry as a unit of study, the class set a hen and hatched some chicks and as a result one little boy in particular is earnestly raising chickens this summer; the fourth and fifth grades had flowers as a unit of study, the room was beautifully decorated with their flowers. The purpose was to teach the practical lessons of flower gardening and beautification. To further give the entire school the practical lesson of beautification, each class had a beautification plot on the campus. These class beautification plots added much to the attractiveness of the campus during winter and spring.

In furtherance of the idea of discovering the community so that the school might adequately meet the needs of the community, the senior class made a "Live-at-Home" survey of the community and the county. The immediate aim of this survey was to see to what extent the Negros were carrying out the "Live-at-Home" idea in our immediate community and county. The ultimate aim is to fashion the school program so that there may be some remedies forthcoming to help build a more attractive rural life. The commencement program of the seniors was given to a revelation of the facts discovered in the survey. The topic came under following captions: "Live-at-Home and the Health of the Negro"; "Live-at-Home and the Purchasing Power of the Negro"; "Economic Problem Number One and the Negro"; "Is the Negro Living-at-Home in Barnwell County?"; and, an original poem, entitled: "Live-at-Home." The seniors featured a live-at-home dinner. This dinner was prepared cooperatively, each person bringing the things he had raised at home to contribute to the menu.

In continuation of the idea of a functional education, our school did a little pioneering by offering home economics to the boys, with special emphasis upon cooking and its related activities. The boys made some tasty biscuits and cakes. The boys were also taken through the rounds of social etiquet. The girls were also given a course in agriculture for the first time. In this phase of our new program special emphasis was placed upon livestock, particularly chickens and some gardening. Our hope is that the people of the community will become livestock-conscious, that they will carry out the "Live-at-Home" idea and thereby make rural life more appealing and satisfying.

The senior class selected two farmers in the community and county who, they thought, had done the best job in carrying out the "Live-at-Home" idea and these two farmers were given awards of achievement. The two farmers selected for these awards were D. L. Lee of our community and Handy Milligan for the county at large. The latter revealed the startling fact that he had not bought any lard, meat or flour in 26 years. These men are progressive examples of our educational gospel in our new set-up. May their tribe increase.

Prizes were given to the two women in our community doing the best jobs of yard beautification.

Our school is discovering its rural community; it is trying to meet the needs. The school has answered with a functional education. We want to make rural life attractive. We want to make rural life secure. We want to make rural life healthy. To do these things the school is stressing the "Live-at-Home" idea as the core of a functional education. To "Live-at-Home" the people must raise more hogs, cows, chickens, and have green vegetables the year round. When they do these things, they will be strong, healthy, sturdy citizens of our community, count, state and nation. They will not be blown hither and yon by the winds of false doctrines. They will need no relief, for they will have social security.

8th Grade Exercises Held at Burt High Thursday Night

During interesting ceremonies under the direction of Susie A. Brown, Jeanes Supervisor, forty-six rural Montgomery County colored elementary pupils were awarded eighth grade certificates at Burt High School Thursday night.

Dr. Robert T. Burt, prominent colored physician for whom the school was named, presided during the program, and Prof. H. L. Allison, principal of the city schools passed out the certificates.

The program was featured by musical numbers, including the singing of "Trees" by James Bell, teacher at Haynes School, during which one of the pupils sketched a tree on the blackboard.

Prizes were awarded to Olis Lee Butler, of Walnut Grove, and Ida Ogan, New Providence, who have been adjudged the first and second best colored elementary school spellers in Montgomery County. They were the winners during a contest held in March.

Blue Ribbons in the annual county-wide health and sanitation program were also awarded to six colored schools, including Hampton Station, Rocky Hill, Pisgah, Kennedy, Ransom and Griffey. All of the colored pupils in the county will be invited to take part in an all-day Blue Ribbon program which will be held Saturday. It will be featured by a parade beginning at Burt High School on East Franklin at 9 o'clock, led by the new school band. The pupils will march to the Public Square and will return to the Burt playground where a field meet will be held.

The value of sound thinking was emphasized upon the pupils by Prof. Allison in presenting the certificates. He urged them to learn to do some one thing well and to continue their education at least through high school. They should always continue their love for music—the principal talent for which the colored race is best known—he declared.

The list of eighth grade graduates and the school they attended, includes: Bladen—Flora Esta B. Bowens, Phillip Thomas Bowens. Cabir Row—Dora Mae Boyd. Elliott—Richard Lee Hutchens. VIRGINIA

Amelia Boasts One of Best Rural High School Plants

Special to Journal and Guide

AMELIA COURTHOUSE, Va.—One of the best rural high school plants in the State of Virginia, both from the view-point of physical facilities and curriculum, is located here.

The Russell Grove High school, of which Prof. W. A. Brown is principal, is composed of three buildings, a modernly-constructed brick four-room steam-heated administration building which is flanked on one side by a two-room agriculture shop, and on the other by a four-room home economics practice cottage.

Of particular interest is the fact that the administration building has an auditorium with a seating capacity of 250, a science laboratory, fully-equipped for the teaching of biology, general science, and chemistry. The library contains 1,110 volumes and is operated on the Dewey decimal plan.

FREE-LUNCH CAFETERIA

The health of the pupils is preserved through the operation of a free-lunch cafeteria in which each pupil is weighed at the beginning of the term. Then throughout the entire session, the pupil is served free, daily a bowl of hot, nourishing soup or beans. Funds for the maintenance of the hot lunch project are secured from proceeds from entertainments, and contributions from the PTA and interested patrons.

The food is prepared and served by four NYA out-of-school enrollees who, incidentally, are graduates of this school. With an enrollment of 136 students, the school's curriculum is confined strictly to courses of high school level, and is recognized by the State Department of Education.

Principal Brown and five teachers, Misses Florence N. Dennis, Dorothy Lewis, and Margaret Puryear, Messrs. H. N. Randolph and Hugh Earley, are all graduates of leading colleges in the state.

In its three years of operation as a four-year high school, Russell Grove has graduated 88 students, 22 of whom are matriculating in colleges of Virginia and North Carolina. For three consecutive years the Parent-Teacher Association has been awarded first place for percentage membership in the Virginia Branch of the National Congress of Colored Parents and Teachers.

EDUCATIONAL PROJECT FOR NEGROES THAT DESERVES NOTICE

E. P. Wallace, supervisor of adult education for Negroes calls the attention of The Advertiser to a remarkable performance in a field that hitherto has gone unnoticed. Prof. Wallace in a note to The Advertiser says: "I deem this to be one of the basic projects (of WPA). It has helped to reduce illiteracy in the state, given hundreds of people a new lease on life, revamped the destiny of men and women, thus making the city, county and state a safer place for democracy and people to live. If this means anything to a people, I think the leading citizens of the city and state should be informed of it."

We quite agree.

Accompanying Supervisor Wallace's letter is the following factual statement which we are glad to commend to all Alabamians and to adapt as an editorial by The Advertiser:

"The Montgomery Adult Schools, operating in the city and county, sponsored by the local and State Department of Education, financed by the Works Projects Administration have done much toward making it better for the underprivileged boy and girl, man and woman from an educational standpoint. These schools are a part of the gigantic unemployment program of the Federal Government. Thousands of teachers throughout the nation have been rehabilitated through this program, and thousands and thousands of individuals have been given a new lease on life, due to having attended the WPA classes for adults.

"In Montgomery, the classes are operating on an accredited basis. This is due to the fact that up until the school term of 1937-38, there was no public high school in this section for Negroes. The Negro youth had either to pay the quarterly fee at the State College, or be contented with a junior high education. When the depression came, hundreds of youths were deprived of any kind of chance of obtaining a high school education and it was from this standpoint, that Mr. Judson Snead State Director, and Prof. M. H. Griffin, then State Supervisor for Negroes with the local supervisor, got permission to operate a special High School for Negroes at the State Teachers College. The teachers were paid by the Federal Government, thus the students were admitted to their first free high school. These schools were put in operation here in October, 1934.

"When Dr. C. M. Dannelly came to Montgomery as Superintendent of Schools, he soon learned of the program and being pleased with what he found in operation, he gave it his support and the graduates from the Junior High Department received their first certificates at his approval and from the signature of he and Mr. Snead.

"The enrollment for the WPA classes year by year: 1935, 1,361; 1936, 741; 1937, 640; 1937, 983, and 1939, 1,176. Total number enrolled for the first year period, 4,901. Number taught to read and write year by year: 1934-35, 379; 1935-36, 142; 1936-37, 203; 1937-38, 252, and 1938-39, 452. Total, 1,427. Classes in homemaking have been another feature of the educational project. Stress has been placed on care for the home in which the student lives. Enrollment of these classes over the five-year period, 161. Completed course and received certificates, 57. Others having left before completion and a large percentage still studying. Ninety-five per cent of those receiving certificates are actively engaged. Eighty per cent are employed locally in private homes, 8 per cent are doing cafe or cafeteria work, and 7 per cent are in other cities and states. The United States Reemployment Services placed 5 of our graduates in other states.

"The record in the supervisor's office shows that 501 persons have studied in the Special Senior High School over the period of operation. One hundred and thirty-six of these have received their high school diplomas; 30 have completed junior college; 7 are pursuing their B. S. degree and 96 are in the high school graduating classes of the city, State Teachers College, Alabama; A. and M. College, Jacksonville, Florida, and other points. These student received their start through the classes operated by the WPA sponsored by the Department of Education "Classes in Vocational and Parent Education have been taught. Many useful garments have been made from old discarded articles around the home. The homes have been improved and living conditions are improved almost 90 per cent. These classes are extra features and serve a much needed purpose.

"Since the beginning of the program in 1934, forty-five teachers have been given employment on this program, 92 per cent of these teachers were without validated certificates. After a few months of work and study at the college, their certificates were revived and at least 78 per cent of them are teaching now in the public schools of the state.

Farm Expert Discusses Illiteracy Among Rural Dwellers In Alabama

Black Newspaper

TUSKEGEE INSTITUTE, Ala., Nov.—(ANP)—J. R. Otis, director of agriculture at Tuskegee institute, discussed recently the subject, "Education—The Basis of Social and Economic Security of an Improved Rural Life." He used Alabama as a typical state for the purpose of establishing the proper approach to improvement of rural life. He said:

"The conclusion has been reached that education must be the basis of social and economic security. The vast majority of rural communities in the South are not socially and economically secure ....The U. S. Census for the years 1920-30 shows the percent of illiteracy of Negroes to be four to nine times as high as for whites.

"In Alabama, in 1930, 7 percent of the native white population were illiterate, while 26.2 percent of Negroes were so classified. According to the census, one who can read and write is literate. This is an unfortunate criterion. Ability to write one's own name may or may not indicate his ability to manage a farm sucessfully. One index to this difference in percentage of illiteracy in white and colored is the length of the school term.....In Alabama the school term for whites is one month longer than for colored.

"Some writers and leaders have referred to the constant loss of much of the best brain of the South as a result of migration to other sections where opportunities for expression are greater and pay for their service is more commensurate with their training. While this is not true to the same extent with Negroes, too often the best teachers are not had because the teaching profession pays so little. In education, like everything else, you get what you pay for.....little pay poor teachers.

"The payment for high school and elementary teachers' salaries in all public schools in Alabama in 1928-29, was $11,031,003 for white; $1,482,899 for colored. In 1929-30, $12,513,902 for whites; $1,524,019 for colored.....While the education of white people is superior to that of colored, much remains to be done to educate whites to the point where they will subscribe to equal educational opportunities for all children of the State, regardless of race."

"The enrollment for the WPA classes year by year: 1935, 1,361; 1936, 741; 1937, 640; 1937, 983, and 1939, 1,176. Total number enrolled for the first year period, 4,901. Number taught to read and write year by year: 1934-35, 379; 1935-36, 142; 1936-37, 203; 1937-38, 252, and 1938-39, 452. Total, 1,427. Classes in homemaking have been another feature of the educational project. Stress has been placed on care for the home in which the student lives. Enrollment of these classes over the five-year period, 161. Completed course and received certificates, 57. Others having left before completion and a large percentage still studying. Ninety-five per cent of those receiving certificates are actively engaged. Eighty per cent are employed locally in private homes, 8 per cent are doing cafe or cafeteria work, and 7 per cent are in other cities and states. The United States Reemployment Services placed 5 of our graduates in other states.

"The record in the supervisor's office shows that 501 persons have studied in the Special Senior High School over the period of operation. One hundred and thirty-six of these have received their high school diplomas; 30 have completed junior college; 7 are pursuing their B. S. degree and 96 are in the high school graduating classes of the city, State Teachers College, Alabama; A. and M. College, Jacksonville, Florida, and other points. These student received their start through the classes operated by the WPA, sponsored by the Department of Education.

"Classes in Vocational and Parent Education have been taught. Many useful garments have been made from old discarded articles around the home. The homes have been improved and living conditions are improved almost 90 per cent. These classes are extra features and serve a much needed purpose.

"Since the beginning of the program in 1934, forty-five teachers have been given employment on this program, 92 per cent of these teachers were without validated certificates. After a few months of work and study at the college, their certificates were revived and at least 78 per cent of them are teaching now in the public schools of the state.

DID YOU Ever Stop TO THINK?

THAT—In the eradication of illiteracy in South Carolina, it is interesting to note that out of 156,065 illiterate colored persons as shown by the 1930 census, the Works Progress Administration has, since January 1, 1936, taught fifteen per cent or approximately 23,000 colored persons to read and write, it was pointed out by the State Works Progress Administrator Lawrence M. Pinckney.

WPA Schools Emphasize Americanism

Adult Students Taking Training Near 500,000

WASHINGTON, D. C.—Rallies, roundups, inspection days, commendatory exercises, and regular old-fashioned commencements are only a few of the many types of recognition activities conducted by the Negro WPA Education classes at school-closing time as the total number of Negro adults taught in the WPA program since 1933 nears the 500,000 mark.

"These exercises," said James A. Atkins, specialist in Negro education of the Work Projects Administration, "maintain the best tradition of American public schools. In them there is the same use of democratic methods practiced in the classroom activities of the WPA education program."

In a commencement ceremony of the night schools of Knoxville, Tennessee, there were the usual numbers in instrumental and choral music, the commencement address, granting of diplomas, certificates and awards. Mrs. Lula Lacey Drake, supervisor of Negro adult education, presided.

One of a series of round-ups held in Savannah, Georgia, was conducted at the St. Phillips A. M. E. Church. More than thirty teachers, 1200 students, and 500 friends of the Program, many State and local WPA officials participated. Dean Mohr, field supervisor, was in charge.

Other exercises were held at Little Rock, Ark., Jacksonville, Fla., Louisville, Ky., and Dayton, Ohio.

The total number of Negro adults to receive this type of training undertaken by the WPA is approaching a half million.

The largest number of those so benefited live in the tobacco regions of Virginia and North Carolina and the cotton country of the deep South, stretching from South Carolina to Arkansas and Texas.

ONE-FOURTH OF BIRMINGHAM WORKERS UNEMPLOYED

BIRMINGHAM, Ala.—A WPA survey of the labor market in Birmingham found 26 per cent of the city's employable persons unemployed in private jobs and fewer than one-fourth of those on Federal work projects, Colonel F. C. Harrington, Work Projects Commissioner, announced recently. This and similar surveys in San Francisco, Toledo and New Bedford, Mass., were conducted to determine the extent of unemployment in various sections and the proportion of the unemployed who were working on government projects.

It was found in San Francisco that 20 per cent of the employables were without work and in Toledo 28 per cent. New Bedford figures have not been completed.

American Ideals Emphasized At Negro Adult Education Classes

WASHINGTON, D. C.—Rallies, roundups, inspection days, commendatory exercises, and regular old-fashioned commencements are only a few of the many types of recognition activities conducted by the Negro WPA Education classes at school-closing time as the total number of Negro adults taught in the WPA Program since 1933 nears the 500,000 mark.

"These exercises," said James A. Atkins, specialist in Negro education of the Work Projects Administration, "maintain the best tradition of American public schools. In them there is the same use of democratic methods practiced in the classroom activities of the WPA Education Program. All the students, young and old, teachers and officials of the WPA Education Program, members of the Boards of Education that sponsor the programs, and the spectators—everybody has a part to play. Sometimes it is an assigned part, and sometimes a voluntary one. As a result, public interest in educational activities on the newest educational front is being stimulated."

In a commencement ceremony of the night schools of Knoxville, Tennessee, conducted jointly by the public schools and the WPA, at the Green Junior High School, there were the usual numbers in instrumental and choral music, the commencement address, granting of diplomas, certificates and awards; and in addition the added feature: "Echoes of the Year,' in which both the audience and the members of the Board of Education participated in a testimonial of appreciation for the great service which the WPA Education Program has been to the community. Mrs. Lula Lacey Drake, Supervisor of Negro Adult Education, presided.

One of a series of roundups held in Savannah, Ga., was conducted at the St. Philip's A. M. E. Church. More than thirty teachers, 1200 students, and 500 friends of the Program, many State and local WPA officials participated. Among the prominent persons from the county who took part were Prof. [illegible] F. Hubert, President of Georgia State College, and the Rev. J. S. Buskins, pastor of the church. Dean Mohr, Field Supervisor, was in charge.

Other exercises of this type included the inspection day of the WPA classes of the Negro Adult School, Little Rock, Arkansas, in which the Negro ministry of the city cooperated with students and teachers in conducting the program, while George S. Washington presided; the commendatory exercises of the schools of Jacksonville, Florida, under the direction of State Supervisor of Negro Adult Education, Mrs. Thelma H. Livingston; the regular Night High School Commencement of Louisville, Ky., under the direction of Lyle Hawkins, Area Supervisor of Negro Education for Kentucky; and the WPA Adult School commencement of Dayton, O., under the leadership of William M. Gillespie, assisted by the Adult Students' Council. At the Dayton Commencement two hundred students received certificates. State Superintendent of Instruction, E. N. Dietrich, State WPA Supervisor, George R. Bryant, and other State and local educators participated in this program.

Most of the students whose progress is being recognized have advanced from the level of total illiteracy to the point where they can perform the simpler tasks in foundational learning, such as a signing their own names, writing a simple letter, filling in a money order blank, and doing simple figuring. The total number of Negro adults to receive this type of training undertaken by the WPA is approaching half a million. The largest number of these so benefitted live in the tobacco regions of Virginia and North Carolina and the cotton country of the deep South, stretching from South Carolina to Arkansas and Texas. Great progress has also been made in North Carolina, Mississippi and Louisiana.

ADULT EDUCATION IS THIS YEAR'S THEME

President Holmes Urges Lifting of Cultural Level

Leaders of education, church and fraternal organizations were urged to work to raise the cultural level of the race on Tuesday by Dr. Dwight O. W. Holmes, president of Morgan College, Baltimore, before the seventeenth annual conference of land grant college presidents which was held at Howard University from Monday until Wednesday.

The theme of the conference was "Adult Education and the Negro Land Grant Colleges."

Dr. Holmes, formerly dean of the graduate school at Howard University, pointed out that with a majority of colored people located in the South where segregation and discrimination are rampant, the opportunity for increasing the cultural level of the Negro is extremely limited.

"The school," Dr. Holmes stated, "is about the only source left to provide culture and even here the curriculums have been turning away from culture to emphasize utilitarian education."

He also brought to the attention of the conference the fact that the schools can do much good by having extension courses, adding that there should be more provision made in regard to libraries for colored people. "We should promote more concerts, lectures and plays when and wherever possible," he said.

The conference was divided into two sessions, morning and afternoon. President John W. Davis, West Virginia State College presided over the first session held 10 a.m., on Monday.

Dr. Walter H. Gaumnitz, senior specialist, rural education problems, gave brief remarks concerning adult education needs in rural areas.

Following Dr. Gaumnitz George Goodman, executive secretary, Washington Urban League, addressed the conference in respect to adult education needs of Negroes in urban areas.

Urges Improved Homelife

Concluding the first morning session, Mrs. E. V. Hunter, head of the department of home economics, Virginia State College, expressed views on the need of adult education for improved homelife.

President Sherman D. Scruggs, of Lincoln University, Jefferson City, Mo. presided over the afternoon sessions of the conference.

Five illiteracy schools have been opened up in the county recently, and are doing splendid work among the negroes. These schools are being operated at night and are being well attended. Over a hundred have already enrolled.

Clay County has about 437 illiterates, about 15 are whites. The W. P. A. will pay the teacher and it is their program to stamp out all illiteracy in the county by January 1, 1940, when the U. S. census will be taken.

Decatur County Plans Drive Against Illiteracy

Decatur County will begin its Adult Illiteracy Program immediately according to announcement by Andrew Avery. The allotment of teachers under the Works Progress Administration has been increased. Arrangements have been made for County Welfare Workers to make investigation of applicants for teaching positions. Teachers will be assigned promptly after they have been approved. The illiteracy program will not require you to have a regular teachers certificate. You should hold either a high school diploma or have sufficient training and experience to successfully teach people who cannot read and write and other under-privileged adults. The chief requirement is that, in the local superintendent's judgment, you can reach and serve the people whom you teach.

All high school graduates interested in this work and any other former teacher or other person qualified for this work should make application to the Superintendent's office immediately, and all applicants should apply to the Department of Public Welfare not later than Saturday morning, January 7, for certification.

According to 1930 census report there are 195 whites and 878 negroes of Decatur County who can not read and write. The plan is to eradicate illiteracy in Georgia before January 1, 1940. Public school teachers will cooperate with WPA teachers in a statewide program.

Berrien Educates Adults

NASHVILLE, Ga., Feb. 4.—Adult education is showing signs of progress in Berrien County, according to County Superintendent R. A. Stallings. Thirty-five white public school teachers and ten negro teachers are now conducting classes, with a total enrollment of around seventy adult illiterates. Mr. Stallings stated that there are 700 adult illiterates in Berrien.

Negro Education Classes Planned

Monday night, February 27, classes will be organized for the teaching of adult Negroes who wish to learn to read and write, J. O. Allen, school superintendent, said. There are 769 adult Negroes in Albany who cannot read or write. Of these 21.97 per cent are between the ages of 31 and 40. The work will be concentrated on this group since it is believed that persons of this age will profit most by attending school.

Classes will be held twice a week at the following schools: Madison high school, Mercer street school, Monroe street school, Tift avenue school. Negro teachers of the city will be in charge under the supervision of Professor M. L. Heard. There will be no charge for attending these classes, the Negro teachers being willing to contribute their time and services in the interest of their fellows and of the community.

FACT FINDING COMMITTEE

One of the remarkable educational movements in the United States is the work of Josephine Wilkins through her unique Georgia Fact Finding Committee. Beginning at scratch with a big idea and no money, she has collected the brains, the prestige, the speaking ability, and the writing talents of socially minded Georgians, brewed them in the crucible of her own organizational genius, and brought forth an attack on state problems recognized for its sincerity and disinterestedness.

An insight as to her carefulness in avoiding entanglements of a political nature may be gained from the following anecdote: A prominent South Georgia legislator invited her to dinner. When the check was presented it ran into three figures as distinguished from the usual twenty-five or fifty cent lunch. The legislator, all courtliness and dignity, got the surprise of his life when she insisted on paying and did pay for her half of the check.

"STEP-FORWARD" PROGRAM

Just about anything that Albany undertakes is news, because its undertakings do not wind up in the usual cemetery. Albany schools are as good as any. Here we do not have the usual and needless turnover of teachers that many systems have. Here there is a fire department that has continuously attracted national attention. Here there has never been a lynching. Here there is no problem of intolerance. A rabbi is one of their most prominent citizens. A colored college professor is an orator of renown with both races. Its recreational facilities are unsurpassed.

But all this is not of particular interest at the moment. What is of real note is the fact that its citizens are not satisfied. They have organized for themselves a "Step-Forward" program in which all forces are united to make Albany even greater: Education and Business have joined hands. This is of particular interest to the Better Education for Georgia Movement because we are attempting to do on a statewides scale that which Albany is doing locally. We need a "Step-Forward" spirit in every citizen.

EDUCATION AND BUSINESS

The highly complicated nature of business today makes education vital to its existence. There was a time when all work was manual and a few men could direct the energies of thousands in the building of an Egyptian pyramid, the tilling of an ancient estate, or the construction of a Chinese Wall. The need for education was the need of a few—and business was only slightly hampered by the ignorance of common people like ourselves.

Today, even the most simple business enterprise must be based on people who can read and write well, who can figure well, and who have been taught all or most of the knowledge that is needed to "run the business." Business can not handle this education. It takes six months to teach an illiterate to write a simple letter, and by that time there would be no business. It takes education to teach a person to understand an advertisement—and business can not educate its consumers. No, the profits of business are inextricably interwoven with the results of education. The business of government in this country is dependent on an educated citizenry. And so they must go, hand in hand—Business, Education and Democracy. He who strikes at one, strikes at all three.

The new Education in Georgia is undertaking to bear its part of the responsibilitv in solving whatever problem, social, economic, and industrial, affects the state, believing that all problems are educational problems.

"Aliens barred from WPA employment by congressional action and illiterates are being invited to enroll in citizenship classes conducted by the adult education division of the Works Progress Administration," Charles E. Miner, state administrator, said this week.

"There are 9,839 former WPA workers in Illinois who failed to comply with the full citizenship requirement of the new law," he said. "And through our employment division their names are being furnished the adult education supervisors in the districts and arrangements are being made to have them join a citizenship class in their locality.

"A drive to enroll illiterates in these citizenship classes is also under way as part of a concerted effort to raise the literacy standard of Illinois before the 1940 census," Mr. Miner said.

"The last U. S. census showed there were 153,507 illiterates in the state. Of this number 28,284 were native white, 108,984 were foreign-born white, and 10,044 were colored. The administration has pledged itself to elminate this condition by 1940 if possible, and by reducing this large number of unparticipating citizens and non-citizens, raise the standards of living. The census figures indicate that less than one percent of the non-citizens in Illinois were employed on WPA projects."

BATON ROUGE, La., June 15—Sixteen hundred adults received certificates showing they had learned to read and write under WPA teachers at exercises held in Mansfield, La., at the Parish Training school Sunday afternoon. J. S. Clark, president emeritus of Southern University and M. S. Robertson, director of Adult Education of Louisiana, were the principal speakers. O. K. Shows, superintendent of the DeSoto Parish schools presented the certificates.

J. S. Jones, assistant state supervisor, and E. M. Dyson, area supervisor, were in charge.

ADULT EDUCATION AMONG NEGROES OF PARISH SHOWS MUCH INTEREST

1550 Certificates on Reading and Writing Will Be Issued Here On June 11

The adult education classes that have been operating in DeSoto parish for approximately fourteen months, teaching illiterates how to write their names and home addresses, are holding graduation exercises Sunday, June 11, 1939, at 3 p. m. at the DeSoto Parish Training School, Mansfield.

DeSoto parish is blighted with 2750 of Louisiana's 219,000 illiterates, according to school Census and most of these in DeSoto are negroes, but considerable work has been done toward illiteracy in this parish through the Adult Education, a program which is in harmony with both Federal and state educational work. State superintendent T. H. Harris is striving to eradicate illiteracy before the Federal census is taken in 1940.

E. M. Dyson, assistant supervisor for the negro adult education program in DeSoto, is planning to issue 1550 certificates at the exercises to be held June 11 as an indication that these have been removed from the list of illiterates in this parish. This shows that more than one-half of the negro illiterates of this parish have been taught to read and write.

Participating in the program on June 11 will be a number of prominent men, all of whom are interested in the negro work in this state including Dr. M. S. Robertson, director adult educational program of Louisiana; Dr. J. S. Clark, president emeritus, Southern university; Prof. J. S. Jones, assistant state supervisor of adult education, the latter having charge of the program for the day.

There has been considerable support given this program by all the educational agencies of the parish, and much interest has been manifest, and the citizens, both white and colored, are invited to attend the exercises on June 11.

LOUISIANA

Disparity In Education For Race And Whites Greatest In Louisiana

NEW ORLEANS, Nov. 3—Topping several major objectives with an outline to "find out how many illiterates there are in New Orleans and put a book, pencil and tablet in their hands," WPA supervisors from all over Louisiana held a conference here last week.

Realization disclosed through illiteracy statistics released by the state board of education gave impetus to this meet. Discussions were varied to find ways and means of getting all illiterates enrolled, to enlist the aid of all clubs, civic, fraternal organizations, interdenominational churches and Race leaders and to get behind the program with the spirit of a crusader.

A review of WPA educational accomplishment was given, and conclusive evidence shown that great gain had been made, particularly in the rural areas and, generally, in the urban centers.

Admittance that Louisiana stands above only one state in the nation in illiteracy percentage and that the disparity between white and Race education is greater than any where else led the supervisors to a discussion of placing special emphasis upon the "urgent need for something to be done in this direction."

Several months ago, statements from state educational circles charged that funds allotted for Race education had been diverted for "white" usage.

This accusation was not made in reference to WPA educational circles but it was hinted that special efforts must be resorted to in order that WPA education will not suffer the same illicit practice.

The conference was headed by Director M. S. Robertson and Assistant State Supervisor J. S. Jones of Southern university.

WHITE GIRL'S IGNORANCE AMAZES MISSISSIPPIANS

CLARKSDALE, Miss. (ANP)—Colored residents here were frankly amazed as they read of the backwardness of the white Mississippi girl, Alma Mardis, who last week visited Memphis and after exhausting her slender means was taken penniless to Juvenile court for temporary aid. The 16-year-old girl told officials she had never heard a radio, seen an electric light, talked over a telephone or been higher than the second floor of a building.

She didn't know Franklin D. Roosevelt was president, had never heard of Hitler nor Mussolini, was unaware of the meaning of Easter or the Christmas tree, had never tasted an ice cream cone nor attended a movie. But, she told the court officials, she could pick 150 pounds of cotton a day and had cut two cords of wood for $8 to defray expense of her trip to Memphis.

"We know," said County Agent Jones here, "that many of Mississippi's white residents, share-croppers and tenants are worse off than any of our colored wage hands, but you would have a hard time finding a Negro worker or a member of his family in as pitiful a condition as that of this lowly white girl."

STAMPING OUT ILLITERACY

The WPA adult education program in Mississippi started the month of April with 48,601 adults enrolled. Of this number 18,515 were in classes where they are learning to read and write.

From this it would seem that the war on adult illiteracy in this state is making good headway, and the WPA is entitled to credit for a work well worth while.

The Federal census of 1930 showed approximately 200,000 adult illiterates in our state, or about 10 per cent of our population. That means people who could not even read the headlines in a newspaper or traffic signs along the highways.

Since the WPA program more than 50,000 persons have been taught to read and write and the campaign has reached a point where its directors are asking the help of school teachers, church workers, Parent-Teacher associations and other civic bodies to make a complete job of stamping out illiteracy before the 1940 census is taken. It can and should be done, but it will require a lot of co-operation.

This WPA instruction is not confined to reading and writing alone. It extends to the fundamentals of life, trying to teach the illiterates things that will benefit them socially and economically.

Some very fine work has been done by the colored teachers among their race in matters of gardening and health. One colored teacher in Tallahatchie county taught a unit of health. She invited the county health officer and nurse to visit her class where they had a discussion on the social diseases. Later arrangements were made with the county health officer to give the Wasserman test to the people in the class. As a result, 96 people went to the county health office one Saturday for this examination. Approximately half of the tests were positive. Practically all who had a positive test have later received treatment.

One colored teacher in Hinds county got 22 homes screened last spring as a result of his class in health. Another colored teacher in Hinds county got 19 homes screened. Many negro families are now making a year-round garden as a result of attending an adult class.

The work is of such enduring character that it should be given the hearty support of all citizens.

WPA Adult Education Aids N. J. Illiterates

NEWARK, N. J. — Over 8,000 pupils in 19 units under 116 teachers are at present enrolled in WPA Adult Education classes in New Jersey. Benjamin F. Seldon, who heads the New Jersey adult work and teachers have thrown the full weight of their knowledge and experience with notable success against many acute problems confronting illiterate citizens. A steady growth in attendance has marked the progress of this program since 1936.

Twenty five subjects are taught by the WPA teachers. These subjects range from Americanization to power machine operation, from beauty culture to romance languages, from industrial jobbing to sociology.

ILLITERACY REDUCED

Mr. Seldon reported that urban New Jersey communities have reflected the accomplishments of the WPA Adult Education Program in many ways. Illiteracy has been reduced; juvenile delinquency, particularly between the ages of 18 and 25, has been lessened; better sanitary conditions have been brought about.

Routine class schedule in New Jersey have been supplemented by a special unit on social problems in Hackensack and a Negro history project in Montclair. Both of these units were started in 1936 and continued through the early part of 1938.

TEACHERS HELPED

Mrs. Mabel Robinson, assistant state supervisor, shares responsibility for making the program effective. The work promoted by Mr. Seldon and Mrs. Robinson is rehabilitating thousands of illiterate Negroes who noce lacked educational opportunities and a realization of their community responsibilities. Finally, the teachers themselves are gaining valuable experience and are putting their training to the test.

In this educational proving ground, they are able to increase their qualifications for permanent jobs in public or private educational and welfare agencies.

WPA Adult Education Courses To Include Classes On The Negro

Adults desirous of supplementing their knowledge of the Negro in American life and also secure a more comprehensive grasp of the basic economic and social problems confronting labor today will be interested to know that the WPA Adult Education has added two new courses "The Negro in American Life" and "Labor Problems" to satisfy this demand.

Both courses are designed to help the student better to understand the so-called "race" problem in America and to discuss various solutions which have been proposed based upon a thorough knowledge of the historical and economic background of interracial problems. Under "Labor Problems" consideration is given to the function of trade unions, new labor legislation and special problems confronting the labor movement today, to be included under labor and government, labor and political labor, in war, women and children in industry, labor and public opinion, labor and the community, unity and the labor movement and the role of labor in social progress

Under "The Negro in American Life" will be presenttd a study of the best thinking of students of inter-racial problems in an effort to develop a greater appreciation of the contributions of the Negro to America culture and the possibilities for future advancement. This course is divided into eight interrelated subjects: (1) The Negro in Contemporary Society, (2) The Negro as a Race, (3) Roots of the Problem, (4) The Negro and Organized Labor, (5) The Contribution of the American Negro to American Culture, (6) Legislative activities affecting the Negro, (7) Proposed Solution, (8) The Negro and Democracy.

Stars and Moon Come Out Before Play Is Over

(Staff Correspondence)

MANTEO, N. C. — Despite the rain and threatening clouds more than 800 adult education teachers, students, and executives of the WPA adult education program made their annual pilgrimage here last Friday, July 21, to hold their Community School Day, and witness the performance of the Lost Colony at Fort Raleigh, scene of the first English settlement in America.

Their optimism was well rewarded, for whatever fears they had of the performance being rained out was dispelled as the moon and stars came out shortly after the play started, and many a christian soul was heard to say, "Truly this is hallowed ground."

The visitation of the Negro adult education classes, and teachers was arranged by the Works Progress Administration and they came by automobile, bus, and truck from the whole of North Carolina and Tidewater Virginia.

Four choruses of 50 voices each came from Durham, Raleigh, Elizabeth City and Maneto. The singers, under the direction of Mrs. Harriett Busby, Durham, took a leading part in the program staged in the hour before "the Lost Colony" began.

RACE FAITHFUL

Mrs. Elizabeth C. Morris, state director of WPA education program, gave a brief review of the adult education program in North Carolina, and commended those present for braving the weather.

Tribute was paid the race as being faithful by Mrs. Morris, who said: "When I left Raleigh this morning, I told my friends that I could not disappoint a people who had never disappointed me."

Others bringing greetings to the massed audience included, Mrs. Lucille S. Purser, WPA education supervisor; Frank Bentley, assistant regional supervisor division of education and recreation; Nicholas Ray, Washington office recreation department WPA; and Dr. N. C. Newbold, director division Negro education.

J. H. BIAS EULOGIZED

J. H. Bias, late president of Elizabeth City State Teachers College, was eulogized by Dr. Newbold in his remarks when he said, "Mr. Bias was a man loved by all peoples and was an educator that this state will never forget."

Dr. Alphonse Heninburg assistant to the president of the N. C. College for Negroes, responded in behalf of Dr. Shepard who was not able to be present. Others making responses to the greetings brought by the state and nationa officials were: Dr. Nelson Harris director summer school Shaw University and representing the N. C Negro Adult Education council, Mrs. Julia A. Williams, principal, Lucille Hunter School, Raleigh, representing the volunteer teachers who participated in the Volunteer Literacy Drive; Mrs. Irma Neal Henry, Negro Consultant WPA Employment Service; and Miss E. Louise Cooper, state supervisor Negro Work WPA education program.

RACE PAGEANT

Following the brief program a pageant told with Negro Tales and Folk Songs, arranged by W. T. Murphy, area supervisor beginning with man's creation and the evolution of the Negro from Africa to his present status was staged by the massed choruses, under the direction of Mrs. Busby.

Thi part of the program was concluded with the choruses and the audience singing the Negro National Anthem. The Rev. J. L. Tilley, dean, Theological School, Shaw University pronounced the invocation and the benediction.

Among the other features held during the day was the Fish Fry, served on the picnic grounds, which was enjoyed by young and old. An organ recital was given by John Burke, "The Lost Colony" organist.

"THE LOST COLONY"

For 99 times in the past three years rain has not halted a performance of the immortal play by Paul Green, "The Lost Colony," and last Friday was not an exception, despite the inclement weather over most of the state. The play is given in a huge outdoor amphitheater on the site where the colonist sent from England by Sir Walter Raleigh attempted to colonize the new world.

Very forcefully does the play tell the tragic tale of how the colonist waited in vain for help from England until driven by hunger and hardship, they left their homes to seek shelter and food with the friendly Crotans Indians to the south, never to be seen again.

Donald Somers, as Tom Harris, a beggar and drunkard, literally steals the show. Mr. Somers had the most difficult role in the cast to play, but he does it so well that when the play is over, all praise is for him. However, he is ably supported by a cast of hundreds, as well as the chorus and the organist, Mr. Burke.

The Lost Colony is presented by the Roanoke Island Historical Association, Inc., with the cooperation of the North Carolina Historical Commission and the Federal Theatre Project and other agencies of the WPA, and is directed by Samuel Selden.

Adult Education For Negroes New Project For City

Great Deal of Interest Manifest In the WPA Adult School Established Here.

At last what the colored inhabitants of Wilson have prayed and long awaited has come true. Their prayers were answered August 4, when a WPA Adult School was established here. This is not at all out of the ordinary, for many such schools are located in nearby cities, but the success of the school is extraordinary.

On the named date eight anxious aged women met at the home of Lula Margaret Moore to get just a "little more learning." Just a little more learning consisted really of beginning to learn for none of them could read or write a line. Before the adjournment of the class all were able to hold pencils, nearly if not correctly, and to copy their names. Their interest became so great until they continued to come to classes at least twice a week and with them came friends and members of their families.

On several meeting nights unfavorable conditions presented themselves but rain, heat and inconsistent factory hours have not kept classes from meeting. The teaching recalls an interesting incident which happened a few days ago. It was one of these rainy days when you feel as if the whole bottom has suddenly dropped from the sky.

Just before time for my evening class to meet a downpour of rain began. I thought surely no one would come so I settled down to a nice quiet evening. Suddenly I heard a loud rapping at my front and back doors. I couldn't imagine what was happening, so I ran into the hall looking toward both doors; the rapping started again. I then opened to find four eager women on the back porch and two on the front porch. I was so very happy to know that I had students interested enough in their classes to venture in a seemingly cloudburst.

On commenting upon her classes, Miss Moore explained that inconsistent factory hours had not kept her students from attending some of their classes. She stays home all day for she knows that many factory workers will come to her home for lessons. These, of course, can not come to regular meetings which are held every day from seven to nine because their working hours are changed ever so often. She also explained that no person is allowed to meet his or her class over three times a week and she always likes for each person to come at least twice a week. No meetings are held over two hours and on Wednesday night, which is the home-making night, such as learning to sew, drafting patterns, making things to go in the home and taking care of the body and family. Class begins at seven and ends at eight.

The instructor tells another interesting experience. She was teaching her day students last Monday when she was summoned to the door by a strange woman. She looked to be about 80 years of age. She was inquiring for a nighbor. She saw people almost as old as she—one who had had a stroke—busily writing, figuring, and the like. Curiosity overcame her so she stepped into the class room and watched. Today this same woman is one of the many seekers after knowledge.

Age does not matter when one mind is in a receptive state, one writer has said age surely seems to play a small part with these seekers. The attenders are from 16 years old to 81. Defects play a small part as well as when the seeker gets really interested in learning. Some have poor vision, strokes, hearing defects, and yet before they attended school they could neither read nor write, add or subtract. Now these same people with such defects can not only read and write their names but can read and write other persons' names and addresses.

The attendance of the school within a month has grown from 8 to 30 members per week. These members are not all illiterate, but are people who are seeking education on the high school level.

Yes, Wilson has a right to be proud of all the men and women who tread to class each day eagerly seeking to get their rewards.

Day classes are held from 4 to 6 o'clock; night classes, from 7 to 9 except Wednesday, at 925 Washington Street.

Struggle Against Negro Illiteracy Is Gaining Ground

Whitehurst Wants Every Adult Reading And Writing Name Before 1940 Census

John Whitehurst's fight against the ghastly limitations of illiteracy among the members of the Negro race is bearing fruit if the enthusiasm of Whitehurst can be used as a barometer.

First of all, Whitehurst is the colored WPA teacher in the Adult Education program and his work is a part of the North Carolina scheme to wipe out illiteracy by employing eligible teachers to conduct home classes throughout their districts.

One of Whitehurst's aims, according to his report to Miss Ruth Davenport, county welfare officer, is to have all adult illiterates in the town able to read and write their names before the 1940 census is made.

At a glance it would seem that this aim could be easily accomplished in much shorter time, but Whitehurst, originally from Elizabeth City, is familiar with illiteracy in Hertford and the number of adult persons who can neither read nor write is staggering.

"Not only have many of them learned to read and write," said Whitehurst in his report, "but through this campaign of adult education their lives and homes and communities have undergone a change for the better."

"Persons who could not even read and sign their school children's report cards are now cooperating intelligently with the public and the community schools," he continued.

The work goes further than the mere teaching of the "Three R's"; adult education gives pointers in living at home, raising from gardens as much self-sustaining food as possible, and educating in general health and personal hygiene and home-making. Indirectly, the program helps to increase school attendance, the result of greater understanding on the part of the parents.

Whitehurst sees the fruits of his labors in newly-painted kitchens and dining rooms . . . rooms never painted since the houses were built . . . evidencing a thirst for sanitation in the home amid attractive surroundings.

He sees the collecting and disposing of trash as further proof that his type of teaching is sorely needed and that all the illiterates require is a qualified method of leadership and instruction.

There are no specified meeting centers for the classes in adult education; they are conducted in different homes in all sections of the colored residential regions.

To Be Given By Teachers

By LEROY DAVIS

At the suggestion of the North Carolina Negro Adult Education Council, the faculty staffs, including principals of the six public schools here, have pledged 100 per cent. co-operation in rendering free city service in a state-wide Negro literacy drive. With the endorsements of local public school heads, the teachers set out sometime ago to select chairmen in each of the city schools. This group of teacher-chairmen met and selected Royal W. Puryear Jr., general chairman of city teachers.

The purpose of the drive, as explained in a tentative plan recently issued by the state education council, is "to safeguard and promote the welfare of North Carolina by securing a literate citizenry." The object is "to reach the greatest possible number of North Carolina's Negro illiterates in one month's intensive drive." The special effort of these teachers is to train adults who have been deprived of a scholastic opportunity to read and write.

Organization

The organization includes: Administration and supervision of project by WPA and state-aid adult education field and state staffs; local administration and supervision of project by county and city units of organization corresponding to present school administrative units.

The teaching staff may be composed of: Jeanes supervisors, public school principals and teachers, college teachers and selected upper class men, home agents and farm agents, unemployed college graduates, members of sororities and fraternities, College Women's Club, N. Y. A. workers and WPA recreation workers.

Voluntary

All services must be voluntary. This service is to last for the duration of the drive, it was explained. It was said that teachers may be optional. It was further stated that county and city superintendents of schools may serve as directors of the project, in their respective units.

According to statistics as of the 1930 census filed by the state department, the number of Negro illiterates in Winston-Salem was 3,026, in Forsyth county, 4,436.

Faculty Aids

Chairman Puryear said faculty members at East Fourteenth Street School, Atkins High School, Kimberley Park School, Woodland Avenue School, Columbian Heights Elementary School and Columbian Heights Primary School, have promised their services. These teachers, he said, will instruct adults at schools, churches, other public buildings or in the homes of adult students. The following centers are now being occupied by adult classes: Phyllis Wheatley Home, East Fourth street; Mt Zion Baptist Church and Woodland Avenue School (frame building). Several teachers are visiting homes of students giving instruction. Teachers at Columbian Heights Elementary and primary schools are visiting homes, it was learned from A. H. Anderson and Mrs. Lillian B. Williams.

Supply Teachers

Puryear further states that any church in the city that will secure as many as 10 persons who cannot read nor write, and are anxious to learn, may report the same to him any day after 3:30 p.m., by dialing 2-2685. He said if the particular church may be used as a center or if the persons are willing to be taught in their homes, he will supply a teacher.

Also in charge of materials for the drive, Puryear produced a copy of a reader prepared by the state department containing six prepared lessons on "Home and Highway Safety." Above each lesson is an illustration which makes the lesson quite simple, Puryear said. It was also stated that no books or pamphlets on writing have been secured. This is taught fundamentally by the teacher.

Work Done in March For Negro Literacy

The Committee of Negro Literacy Drive, through the chairman, W. E. Knight, makes the following report on its activities:

The Negro leaders of Monroe gave a hearty response to the Negro Literacy Drive after the outliine of the Negro Adult Council was presented by Superintendent W. R. Kirkman. The objective was to reach the greatest possible number of North Carolinaes. Negro illiterates in one month's intensive drive.

Superintendent W. R. Kirkman called the Winchester Avenue high school faculty together February 7th, submited the plan for the drive and gave suggestions for organizing the city to reach the Negro people who could not read and write. At this meeting W. E. Knight was appointed chairman of the local drive The first meeting of the Negro leaders was called by sending out a circular letter explaining the purpose of the drive and urging every one to meet Sunday afteroon February 12 at the A. M. E. Zion church.

The meeting was attended by a large number who expressed a willingness to assist in the Literacy drive. A steering committee was appointed by the chairman as follows: Rev. M. A. Murray, G. Rushing, Rev. L. C. Asbury, Miss A. A. Chesfield, Rev. E. H. Hunt, Rev. J. A. Little, Mrs. E. M. Carter, C. Barriner, Mrs. M. C. Whitner, W. Langford, and Miss V. M. Perkins. Mrs. E. M. Barrett was invited to the meeting and gave some valuable suggestions out of her experience in conducting adult classes.

At a Parent-Teacher meeting February 14, most of the time was given for the discussion of the drive. Mrs. R. Hawfield, County Supervisor of Adult Education, was present and spoke of illiteracy conditions in Monroe and Union county, emphasizing the importance of the drive. Friday afternoon February 14 was appointed as the time to select teachers who would volunteer to teach adult groups. Both Mrs. Hawfield and Superintendent Kirkman were present at this meeting and gave encouraging remarks organizing the work. All the workers in the drive extend their hearty thanks to Mr. Kirkman and Mrs. Hawfield for their great service in guidance and providing material for the clases.

The following were appointed as volunteer teachers and all have done a very fine job in organizing and teaching adult classes:

James Boyd, Miss A. A. Chresfield Miss Annie Gillis, Mrs. B. W. Hill J. L. Massey, Mrs. M. L. Oglesby Mrs. Annie Robinson, assisted by Miss Pauline Carter; Mrs. E. J. Simmons. Mrs. Louise J. Teal; total enrolled, 61.

It was remarkable to see the interest and enthusiasm manifested on the part of teachers and adult students All are anxious to continue the classes. We found during the drive that the number of Negroes in Monroe who are illiterate is 218. Less those taught by W. P. A. teachers 130. Total 88 Number enrolled by Volunteer Teachers 61, Number untaught in drive 27

1. The committee hereby recommends that all teachers of adult groups try to continue such classes and assist in getting them enrolled in W. P. A. Classes.

2. In view of the fact that there is still a high percentage of illiteracy in Monroe, we appeal to the Welfare authorities to certify needy teachers to be appointed as W. P. A. teachers to teach the large number who are now eager to learn.

3. We feel that Monroe and Union county should have a quota of WPA teachers commensurate with that of other nearby cities and counties.

N. C. Adult Education Exhibit

A NEW SECTION of the N. C. Negro Teachers Association this year was the adult education department which was under the direction of Miss E. Louise Cooper, chairman. Shown above is a view caught by the Guide cameraman as Miss Marion Davis of Raleigh explains the exhibit to a group of interested onlookers at the fifty-eighth session held last week at Goldsboro. The exhibit showed the many different kinds of work done by adults over the state who attended the WPA adult schools. The exhibit was arranged by Miss Cooper, Mrs. M. P. Lane, and W. T. The drive will be divided into several sections. February 7 to the 11 was set aside for discovery and promotion. Public workers will co-operate in securing names of persons who can be helped and such names will be turned over to the county workers. A "teaching period" will be sponsored, and adults will be taught by volunteer workers, it was announced. The be in the form of invitations t WPA officials at Washington, D C., to address the citizens of the state on adult education.

N. C. Drives To Wipe Out Illiteracy

RALEIGH, N. C., Feb. 16 (Special)—Stressing the vital importance of the success of the state-wide literacy drive which has been launched to continue through March 11, Gov. Hoey in a statement issued here, has urged the fullest coope.ation in the campaign of all of North Carolina's colored citizens.

Pointing out that among both the white and colored populations of this state the percentage of illiteracy is very high, he cited that approximately 28 per cent of the total population is composed of Negroes and that among the adults of the race in North Carolina, the number of illiterates is unusually large.

Commending leaders for the progress that has already been made in correcting this condition, he asked their continued aid.

During the drive, the governor announced, a call will be issued to citizens in all sections of the state, to render voluntary service in teaching illiterate members of their race how to read and write and do simple ciphering.

Literacy Drive Plans Mapped, Brown Asserts

Tentative plans for a state-wide Negro literary drive are under way, it was announced Saturday at the office of Professor R. W. Brown, principal of the Woodland Avenue School. This declaration of war against illiteracy throughout the state was made by the North Carolina Negro Adult Education Council and will be prosecuted by the council, it was revealed.

The announced purpose of the crusade is to safeguard and promote the welfare of North Carolina by securing a literate citizenry. To reach the greatest number of North Carolina's Negro illiterates in one month's extensive drive in the available public buildings and homes of these illiterates. The crusade, which began February 5, will close March 12, the promoters disclosed Saturday.

Local administration and supervision of project by county and city units of organization corresponding to present school administration units will work together with state administration and supervision of projects by WPA and state aid adult education field and state staffs in the drive.

Teaching Personnel

The county and city superintendents of public schools will serve as directors of projects in their particular communities or units who will be assisted by WPA teachers and others. They will also be aided by college teachers, local faculty members, select upper classmen, home agents, unemployed college graduates, members of sororities and fraternities, college women's clubs, N. Y. A. workers, WPA recreation workers. This voluntary service will last throughout the duration of the drive, Professor Brown asserted.

Letters from Governor Clyde Hoey, or Dr. James S. Shepherd and Dr. Jones now being distributed throughout the state emphasizing the necessity of this "All Literature Negro Citizenship Week." Feature articles in state papers edited by both races will also carry stories on the project. Already, some of the nation's leading Negro weeklies are carrying weekly stories on the North Carolina scheme of wiping out illiteracy within its domain.

The race throughout the state is now face to face with the most gigantic efforts in its entire history to lift itself from the pit of ignorance and superstition and take its place among the enlightened thought of the world, commented one local citizen recently.

WAYNE NEGROES FORM EDUCATIONAL COUNCIL

75 Teachers Volunteer to Teach Adults in Effort to Reduce Illiteracy

Goldsboro, Feb. 22.—A Wayne County Council of Negroes to fight illiteracy among their race in this county has been formed, according to the announcement of J. W. Wilson, superintendent of Wayne County schools. This council will unite with efforts in other counties to wipe out illiteracy in a campaign in which Governor Hoey has asked the State to cooperate.

Seventy-five Negro teachers of Wayne County have volunteered their services to teach adult members of their race to read and write. A list of 421 illiterate Negro parents of Wayne students has been compiled through the schools. The list is believed far from complete.

The Wayne Negro Council is composed of the following: Sarah Nixon, Wayne Jeanes Foundation teacher; W. M. Reinhardt, principal of Central High School in New Hope; C. H. McLeondon, principal of Mt. Olive Negro School; J. H. Carney, principal of Vail School; and Lettie Manley, principal of Eureka Negro School. The duty of the council will be to arrange for the classes and to schedule time and places of meetings.

Negro Illiteracy

Campaign to Reduce Illiteracy.

To the Negro Citizenry of Richmond County:

The North Carolina Negro Adult Education Council, appointed by the Governor, is sponsoring, this month, an intensive State-wide drive to reduce illiteracy among Negroes. Through co-operation of various public agencies, the Council hopes to teach 100,000 illiterate Negroes to read and write.

According to the 1930 census, ONE Negro out of every FIVE in the State was illiterate (unable to read and write).

This is an appalling figure and one that challenges the thinking of every citizen who is interested in the general welfare and progress of our great State.

As indicated, this drive was really initiated by the Governor and, as such, has the full support of his office, the State Department of Education, the local Dept. of Education and various other public agencies. (The State Directors of this Drive are the Superintendents of Education in the several counties and cities of the State, respectively).

The records show that there are 2,400 illiterate Negroes in Richmond County, alone.

In co-operation with the several agencies in the promotion of this Drive against illiteracy, it is our desire that a very worthwhile and thorough-going effort will be put forth in Rockingham and Richmond County. As City-County Chairman, I am appealing to every Negro citizen to lend his fullest support to this project. For that large number of our people who are void of the rudiments of education, here is a Golden Opportunity; to the others of us who may be able to assist in promoting this project, here is a real challenge for service to humanity—service that will net great and lasting dividends.

The principals of the several Negro schools in the county (appointed by the Superintendent of Schools) constitute the Negro Literacy Committee in this county. All of the Negro teachers and others who may qualify for instructional work are urged to volunteer their services in this worthy cause.

These classes for adults are held three times a week—on Monday, Wednesday and Friday nights. Already, a large number of classes, in different parts of the county, have gotten under way. It is hoped that this service may touch every one who is eligible for this type of instruction—every Negro in Richmond county, above the age of 14, who is unable to read and write or who is but little removed from this status.

The fact that this project is a highly important one can easily be appreciated. Whatever the occupation or field of service, one is better able to go about his or her labors with more dignity and assurance if he or she is in possession of, at least, the rudiments of learning. Whether a laundress, or maid, or cook, or day laborer, or housewife, father or mother—whatever the sphere of work, one is at great disadvantage in rendering the most satisfactory service if he or she is without these basic fundamentals—is unable to read and write. Moreover, such a handicap makes it difficult for one to render his citizenship duties to the State which we love and honor.

Let the Negro citizenry of Richmond County accept heartily and enthusiastically this significant challenge; let each one manifest his gratitude to our great Governor and other leaders of State for this fine movement; let each one do his uppermost in carrying the message of literacy to every nook and corner of our county. Thus we shall be helping to make a great Commonwealth still greater and thus we shall be giving evidence of our fine sentiments for the Old North State—

Carolina, Carolina, heaven's blessings attend her,
While we live we will cherish, protect and defend her,
Tho' the scorner may sneer a and witlings defame her,
Still our hearts swell with Gladness whenever we name her.'

Adult Education Great Need, Says N. C. Speaker

By THEORA M. WEAVER

WINTON, N. C.—The adult education class of Winton, under the auspices of Mrs. Effie M. Gadsden, presented W. T. Murphy, area supervisor of the W. P. A. education program, and fifteen of the enrolled pupils, in a special program in Brown Hall on the campus of Waters Training School, recently.

Mr. Murphy, the principal speaker, complimented Mrs. Gadsden on the remarkable progress shown in the adult education work done in Hertford county in the past two months. In his address, which revealed several interesting and informative facts concerning adult education, Mr. Murphy recommended that the advisory council of the Hertford County Adult Education unit take the following steps in developing the program in this section:

(1) Ask questions and go to all the communities and interpret the program; (2) help secure the interest of all adults who need the program or who might become students in the class; (3) secure as much local support as is possible; and (4) discover community interests and needs.

Mr. Murphy told local patrons that there are 45,000,000 Negroes who cannot read or write. Of this number, he pointed out, 139,103 are in Eastern North Carolina. The speaker urged that every literate person become interested in at least one individual and teach him to read and write.

4TH GRADE AVERAGE

Mr. Murphy revealed that the average level of intelligence in the Negro population was about fourth grade.

The speaker sympathized with the many problems that face the teacher in adult education work but declared that the need for literacy was so great that teachers should work to overcome all obstacles that stood in the way of the adult education program.

Some of these problems, he said, were: lack of transportation facilities, funds, materials and interested persons; and a feeling of shame on the part of those adults who cannot read and write, even though they are sometimes anxious to learn.

Members of the advisory council of the Hertford County unit are: Mrs. Agnes Mitchell, Mrs Flora B. Collins, H. C. Freeland J. R. Weaver, W. C. Davenport, H D. Cooper, and the Rev. G. T Rouson. Mr. Murphy and the members of the advisory counci were feted after the program.

Negroes Urged To Aid Drive For Literacy

Raleigh, Feb. 4 (AP).—Governor Hoey urged North Carolina Negroes today to co-operate in a state-wide literacy drive by the North Carolina Adult Education Council. The drive will start tomorrow and continue through March 11.

"North Carolina has a very high percentage of illiteracy among both white and Negro races," he said in a statement, "about 28 per cent of our population belongs to the Negro race and there is an unusually large number of adult illiterates. The need for a special drive is manifest and I wish to heartily commend the leaders of the Negro race who are making this definite effort to blot out illiteracy among the Negro race during the year 1939 and preceding the taking of the census of 1940.

"The last census showed North Carolina having 10 per cent. of her adult population, meaning people over ten years of age, who could not read and write. The average for the nation was only 4.3 per cent. North Carolina should strive in every possible way to reduce this adult illiteracy, both for the promotion of the good of our own citizenship and the presentation of a better record in the census of 1940.

"I wish to specially commend this state-wide literacy drive which has for its objectives the teaching of 100,000 illiterates to read and write and to attend community schools. Competent Negroes in each county of the state will be asked to serve as voluntary teachers during this drive and they will serve in teaching the Negroes to read and write. Splendid results will follow, and I bespeak the full co-operation of all the Negroes in the state in this worthwhile activity."

NEGRO LITERACY DRIVE

One of the finest old colored citizens of Moore county is B. D. Ross of the Union section. He has been superintendent of his Sunday school for around a quarter of a century, yet until recently the opportunity to read and write had never come his way. That chance to fulfill a life-long desire was provided by the North Carolina negro adult education council, of which Mrs. J. L. McGraw is the county director. Although he is about 70, Ross is pursuing his studies with the avidity of a youngster and is down-right proud of his progress.

Ross is not the only one of his race being taught to read by the fine negro faculty composed of Wiania Goode Southern Pines; Verna McGoogan Jackson Springs; Eunice Charles Cameron; Rev. Paul Boykin, Carthage, and Clifton Quick, Pinehurst. The enrollment is large and big strides are being made in reducing adult negro illiteracy in the county.

However, the response has not been so great as was hoped, and to stimulate more interest, the negro adult educational council is sponsoring a state-wide negro literacy drive during the week of February 5th to February 12th. Governor Clyde R. Hoey and a number of negro leaders will broadcast the aims of the council, workers will hold meetings and the newspapers will do their share in bringing home this fine opportunity for adults to acquire at least the rudiments of an education.

Governor Calls On Negroes To Join In Literacy Drive

State Has High Percentage Of Illiteracy Among Both White And Negro Races, Hoey Says In Connection With Campaign Starting Today

Raleigh, Feb. 4.—(AP)—Governor Hoey urged North Carolina Negroes today to cooperate in a state-wide literacy drive by the North Carolina adult education council. The drive will start tomorrow and continue through March 11.

"North Carolina has a very high percentage of illiteracy among both white and Negro races," he said in a statement, "about 28 percent of our population belongs to the Negro race and there is an unusually large number of adult illiterates. The need for a special drive is manifest and I wish to heartily commend the leaders of the Negro race who are making this definite effort to blot out illiteracy among the Negro race during the year 1939 and preceding the taking of the census of 1940.

"The last census showed North Carolina having 10 percent of her adult population, meaning people over 10 years of age, who could not read and write. The average for the nation was only 4.3 percent North Carolina should strive in every possible way to reduce this adult illiteracy, both for the promotion of the good of our own citizenship and the presentation of a better record in the census of 1940.

"I wish to specially commend this state-wide literacy drive which has for its objectives the teaching of 100,000 illiterates to read and write and to attend community schools. Competent Negroes in each county of the state will be asked to serve as voluntary teachers during this drive and they will serve in teaching the Negroes to read and write. Splendid results will follow, and I bespeak the full cooperation of all the Negroes in the state in this worthwhile activity."

Negroes Form Council To Battle Illiteracy

Formation of a Wayne County Council to fight illiteracy among Negroes in Wayne county was announced Monday by J. W. Wilson, superintendent of Wayne county schools.

This council will unite with efforts in other counties to wipe out illiteracy in a campaign in which Governor Hoey has asked the state to cooperate.

Seventy-five negro teachers, Mr. Wilson said, have volunteered their services to teach members of their race to read and write. Duty of the council will be to arrange for the classes, to schedule time and place of meetings.

Through the Wayne schools, Mr. Wilson said, names and addresses of parents of students, parents who do not know how how to read or write, have been compiled. The list, believed far from incomplete, lists 421 Negroes and 304 whites.

To date no organized effort to attack illiteracy among the whites of Wayne has been made, Mr. Wilson said. Organization in Goldsboro has not been perfected.

"The list of illiterates is probably far from complete," said Mr. Wilson. "I have seen statistics on illiteracy in the hands of Mrs. Elizabeth C. Morriss, state director of WPA and state aid education program, and Wayne ranks relatively high in the state.

The Negro Council organized for Wayne is composed of the following: Sarah Nixon, Wayne Jeanes Foundation teach; W. M. Reinhardt, principal of Central High school in new Hope; C. H. McLendon, Mt. Olive negro school principal; J. H. Carney, Vail school principal and Lettie Manley, Eureka school principal.

Governor Hoey in an appeal for the anti-illiteracy drive said:

LITERACY DRIVE BEGINS FOR NEGROES

A drive to decrease Negro adult illiteracy in Hertford county is being lauched this week through the cooperation of J. R. Brown, county school superintendent, and the N. C. Negro Adult Education Council.

Brown, at the request of the council, is to appoint a committee of leading Negro citizens of Hertford county for the purpose of arranging for five weeks of evening classes in every section of the county.

Colored school teachers and ministers will be asked to cooperate in arranging and teaching the classes two or three nights each week.

Seventy North Carolina Counties Conduct Drive Against Illiteracy

RALEIGH, N. C.—A drive t teach 100,000 Negro illiterates t read and write is under way i seventy counties in North Caro lina. Three thousand volantee teachers, aided by the clergy an with radio facilities put at thei disposal, are engaged in this grea effort to raise the standards o education within the State.

This campaign is sponsored by the North Carolina Negro Adul Education Council, a group of educators appointed last year by Governor Clyde R. Hoey. Through the cooperation of teachers employed on the Education Program of the Works Progress Administration, it is expected that at least 75 per cent of the 100,000 illiterates throughout the State will be enrolled in the established adult education centers when the drive is finished.

DARLINGTON COUNTY ILLITERACY

According to the 1930 Census 8.5 per cent of the white population of Darlington county was illiterate; 31.5 per cent of the Negro population illiterate. Of recent date a definite campaign has been instituted to improve this condition, giving as its purpose:

To show that illiteracy and a democratic society are inconsistent.

To work for regular attendance of every child in school.

To locate every illiterate in each school district.

To teach as many illiterates as possible to master a basic vocabulary of 150 words and to write a simple letter by April 1, 1940.

To see that these persons continue to study so that they may become literate.

To initiate four public meetings at each school on Education, Health, Social and Economic Conditions, and Government.

In this campaign, every literate citizen of the county can make a contribution towards its success. Won't you?

S. C. Hopes To Have Reduction In Illiteracy Rate By Census

COLUMBIA, Dec. 7—(AP)—Ranks of South Carolina's army of uneducated citizens have been thinned by at least 15,000 individuals since the 1930 census established this state as the most illiterate in the Union.

State education officials figured that number had begun traveling the road to literacy since the census takers marked them down as unable to read or write.

Sees Improvements

The census showed 5.1 per cent whites and 26.9 per cent negroes were illiterate but Miss Wil Lou Gray, veteran supervisor of adult education, predicted the 1940 census would reveal only about 2.5 per cent whites and a corresponding decrease in negroes.

Louisiana, whose record was almost as bad as South Carolina's, began carving away on illiteracy by appropriating over $300,000 about the time of the last census, Miss Gray said. This state at that time provided only about $30,000, she recalled.

Night schools in the winter and opportunity schools in the summer have been the instruments wielded by the education department against illiteracy in this state. The work was slowed this year when the legislature slashed the appropriation from $30,000 to $12,000.

Miss Gray asked the budget commission to 'recomemnd that the lawmakers appropriate $54,000 for 1940-41 to allow her work to be resumed in full force. The present allowance, she said, could not go far.

Annual Sessions

The opoprtunity schols—held annually at Clemson college—have increased in enrollment from 19 pupils in 1921 to 382 this year.

Night school enrollment now is 8,100, of which 4,780 are taking the first, second or third grade courses and 3,320 are studying higher grade courses. A total of 3,177 pupils range in ages from 16 through 21 and the remaining 3,923 students are above 21. Miss Gray said that many persons mistakenly thought that illiteracy was found solely in old persons.

The more fortunate students are allowed an even greater advantage than the illiterates in funds for education in South Carolina, Miss Gray said. She asserted that the state this year was spending $79.91 on each student in white high schools and $28.02 on every negro high school pupil but that only $4.11 was being spent on the illiterate white and $1.76 on the illiterate negro.

Thousands Benefitted

The state's illiterates number more than the combined population of Allendale, Bamberg, Barnwell Calhoun, Dorchester, Edgefield Georgetown, Hampton, Jasper, McCormick and Saluda counties.

White illiteracy ranges from 0.8 per cent in Beaufort—inhabited predominantly by negroes—to 10.5 per cent in Cherokee county. Negro illiteracy ranges from 18.6 per cent in Greenville county to 46.1 per cent in Allendale.

The 1930 census listed South Carolina's illiteracy as 14.9 per cent or about one out of every seven persons. Louisiana's was 13.5. Iowa had less illiteracy than any other state—only 0.8 per cent.

We can not stand still, we must go forward. In order to go forward I appeal to you as individual citizens to do your part to give the illiterate person the chance to learn. Take the task upon yourself to teach at least one person to enjoy this great pleasure, reading and writing.

Whether it be your cook or neighbor, the satisfaction of knowing you helped Fairfield county to the top in education is well worth the effort. We are as strong as the weakest link. Teach at least one person to read and write by the first of April.

233 White; 3,865 Negro Illiterates In Fairfield County

Following American Education week is a good time to consider illiteracy in Fairfield county and what can be done to improve conditions. The census of 1930 showed 233 white, 3,865 nego illiteates. This has been decreased some since then but with the assistance of an organizer and each citizen feeling his or her responsibility, his number can be decreased at least 50 per cent. Then we as citizens of Fairfield county will feel proud of the fact that we took part in the work of teaching one or more unfortunate persons to enjoy the privilege of reading and writing.

Teachers of Adults.

A training conference for prospective teachers of adult schools is scheduled for Friday, Saturday and Sunday of this week, with white teachers meeting at Drayton hall and Negro teachers at Benedict college.

The conference for white teachers opens at 6:30 p. m. Friday and closes Saturday; that for Negro teachers opens Saturday at 11 a. m. and closes at noon January 8.

The 1930 census gave white illiterates in South Carolina as numbering 36,246—that is, white people above ten years of age who could not write their names nor read a newspaper.

The Negro illiterates, in that census, numbered 156,065.

Since 1930 hundreds have attended schools for adults and the number of illiterates probably has been reduced.

Raleigh, N. C., Feb. 4.—(AP)—Governor Hoey urged North Carolina Negroes today to co-operate in a statewide literacy drive by the North Carolina Adult Education council. The drive will start tomorrow and continue through March 11.

Banishing Illiteracy

Lawrence M. Pinckney, WPA administrator in South Carolina, reports a remarkable achievement in WPA education work in the state. According to a report issued last week 19,619 white adults and 23,132 Negroes have been taught to read and write since the federal census of 1930 was taken. The white adults represented 54 per cent of white illiterates in the census while the Negroes represented 15 percent of the illiterates of that race.

The accomplishment is one worthy of notice South Carolina long has stood near the bottom of the illiteracy list of the nation. The work of the WPA educational bureau has been of great aid to the state adult teachers who, for years, have been working with limited funds to remove the stigma of illiteracy from their state.

WPA TEACHING MANY TO READ

Fifteen Percent Of Colored Illiterates In S. C. Taught

Columbia, March 17—In the eradication of illiteracy in South Carolina, it is interesting to note that out of 156,065 illiterate colored persons as shown by the 1930 census, the Works Progress Administration has, since January 1, 1936, taught fifteen per cent or approximately 23,000 colored persons to read and write, it was pointed out today by the State Works Progress Administrator Lawrence M. Pinckney.

The following letter which was received today by Mr. Pinckney illustrates the voluntary work being done to aid colored illiterates:

"Mr. Lawrence M. Pinckney
State Administrator, WPA
National Loan and Exchange Bank Building
Columbia, South Carolina.
Dear Mr. Pinckney:

At a meeting of the WPA Adult State Advisory Committee I was instructed to convey to you in writing the thanks of the negro people of South Carolina for the very splendid service the WPA is rendering the negroes of South Carolina through its educational project

The graph sent out from your office showing the number of negroes taught to read and write does not tell the whole story. Through the excellent work being done by Mrs. Dora B. Daniels among the negro educators of the state and the sympathetic cooperation of Mr. R. A. Rouse, Director of Educational Projects, there is an army of volunteer workers in South Carolina who are teaching people without compensation from any source. This gives you a slight inea of the magnitude of the work that is being done to help lift South Carolina out of the unenviable position she now holds.

Our committee appreciates the work that has been done.

Yours very truly,
(Signed) John P. Burgess,

In addition to the accomplishments of the WPA through its teachers and through its educational program, the Negro race of South Carolina, in an effort to be of all assistance and help possible, is teaching Negro illiterates to read and write as a voluntary act without compensation.

The following letter received by Mr. Pinckney illustrates the voluntary work being done to aid Negro illiterates:

Commencement exercises for 726 white and negro students of the 1939 session of the Anderson county literacy schools will be held Friday night and Saturday afternoon here, marking the close of a successful year, it was announced yesterday.

Final exercises for white pupils will be held Saturday at 3 p. m. at Girls high. A program will be held Friday night at Reed street school for negroes.

This is the second year that Anderson county has conducted adult classes, and last year was the first time that a real illiteracy experiment was conducted in the state. The total number of pupils to graduate last year were 510, with an increase this year of 110 students.

Classes in the various communities were conducted by the following teachers: Mrs. Willie Holland at Anderson mill; Mrs. Charles Wyatt at Lad-Lassie mill; Miss Sue Ellen Pulliam at Riverside-Toxaway mills; Mrs. L. J. 23,000 SOUTH CAROLINA NEGRO ILLITERATES LEARN TO READ AND WRITE IN THREE-YEAR WPA PROGRAM

Columbia, S. C. -Not to be outdone by the remarkable record of her sister State to the North, South Carolina can point to a 15 percent reduction in the number of Negro illiterates since Jan. 1, 1936. Credit for teaching 23,000 illiterates of the Race to read and write goes to the Education Program of the Works Progress Administration.

In addition to the workers of the WPA's Education Program including its corps of some 160 capable Negro teachers, are many volunteers who are working to increase the number of persons learning to read and write for the first time. Most of the volunteers are public school teachers interested in helping the stater to attain a higher literacy rating in 1940. These teachers receive no compensation from the WPA for their work. They pool their effort with the WPA and other agencies of education, and share in the accomplishments of their programs.

Complete progress graphs are kept up-to date as the vital phases of the WPA Education Program make advances on all fronts where the problem in illiteratacy is found to be acute.

John P. Burgess, Chairman of the WPA Adult State Advirsory Committee, has recently singled out as a good example the work being done by Mrs. Dora B. Daniels R. A. Rouse, Director of the WPA Education Projects, is coordinating the huge WPA Edcation Program with the work of Negro educatiors of the State in the cooperative drive against illiteracy.

Besides these efforts to wipe out illiteracy among Negroes, 54 percent of the 36,246 white persons in this State listed as illiterate in this 1930 census have been aught to read and write by the VPA since 1936.

THE THREE MOST ILLITERATE CITIES.

The census of 1930 showed Columbia one of the three most illiterate cities in the United States. The other two in this group were Charleston, South Carolina, and Fall River, Massachusetts. Therefore, as you see, South Carolina cities occupied two of the three bottom places.

The explanations offered are, for the South Carolina communities, the Negro population; for Fall River, the foreign born population. Both explanations may be accurate, but neither is a justification of the relatively high percentages of illiteracy in the three cities. The Fall River explanation may be nearer a genuine excuse because that community did not have a chance to do anything for the adult foreign born.

But 1930 was a long time ago; and 1940 is at hand. What will be the illiteracy ratings in the census to be taken next year? The State cannot know. But The State does hope that South Carolina will not again "win" two of the bottom three places. For Columbia to occupy such a position is shocking. Columbia is a center for governments—federal, state, county, city, and some other governments employ persons here, and perform functions here. No other city in South Carolina, perhaps no other city in the South, has such a high percentage of its people employed by government. This is one of Columbia's good breaks. There are many advantages in public employment. But are there not also some special obligations?

Columbia, center of government in South Carolina, should be; always and in all facets of public service, an example of government at its best. But illiteracy, obviously, is an evidence of government's failure to do what government should do.

Journal and Guide 7-29-39 Norfolk Va.

IN his radio address "to the people of Virginia" Governor James H. Price outlined a program for the consideration of the General Assembly and the citizens of the State which in scope is the most forward expression of State policy enunciated by any Chief Executive within a generation. Other Governors have spoken forthrightly at intervals upon specific questions such as taxation, highways, agriculture, industry and reorganization of State offices. But none of them has embraced all of these in one general program, adding thereto the vitally important educational and other questions of social significance in which Virginia lags.

He addressed himself especially to the State's educational problems, deploring the state of things which finds Virginia with 150,000 citizens of voting age who can neither read nor write. Delving further into our illiteracy statistics he revealed that more than six per cent of the adult white population—12 per cent of the males—and 25 per cent of the Negro population, are illiterate. He pointed out that of the 200,000 Negroes living in rural communities in Virginia 30 per cent are without education of any kind. There are, the Governor said, 100,000 white children and 50,000 Negro children, seven to 19 years of age in the State who are not in any kind of a school. To this high rate of illiteracy he attributed our poverty-ridden marginal population and our high rate of juvenile delinquency, as well as our high sickness and death rate.

The Governor gave as his interpretation of the school's mission, "Character building and effective inculcation of sound ethics and a high conception of civic responsibilities in the minds of our children in preparation for citizenship." To accomplish this, he said, "the highest type of teacher-personnel is required, which means that pay, sufficient to compensate them for the preparation demanded, must be offerd our teachers to attract to the service those of high character and superior qualifications."

He gave emphasis and endorsement to the school teachers' efforts to raise their standards of living. This applies not only to the Negro teachers but to the white teachers as well. "Raise teacher standards," said Governor Price, "and we shall promote good citizenship. Teach and inspire our children of today in the idealogy of true democracy; implement them with sound ideas and high ideals, and they will leaven and lead the citizenry of tomorrow." The Governor knows that discontented, poorly paid teachers cannot fulfill their true mission in the classroom.

Governor Price said that he would recommend to the next General Assembly: 100 per cent enforcement of compulsory elementary education; establishment of a full nine-month school term for all public free schools, both elementary and high; the inauguration of a comprehensive and practical program of adult education; the provision of courses in high schools that will fit pupils for entrance into the trades, business, industry, agriculture and home making, as well as for entrance into college, and, the establishment of a minimum State wage per teacher unit of $720 per year.

Next to education he placed most emphasis in his address upon the need for an expanded State Public Health System and a greater State highway system. His appeal for the State's handicapped children was eloquent and forceful, and he did not forget business, industry, agriculture and labor. On the whole Governor Price's address was inspiring. His program is indeed one of progress for Virginia.

Howard Professor Says Schoolmarms Will Have To Be Re-Educated.

PETERSBURG, Va., Aug. 10—Professor Doxey A. Wilkerson of Howard University, the only Negro member of the President's Advisory Committee on Education, [illegible] address before the Virginia State College for Negroes discussion school, flayed the Negro public school teacher as being socially illiterate.

The Toll of Illiteracy

Among factors on which the census of 1940 is expected to shed light is the progress of adult education in an effort to reduce the toll of illiteracy throughout the United States. Public school progress, especially where there are adequately enforced school attendance laws, may be counted on to banish most illiteracy in a generation. The attempt to speed that process means an attempt to teach those beyond school age to read and write.

The census of 1930 listed 4,283,753 persons in the United States over ten years of age who could not read or write—4.3 per cent of the population. During the intervening years, State educational authorities have devoted much attention to evening adult classes. The WPA as a means of relief for unemployed teachers has conducted classes for 1,400,000 persons, about one-third of the total number counted as illiterate in 1930. The adult illiterate receives a course of about 100 lessons and is listed as attaining about a third grade reading ability.

Census figures are believed to have grossly understated the actual amount of illiteracy, for the census lists as illiterate only those who admit that they cannot read or write anything, in any language. If WPA classes attained only a third grade reading ability, they may still be classed as illiterate, for it is usually held that one must have at least a sixth grade ability in order to read a newspaper or write a simple letter. Startling figures, far in excess of census totals, were shown as to illiteracy in the draft army of 1917, for the army test was whether a soldier could, without assistance, write a letter home that would pass a military censor.

With the more general introduction of Negro schools, illiteracy is being sharply reduced among Negro youth, but a vast amount exists among those above school age. In many States of the Deep South, rural schools for Negroes are inadequate and attendance laws are not enforced. In the 1930 census, 16.3 per cent of the Negro race was counted as illiterate, the rate running as high as 26.2 per cent in Alabama, and pulling down the average for all States with a large rural Negro population. The highest illiteracy rate, however, is not among the Negroes, but among the Mexicans, where it was 27.5 per cent.

Among foreign born white persons the illiteracy rate for the whole country was 9.9 per cent. In West Virginia and Louisiana the illiteracy rate for foreign born whites in the 1930 census was 19.2 per cent.

Illiteracy in the native born white population for the country as a whole had been reduced by 1930 to 1.5 per cent, with only two-tenths of one per cent for native born whites between 10 and 14 years of age living in cities, a tribute to the modern public school and the school attendance law. Percentages mount with age, and are considerably higher in rural sections, where schools are less accessible, and poor roads prevent operation of school buses. The highest rate in 1930 for native white persons was 8.7 per cent for the rural farm population 65 years of age and older—people who grew up in areas where public schools had not been generally introduced.

WEST VIRGINIA

Tenant Farmer in West Virginia's Hill Was 'Cheatable' Until Taught to Read and Write

ORLANDO, W. Va., July 8.—The following story is the photographer's own. To get the pictures and stories, he had to leave the highways and walk over mountain trails. Here is a story of WPA achievement, of New Deal aid to an isolated and forgotten corner of American.

Daily Worker 7-9-39

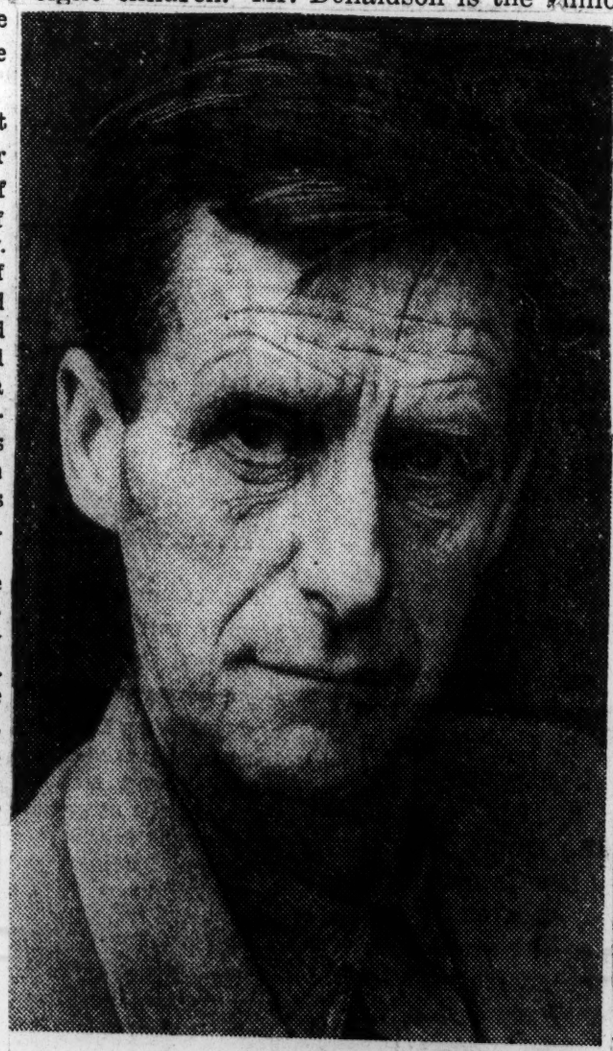
Almost in the geographical center of hilly West Virginia, in a log cabin papered with old newspapers, snow-bound and mud-bound eight months in the year, lives Walter Donaldson and his wife and eight children. Mr. Donaldson is the millionth person who has been taught to read and write by the Education Division of the Works Progress Administration.

To find the log cabin one must leave the highways and walk over mountain trails to Rocky Fork, of Indian Fork, of Sand Fork, of Little Kanawha River. There Mr. Donaldson rents seven acres of the slope of a hill from John and Pat Farrell. He plants corn and potatoes, and since the Farrell brothers also provide him with a team of horses, he pays back one-half of the crop. In previous years when the time came to sign papers his wife had to sign his name for him. Then, says Mr. Donaldson, he was "cheatable."

Also, he was isolated from the outside world. Even in the summer time when the ground is dry the log cabin is hard to reach. Since only trucks with double wheels and chains can reach it, some of the younger Donaldson children have never seen a passenger automobile. Neither have they seen a movie nor heard a radio. They have learned of these things down at the little one-room grade school at Rocky Fork.

THE SCHOOLHOUSE IS FULL

Now the adults are learning, too, and at night there is a light shining in the schoolhouse windows and lanterns can be seen swinging down the hills as men and women come to attend the WPA Adult School. Claude Heater, who is the teacher, used to think he would have to close the school in the late spring when there was farming to be done. But such has been the interest in the new found world of books and newspapers that the attendance has not varied through the year.



—Harris and Ewing

Walter Donaldson, of Orlando, West Virginia, the millionth man to learn to read and write under the New Deal's WPA Adult Education Project. "I'm not cheatable any more," Donaldson says. "I can sign my own name and I know what I'm buying."

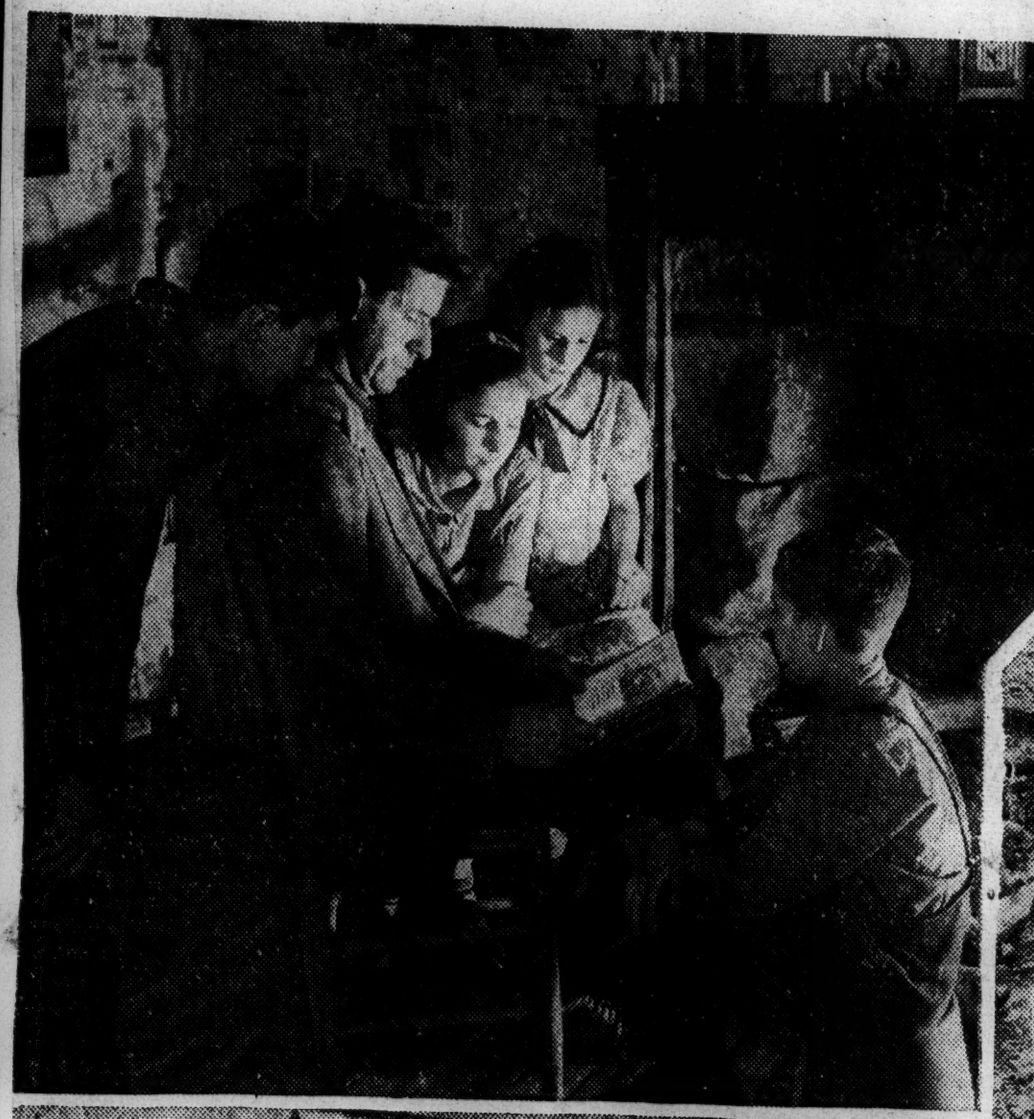
The census of 1930 revealed that there were in this country some four and a quarter million illiterates. As a result of the Federal Government's relief programs, the campaign materially to reduce this number has been greatly accelerated. Mississippi, Virginia, North Carolina, Colorado and New Mexico have announced that they hoped with the aid of the WPA to abolish illiteracy within their borders in time for the 1940 census. The Governor of Georgia announced that his state would try to "head the list of states in literacy when the next census is taken, instead of ranking in twentieth place as now."

The WPA Adult Education program supplements the programs of the various states, and is sponsored by official educational bodies of those states. In West Virginia, where the millionth literacy student has been discovered, the sponsor is W. W. Trent, the State Superintendent of Free Schools.

The million people who have been helped by WPA teachers to become literate are scattered throughout the entire nation. They are not only highlanders such as Mr. Donaldson, who began to wrest a living from the mountain soil so early in life, that, as he says, he "never found time for book-learning." They also include Negroes in the South, Indians and Mexicans in the Southwest. In larger industrial and manufacturing centers there are immigrants, some of whom have lived here many years with their brought-over languages, customs and living habits still unchanged. These have been taught to read and write and speak English.

About five thousand WPA teachers have been employed in this literacy and Americanization work. They have all been taken from the relief rolls. Mr. Donaldson's teacher, Claude Deater, first taught at the Rocky Fork School when he was eighteen years old. Now, thirty-five years later, after a career during which at one time he was county superintendent of high schools, he is again teaching in his first school. His work with mountain literacy classes has been so successful that recently he has been appointed supervisor of the county's WPA Recreation and Adult Education projects.

America Forgot Walter Donaldson's 7 Acres; WPA Came Along and Opened Up a New World



War on Illiteracy One of New Deal's Great Achievements

WPA has built roads using their own quarry to finish crushed rock for a new farm-to-market highway. Donaldson works on this project. To get to his cabin you have to learn the mountain trails. Donaldson's family is shown gathered in the cabin in upper left hand photo.

NOTES ON SELMA AND DALLAS

Over in Dallas county, at Richmond, is the Streit Manual Training School for Negroes, headed by Prof. Manuel Brown who has directed it these 20 years. He has a dozen teachers under his direction. Some time ago the school plant was destroyed by fire, but an even better plant is now replacing the old one. The remarkable thing about the new building project is that the architect's intricate plans are being put into force by the students of the Streit school. Uncle Sam is paying them for the work and also paying their board. Selma friends of The Advertiser say that the students are doing a good job and that Dallas county will be proud of the new school plant when it is completed.

Prof. Brown, the principal, was educated at Tuskegee Institute and the Washington-Moton tradition of manual training is being carried on by him in Dallas, a typical Black Belt county of the Deep South. It is privately endowed, but receives support from the State, and now it receives aid from the federal government. The Advertiser is assured that the Streit school is doing a splendid work and is popular in good old Dallas.

NAMING OUR NEGRO SCHOOLS

The Advertiser is permitted to print the following interesting, self-explanatory letter from Miss Margaret Beard of Oak Park, Ill., to Mr. E. T. Davis, president of the Montgomery County Board of Education.

217 North Grove Avenue,
Oak Park, Ill., Sept. 9,1939.

Mr. Davis,
Chairman of "The Montgomery County Board of Education,"
Montgomery, Ala.
Dear Sir:

During the summer an article from "The Montgomery Advertiser" was sent to me entitled "New Buildings House Negro Schools." I was very much interested in reading it and knowing of the progressive work being done. It also, seemed to me a pleasant way to name these schools after both White and Negro citizens who have been helpful in the cause of education.

As I was one of the principals of the former "Montgomery Industrial School," (the late Miss Alice L. White being associated with me) I want to thank you and your board for naming two schools after us, thus perpetuating our names in the good work of educating the people. Lillian Dabney was one of our graduates.

Thinking you might be away during vacation, I waited till now to send you this word.

May I ask you please, to make a correction as you may have opportunity when you report on the opening of schools about this time? That is, that the Montgomery Industrial School was not under the auspices of "The American Missionary Association." Miss White and I established the school in 1886 with our own money, first renting, later buying property for its use, held by a private board of trustees, of whom the late Dr. Hastings H. Hart (who visited Montgomery a number of times in the interests of prisons under the Department of Penology of "The Russell Sage Foundation" of New York) was one, with four other prominent men. The money for carrying on the school we raised from churches and friends in the North, never owing a cent to anyone. It grew to the number of 350 Negro girls and a faculty of 12 women. The course of instruction included kindergarten, the grades and junior high school, the industries of cooking, sewing, house-work, home-nursing, chair caning, weaving, basketry; also religious instruction, in all ways seeking to build up character. A goodly number of our graduates are teachers of your city and county schools and have held their positions for years.

I am asking you to correct the mistake in The Advertiser if possible, as the paper has stated three times that our school was under "the American Missionary Association" (although I wrote to correct it). This puts us in a false light among the people because in the 41 years we were there, it was spoken of as our private school. In 1927 we were obliged to discontinue our work and we gave the property to the "American Missionary Association."

(MISS) H. MARGARET BEARD.

THIS DATE
In Alabama History

BY W. J. BOLES

Realizing the necessity of educating the youth of Alabama, both white and Negroes, William E. Benson, native Alabamian and graduate of Howard University, Washington, and Harvard University, established the Kowaliga Academy and Industrial Institute for the Colored Race at Kowaliga, his birthplace, in 1896. It opened for the first term in the Fall of 1897.

Kowaliga, site of an Indian town, is in Elmore County, 35 miles from Montgomery, in a section where there is a large Negro population.

Money for the first building was contributed by 70 Negroes whom Benson had interested in the institution and subsequently other buildings were provided through contributions from white people in Alabama and elsewhere.

The institution was chartered by the Legislature with John J. Benson, Solomon Robinson, Miss Emily Howle, Mrs. J. L. Kaine, Jackson Robinson, C. J. Calloway and W. E. Benson as trustees.

The charter provided that the "school shall be an institution of learning of high grade," and that "no one but a professional educator of Christian character, known ability and successful experience shall be eligible to the office of president," and that "it shall be a religious industrial center, within reach of hundreds of energetic young men who will never be able to leave the farm and go any great distance away from home to get an education."

Sparta School Advances Despite Poor Equipment

Negro Students Eager for Education; Miss Myrick Finds Singing Impressive

By SUSAN MYRICK

Two in a desk they sat, little colored boys and giirls, watching the teacher with earnest faces in which dark eyes shone with eagerness; for they were "saying their lesson" for a visitor.

The autumn sunshine streamed in through the windows, undimmed byed any shades. It made patterns across desks which bore evidences of long wear, desks from which much varnish was gone and on which were crudely carved many initials and more irregular notches. But the little Negroes didn't mind squinting their eyes against the sun, nor notched desks with seats so high little legs dangled in a way that cut off circulation. They weren't used to anything any better and, anyway, teacher was telling them about a strange place called a zoo.

The reading lesson finished, the children sang in high-pitched sweet voices but with the same earnest looks on their little faces; education is such a serious business.

The visitor was about to leave and a little girl in a stiffly-starched calico raised her hand. Could she, now, teacher; was it time, now? Teacher nodded and the little girl hastened to the back of the room where she took a bunch of shining yellow marigolds from a vase, wrapped the stems carefully in a piece of paper and hurried to the front of the room where she swallowed hard as if to say something but changed her mind and presented the flowers to the visitor with a little curtsy.

Teaches Manners

With Anna S. Ingraham, principal of the school, I walked on to the next room in the rambling old house that shelters the Sparta Agricultural and Industrial Institute for Colored Students. In every room it was the same—fresh, young dark-skinned children, eager-eyed, clean, anxious to learn; pitifully inadequate equipment, no shades, dilapidated blackboards, two children to a desk and most of the seats too large or too small, but progress being made just the same.

People in Sparta will tell you that Anna Ingraham, like her late husband, Linton Stephens Ingraham, teaches the school children "manners," and it must be true. The boys and girls in the school, from youngest to eldest, were "mannerly."

There are now 181 pupils in the school, including the 14 boarding students, and the grades are from one through 11. A little state and county aid help Anna to carry on the work which she is trying to do, following in the footsteps of her late husband. Linton Stephens had a vision of education for his people and he was determined to teach the Negro children even as his "Marster Linton Stephens" had taught him way back in the days just after the War Between the States.

It was in 1910 that Stephens opened first the doors of the little school for Negro children. Since that time the school has acquired 213 acres of land, 46 of which they work to provide food for the boarding students, the teachers and the animals of the farm.

There are far too few cows and hogs on the little farm, but it is not because the agricultural teacher doesn't know better. There is so little money with which to build fences and one can't raise cows or hogs without fences. But slowly and steadily the farm is making headway. I looked at the farm mules and found them fat and well-cared for.

In the little shop where the vocational teacher shows his charges how to work with hammer, saw and plane, the equipment is little better than that of the classrooms. But the boys are learning how to use tools. Under the direction of the instructor the dozen high-school-age boys are putting up a new building for the school's lunch room. At present, the students eat in a back room, which is also the kitchen, just behind the classroom for primary grades.

The home economics department is best equipped of all the school. Clean and neat as the finest kitchen you ever saw, the little room has a large wood-burning cook stove, plenty of shelves, desks (made by the boys at the school) and a fair number of the bowls, pots and pans necessary for the cooking lessons. The girls can cook, too. They presented me with some hot rolls and a jar of jelly which they had made and the cook who made those was allright.

Many of the older pupils, Anna Ingraham says, come to school from 9 to 2, then they go to their jobs. Some of the children work in the morning and come to school at ten. In other words, Anna strives to make the schedule elastic in order that any child who wants schooling can get it at whatever hour she may be able to come.

Singing Appealing

Like most of their race, the Negroes, large and small, in the Sparta Agricultural and Industrial school like to sing. Led by one of the teachers, the assembled pupils sang for us, Swing Low Sweet Chariot, Steal Away and other spirituals. There were several good soprano voices that scored high above the others, poignant in their sweetness, and there were good baritones and basses among the boys.

I looked about the ill-equipped, ramshackle building and thought it was no wonder the spirituals of the Negro stay ever fresh. The younger generation removed almost 75 years from actual slavery, have yet a heavy burden to bear and it is natural for them to sing with James Weldon Johnson, Negro poet:

"God of our weary years,
"God of our silent tears,
"Thou who hast brought us thus far on the way;
"Thou who hast by Thy might
"Led us into the light,
"Keep us forever in the path, we pray."

Discontinuation Of Ga. College Studied

ATHENS, Ga.—(SNS)—The Georgia board of regents Wednesday considered a recommendation to discontinue the Forsyth teachers and agricultural college and acquire instead the Fort Valley Industrial and Normal school.

The recommendation was made by Dean Walter D. Cocking, of the University of Georgia, who directed for the regents a survey into higher education for colored Georgians.

It is reported that no action has been taken toward effecting the recommendation, but that serious study is being given probable methods of making such a change in institutions.

Three institutions for colored are operated by Georgia. Besides the Forsyth institution, there are Georgia State College, at Savannah, a four-year school, and Georgia Normal and Agricultural school, at Albany, which is a two-year institution like Forsyth.

Fort Valley Normal is a private institution under auspices of the Episcopal church and was founded and headed until his death by the late Prof. H. A. Hunt. It was described by Dean Cocking as "ideally situated" to handle educational needs of central colored Georgians.

Holmes, Educator, Urges Negro Farm Training

Dr. B. R. Holmes, president of the Holmes Institute, in a speech delivered at emancipation exercises Monday in Lithonia, urged the Southern negro farmer to devote more of his time to raising crops that will supply needs on the farm.

Speaking before a large gathering of negroes, Holmes declared "an education which does not teach you how to become owners of farms and homes and skilled in industrial pursuits of life is money and time not properly invested."

FORD BUILDING BIG SCHOOL FOR NEGROES

Principal J. W. Hubert Visits Bryan Area.

By invitation of some residents President J. W. Hubert of Beach-Cuyler High School circled certain areas of the large Ford plantation in Bryan county Wednesday. The party had been invited especially to inspect the partly finished new negro consolidated school which Mr. Ford is constructing for the colored people in his plantation area. Principal Hubert said the building is quite commanding in its frontage and size. About ten class rooms and extra office fixtures. He understood other industrial and technical units would follow the main building, making a considerable plant. Some eight schools are in the area to be served. There is a heavy colored population constantly increasing because of the fine residential and employment opportunities on the varied Ford farm activities.

Contact was made with scores of residents who were enthusiastic over their future there. Persons of special farm interest were Will Slocum, head of the new basketry and weaving unit recently created; his assistant, William T. Bryan, and the Ford supervisor of school gardens, John S. Mullineau. Edward F. Taylor of the technical division TVA Norris Dam, Knoxville, Tenn., was a member of the survey party with Principal Hubert.

Large Crowd Witnesses Dickerson Dedication Rites

By H. J. P. Robeson

Dedication exercises of Dickerson Training School, of which Prof. James DeWitt Dickerson is principal, were held in the auditorium of the building at eleven o'clock Friday. Noted educators, business and professional men and women, both white and colored, from this and various sections of the state gathered in large numbers to witness the occasion and take part in the program.

Superintendent Bela A. Lancaster of the LaGrange Public Schools and President Benj. F. Hubert of Georgia State College, Savannah, delivered main addresses. The latter delivered the dedication address.

Other speakers were Mayor D. C. Harris, of the City of Vialia; Dr. L. H. Darby, chairman of the city board of education; Supt. C. E. Lancaster, of the City Schools, Vidalia; Dr. J. C. Brewton, representing the ministerial organizations of the city, and Mr. Donald G. Nichols, assistant state administrator of WPA, Savannah; Miss Odee A. Wilson and H. J. P. Robeson made a welcome address and gave a historical sketch of the school respectively. Miss Annie L. Durden represented the colored P-TA.

The dedication of this building, a $50,000 modern equipped magnificent brick structure was the relization of the dreams of its principal, who has served as head of the institution for 35 years.

While addressing the audience, Supt. B. A. Lancaster, under whose administration the erection of this building began, said among many things, "Nothing can give greater satisfaction than having accomplished the work that should be done. Teach people to know better in order to do better," was his keynote.

"If Georgia is to be elevated we must teach people to not rest on your laurels because this is just the beginning," he warned.

He pointed out that Vidalia is what it is because of her churches and schools as well as the spirit that exists among the people here. We ought not be satisfied with our health, economic education and moral conditions as they exist for there is room for improvement throughout Georgia.

President Hubert spoke from the subject, "A Debt of Love of Helping People to Help Themselves." Among many thing he said "What we need is a good common sense program and we must be able to tie up theory with practice. We must learn to work and live in Georgia." He further emphasized that we must have in the south that liberty of spirit as is shown by the white people of Vidalia. We must find men and women who can serve and we must help them as is exemplified in this little village.

President Hubert highly lauded Prof. Dickerson for service rendered here. He gave special mention of his beautiful home and the pretty green hedges that surround it.

The presentation of keys was made by Mr. Donlad G. Nichols to Mayor Harris. He said that the WPA was not as bad as painted. Recently 72 classrooms and 600 miles of public roads for school children have been completed and 5 buildings are now under construction, and men have been given employment.

After receiving the keys Mayor Harris then turned them over to Prof. Dickerson. Many telegrams and letters were received. A few were read from the following: Miss Gay B. Shepperson, State Administrator, WPA, Atlanta, Georgia; Dr. D. D. Crawford, Executive Secretary of General Bapist Association of Georgia, Atlanta; R. L. McDugal, State Housing Authority Advisor; R. L. Cousins, Director of the Division of Negro Education of Georgia.

Mayor D. C. Harris and Dr. L. H. Darby made special mention of Rube Tolbert and the board of trustees of Dickerson Training School for their loyal support during erection of building as well as during the years.

All speakers complimented Prof. Dickerson for his long years of service rendered here. The same was also accorded his wife, Mrs. G. P. Dickerson.

NEGRO EDUCATOR WILL BE HONORED

Sandersville and Washington County to Pay Tribute to T. J. Elder Today

(Telegraph's Georgia News Service)

SANDERSVILLE, April 20 — Sandersville and Washington county will pay honor Friday to T. J. Elder and his wife, Lyllian P. Elder, who are rounding out 50 years as superintendent and teacher in the Sandersville school for Negro children.

The tribute will be part of the program of the annual field day for all Negro schools of the county, which will be held at the T. J. Elder high and industrial school. Literary contests will be held in the morning and athletic contests in the afternoon. After the dinner hour, the citizens program will begin.

County School Superintendent C. A. Shealy, W. A. Bell, treasurer of the city board of education, W. M. Goodwin, chairman of the school board, and Mayor J. B. Wall Jr. will be among the white speakers who will honor the Elders.

When Elder and his wife came to Sandersville the school for their fellow colored citizens was conducted in the Negro Baptist church. After three years there, the school was moved to the Negro Methodist church, where 150 pupils were enrolled during the next seven years.

Big Campus Now

Elder then solicited funds from white and Negro citizens, bought a tract of land in the southwest section of the city, and the building of a wooden school house was begun. The school's present campus has grown to five and one-half acres. In 1927, work was begun on a brick veneer building for the school. Public subscriptions and money from the Rosenwald fund began the building, and the city voted $5,000 in bonds to finish paying for the new structure, which has six classrooms and an auditorium.

In 1938, the city school board secured a federal grant and a bond issue together amounting to $150,000 to build a new school for white children and to add six classrooms to the Negro school.

Named for Elder

First named Sandersville High and Industrial school, a resolution by the city board of education and the city changed the school's name to the T. J. Elder High and Industrial school in 1933.

The school has 11 grades, a home economics department where girls are taught sewing and cooking, a shop where boys learn carpentering and other trades, and a department of vocational agriculture, where boys are taught improved farm methods. A total of 550 Negro children are now enrolled at the school.

Elder was educated at Atlanta University, Cook county Normal school in Chicago, Morgan Park Military Academy in Chicago, Fisk University in Nashville, and at Hampton Institute. His wife attended Spellman College in Atlanta, Tuskegee, Fisk, and Boston Academy.

When the able educator went to Sanders ville 50 years ago the school was held i a church building with a small number o students. After three years the school wa moved to a larger church building.

Professor Elder then solicited funds from white and Negro citizens and bought a trac of land and the building of a wooden schoo was begun. The present campus has nov grown to five and a half acres.

In 1927 work was begun on a brick schoo building. Public subscriptions and money fron the Rosenwald fund made possible the begin ning of construction and the city issued bond in the sum of 5 thousand dollars to carr it to completion.

In 1938 the board of education secured federal grant and with the proceeds of bond issue, which together amounted to 15 thousand dollars, built a school for white chil dren and enlarged the Negro high school b the addition of six class rooms.

In the course of time the work of the princi pal was recognized to the extent that the in stitution was named the T. J. Elder High an Industrial School. Classes for girls includ instruction in cooking and sewing while car penter work and farming are among th courses for boys.

It would be difficult to estimate the ful value of the work and the influence whic have come to the rising generation of Ne groes in Washington county during the hali century of devoted and efficient service Pro fessor Elder and his wife have given to this undertaking. There has never been any lack of appreciation on the part of the general public, but this special celebration in their honor on this golden anniversary is a gracious and timely gesture in which the entire state joins.

Worthy of Support

In 1930 the Rev. J. T. Saxon, one of the ablest leaders of the Negro race in Georgia, founded the Memorial Training School for the purpose, as he phrased it, "of helping the poorest of the poor—girls, boys and young adults—who have been forced out of school to become bread hunters."

This was the realization of a dream he had entertained from young manhood and we may imagine the zeal and industry with which he would naturally carry forward this labor of love.

At the passing of his son, the three thousand dollars which his parents had saved for his education, together with one thousand dollars insurance on his life, was put into this institution as a memorial to him.

Leading white citizens, seeing the efforts he and his wife were making had every earmark of sound service, came to their assistance and aided in the erection of a two-story brick building on the site where the school is now being conducted.

This school is fairly well equipped, having departments for cooking and sewing, brick-laying and carpentry work, printing and homemaking. There are three other rooms not now used, but kept for other trades which may be introduced later.

The cost of operating the institution, which is entirely charitable, is approximately $2,400 a year, all of which is raised by voluntary donations.

The institution lays special stress on honesty, cleanliness courtesy and the dignity of labor, with good relations between employer and employe. It serves as an employment bureau where trained workers may be secured and no person is recommended for any job who cannot produce a health certificate.

The institution's plant is paid for, but the founder is now making his annual solicitation of funds for supplies, for food used in demonstration work and to pay the teaching force. It is also planned to build a community around the school where the students may be housed and to let the rent go for the pay of teachers. This community center will give poor people of the Negro race an opportunity to live in good homes at low cost.

The work of Memorial Training School has been given the strongest endorsement by outstanding citizens of both races and by experts in vocational education.

The Telegraph and News takes pleasure in giving its warm endorsement to this undertaking and hopes that the necessary funds for its operation will be promptly forthcoming.

Demonstrations Feature Program At Piney Woods

D'LO—(Special)—The commencement program at Piney Woods school for negroes started Tuesday, April 25, and will continue through May 4. As has been the school custom for several years, commencement activity will consist of a series of demonstrations by students of what they have learned while in school, rather than speeches.

Piney Woods specializes in training negro teachers.

Dean Robert L. Jack announces that 11 high school diplomas will be presented and ten students will graduate from the junior college department. Laurence C. Jones is principal of the school.

Rankin Negro Has Part In Establishment Of Piney Woods School

The following is a brief sketch of a Rankin county negro, who gave forty acres of land and $50 in cash toward the original establishment of Piney Woods school, where hundreds of negro boys and girls have since been educated:

Rev. Edward Nelson Taylor was born in Rankin county in 1862. Born a slave, his chances for an education were poor, yet he was interested in education and accomplished a great deal to help his people. He was the founder and pastor of Taylor Hill Baptist church, which bears his name. He believed in hard work, and was a successful farmer. During the time that Prof. Laurence C. Jones was attempting to build an industrial school for the education for negroes, Rev. Taylor was a staunch supporter. He gave the first 40 acres of land and $50.00 in money to begin Piney Woods school. Not willing to stop there, he gave his manual services and loaned money to help the school from time to time. He served as trustee of the school until his health failed. He was respected by both races as an honest, upright man.

Bordentown, Former Shack, Now $2,000.000 Institution

By EUSTACE GAY

From a shack on the Parnell estate a little over 53 years ago, the Manual Training School for Colored Youth at Bordentown, N. J., has now grown to an institution worth $2,000,000.

Its campus of thirty acres is one of the most beautiful in the East. The numerous buildings which have taken the place of the one-room shack have been designed by nationally famous architects in keeping with New Jersey's exacting standards.

Vocational Courses

There, 450 students of both sexes, about evenly divided, may take courses leading to diplomas and certificates in junior and senior high school and vocational studies.

The students are carefully selected and for them it is not "all work and no play"; since in addition to the formal training they receive, there is a properly supervised social and recreational life. Inter-class and varsity athletics are promoted and military drill is required of all boys as part of their work in physical education.

Founded In 1886

The school originated in the mind of an A.M.E. clergyman, Rev. Wm. A. Rice, in 1886. He and those who followed him struggled along manfully until 1894, when the State of New Jersey made its first appropriation of $2,000.

Today's the school's annual income is nearly $220,000, one-third of which is derived from fees paid by the students.

Competent Faculty

The principal is Dr. W. R. Valentine, who has been at the helm since 1915. Associated with him is a faculty, on which are represented graduates from the nation's leading institutions, both white and colored, with at least two holders of the Phi Beta Kappa key among them.

I visited the institution last Friday, in company with representatives from several other newspapers. The trip was a revelation. I saw the Holstein herd, one of the best in the United States. The tree bulls have been rated among the nation's best.

"Cows Must Eat," I Learn

Farming is engaged in on a large scale. I displayed my ignorance of farm life when I asked if any farming was done, despite the fact that before asking that question I had been shown 75 cattle. Dr. Valentine, who was our guide, laughed good-naturedly as he reminded me that the herd had to be fed.

The present plant is inadequate. Numbers of applicants are turned away each year. The auditorium is just large enough for the student body.

The students lead a normal life. They get plenty to eat. Their surroundings are of the best, and decent home life is duplicated for them at the school, with its entertainment rooms, well kept dormitories, etc.

Graduates Get Work

The principal spoke with pardonable pride of the ability of Bordentown graduates to get work, even during the depression. Ninety-two per cent of last year's graduates are either in school or working. His explanation was that they learned how to work at Bordentown.

The campus has established a reputation as a national and community center. Each year organizations, both white and colored, use the grounds and some of the buildings for their gatherings.

Other newsmen present were: C. L. Bernardo and Melvin Johnson, of the New Jersey Guardian; L. H. Henegan of the Washington Tribune; Levi Jolley, Leon Snead and George B. Murphy, Sr., of the Afro-American; and Dr. Marc Moreland of the New Jersey Herald-News.

NEGRO SCHOOL OBSERVES ITS FOUNDERS DAY

—o—

"Using the things we have today to make the world a better place tomorrow was the theme of the message which Mrs. Mae E. Campbell, state director of women's and professional projects of the WPA, delivered to the audience assembled in the Johnston County Training School auditorium Friday afternoon.

The occasion was the second annual Founders Day celebration and the assemblage included not only students of the training school but patrons and Negro leaders in the community and from a distance but white friends.

"Youth today has the greatest opportunity in history," declared Mrs. Campbell, and she urged that youth make the most of it. She asserted boys and girls who are thinking for themselves, who crave knowledge, who do not hold prejudices, have the world before them, and she asked: will they leave it better?

Mrs. Campbell was presented by Mrs. T. J. Lassiter, editor of the Herald.

Dr. C. W. Furlonge, an official of the Negro Community League, presided. Early in the program he introduced Rev. H R. Holt, of Durham, who was head of the school sponsored by the Negro Johnston Baptist Association when it consolidated with the state supported school in 1921. He reviewed briefly the work of the founders of the school.

The music on this occasion was directed by J. A. Bridges, a member of the training school faculty, and both the elementary and high school choruses and the boys group sang arrangements, new and old, of Negro spirituals that delighted those present. The music was dedicated to Mrs. Campbell, the honor guest of the afternoon.

The committee raising funds to lift the debt on the vocational and recreational projects at the school reported over $80 in hand and every effort is being made to clear the debt by January 15.

REPAIR OF BURNED GYM IS LAUNCHED

Repair of the burned gymnasium on the campus of the Johnston County Training School has begun, with J. P. Rogers, local contractor, in charge of the work.

Damage to the building, one of the main units in a community center development for Johnston county Negroes, amounted to approximately $2,000. The loss was fully covered by insurance.

An error in the Herald's account of the fire published Friday has been called to the attention of the editors. The fire started from the office of the recreation supervisor, Leonard Sanders, instead of the office of the training school's athletic director, Howard Wilson, as reported. Wilson has had no office in the building, but maintains an office in his class room at the school.

The recreation supervisor lost in the fire all records of recreational activities accumulated during the past three years. He lost also an office desk, two chairs and a borrowed typewriter.

COLLEGE HEAD TO SPEAK AT NEGRO SCHOOL PROGRAM

—o—

The Johnston County Training School will observe its 17th anniversary Sunday afternoon at 3 o'clock in the school auditorium. The public is invited to attend this special program.

Dr. F. D. Bluford, president of A. and T. College, Greensboro, will deliver the main address. He will be introduced by M. L. Wilson, principal of the Four Oaks Negro school.

Special music will be rendered by both the senior and junior choruses at the school. Recently the senior chorus appeared in recital before students, faculty and friends at A. and T. College and at North Carolina College for Negroes at Durham.

Dr. Bluford, a veteran educator, is widely known as head of one of the state's most progressive Negro institutions.

"The meeting Sunday afternoon offers an opportunity to see and hear a man who rivals the best in Negro leadership in the state," declared W. R. Collins, principal of Johnston County Training School, in announcing the anniversary program.

"Notwithstanding the discontinuance of the junior college department at the last moment," said Dr. Charlotte Hawkins Brown, president, "Palmer Memorial institute must turn away students seeking entrance to the junior and senior high school departments. The institution has returned with new emphasis to its former program of college preparatory and vocational training."

Students have enroled from Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, Florida, Michigan, Illinois, Iowa, Oklahoma, Massachusetts, Connecticut, Maine, Colorado, New York, New Jersey, Alabama, Maryland, Pennsylvania, Missouri, California, District of Columbia and Canal Zone.

Rehearsals for the annual Fall Music festival have already begun.

Each year, it was announced, the school gives 10 "whole work scholarships" to industrious, ambitious young negroes in North Carolina, preferably from the rural districts and small towns, gifts of local friends of Palmer having proved a vital factor in making such scholarships possible.

NEGROES OPEN NEW BUILDING

Vocational Training Building Is Dedicated

By HOWARD BARNHILL

Grimesland, N. C.—The new Agriculture Vocational building was dedicated at Pitt County Training school Friday, September 22, with J. W. Mitchell, Negro district agent of agriculture in North Carolina, as the principal speaker. Others appearing on the program were Mrs. M. M. Gaylord, local NYA supervisor; D. H. Conley, superintendent of Pitt county schools; S. B. Simmons, state spervisor of vocational agriculture; John A. Lang, head of the NYA activities of the state; Hugh Evans, supervisor of NYA activities of this district; M. Robinson of Washington, Prof. P. S. Jones of Washington, Principal Carr of Grimesland white high school Golden Roland of Ayden, and E. C Setzer, head of vocational agriculture here. O. A. Dupree, principal of the school, was master of ceremonies.

The subject of Mitchell's address was "Building a Streamlined Rural Community." He made reference to a certain community in the state that was once inhabited by prosperous Negro farmers, but their children went to college and chose other fields. Now most of the land is owned by someone else; there, he said that the children should return to the farm and take care of their parents' investments.

Mitchell based his speech on five major points: First was intelligence. He asserted that to be a prosperous farmer you must be able to appreciate information. In order to receive this knowledge, the children must be trained in school. Mitchell said that too many times families invest their money in land and neglect education.

Thrift was the next point. Every individual should be willing to work. After working they should make the best possible investments with their income. He stressed the importance of co-operation and ownership in the community. We, as a race, have not realized the importance of ownership.

Mitchell urged the community to develop leaders. He said that in every prosperous home, school or community there are leaders or outstanding individuals.

S. S. Simmons responded to the address given by Mitchell, saying. "Don't complain about what you don't have, but use what you have." J. A. Lang urged the parents to teach their children to save their money, and try to be the best in whatever they attempt to do. He also told the people that they should work to make their school one of the best in the state. Superintendent Conley said that the vocational students should make the best use of their tools.

The music was furnished by the school's choral society. They sang "You Are Going to Reap Just What You Sow," "The Bells of Shandon," "Is There Anybody Here?" and "Go, Mary, and Toll the Bell." The P.-T. A., which played a major part in making arrangements for the program, served a delicious dinner to the visitors.

Suggest Downingtown Industrial School As Pennsvlvania's "Tuskegee"

State Control Urged By GOP Youth Leader

Vocational Training Is Imperative Need Of Our Youth, Hicks Says

"Downingtown Industrial School at Downingtown, Pa., could be to this State as Tuskegee is to Alabama," says Gordon B. Hicks, chairman of the Young Republicans of Pennsylvania in a letter to the TRIBUNE.

"The educational problem of the Negro in Pennsylvania has come to the point today where he must seek other courses of training to meet conditions that confront him," Hicks said, in urging more youth to seek vocational training rather than most of them tackling the costly professional courses.

"Here in Pennsylvania the Negro has a few schools where he can attend and secure vocational training, but these schools are in need of improvement," he writes. "Downingtown Industrial School is one of these and it could be made into one of the finest of its kind in the country. I believe that it would be a landmark for the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania if the State legislative bodies would pass legislation authorizing the State to purchase this school and equip it with modern equipment and to care for its maintenance."

Hicks said that many states were passing legislation which required teachers in their schools to be trained in their State. "This kind of legislation prevents Pennsylvania trained teachers from teaching in those States. With Downingtown's enlargement and under State endowment many of these teachers could be cared for," he concluded.

CLINTON COLLEGE PREXY APPEALS FOR AID IN DRIVE TO RAISE FUNDS

ROCK HILL, S.C.—(HNS)—An urgent appeal to persons of all faiths to rally to the support of Christian education was made here last week by Acting President Edward Warner Brice of Clinton Normal & Industrial College. The institution, maintained by the A.M.E. Zion Church is filling a definite need in the field of education for Negroes and deserved the wholehearted support of all persons.

Prof. Brice who recently assumed his new position is a graduate of Tuskegee Institute. He did post graduate work at the University of Pennsylvania and has had considerable experience as an administrator and teacher. It is his hope that sufficient funds will be raised in order to establish a much-needed agricultural project.

Clinton College is located in a section of South Carolina which affords abundant opportunities for development in the field of agriculture. At the present time a Junior College department which prepares the student for teaching, is well maintained by a highly trained faculty. The high school department is also composed of teachers well prepared in various fields. The Institution founded in 1894, has made significant growth.

OF 22 SECRETARIES TO DEPARTMENT HEADS, ONLY 5 ARE COLORED

By JOHN JASPER

Differences between students of Hampton Institute and President Arthur Howe reached a breaking point last May and the president threatened to call off the commencement exercises.

A petition signed by 528 students was sent to the board of trustees May 26, and a sub-committee of two held hearings on the campus.

On July 19, the whole board in a letter to students announced that a committee had been named to consider their grievances.

Four Demands Made

Subsequently, August 4th the Student Committee reiterated four points which they considered unsettled.

1. Free speech and abandonment of the "hush-hush" policy
2. Competent teachers
3. A colored dean of women
4. Equalization in number and rank of colored and white personnel.

This series of articles deals with point number four and begins with the question of secretaries, one of the sore points mentioned by Hampton students.

5 Out of 22

When this survey was made, Hampton had 5 colored secretaries to department heads and 17 white secretaries. That is 5 out of 22 secretaries or only 22 per cent of the secretaries are colored.

Secretaries at Hampton are important people. They are all women and frequently act for the heads of departments.

They draw salaries equal to those of instructors in the college.

Difference in Salaries

Among the colored secretaries the highest paid is Charlsetta Yuille, secretary of the Director of Extension. She received $1500 The lowest paid is Minnie Whiting, secretary to the Home Economics Chief and Records office She receives $950.

Among white secretaries, the highest paid is Camile Chazeaud secretary to the Financial Aid Bureau who receives $2300 and the lowest is Mable Drew, secretary to the Business School who receives $650.

The average salary received by colored secretaries is $1240. The average paid white secretaries is $1430.

The total annual salary drawn by these colored secretaries is $6200, by the white secretaries $24,315.

My survey showed the following secretaries to department heads. The figures are not official and may not, therefore be authentic. I believe they approximate the facts and are near enough to indicate the real situation.

Colored Secretaries

Office	Salary
Physical Education	$1000
Director of Music's	1200
Dean of Men's	1550
Home Economics (Records office)	950
Dir. Extension's	1550
Number 5—Total salaries	$6200

White Secretaries

Office	Salary
President's	$1825
Chaplain's	1200
Fin, Aid Bureau	2300
Dir. Phenix School	1200
Registrar's	825
Business School's	650
Trade School's	1320
Dir. Education's	1500
Admissions	1500
Summer School's	2100
Dean of Women's	1500
Phenix School's	1200
Secondary Education	1555
Superintendent's Bldg.	1080
Treasurer's	1500
Librarian's	1760
Number (white)	17
Total pay	$24,315

Since this estimate was made three secretaries have been appointed to fill vacancies and one secretary named to a new department. Of the four, one is colored and three are white. A report states that in one of these cases, the department head laid down the ultimatum— "A white secretary or none." I cannot check this report, but the important thing is that it is a report circulated among the student body.

So far as these recently appointed secretaries are concerned it would appear that no effort was made to equalize the number of white and colored employed as the student body requested.

White dean $3790; Colored $2700

Among their four points, students demanded a colored dean of women, to replace Beulah Van Wagenen. As far as I can learn this office pays $3792. But the dean of men, Major Walter Brown, is paid only $2700. This means a white dean draws $1092 more than a colored dean for the same work.

I repeat, these figures are not official, but I think they approximate the real facts.

What Students Say

Now what is the student reaction to this secretary question? One question they asked me was this: "Why does Hampton have a business college if it cannot train secretaries competent to secure positions at their own alma mater?"

They believe that the white secretaries are graduates of the white Hampton High School (not a college) and that Hampton College graduates should receive the preference.

A Favorite Tale

A favorite tale among students —maybe truth, maybe fiction—is that one white girl, resident of the town of Hampton, when offered a post at $1100 demanded to know whether she would have to speak to colored students.

Another was overheard to tell her friend this: "Neither I or my parents have ever set foot before on this n—— institution across the creek, but a thousand dollars is still a thousand dollars."

"Social Equality"

One student told me that certain administration offices have no colored secretaries in their offices because they may have to meet visitors from the town of Hampton. The school wants the town to know that it doesn't practice "social equality" in its education of colored people. From the school's point of view, she said, it wouldn't do to have a colored dean of women because the dean of women is official hostess to school guests, many of whom are white and "it wouldn't do for a colored person to receive guests."

Rotary Club Issue

Another said, "We have too many white members of the Hampton Rotary and Kiwanis Clubs who think that the way to promote better race relations is to give jobs to the graduates of the Hampton white high school.

"Hampton receives no financial support from the hordes of Southern white people who come to 'see the animals' and are entertained here each year.

"Students open the local Hampton daily any morning and read that Professor X has talked to the Rotary Club on his trip to Mexico or that Director Z of the Institute has addressed the Kiwanis Club on the subject of Educational opportunities in Boston.

"There doesn't seem to be evidence of any attempt to sell the school to the colored communities. Rather does it appear that our faculty is anxious to prove to the white townfolk that in spite of the fact that 'we work over there,' we are good loyal Anglo-Saxons."

HAMPTON IN THE RED FOR NINETEENTH STRAIGHT YEAR

By JOHN JASPER

President Arthur Howe in a letter sent out to Hampton Institute alumni this week announced that it is "not going to be possible" to balance the budget this year. Afro-American

Back in 1936, Hampton reached the point where, to use President Howe's own words, "the members of the board of trustees have instructed me to live within the institute's income." 12-25-39

Nineteen Straight Years

If now again this year the president will not be able to spend less than he takes in, he will present the institute with an unbalanced budget for the nineteenth straight year.

The trustees, indeed, are marvels of patience. Baltimore, Md.

In Defense of Howe

In President Howe's defense it ought to be stated that these nineteen years of unvarying deficits are not all his.

He has been president only since 1930. But in the ten years he has had this office, he has batted 100 per cent to produce one deficit a year, ten in all.

His two predecessors, Dr. J. E. Sugg and Dr. George Phenix contributed the other nine years of going in the red.

The Table

The following table giving the income, expenses and deficits at Hampton for the past nineteen years, show that Hampton hasn't balanced its budget in that period.

Year	Income	Expenditure	Deficit
President Sugg
1922	$430,545	$449,557	$19,011

1939	565,126	642,426	77,30(
1940			Still Minu:

Armstrong-Frissell Tops

General Armstrong was president of Hampton for twenty-five years. In that time, he had only six years in which he overspent his budget.

President Frissell succeeded him, and served for twenty-four years. He was in the red only nine years.

Then came President Gregg, who served eleven years and had ten years of deficits.

President Howe leads all the Presidents with ten years and ten unbalanced budgets.

Last year, President Howe spent $77,300 more than he took in. This was the biggest deficit in the history of the school. No wonder trustees are alarmed as they face a similar prospect for 1940.

Dr. Howe is having as much trouble with Hampton's budget as President Roosevelt is with Uncle Sam's.

Dewey is exhorting Roosevelt to better housekeeping and trustees are doing the same thing to President Howe, apparently without success.

When Will It End?

Perhaps Hampton will be able to end its years of unbalanced budgets at the same time it takes the muzzle off the student press, discontinues Winona Elementary School for the children of white faculty members only; wipes out the color line at Dixie hospital, and hearkens to the students' plea to have a 50-50 bi-racial faculty and administration.

If President Howe would bring these things to pass, what a Christmas gift he would make Hampton Institute!

Inequality Admitted

Afro-American 12-23-39

Dr. Howe admits in his letter to the alumni last week that the present bi-racial make-up of the faculty is inequitable. It took courage for him to make that confession, considering the fact that he has been head of the institution for ten years.

We should like to see him hold fast to that same boldness while he pulls down the color bar at Dixie Hospital or cuts off its $12,500 annual "loan."

That would be one way to reduce his deficits.

Another Saving

Another would be to discontinue Winona School for the children of white faculty members only. That would save $11,428 every year.

Maybe only a resolute college president can do these things, but if Dr. Howe is timid, he can renew his valor by learning here that the saving on these two items alone would be $23,928, a goodly sum to help lift his budget out of the red by Christmas in 1940.

CRITICISM OF HAMPTON

THE CAMPAIGN initiated by the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People to equalize the salaries of public school teachers in the southern and border states has resulted in spotlighting the conditions in several schools of higher learning which have mixed faculties. Foremost among these is Hampton Institute, which has for many years been the outstanding privately supported institution of its type in the country.

The Afro-American has been running a series of articles on conditions at Hampton, pointing out that not only are there fewer colored teachers than whites but also that there is discrimination in favor of the whites in the matter of pay. Hampton officials might point out that originally its entire staff was composed of whites who came largely from the New England states immediately following the Civil War, and that many of these people and their families are still connected with the institution. Also that the transition requires time, and that because the school has been unable to balance its budget for some years it has been unable to equalize the salaries, as much as they may desire to do so.

But on the other hand, we believe that those controlling Hampton have left themselves open to criticism by their handling of the Nurse Training School and Dixie Hospital by catering to the jim crow practices of that section. We also think that Hampton needs more educators and people in touch with the masses on its Board of Trustees, which is at the present time dominated by a few very wealthy men who know little and care less of present day trends among the educated Negroes.

Their principal interest, it seems to us, is to guard the ten million dollar endowment fund of the institution. Men like the late George Foster Peabody whose interest was in every phase of the development of the Negro are sadly missed on the present Trustee Board.

No educators or educational institutions can advocate in theory the equality of education and in practice adopt a discriminatory policy against their own graduates and others who have been trained in the best colleges of the land.

12 COLORED, 30 WHITE TEACH SUMMER SCHOOL

By JOHN JASPER

Hampton's summer school for the year 1936, had 12 colored teachers and 30 white teachers.

The usual ratio in many of the departments at Hampton which I have surveyed is one colored to two whites.

Students Ask 50-50

Because students believed that they should be permitted to enjoy association with fine colored teachers in larger measure, they petitioned the trustees to equalize the number of colored and white persons on the faculty.

The summer school, however goes beyond the two to one ratio mentioned above. Actually only 29 per cent of the faculty that year was colored and 71 per cent was white.

Whites Paid $38 More

The average salary paid colored summer school teachers was $346. For white summer school teachers it was $384.

The differential in favor of white teachers was, therefore, $38, in dollars and cents. Actually, it was much greater.

Only one colored teacher was paid as much as $600. Four white teachers were paid that amount.

Of the remaining teachers, only two colored were paid $400 or over. Seven white teachers were paid $400 or over.

Prof. Knight's Survey

I have taken the year 1936 because that was the year covered by Prof. Edgar W. Knight, white, of the University of North Carolina in his $5,000 survey of Hampton, which alumni know so little about.

This survey was finished two years ago, but I have found prominent alumni of Hampton who never heard of it. The reason is that it is not at all complimentary and exposed many faults in administration and courses of study that needed correction.

For example, the 565 summer school students that year paid less than $13 apiece to attend. Then the summer school took in $8,000, spend $24,000 and wound up with a deficit of $16,000.

Professor Knight raised the question whether the summer school students shouldn't have paid more than $13 apiece for these nine-week courses.

If depreciation in plant is considered, the deficit is still larger than the $16,000 mentioned above. There is wear and tear on buildings for nine weeks to be considered and that is quite an item.

Summer School Faults

Prof. Knight found Hampton's summer school not up to requirements of the Association of American Universities in the matter "of comprehensive oral and written examinations, coherence or interrelationships of programs, and a reading knowledge of a foreign language."

The fact that only one regular member of the Hampton faculty gave instruction in the summer graduate school was called significant by Professor Knight.

Faculty Changing Too Often

He pointed out that practically all graduate summer school teachers come from the outside and that since they may change from year to year, continuation of the students' work may suffer.

Biology laboratories were called adequate but the library inadequate for graduate study.

Sub-Standard

The quality of Hampton's summer school work, according to Professor Knight, is not up to that of the best graduate schools and he recommends that the college should not expand its work on the graduate level unless it can get more money with which to do it.

COLLIS P. HUNTINGTON LIBRARY

By JOHN JASPER

When I began these articles, I did so at the request of Hampton students and fellow alumni who believed their liberties restricted on four points:

1. That the students' right of free speech in their newspaper is ruthlessly suppressed.
2. That race prejudice exists on the campus and can be corrected to some degree if and when there is at least a fifty-fifty division of colored and white persons on the faculty and in administrative positions.
3. That there is a separate Winona School for the education of the children of white faculty members only.
4. That there is jim-crow at Dixie Hospital on the campus, to which Hampton Institute each year contributes $12,500, set down in its annual reports as "a loan."

Hospital Jim Crow Worst

Students feel the hospital racial discrimination far worse because the institute not only supports the hospital in some measure by this loan, but because their school pays one of its physicians $1200 in salary and $320 a year for his residence.

Their contention is that they are entitled to medical attention (for which they are taxed $5 year) without the humiliation of any racial segregation on their own campus.

Retirement List

None of the articles in this series will stray from these four cardinal points.

There is, for example, the retirement list. Estimates, which have been given, show eighteen retired colored Hampton faculty members and workers are paid $12,139 a year or an average of $674.

The retirement list is for white Hampton faculty members and workers shows thirty-four are being paid $30,111, or an average of $885 a year.

Ratio 2 to 1

This retirement list shows what is true in every department of Hampton that I have so far gone into, namely, that there is a salary differential in favor of white teachers because they hold the top salary posts. Secondly, the unvarying rule is that the proportion of white to colored on the faculty as on the retired list is two to one.

In the case of the retirement list, eighteen colored are retired and thirty-four white, which is approximately the two to one ratio.

The list which follows, as far as I have been able to learn, is not complete and is not entirely accurate. It is an estimate because official figures are not available.

How It Is Paid

Hampton, which has a $10,340,000 endowment, sets aside $500,000 for a pension reserve fund which, at 5 per cent, yields $25,000 a year.

For the year 1938, retirement allowances called for $46,832. The difference between this sum and $25,000 left $21,832 which had to come from current funds.

Large Sum

The fact that such a large sum as $21,832 has to come out of current funds for teachers' pensions led Edgar W. Knight, in his survey of the institute in 1937, to say this:

"Very few institutions in the country expend (in proportion) as large amounts (as Hampton) of current funds for retirement purposes.

"This pactice may be justified in the light of the very low salaries that have been paid to the staff at Hampton during their years of service, a condition which has made it impossible for individuals to save for future needs.

Better Plan Suggested

"Thus the institute may be considered under obligation to follow this practice of carrying retired people on pensions.

"In 1923, the institute revised its plan whereby persons who have been engaged since July 1 of that year are not eligible to what is termed the Old Pension Plan, but may voluntarily elect to purchase deferred annuity policies in co-operation with the institute.

"A better plan would probably be for the administration to consider making it compulsory for staff members to enter into a deferred annuity policy with the participation of the institute."

TRADE SCHOOL—COLORED TEACHERS GET THE LITTLE JOBS

Article 2

By JOHN JASPER

Twenty-five colored and 23 white persons are employed as instructors in the Hampton Institute Trade School.

The average salary for the colored teachers is $1728 per year and the average white teachers' salary is $2330 per year.

The difference in favor of the white teachers is $602 a year or $60 a month and may be explained by the fact that the white teachers are the department heads in most cases and the colored are assistants.

Want Salaries Equalized

This is the crux of the whole complaint that Hampton's student committee made in their four-point statement to the student body and trustees August 6.

They requested "equalization in number and in rank of white and colored personnel."

$10,300 More

The total salary paid colored teachers in the trade school is $43,210, white teachers $53,500. The difference in favor of the white teachers is $10,300 although in this case there are 2 fewer white than colored.

Getting down to cases only 3 colored trade teachers get over $2000 and the highest paid men, David Terry, in charge of bricklaying, and Charles Isham, in charge of the electric department, get $2400 each.

15 White—3 Colored

Fifteen white trade teachers get in excess of $2000 a year and six of them get $3000 or more.

Of 18 trade school teachers getting over $2000 a year only three are colored.

The difference between colored and white is even higher than the figures show, because the trade school employs 3 white women as secretaries and assistants, but no colored women.

Earlier employment lists showed Hamilton Nelson (colored) as bookkeeper.

The available unofficial list today shows Helen Mears (white) as bookkeeper.

Colored Bricklayer $2400, White Painter $2700

David Terry in charge of bricklaying has been at Hampton over twenty years. His salary is tops for four colored trade teachers in charge. But Alfred Abboutt, a new man in plumbing, receives $3,700. Paul Conrad in charge of painting earns $2,700; Frank Ladd in charge of printing, $2700; Russell Wolf in charge of carpentry $2500.

The four last named are, like Terry, in charge of departments, but they are white and receive higher pay.

Competent Teachers

One of the four points raised by the student committee was the request for competent teachers.

Rightly or wrongly they believe that trade school teachers should have higher education like other teachers. They point out that Hampton lists no degrees behind teachers' names in the college catalogue because it would embarrass the white teachers who have none.

Teacher with 4th Grade Education

A student joke of hoary vintage is of a trade teacher who got angry when students behind his back whispered that he had only a fourth grade education. "It's a lie, I can prove that I went as far as the sixth grade," he said.

Another tall story is told of a trade school teacher who just learned that aviation will soon be taught at Hampton. He is quoted as saying, "I would rather teach one colored fellow to push a broom than to teach ten to fly."

Let's suppose these students are mistaken about the lack of education of these teachers or their race prejudices. The fact is that they believe their own stories.

Faculty Advice

One student told me a college official told him to overlook such incompetents. He quoted the offical as saying "Well, what difference does it make anyway? Why, when I was in college and came across an incompetent instructor, I did just enough to pass the course and then erased the unpleasant episode from my life."

Here follows a list of unofficial salaries and teachers by race in the trade school. It may not be accurate but I think it approximates the facts. It backs up the student contention that the better paying positions are held by the white teachers. They think that Hampton as a colored school should have a 50-50 break when administrative posts are given out.

But maybe it doesn't matter what they think.

Hampton Expelled Senior for Writing This Article

Afro-American 11-4-39

BACK IN SCHOOL

Pictured here is Hale Thompson, right, Hampton senior, who was expelled and later placed on probation for writing an article in the Hampton Script complaining that Hampton students were jim-crowed at the Dixie Hospital, used this year as a school infirmary. Shaking hands with him is C. Durant, fellow student. Thompson was put on probation for two months. During this time he loses all social privileges and fellowship aid. Social privileges include calling on the young women on the lawns or in the dormitories, attending dances or socials, and escorting co-eds to and from Ogden Hall.

EDITOR'S NOTE: The following article, written by Hale Thompson in the October 7 issue of The Hampton Script, was blamed for his expulsion from Hampton Institute. Following a united student protest, Thompson was reinstated and put on probation.

By HALE THOMPSON

The students' infirmaries have been closed. From now on all ills and ailments — minor or otherwise—will be cared for at the Dixie Hospital.

The questions uppermost in student thoughts are:

"Will this new arrangement give comparable service to the old? Will my health be as well or better cared for than before?" Only the passing of time will enable us to answer these and other questions on this new hospital set-up.

Afro-American 11-4-39

It has been said that the new arrangement has been made in an attempt to save the nursing school and to keep Dixie Hospital open to the colored people of the community.

Further, as long as Hampton has its finger in the Dixie pie, colored nurses will have the opportunity to work at the Dixie Hospital.

Of course they will, as is customary, have the extreme pleasure of working at this segregated hospital for less pay than that received by white nurses and with no hope of advancement.

It seems to me that if Hampton's administration is sincere in its oft-quoted desire to rid the world of racial intolerance, it would not countenance the present set-up at Dixie Hospital. Why should Hampton money be poured into an institution which practices such an undemocratic thing as segregation? I can't answer the question. Ask the administration!

I was reading a little Russian history the other day — just brushing up you know. As my reading progressed, I came to a short summary of the effect the Russian church had on the peasants of that country. It seemed that through the medium of religion the Russian was controlled and kept in "his place." The prospect of heaven was more important, according to the aristocrats of that country, than was enough bread. This observation came to me and, like the liberal guy I am, I pass it on to you.

"Is there any attempt being made in our midst to use the tactics of the Russian Church? Do we have in our midst a Rasputin?"

BRUCE BARTON BECOMES TRUSTEE OF HAMPTON

Founder Praised as New Randolph Shop Goes Up

Miss Virginia Randolph Urges Use of Hands

(Staff Correspondence)

GLEN ALLEN, Va.—Simple but impressive cornerstone laying exercises were held here in the auditorium of the Virginia Randolph School Saturday, April 1, for the new manual training shop which is being erected on the campus of the school.

Through unavoidable circumstances the cornerstone itself was not laid, but will be laid Wednesday, April 5, at 1 p. m.

Tennant Bryan, of the Richmond News Leader, praised Miss Randolph for the work that she has done in the field of vocational education in Henrico County and Virginia. He said, that "It is not what other people have done to help her that has brought her where she is but rather what she has done to help others."

"She has the spirit to help her neighbors to rise above themselves. For all these forty-six years that she has been working, I have never known her when she wasn't thinking of some new way to help her people. I imagine that when she dies that she will die with her boots on, and that her last breath will be used trying to help somebody else."

Mr. Bryan drew a parallel between the Negro and Russia prior to 1905, stating that the race needs artisans to fill the gap between the laborer and the professional.

Mr. Bryan was presented by Mrs. Drinkard Davis, superintendent of public welfare of Henrico County.

MUST USE HANDS

In her remarks Miss Randolph related an experience that she had forty years ago. She said that it was hard to get the interest of the people so finally she got them to Speaking with a voice of emotion she said, "You have got to konw how to use your hands and, if you don't know how to use your hands, you are not yet educated.

Willard Day, manager of Henrico County, was master of ceremonies. Dr. Fred M. Alexander, supervisor of Negro education, was also present and gave brief remarks.

The Family Four Quartet, a group of girls sang several numbers while the band from the Virginia Manual Training School played several numbers.

71ST ANNIVERSARY TO BE OBSERVED BY SCHOOL TODAY

Dr. F. D. Patterson, Presiden of Tuskegee, to Speak On Program At 2:15 At Hampton Institute

A program commemorating the 71st anniversary of the founding of Hampton institute will be observed today with a special ceremony in Ogden hall and the principal address will be given by Dr. Frederick Douglas Patterson, president of Tuskegee institute.

The anniversary program will begin at 2:15 with Dr. Arthur Howe, president of Hampton institute, presiding. He will introduce Dr. Patterson, who delivered the commencement address at the institute in 1935, the same year he was elevated to the presidency of Tuskegee.

The program will be opened with an organ prelude by Ernest Hayes, institute organist. The invocation will be given by the Rev. James O. Lee, assistant chaplain at the institute.

The choir of the institute under the direction of Gerald Burks Wilson will sing several selections which will be followed by a demonstration by a student of education, Paulus C. Taylor of the class of '40.

Preceding the address by Dr. Patterson, students will sing two spirituals and the address will be followed by two more spirituals by the students.

The program will also include readings to the senior class on behalf of the board of trustees and the alma mater song by students. The Rev. S. Arthur Devan will bring the exercises to a close with the benediction.

Dr. Patterson received the degrees of D. V. M. (Doctor of Veterinary Medicine) and M. S. from Iowa State college, and that of Ph.D from Cornell university.

He was employed in the Virginia State college at Petersburg as an instructor in veterinary science, and from that position he was promoted to be director of agriculture at the school.

He subsequently transferred to Tuskegee to be head of its veterinary division, soon being promoted to the post of director of the school of agriculture. He held that position when he was elected to the presidency of the institute.

Dr. Patterson is now expanding his service into other fields. He is a trustee of the Calhoun Colored school, Alabama; and the Booker Washington Agricultural and Industrial institute of Liberia.

Also, he is a member of the executive board of the National Urban league, and is on the board of both the commission on Interracial Cooperation and the Colored Work department committee of the National council of the Y. M. C. A. In his specia field, he is a member of the Veterinary Medical society.

Group Studies Aims, Methods and Results of Hampton Institute's Program of Education

Prof. Florence Stratemeyer of Teachers college, Columbia university, and a party of 15 graduate students in the field of teacher education spent Thursday night and Friday on the Peninsula in studying the aims, methods and results of the Hampton institute program of education for American Negroes.

The visitors conferred with George Adrian Kuypers, director of the school of education, Ian H. Ross, director of the George P. Phenix Training school, and other members of the Hampton staff visited the exhibit of work in the trade school, inspected the laboratory school, conferred with Miss Eva C. Mitchell and Miss Bernice A. O'Briant on problems of student-teaching, and visited college classes.

President Arthur Howe spoke to the visitors on the continuing community of educational interest between Columbia university and Hampton institute. He also called attention to the Syms-Eaton school, which is the oldest public school foundation in the United States, and to the site of the first free school for Negroes at the "Emancipation oak" which is between the Phenix school and Zion church.

William Anthony Aery, director of education, outlined Hampton's organization and educational program.

HEAR DR. CLEMENT AT COMMENCEMENT EXERCISES MAY 28

President of Atlanta University Announced as Principal Speaker on Hampton Institute Program

Dr. Rufus Early Clement, president of Atlanta university, will deliver the commencement address at Hampton institute Monday, May 29, it was announced yesterday by President Arthur Howe.

The baccalaureate sermon will be preached by Dr. Howe in Memorial church at 11 a. m. Sunday, May 28.

Dr. Clement is president of a relatively recently consolidation of three colleges for Negroes in Atlanta: Morehouse college for men; Spellman college for women, and the former coeducational Atlanta university.

Through the new arrangement, the old Atlanta university surenders its under-graduate work, and devotes itself entirely to graduate studies, becoming the head of a new university system.

When Dr. Clement was elected to head the newly consolidated school, the news magazine "Time," paid tribute to his "high executive ability and tact." He was only 37 years of age when elected to head the school.

His early training in religion came through the influence of his father, a bishop. He studied at a denominational school, Livingston college, and at Garrett Biblical institute. He did his graduate work in letters at Northwestern university, and holds M. A. and Ph.D degrees from that school.

He has held a professorship at Livingston college, and was dean of the Louisville Municipal college at the time of his election to the presidency of Atlanta university in 1937.

STUDENTS RESENT DISMISSAL OF RACE TEACHER; STRIKE

Courier 6-3-39

HAMPTON, Va., June 1—A compromise was reached late Monday between Hampton students and officials, with President Howe refusing to reinstate James Ivy, but offering him one year's salary without work.

Students are still voicing determination to have the instructor reinstated, but seniors, leaders in the strike, are leaving for home.

Special to The Courier
By Staff Correspondent

HAMPTON, Va., June 1—They held commencement exercises here Monday afternoon, but only after angry students had practically forced President Arthur Howe to rescind an order Sunday which he had given out at chapel exercises Monday evening, to the effect that the commencement had been cancelled.

The trouble, which resulted in a five-day strike at the famous Virginia institution, began last Tuesday with the dismissal of James Ivy, colored teacher in the English Department.

Students, feeling that Ivy had been fired to favor a white teacher, circulated a petition demanding his reinstatement.

MEETING HELD, STUDENT COMMITTEE ORGANIZED

At the same time, students called a meeting and organized a student committee, which sent wires to members of the Board of Trustees, demanding the discharge of George W. Kuyper, white, head of the English Department, said to have directed Ivy's firing.

The students then called a strike against all of the activities in connection with commencement.

Wednesday night they refused to take part in chapel, and the meeting was dismissed by President Howe.

Thursday night, no students attended the school movie.

Friday night, occasion of the annual Senior Reception, students failed to attend and gallons of ice cream and punch were wasted.

Saturday, date of the Senior picnic, nobody went, marking the first time in years that this traditional event had to be called off.

This marked the first time in the history of the school that a strike had been called by a majority of the students. Older heads, commenting, said:

"Staid old Hampton has at last gone 'radical' ".

BOMB SHELL EXPLODES AT CHAPEL SERVICES

Petitions, circulated by students, also demanded to know why white replacements had been made at the George P. Phenix High School, operated by Hampton officers.

Students state that whites are being placed in many jobs which should be given to graduates of the school.

Sunday night during Senior Chapel services at Ogden Hall, a bomb-shell was exploded. Up to that time, no agreement had been reached between the student body and school officials.

Student George Cooper was reciting the class poem, written by Arland Hampton, when President Howe suddenly interrupted, announcing chapel dismissed and stating that the commencement exercises, scheduled for Monday, had been cancelled.

President Howe was visited by the Students Committee, and an emergency meeting was called at 9 p. m., in which trustees, faculty members and alumni also attended. After an hour's conference, President Howe returned to the chapel, apologized for his hasty action, stating he had misinterpreted the meaning of the poem, agreed that commencement exercises, with Dr. Rufus Clement as principal speaker, would be held as scheduled.

Diplomas were issued Monday, but it is problematical whether students will leave or stay and attempt to settle the matter.

Included in the graduating class are 16 students from Pennsylvania, and three from Pittsburgh, the latter being Thomas Coleman, Frank Robinson and Elizabeth Hill.

HAMPTON SPEAKS UP
(From The Baltimore Afro-American)

When we predicted some months ago that Hampton's alumni would soon be telling President Arthur Howe where to get off, we had no idea it would happen so soon.

Last week, an official alumni committee sent out a letter to students demanding, among other things:

A 50-50 equalization in rank and number of colored personnel, a colored dean of women, and an abandonment of the present policy of limiting free student expression on college affairs.

10-14-39

For years we have wondered why this college not only insisted on a white president but a faculty on which all the key places were in the hands of white persons and even colored clerks and stenographers were barred.

The New England abolitionists dedicated their lives to our education and founded our schools. Their type persisted for years. No teachers among us are more beloved.

The new type of teacher, with his repressed race prejudice, who teaches at Hampton by day and spends evenings at the Hampton Rotary club, where means are discussed to keep "colored people in their places," has brought about the change.

The alumni may not be able to secure all their demands at once, but the evidence at present is that they mean business and are determined upon reform.

No Colored Person Holds Top Flight Business Post

Baltimore, Md.

By JOHN JASPER

(EDITOR'S NOTE: Because of the changes in Hampton's administrative staff, last week, administration salaries are discussed in this week's article and the discussion of dormitory, kitchen and dining room workers will go over for another installment. Salary figures cited in this article are not official, but I believe them to approximate the facts.)

Afro-American

President Arthur Howe announced the following changes in Hampton's administration, last week:

10-28-39

1. Robert Ogden Purvis, white treasurer (his folks built Ogden Hall), also vice president and business manager in charge of public relations, press, publicity, meetings, of campus activities.

   His father was treasure once and his grandfather president of the board of trustees.

   This is a new office and in the absence of President Howe, Mr. Purvis will be head of Hampton as well as holder of its ducats.

2. Don Davis, former cashier and chief accountant, has been appointed bursar. He graduated from Hampton's School of Business in 1911. Mr. Davis's friends hoped he would be named assistant treasurer or treasurer.

3. William M. Cooper, Hampton, '11; Columbia M.A., 1929, was named director of summer school in addition to his present work as director of extension.

Only a Beginning

Apparently, this is only the beginning of the fulfillment of promises made by Hampton officials to alumni this fall, to give colored Hampton a larger share in the institute's administration.

This is the way this administration is lined up before changes were made. These figures are not official, but I believe they approximate the situation.

White
President	$8900
Treasurer	5000
Secretary	4828
Special Assistant to the president	3000
Registrar	2100
Assistant Registrar	1600
Purchasing Agent	4200
Asst. Purchasing Agent	1100
Bookkeeper	2200
Bookkeeper	1100
Bookkeeper	1400
Postmistress	1000
TOTAL	$36,428

Afro-American

Colored
Cashier (now bursar)	$3640
Assistant Bursar	1700
Record Office Head	2546
Bookkeeper	1300
Bookkeeper	1100
TOTAL	$10,286

10-28-39

The business of Hampton Institute, a colored college, would seem, therefore, to be in the hands of five colored persons, whose total salaries is $10,286, and twelve white persons whose combined salaries total $36,428.

No colored person holds one of the top flight business offices at Hampton.

Even the changes announced this week do not affect this situation apparently as Don Davis is not named treasurer but bursar.

Hampton uses the words "department heads" to designate certain officials. In most colleges, these department heads would be termed deans or directors. Here's the situation as to department heads at Hampton:

COLORED

Heads of Departments

Supervisor, Physical Ed.	$2800
Dean of Men	2700
Director Ex. Dept.	3500
Average	$3000

WHITE

Heads of Departments

Trade School	$4000
Agriculture	3000
Education	4500
Business	2500
Librarian	3300
Religion	5040
Dean of Women	3792
Average	$3,747

The above figures mean there are three colored and seven white departmentment heads at Hampton. The total salaries for colored is $9,000 and for white, $26,132. The average salary for colored is $3,000, and for white is $3,747, a differential in favor of white department heads of $747 a year.

More Equity Asked

These figures were in the minds of students who petitioned trustees to equalize the number and rank of colored and white personnel.

Rightly or wrongly, they believe there is a color line which shuts out colored men and women from higher positions at their own school.

Three Positions

Three positions they especially like to mention:

Dr. Arthur Devan, white, is chaplain. His pay is reported as $5,040.

Miss Beulah Van Wagnen, white, is dean of women. Her reputed pay after three years' service, is $3,792.

Major Walter Brown is dean of men. He's colored. His pay, after twenty years' service is $2,700.

A Crude Formula

From this they evolved this crude formula and no one laughed when it was written on the blackboard:

It takes 1½ colored deans of men to equal 1 white dean of women.

It takes 2 colored deans of men to equal 1 white chaplain.

Questions for Hampton

Hampton's President Howe fired a senior who wrote a story in the college newspaper protesting against racial discrimination meted out to students in the institute's own hospital.

Afro-American

Student protest was so unanimous (856 out of 1100) that Thompson's expulsion was changed to suspension, and finally to a thirty-day probation.

There are two points involved here that are so plain that everyone can understand them:

1. There is admitted jim crow. Hampton students are directed to enter basement door of the hospital, which has four floors. Colored use the basement and fourth floor; whites use the first, second and third floors.

10-28-39

Should there be racial segregation in any colored college anywhere?

Baltimore, Md.

2. Hampton students are taxed $3 each to support the student newspaper, the Hampton Script. The tax is compulsory.

Should there be, within the bounds of decency, the same kind of free press at Hampton that is guaranteed by the U.S. Constitution to all citizens in the First Article of the Bill of Rights?

Expelled Senior on Probation

Hale Thompson Back After 856 Students Demand His Reinstatement

HAMPTON, Va.—Hale Thompson, Hampton Institute senior, expelled Tuesday of last week for writing an article in the Script, college newspaper, criticizing jim-crow conditions in the student infirmary, is back in college on probation. Afro-American

Some 856 out of 1100 students signed a strongly worded petition "demanding Thompson's reinstatement." Baltimore, Md. 10-28-'39

The peremptory tone of the petition, together with the "passive resistance" program of the student body which followed, was reminiscent of events which preceded a student strike in 1927 and caused the resignation of President James E. Gregg.

While students attended classes promptly, they boycotted the movies (only 25 attended), refused to sing in chapel, and walked out as soon as President Arthur Howe turned the exercises over to a student leader. Resistance to cadet drills led to their discontinuance.

Thompson was spokesman and chairman of the student committee which sent students and officials a four-point program last spring asking: 1. Competent teachers; 2. A colored dean of women; 3. Equalization in number and rank of colored and white faculty personnel; 4. Recognition of the right of free speech in the student newspaper.

His article in the Script called attention to the fact that students were compelled to use the basement and fourth floor of the campus infirmary in Dixie Hospital, while the first, second and third floors were reserved for white faculty members and white townspeople.

Called to the office after the paper was published, Thompson was asked to withdraw voluntarily. He refused on the ground that it would be an admission that his article was inaccurate.

The student body, informed of his expulsion, organized and sent in their petition. They received word that Thompson was suspended, not expelled. Following meetings of the faculty administrative council, re-admission of Thompson on probation was agreed to.

One group of eighty students, through their spokesman, told the faculty administrative council that they took no part in the "passive resistance" program.

Struck in 1927

Hampton students went out on strike in October, 1927, when President James A. Gregg was sent a list of seventeen points including: 1. Recognition of the student council; 2. That all teachers in trade school with less than high school education and a full degree of competency be released.

Of the ten teachers complained of in 1927 only one is still on the present faculty.

STUDENTS WALKED OUT

Afro-American, Baltimore, Md. 10-28-'39

Five Out of Twenty-two

Hampton Institute, founded seventy-one years ago, boasts an endowment of $10,214,571 and an estimated annual payroll of some $540,000.

A survey made for the AFRO-AMERICAN, the initial chapter of which appears on another page of this issue, points out that only five out of twenty-two secretaries to heads of departments are colored and that the average colored secretary receives $190 per year less than the average white secretary for doing the same work.

Afro-American 10-14-39

As the series develops it will show that this college has not only a majority of white personnel and that colored persons receive lower pay than their white colleagues, but also that 65 per cent of the positions paying $2,000, and 87 per cent of the positions paying $3,000 or more per year are held by white persons.

In other words, Hampton Institute, in its employment of colored and white persons, appears to be doing the same thing that public school systems are doing in eighteen Southern States; namely, discriminating against teachers on account of their color.

This discrimination is not exactly the same as in the public schools, but it is more subtle and more reprehensible because it occurs in a colored college supposedly administered in the interest of colored people themselves.

Negro School Rites Held

Ground Broken at Virginia Randolph

Ground-breaking exercises were held in Virginia Randolph Training School yesterday afternoon as the beginning of a $63,000 building program at the Henrico County High School center for Negroes.

Three new buildings are included in the plans, an eight-room classroom building, a three-room home economics building to be equipped with complete bath facilities and its own heating plant, and a two-room agriculture building. The new buildings will be located between the present classroom building and girls' dormitory.

Dr. Fred M. Alexander, the main speaker on the program, indicated that this progressive step was the beginning of a State-wide movement for the general improvement of educational facilities for Negroes. "The increased social vision of the people of Virginia, assisted by the aid of the Federal Government, has made it possible in the past four years for more than 60 per cent. increase in Negro school building. This is just the beginning of what is planned for the future."

Dr. Raymond B. Pinchbeck presided over the ceremones. He lauded the services of Miss Virginia Randolph to the field of education and urged the students to hold high the torch she had lighted by living good, clean, serviceable lives in the community. He presented C. K. Holsinger, Superintendent of Henrico Schools, who expressed happiness over the ground-breaking. "When I look at the present building and ground, the land across the street and the plans for these buildings we are to erect, I can see a few years into the future when this school will be what Virginia had dreamed it will be," stated Mr. Holsinger.

Mrs. L. C. Caldwell ,the only woman member of the School Board stated that nothing during the past two years of her service on the board had made her happier or feel quite as full as the occasion today.

To the students she implored: "When these buildings are here for you next year, it is our hope that you boys and girls will show through the lives you lead and the deeds you do that you are appreciative of and will carry forth the torch of Virginia Randolph down through the years."

Other persons appearing on the program included J. A. Gates, Director of Finance for Henrico County; Mrs. Lucille Banish and Miss Merle Davis, supervisors in the county; Paul Saunier, director of music; J. W. Atkinson, contractor in charge of the building program; Stuart Duggins, PWA resident engineer, and J. E. Pillow, assistant resident engineer; Mrs. Fred Alexander, Miss N. R. Jeter, county nurse; Miss Virginia Randolph, Nurse Beale and Milton L. Randolph.

Devotionals on the program were conducted by Harold Thompson, a faculty member at Virginia Randolph Training School, and music was furnished by the student body under direction of Miss Zemoria Woods and the school quartet.

GROUND BROKEN AT VIRGINIA RANDOLPH—Ceremonies were held yesterday at Virginia Randolph Training School near Glen Allen at which ground was broken for a new addition to the school. Left to right: J. Hampton Institute Alumni Urged To Back Alma Mater

Members of the Newport New Alumni chapter of Hampton institute meeting yesterday afternoon in the Shipyard Negro Community center heard L. C. White, Negro, secretary of the record department of the institute, in a founder's day talk.

White paid tribute to the adventurous spirit of Gen. Armstrong founder of the institution. He urged that members of the alumni association would continue the flame of this spirit by affiliating themselves with an organization that can help and develop the institute. He pointed out that organization efforts, through affiliation, can accomplish more than by the diversified efforts of individuals.

H. T. Jackson, 1239 Twenty-seventh street, president of the chapter, presided. Prof. L. F. Palmer, principal of Huntington high school, offered invocation. Music was provided by a quartet from the institute.

Hampton Trustees Plan Retrenchment

A program of retrenchment involving substantial savings in several departments, made necessary by shrinkage in current income from endowment and annual donations, has been inaugurated by the trustees of Hampton Institute, it was revealed here Sunday at the annual meeting of the Middle Atlantic States Regional Conference of the Hampton Alumni Association.

Departments to be affected under the new policy, according to Dr. Arthur Howe, Hampton Institute president and principal speaker at the luncheon meeting held at the Prince George Hotel, are the Library School, Nursing School, and the high school department of the George P. Phenix Training School.

Negotiations as to what can be done about the retrenchment program in the Nursing School, and the high school department of the Phenix School, are now under way, President Howe revealed.

The institute head appeared before the alumni group representing three states and the District of Columbia, shortly after reports had been made showing cash donations in excesss of $1,000, and pledges totalling approximately $300 in the current scholarship fund drive for $15,000. The campaign is scheduled to end at the annual meeting of the Alumni Association in June of this year.

PAINSTAKING THOUGHT

"At the outset it should be understood that no one acting upon these matters has done so without painstaking thought, and consideration of their seriousness," Dr. Howe said. "They are far too important in their outreach beyond the campus, and far too important to individuals affected, and to the future morale of our work, to have any but the most serious and sympathetic consideration of your president and the members of the board of trustees.

"Personally, I believe, they have had that kind of consideration, and that the decisions arrived at, fallible as all such decisions of man must be, have been made with the sole purpose of doing the best thing for Hampton Institute in the present difficult situation we are in.

"Because of greatly decreased income from endowment and annual donations, and new expenses due to the addition of the Library School, Nursing School, and George P. Phenix Training School, curtailments have been necessary.

"We have struggled along as well as we have because of the faculty salary cut, and an increase in student payments, but at great expense to the physical plant, and with annual deficits to meet. Compared with the records of other institutions, the financial committee of our board of trustees has made a most admirable record in efforts to maintain income from investments.

NEW ERA OF FINANCE

"In many ways, private institutions have entered a new era in matters of finance. Taxation to maintain costly public services, many of which are here to stay, has so seriously affected sources of private philanthrophy, that the large gifts and bequests of a former day can no longer be relied upon, as to frequency or amount. It has become correspondingly important for private institutions to re-examine offerings and concentrate resources upon specific major fields. "To do otherwise endangers capital, results in a loss of confidence on the part of potential contributors, and means lowered standards in efforts to bolster up excessive programs.

"In order to maintain a stronger position for the most effective service, the board of trustees have entered upon a program of retrenchment involving substantial savings in several departments, including the Library School, the Nursing School, and the High School Department of the Phenix School.

The policy underlying these curtailments is to secure a sound financial position in order to do higher quality work in fewer fields; to strengthen our appeal to potential supporters, and to give greater consideration to the upkeep of our physical plant. In short, to attempt less, but to regain a position in which to do it better."

Dr. Howe paid tribute to the financial committee of the board of trustees who he declared, "has made a most admirable record in efforts to maintain income from investments," making special reference to Under Secretary of the Treasury John Hanes.

After pointing out some of the significant problems faced in the institution's schools of agriculture, business, education, home economics, and trades brought about by changed economic conditions affecting the race, Dr. Howe asserted that "in spite of the financial difficulties we have experienced, much has been accomplished."

Noting the many signs of progress, he revealed that generous gift for new equipment in the Trade School has made possible much-needed machinery; the Printing School has been made over completely and up-to-date presses installed; modern equipment for teaching dry-cleaning has been added to the tailoring department, and similar improvements are to be effected in other departments of the Trade Scho

In addition to another gift making possible the renovation of James Hall, he listed other major improvements as: the inauguration of a new program of faculty advisers, an orientation course for first-year students, the addition of a course in practical religious education, and the inauguration of courses in directing nursery schools and dietitians in the School of Home Economics.

The necessity for retrenchment in the Hampton Institute program was brought to the attention of the 70 delegates prior to Dr. Howe's address by William M. Cooper, director of the extension department.

Mr. Cooper pointed out that the Hampton endowment was not impaired or in danger in any way, but that only two courses were open to the trustees: either to increase the endowment which seemed virtually impossible under existing circumstances, or to reduce the present educational setup.

Miss Gertrude Perry, president of the Norfolk-Portsmouth Chapter of the Hampton Alumni Association, was elected president of the regional conference comprising the states of Virginia, Maryland, and Delaware and the District of Columbia, succeeding Wesley D. Elam of Alexandria.

Other officers elected were, Dr. J. M. G. Ramsey, first vice-president; Doswell E. Brooks, secretary; Miss Minnie O. Robertson, assistant secretary; Dr. W. E. Reid of Baltimore, treasurer. Members of the executive committee will be selected from the various member chapters, and when selected will choose the place of the 1940 meeting, it was decided.

WINS CONTEST

The income from the $15,000 scholarship fund will be used for scholarships to supplement amounts already available for this purpose, it was explained. It was also announced by the incoming president that Mrs. V. W. Monteiro of Norfolk was winner of a popularity contest sponsored by the Norfolk-Portsmouth Chapter.

Among the distinguished visitors present for the meeting were, Dr. M. E. Norris of Kilmarnock, Va., a member of the Hampton board of trustees; Lawyer T. C. Walker, adviser and consultant on Negro Affairs for the W. P. A. in Virginia, and others.

The delegates were welcomed by William M. Hubbard, and the response made by Don A. Davis, head accountant at Hampton Institute, who pointed out that there were more Hampton graduates working in the Norfolk-Portsmouth, Newport News-Hampton area than in any other section of its size in the United States. Mr. Davis expressed the belief that Hampton has "the best organized alumni association of any colored school in the United States. Hampton has come to the crossroads" he said. "For the first time in its history it is asking for funds from its graduates, and it's a good thing that conditions have become such that the institution must turn to its alumni for support."

SPECIAL STAMP ISSUE

It was also revealed that a special issue of 25,000 stamps showing a familiar Hampton scene, will go on sale throughout the country in the near future to aid in the scholarship fund campaign. The suggestion was made at the 1938 regional meeting in Baltimore, it was explained by Mr. Cooper in making the announcement.

Included in the special gifts for the scholarship fund was a check from T. B. Patterson of the class of 1890, extension agent of Virginia State College. The Norfolk-Portsmouth Chapter led in cash donations with $175. The report of the campaign committee was made by H. D. Carpenter, assistant field secretary of the Negro Organization Society of Virginia.

SCHOOL OF THE WEEK

VIRGINIA RANDOLPH BEGAN WITH 16 PUPILS IN MOUNTAIN CABIN

RICHMOND—Forty-six years ago, on a half-acre plot two miles south of Glen Allen on the old mountain road, there stood a one-room shack which later became the Virginia Randolph Training School.

The founder, Miss Virginia Randolph, began classes one fall morning with sixteen pupils. She was the only teacher in the frame cabin on the hill.

For four years, Miss Randolph taught in this wilderness before another room was added. The neighbors then were sympathetic and had given her gravel to fill pits in the yard and smooth the surface of the adjoining land.

Trees Named After Disciples

Twelve persons in the neighborhood gave trees which she planted in the yard and named after the twelve disciples of Christ.

When another room was added four years later, Miss Mabel Liggons was named assistant teacher and the number of pupils had grown to sixty-five.

Later the school was expanded to five rooms and more land was purchased.

Classes were then held in all of the elementary grades and the work of the school attracted the attention of the Jeanes Foundation and other educational agencies.

Two more rooms were added to the five-room structure with student labor.

Appointed Supervisor

When Miss Randolph was appointed the first Jeanes supervisor of colored schools in the South, Mrs. Fannie P. Clarke was named principal. She held the position until 1924, when Mrs. Aretha R. Davis, present principal took charge.

The Jeanes memorial dormitory was dedicated on November 18, 1924. It was erected at a cost of $25,000. The money was raised by white and colored friends.

A standard four-year accredited high school curriculum was added at the beginning of the term in 1924, a home economics course in 1926, shop work in 1931, and the trade school in 1936.

Fire Wrecks Building

The seven-room building was destroyed by fire on February 11, 1929. The work of rehabiliation began at once and a nine-room building was constructed at a cost of $35,000.

This building has an auditorium, library and office. It is heated by steam, and has other modern conveniences.

The present enrollment in the combined school is 413. The teachers are:

Elementary—Mrs. L. M. Bozeman, Miss Blanche Jones, Miss Carrie Cobbs, Mrs. Fannie Clark and Miss Fannie Harris;

High school—Mrs. L. N. Taylor, Edwin Price, Miss E. B. Wood, Harry Johnson, Miss T. B. Sublett, Miss Ethel McDaniels, Hiram Thompson; James W. Jeffress, trade shop; and Mrs. A. R. Davis, home economics.

School Activities

Besides the regular courses of study the students engage in extra-curricular activities.

There is a student government council, junior Red Cross unit and a Junior League.

Special music courses are available for those who want them.

Physical education is under the supervision of two members of the faculty. Basketball games are played with other high schools in the State.

The school's glee club furnishes music for the school on regular occasions and each year an operatta is presented. The one for 1939, "Enchanted Isle," is based on the theme by Chopin, and will be offered in April.

Hampton Training School For Negro Nurses Started In 1890 By Alice M. Bacon

Teacher at Hampton Institute Realized Need for Foundation; First Hospital Consisted of Two Wards

Editor's note: The following article was written for the Daily Press by Miss Clara G. Lewis, registered nurse, director of the school of nursing of Hampton institute.

The Hampton Training school for Negro nurses was started about 20 years after the opening of Hampton institute, which was 1870. This training school was made possible by the untiring efforts of Miss Alice Bacon, a teacher at Hampton institute. Miss Bacon saw the need for the care of the sick in the community of Hampton and at Hampton institute as well as to provide a means for proper training of Negro girls to make a living.

In simple language Miss Bacon told of the need for medical missionary work on the Hampton peninsula. "How can it have happened that followers of Christ have for so long neglected their duties to heal the sick while preaching the kingdom of God! In the miserable cabins within sight of the noble Hampton school lay the palsied and the demented, and the modern lepers tormented with grievous sores. No wonder that the tired Hampton teachers, after striving to carry into these hovels the comforts of the Christian faith, longed for the assistance of a hospital and of trained nursing service."

But Miss Bacon did not rest with telling of the needs. With remarkable clearness she outlined the plans for meeting these needs. She gave careful estimates of the cost of inaugurating the new dispensation. In June 1891, the Dixie hospital was founded by Miss Alice M. Bacon. In March, 1892, by an act of the general assembly of Virginia, the Hampton training school for nurses and Dixie hospital were incorporated.

Only Two Wards

That first year the little hospital consisted of two wards, which furnished accommodations for nurses and patients with a "lean to" in which the cooking was done. There was no nurses' home; and no one would give or rent a house to these Negro students. They slept anywhere in these two wards that there was enough space for them. That year an effort was made to build a nurses home close to the hospital where the nurses could have "bedrooms, dining room and parlor" as stated by Miss Bacon in her first annual report. In this report she said, "The Hampton training school for nurses, besides supporting the Dixie hospital, supports another almost equally heavy burden. Not only do the student nurses go out to service among the poor in the neighborhood, but they actually carry out to their patients the food and medicines needed. The school has had to meet the expense of a horse and wagon for the extension of this work. No part of the work of the school is more plainly demanded. Without actually seeing the destitution, the unmitigated wretchedness of the sick in the neighboring Negro cabins, and without actually witnessing the relief given by the nurse's visits, by the gifts of rice and tea and of clothing, one might perhaps question if the Dixie could not curtail its charities. But once seeing the work anyone would be convinced that it would be fatal moral cowardice not to extend this real missionary work at least in answer to the urgent demand. The pitiful knocks at the Dixie's gate, the stories of them lying sick and appeals for relief must be answered."

That first year marked a turning point in the development of Negro women into branches of nursing; these new nurses just awakening to the glory of the path they were entering, their cheerful acceptance of hardships, the atmosphere of doubt as to their ultimate success in the care of white as well as Negro patients. Later, a well-built, well-fited nurses' home, a larger hospital, white as well as colored patients; an organized movement in old Hampton to build a white ward to be under these nurses' care; the training school already doubled in size, the older nurses now so self-possessed in their acquired confidence of their usefulness.

Of the first five students entering the school, four of them were young women who were graduates of Hampton institute.

Courses Offered

The courses offered were "1. The shorter course (one year and three months) in which students were instructed in anatomy, physiology, midwifery, hygiene, bandaging, dressings, food and medicine, care of patients and patient's rooms, best methods of rubbing, exercising and handling the sick, preparation, cooking and serving of nutritives and appetizing food. During the course students will be sent to the houses of the sick poor to learn by actual practice how to care for the sick in houses where no conveniences can be had. It is expected that students in this course spend at least four months of their term of study in this kind of work as a preparation for missionary work among the poor in their homes.

2. "The longer course (two years). In this course in instruction for the first 11 months will be the same as that in the shorter course, but the work of the second year will be directed toward fitting the pupils for work in any department of nursing whether hospital, missionary, or in private families of means. During this second year students may be called to cases of any kind at any distance from the hospital."

The resolutions providing for the government of Hampton traininp school for nurses was adopted by the board of directors in 1896. These resolutions provided for an executive committee which would consist of the dean of the medical faculty, the superintendent of the training school and hospital and treasurer of the board of incorporators. A head nurse, housekeeper to have charge of food, laundry, nurses' rooms, and dormitories, were also included at this period (1896). A report made after five years of organization states that "419 patients have been cared for. 14 nurses have graduated and nine nurses are now taking their course of training." This year, the two year course seemed to be the only one offered by the school.

At this time there were no state boards of examiners, no state registration and no American College of Surgeons. Therefore, the instructors gave examinations at intervals during the two year course.

School Developed

Let us now consider the development of this school during its first ten year period. At first the hospital was two wards with a "lean to" for a kitchen. Then a nurses' home was built; and a "maternity cottage" was built next to the hospital. The capacity of the hospital was 21 patients. During this time 1,087 patients had been cared for and 42 nurses had been graduated. There was no provision for an operating room in the first hospital; and at the end of ten years, an operating room, diet kitchen, larger wards, nurses' home, private rooms and Skidmore cottage (maternity cottage) had been added. The financial condition of the hospital was much improved in 1902. Donations had increased; and the people of Hampton were cooperating much better with the hospital.

The period o probation was now three months long. Little change had been made in the curriculum. Students continued to nurse in the homes and "learned from actual practice how to care for the sick in houses where no conveniences can be had."

A class of 16 probationers were admitted the year 1901. This great number of nurses were to be divided between hospital and home nursing. Students were in great demand for massaging and maternity cases in the homes.

The years between 1901 and 1911 are years filled with history making or Hampton Training School and for urses both white and colored in the tate of Virginia.

Up to this time, with few exceptions, the Negro graduate nurse of Dixie confined her efforts mostly to he field of private duty. During this eriod the graduates were entering into "district nursing, and institutional nursing." Some of the Indians who had graduated from the school had eturned to their homes to do constructive nursing among their people.

Plans had gone forward for the erecting of a new hospital building on Hampton creek, site of the old Tyler home. But at the end of this 20-year period the building was still a dream.

In her report of 1903-1904, Miss Bacon said, "Nursing schools have been started only just in time for tate registration acts, which many of he southern legislatures have already passed, or will soon pass, are stringent in their requirements of thorough professional training for all registered nurses. Only by the continuance of these schools, and by increasing thoroughness of preparation therein, can the colored trained nurses hope to hold their own in the ranks f the profession."

1903 was the first year any state had registration; and that was the same year Hampton Training School started its three year course. Appearing in the minutes of the meeting of the directors held Oct. 5, 1903, was the following resolution, "The course of training in the Hampton School for Nurses shall be lengthened to three years.

The first year of the course shall include thorough instruction in such text books as may be selected by the superintendent, and practice work in the hospital and training school.

The second year shall include at least four hours a week of text book instruction, and such supplementary lectures by physicians as the directors may appoint. Hospital practice shall continue throughout the year.

The third year shall include practice both inside and outside the hospital, and close with thorough examination on all subjects taken up in the three years' course."

Money Raised

Through loyal friends $75,000 was raised and the new building was realized in 1912. To quote from the annual report of that year, "It is with pleasure that we can report the practical completion of the new home for the Hampton Training School for Nurses and Dixie hospital for which through many years we have been striving."

In the catalog of Hampton institute for 1931-1932 the school of nursing offered its first courses as a part of Hampton institute. The affiliation was continued with King's Daughters' Clinic in Norfolk, and with Visiting Nurses' association of Hampton. The course opened to students was the three year curriculum, as follows:

Biology, (zoology, physiology, and anatomy), bacteriology, chemistry, English (composition), home economics, materia medica, principles and letics, ward practice, diet in disease, psychology, pathology, medical and surgical nursing, obstetric nursing, pediatric nursing, eye, ear, nose and throat nursing, case studies, history of nursing, psychiatric nursing, professional problems, elements of sanitary science, public speaking, prevention of disease and introduction to sociology.

This course provides a sound professional foundation with sufficient cultural content to develop the woman as well as the nurse, enabling them to take their places in the nursing world equipped to compete on an equal basis with other nurses. Affiliation in tuberculosis ,three months) at Peidmont sanatorium, Burkeville, Va., and a course of three months in pediatric nursing at St. Philip hospital, Richmond, was added to the curriculum.

When graduation from high school was demanded in 1925, the school worried a great deal because of lack of applicants. The next few years revealed long waiting lists of students desiring to be admitted. In 1937 the National League of Nursing Education completed the curriculum guide for schools of nursing. This has been incorporated into the Hampton Institute School of Nursing curriculum and will be continued to be offered in September when Dixie Hospital again takes over the school of nursing.

The ambition is to make every community a better and a safer place to live in, due to the help of Hampton nurses. The first graduates of the school did outstanding work by helping to open training schools in the South. Anna de Costa Banks was one of the pioneers in holding position in training schools for Negroes and in furthering Negro nursing education Those who have ever come in contact with Mrs. Ellen Woods, a Hampton graduate who is doing a wonderful piece of work in nursing under the federal government, know that her presence alone must inspire an intense desire for more perfect health and better living conditions. Nurse Stephens of Phenix School. Nurses James and Scott with the V. N. A. and many others too numerous to mention, are examples of the splendid, untiring and far seeing womeun. Ellen Woods Carter is the 1941 candidate for the Mary Mahoney Medal. She is in harge of the infant and maternity linics, Edgecomb county, North Carolina. For more than 20 years she worked in South Carolina, since that ime she has done public health work n Mississippi, Louisiana, and Virginia. She has also done successful work abroad. She was sent to Rome, Italy, where she remained for 18 months. Nurse Carter was sent to Italy by Mrs. Ruth A. Dodd, director odf public health nursing, South Carolina. She has also been awarded the Palmetto pin. Later, Nurse Treherne and Nurse Harmon, with their vision of service in the public health field and Nurse Dudley and her work a Penn school, are only a few of the many fine women and nurses who have gone from Hampton.

Hampton Institute School for Nurses is contributing to the South in helping the Negro to better health better education, and better living Through all these years it has attempted to keep abreast with every thing that makes for progress for the Negro nurse.

TEACHER - LIBRARIAN COURSES START AT HAMPTON INSTITUTE

Three New Courses Offered And Curriculum Seen As Answer to Part Time Heads of Negro Schools

Although the library school at Hampton institute closed last spring, the service that the institute has rendered to high school libraries has not been terminated.

When the new session of the school opened last Thursday morning, three new courses for the training of teacher-librarians for the secondary schols in the South began.

In this new curriculum, which will be given as a major in the school of education, is an answer to the need for part-time librarians in the Negro high schools of the South. The graduates of this course will be prepared to teach some other subject and be certified to take charge of the school library, to organize the materials in the library and direct student reading. More and more the Southern states are insisting that even the small high schools have a member of the staff who has been specifically trained in library work to overcome the haphazard library organization which has for so long characterized the small school, institute officials said. Through this new curriculum, Hampton offers new opportunities to its graduates for service in the school of education, authorities said.

At present the three courses constituting the curriculum will be offered to qualified juniors in the school of education. These courses will comprise work in reference material, in the organization and administration of a secondary school library, the principles of book selection and especially a wide acquaintance with books suitable for children and young people. Students electing this course will also be qualified to teach in some other major field.

It is planned to offer in the senior year practice work in actual school libraries. The well-equipped Phenix training school will be the main laboratory for this work. The courses are to be taught by Mrs. Harriet C. Skofield, who for ten years has been a member of the Hampton institute library school staff. She received her A. B. from the University of Minnesota. her B. S. and her A. M. from the Columbia University school of library service. Before entering the field of library work, she had been a high school teacher and a school librarian

Hampton and the Changing Order

Journal and Guide

RECENT disquieting student-administrative rifts at Hampton Institute are symptoms of a general unrest rooted in political and economic conditions which harass America's Tenth Man. The unrest is emphasized at Hampton because the traditional organization pattern there resembles in form and to some extent parallels in practice the current political and economic order under which the Tenth Man's opportunities to achieve economic security are greatly curtailed. 11-4-39

That premise requires some clarification. Hampton was started in 1868 as a philanthropic adventure in education. The primary purpose was to train teachers and leaders for a newly emancipated people. The founders had a plan, which under conditions then prevailing, was the only feasible plan. They were willing to finance it. They and their supporters invested the original capital for land, buildings, and teachers. Additional funds for needed expansion have come from the original source. In the passing years these funds have come so liberally that a few years ago Hampton achieved the distinction of being one of the two Negro private colleges in the United States with the largest endowment. Without this support the school could not have survived, for while buildings alone do not make educational institutions, the sums that students pay for board and tuition do not provide buildings. Those who furnished the money have reserved the right to manage their investment. This much, we are sure, all will concede.

Norfolk, Va.

Starting on philanthropy in a period when Negroes were destitute of educational facilities Hampton has developed in the tradition of the founders—as a philanthropic adventure in education. From time to time there have been upward revisions of the original plan, to step up curricula or to add new courses, all of which the founders were wise enough to provide for in the charter. There have occurred also, deviations to admit qualified colored men and women to the faculties and administrative staff, in recognition of the efficacy of the original plan in the improvement of the Negro's social status, until now the proportion of colored personnel is considerable.

But Hampton is still a philanthropic adventure in education. Its pattern and policies are necessarily influenced, even controlled, by that stern fact. By the very nature of its organization background Hampton is also influenced and to some extent controlled by the laws and customs of its environment. Thus, the resemblance in form, of the Hampton pattern, to certain aspects of the controlling political and economic order is understandable, if not presently propitious, on that score. The presumption is that revolutionary changes in the Hampton pattern have not been as rapid or as positive as evolutionary changes in the people who have been the chief beneficiaries of the Hampton adventure in education. Whether it has been possible for Hampton to alter its plan at a more rapid rate, or whether the college can now be subjected to major surgery in the slow process of evolution, and still survive, are questions of great delicacy at the moment.

Hampton Institute, like other colleges, and the state and federal educational systems, is feeling the vibrations of a changing order. Education, which traditionally offered the hope of economic security, no longer affords it. The mere fact that a man is educated, in the formal sense, and in accordance with prevailing methods, no longer insures him a job. Therefore education is being attacked at its most vulnerable point, where it does not measure up to the elementary concept of democracy, in a nation which professes to be democratic in its political, economic, and social organization.

Thus, the states which maintain separate, but unequal systems for the races are being called upon to abolish these inequalities. The impact of these inequalities is felt most severely in the retardation of economic and social advancement. It registers with most devastating effect upon employment opportunity and earning capacity and determines the substandards of living to which the disadvantaged groups are subjected.

Naturally, the present state patterns are in disfavor with unbiased public opinion and will remain so until equitable adjustments are made. In Virginia, where the unequal pay of teachers and the wide disparity in educational facilities are now a burning issue, it is not surprising that the Hampton pattern, which happens, by reason of its unique traditional organization, to parallel in some respects the state system, should be the object of public discussion and criticism.

A factual presentation of any set of circumstances underlying student or faculty unrest at Hampton or any other private college is not enough. The real, as well as the ideal, presses for consideration. We could ill afford to lose a Hampton, a Talladega, a Fisk, or a Virginia Union. Not merely because of their tremendous contributions to our social progress, but because they constitute something indispensable in our educational structure as a whole, something that it would take state and federally supported colleges years and years to provide—if indeed, a substitute could be found for them, or any one of them.

We know that the wells of philanthropy are drying up. We know that many of the foundations and boards which have supported these colleges are confronted with the early prospect of an exhaustion of their funds. Endowments are yielding barely one-half of their original return. Private colleges must look more and more to individual contributions and student body support.

That is the realistic side of the case. No fair or reasonable contention for what is conceived to be the more ideal arrangement of our educational needs will be unduly retarded by a fair and reasonable consideration of the realities as they relate to these needs.

SAVERY LIBRARY WAS DEDICATED SUNDAY

Ceremony Sunday Afternoon Climaxed Two-Day Celebration

One of the important events of the long history of Talladega College for Negroes occurred during the weekend with a program at the institution which was climaxed Sunday afternoon with the dedication of the new Savery Library.

The principal event of the dedication was an address by Dr. Dwight Oliver Wendell Holmes, president of Morgan College at Baltimore, Md.

Large audiences, containing educators from over the nation and former graduates of Talladega College from many states, witnessed the events of the program which began Saturday night with the presentation of a play, 'Amistad."

Divine worship in observance of the Amistad Centennial, an event important in Negro history, was conducted at DeForest Chapel at 10:30 a.m. Sunday.

A beautiful musical program was followed by the sermon by Dr. Ashley Day Leavitt, minister of Harvard Church at Brookline, Mass., member of the college board of trustees.

The invocation was pronounced by Dr. Buell G. Gallagher, Talladega College president.

The Savery Library was named for an ex-slave who worked on the construction of the original buildings of the college group.

It is intended to serve not only the college, but the entire county.

One of the features of the dedication program was the conferring of the degree of master of arts upon Joseph Fletcher, who had charge of construction of the building.

The remainder of the afternoon program was as follows:

A Negro's Donation

FOR half a century, A. H. Parker was connected with the schools of Birmingham. Parker was a negro, and for 39 years he served as a high school principal. This school bore his name.

Many times Parker expressed the desire to make a contribution to the library fund of the school which he headed. Death, however, intervened before he had the chance. He died last summer, but just a day or so ago, the Birmingham Board of Education received a check. It was from Parker's widow. It was for $1,000. It will be used on the library, as Parker wished.

These negroes have set an example which a lot of white people would do well to follow.

LIBRARY EXCHANGE IN NEED OF BOOKS

News - Age - Herald Placed 38,121 Publications In Public Schools

The Birmingham News-Age-Herald Library Exchange has now placed a total of 38,121 books with libraries of Alabama schools, and community and public libraries conducted by schools, P.-T. A. and other organizations in towns and rural sections of the state.

Each one of these books has been placed where that particular book is needed. If a Birmingham school needs a particular book it gets it. If a one-room school in the most remote section of the state needs a particular book it gets it. The Library Exchange has placed books in every Alabama county.

Donations of books and magazines to the Library Exchange, for this purpose have been received during the past few days from Mrs. H. A. Van Hala, Mrs. R. Q. Blanton, Mrs. J. D. Kirkpatrick, Mrs. J. W. Muir, Mrs. A. Nat Hawkins, Sr., Mrs. C. M. Allen and Mrs. D. D. Clayton.

Books have been placed recently with the following schools and public libraries: Vina High School, Dunbar High, Bessemer, Spaulding Grammar School, Sandusky School, Hackneyville Consolidated, Vina Elementary, Buhl Elementary School, Reform Elementary School, Fellowship Elementary, R1, Reform, Brent Elementary, Idalia Elementary, R2, Talladega, Mulga Junior High, McAdory School, McCalla, Lewis School, Birmingham, Public Library, Butler, Negro Boys Club, Birmingham, Lane School, Birmingham, Alabama Vocational Training School for Girls, Birmingham, Covington County High, Florala.

Powhatan Junior High, New Hope Elementary, R1, Helena, Paul Hayne High, Birmingham, Cook Springs School, Eden School, Pell City Elementary School, W. S. Neal High Brewton, Branchville School, Albertville Public Library.

Books are needed by the Library Exchange now more than ever before. Any type of good book can be used. These are needed for libraries for all ages, from the youngest child to the oldest adult. People who have used books, with the exception of arithmetics, algebra, geometry, etc., which has been discarded by the state schools, need not wonder whether they can be used. All they need do is turn them over to the Library Exchange and it has several hundred places for every single book it can obtain. Fiction magazines cannot be used, but National Geographic, Fortune, Life, Readers Digest, Time, etc., can be used.

There is no charge to schools or community or public libraries for the books, but they must have someone call at the Library Exchange in The News Building for them. Books cannot be shipped. Such calls should be made when there is someone from the school or library in Birmingham and the calls should be made on week days except Saturday before 5 p.m., and on Saturday before 12:30 p.m. The books become the permanent property of the library with which they are placed.

People living in Birmingham who wish to donate books may bring or send them to the Library Exchange, or if they will phone the Library Exchange, 3-1121, giving name and address, the books will be called for. People living away from Birmingham who wish to donate books may consult their local News-Age-Herald distributor, and it is likely that arrangements will be made for a News truck to bring the books in.

There is a particular need for books of fiction, both light and the classics, for all ages, and for old readers, reference books, books on vocational training, government, old histories, etc. The Library Exchange could place 50,000 within the next week. If anyone has even one of these, it will be gladly received.

Dedicate New Library At Talladega College

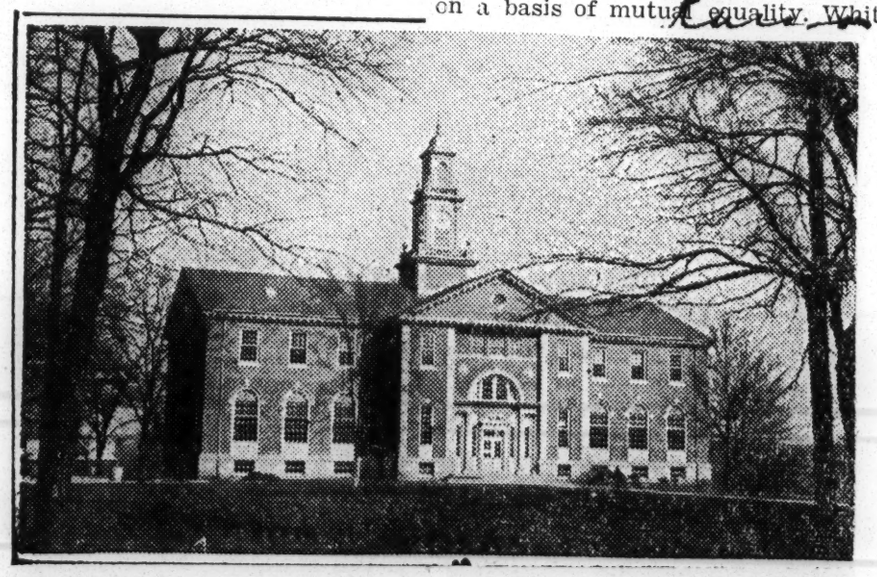
Pittsburgh Courier
4-1-39 Edition 1

TALLADEGA, Ala., Apr. (ANP)—The lovely new Savary library of Talladega college was dedicated here Sunday, April 16, with President Buell Gallagher presiding. Dr. Dwight Oliver Wendell Holmes, scholarly president of Morgan college, Baltimore, Md., delivered the dedicatory address.

Talladega College Has New $170,000.00 Library

TALLADEGA, Ala.—Savery Library, valued at about $170,000.00, the newest building on Talladega campus, is almost ready for occupation was built largely by skilled Negro workmen.

It is named for William Savery, a former slave and one of the original founders of Talladega College. All of the construction work has been under the supervision of Mr. Joseph Fletcher, a Talladega graduate and builder of several other major buildings on the campus.



From the beginning most of the work has been done by Negroes. The spacious three story affair is of brick, concrete, steel, tile, and gypsum with a sixty foot tower to house the big Seth-Thomas clock which chimes each quarter hour from seven a. m., to ten p. m. For more than a year work on the construction of the library has provided jobs for Negroes in and around Talladega.

White labor has been used on the library but such contracts were for subordinate jobs with Mr. Fletcher as still head of the construction work. Dedication is set for April 15 and 16.

It has been interesting to observe that white and Negro labor worked on a basis of mutual equality. White and Negro brick layers, graders, and craftsmen worked together in the heart of Alabama with mutual good will.

Further the library is to serve the whole community of Negroes and whites alike. In equipment and facilities it far outstrips other libraries in the city. It has long been a policy of Talladega College to treat all alike on its campus. The old Carnegie and the new Savery libraries will make no difference in this policy.

Savery Library will stand as an expression of Negro art and the love of friends and alumni for Talladega College.

43,271 BOOKS ARE GIVEN LIBRARIES

News-Age-Herald Need More Publications To Meet Growing Demand

A total of 43,271 books have been placed by The Birmingham News-Age-Herald Library Exchange with Alabama school, community and public libraries.

The majority of these were used books, donated by people who had them in their homes and were no longer using them.

Each one of these books has been taken from a place where it was not needed, was serving no useful purpose, where it was in many cases taking up room required for new books, or for other things, and is now being used by hundreds of people hungry for reading material. Some of these books are perhaps doing their part toward creating a desire for proper reading material while countless ones are assisting in needed education and enlightenment of Alabama citizens.

The books placed are but a small percentage of what is really needed for this work. Comparatively few books have been placed with each library. There are hundreds of libraries for which the Library Exchange has as yet been unable to do anything.

What the Library Exchange is able to do for these libraries is in the hands of Alabama people who possess the used books which can be used for this purpose. Old arithmetics, algebras, foreign language, geometry, etc., which have been discontinued by Alabama schools cannot be used, but old histories, old readers, dictionaries, encyclopedias, old reference books of every type can be used. Story books, books of fiction for all ages, from the youngest to the oldest, can be used. This fiction can be light or the classics, late fiction or old. Books on vocations, government, art, any good book can be used. Fiction magazines cannot be userd, but Life, Time, National Geographic, Readers Digest, Fortune, etc., are needed.

People living in Birmingham who wish to donate books may brings or send them to the Library Exchange at The News Building, or if they will phone the Library Exchange, 3-1121, giving name and address, the books will be called for. People living elsewhere in Alabama may consult their local News-Age-Herald distributor, and it is likely that arrangements will be made for a News truck to bring the books in.

There is no charge to school or community libraries for the books and they become the permanent property of the library with which they are placed. The Library Exchange does not ship books. They must be called for by the library desiring them. Such calls should be made on week days except Saturday before 5 p.m. and on Saturday before 12:30 p.m. Trips should not be made to Birmingham for the sole purpose of obtaining books, but calls should be made when in Birmingham for another purpose, as there are times when there is nothing on hand.

Now that Spring house-cleaning is under way, the Library Exchange can help by taking charge of used books. Just phone the exchange.

Books have been donated during the past few days by Mrs. Walter Gowlkes, Joseph Sims, Mrs. John D. Sheehey, Mrs. Louise Charlton, Mrs. Stewart Riddle, S. V. McClelland, all of Birmingham.

Books have been placed recently with Bagley School, Central High, Florence, Talladega Public Library, Rosedale High, Mulga Negro School, Sandusky Negro Junior High, Keener School, Bayview Elementary Reed's Grove School, Threet's Elementary, R. F. D., Cloverdale.

Mysteries of Chinese Studied By D. C. Negro Librarian; Is World's War Veteran Furnishes Information Regarding Fine Laquers Made by Orientals and Analysis of Same

Is Member of American Oriental Society

WASHINGTON.—(ANP) — Within recent years, research workers in certain industrial plants in the United States have tried to discover what makes Chinese lacquers outstanding in their brilliance and durability. Delving deep into the mysteries of the Orientals, it was found that one of the basic ingredients of these fine lacquers was a substance known as Tung oil. It is derived from a tree of the same name. Where could further information on this valuable subject be obtained?

It was suggested that they write the Library of Congress, Oriental department, to see what information was available.

Consequently, letters sent to the Library of Congress found their way to Desk 38, where the chief of the division referred them to a junior librarian, Berry Armstrong Claytor (graduate of Hampton, agriculture; graduate of Howard, law) for information and reply.

Mr. Claytor went to his bookshelves and dug out the volumes with the quaint characters painted on the bindings and handed them out so that the mysteries of the Orient, long hidden from Occidental eyes, could be turned to the advantage of the Western world.

Hidden away back in the midst of the Oriental section is this young man, whose rating sheet says "12 years of experience gives him a valuable knowledge of the Chinese language.' And quietly he works in his sanctuary, a valuable adjunct to the library and surely a very valuable man to anyone seeking information on the Chinese.

Mr. Claytor is a veteran of the World war. Employed in the library previous to his army service as a messenger, he re-entered the library on his return to the United States, where on the recommendation of a well-known educator he was transferred to the Chinese division. Speaking lightly of his work in the division, Mr. Claytor disclaims any particular knowledge, but his familiarity with the volumes entrusted to his keeping belies any statement he may make concerning his own inability to cope with Chinese language.

Engaged in cataloging, searching of records for unknown Chinese works, assisting readers seeking information, general library work and statistical work, Mr. Claytor has sufficient work to keep him occupied.

From time to time, bit pharmaceutical manufacturing concerns, film concerns, industrial manufacturers write in for information on certain developments the ancient Chinese were familiar with which might be helpful in this present day. It is Mr. Claytor who goes to the shelves and finds the proper book for the inquirer.

Students, scholars and professors of large universities, bent upon gaining information on Oriental culture, philosophy and history, have frequent need of Mr. Claytor's assistance. In fact, one publisher discovered that recorded in the works of an ancient Chinese philosopher was a complete counterpart, adapted to that day, of Mr. Roosevelt's New Deal policies. This person went so far as to want Mr. Claytor to dig them out of the library shelves for personal use.

As a member of the American Oriental society, an organization interested in the culture, history and language of the Far and Near East, Mr. Claytor was an interested visitor to the organization convention held in Baltimore the early part of the week. Married and the father of two children, Mr. Claytor has spent 23 years on the job

SECRETARY ICKES DEDICATES LIBRARY DESIGNED BY NEGRO

Dedication At Howard Eventful

Speaker Introduced By Johnson

WASHINGTON — (ANP) —Five hundred persons of Washington's vast population attended the simple, brief imposing dedicatory exercises here Thursday afternoon when Secretary of the Interior Harold Ickes made the speech which formally turned the magnificent library building over to the school.

Threatening clouds loomed gray in the distance as the president, Dr. Mordecai Johnson, accompanied by Secretary Ickes, arrived on the stand facing the green around which the buildings are entered. With music by the glee club opening the ceremonies, Dr. William H. Jernagin of the Mount Carmel Baptist Church followed with a brief prayer in response to Dr. Johnson's "this is an occasion for reverent joy."

Immediately after the invocation, Dr. Johnson briefly greeted the gathering, introducing Secy. Ickes. Said Dr. Johnson: "This building designed by a Negro architect, Albert I. Cassell, is the result of the deliberate vote of congressman from every state. In this building is the visible expression of democracy at its highest and best."

PUT ON AIR

Dr. Johnson further said he cannot fail to be thrilled by the fact that the will of the American people manifested itself in the building and that it was a tribute to Secretary Ickes in that the building expressed what was in the secretary's heart—and that the things he desired for himself and for his family, he also desired for every American and his family.

The secretary followed, his address being carried over the radio. He lauded the spirit of the university which prompted the demand for the new library inasmuch as his opinion libraries were one of the great needs of the country for the further education of all the people.

"The Southern sections are more deficient in libraries and are more deficient in all things," said the secretary. "All through the country, there are glaring inequalities in library facilities. The need for the union library card index is evident and the use of this medium is gradually overcoming these inequalities and aiding in the development of better citizenry.

106 LIBRARIES

"In three years," continued Mr. Ickes, "106 libraries with 11,000,000 volumes have been aided by PWA funds. At 633 colleges, 800 buildings of various kinds have been erected, representing an outlay of $81,500,000 in PWA funds and total cost of $200,000,000.

"The student enrollment in these schools, according to a recent survey, is 300,000. In public and elementary schools, 6,456 were aided, affecting some 1,850,000 students. The Negro has shared in the project, not as he should have, although his need has been greater."

In 1935, 85 libraries of the 565 in Southern states served Negroes. Nine million colored persons lived in these states, while only one and a half millions had library services. Ninety colleges among Negroes showed libraries with one million volumes compared to 10 million volumes in the 454 white colleges.

This same survey showed that of 26,000 high school pupils, three-fourths had less than 100 books in their homes; one-third had fewer than 25 books in the home and one third had no radios in their homes.

AIDS MINORITY GROUP

North Carolina, Tennessee and Judge Gantt, oldest member on the bench, asked whether Missouri must have an actual law school established at Lincoln if it is to prevent Gaines from attending the university.

Chief Justice Tipton asked if counsel for Gaines took the position that the school must be in existence now or in September, when school opens. Houston replied that the time for the court to consider is the present time. Then the court asked if it could not write an opinion which would enable Gaines to go to the University of Missouri law school, but only on the condition that no law school be provided for Negroes in the state by September. Counsel for Gaines took the position that the court could not write such a conditional opinion.

An unusual feature of the argument was the mentioning of the fact to the court that Miss Lucello Bluford of Kansas City had applied to enter the school of journalism last January and was denied admission by the university because the Gaines case is still pending. Miss Bluford was in the court room and was pointed out by Houston.

The court is expected to render its final mandate during the summer.

Chinese Authority In Library Of Congress Is Colored Man

WASHINGTON, D. C.—The Chinese authority in the library of the Congress of the United States is a colored man—Berry Armstrong Claytor, graduate of the Hampton school of agriculture and the Howard University law school.

A veteran of the World War, Claytor was employed in the library previous to his army service as a messenger. He re-entered the library on his return from the war, and on the recommendation of a well known educator was transferred to the Chinese division.

As a member of the American Oriental society, an organization interested in the culture, history and language of the far and near East, Claytor was an interested visitor to the organization convention held in Baltimore, Md., the early part of last week.

Married and the father of two children, Claytor has spent 23 years on the job and on April 8 celebrated his appointment to the library of Congress.

HOWARD LIBRARY RECEIVES GIFT OF ANTI-SLAVERY MATERIAL

WASHINGTON, Apr. 20.—The Howard University Library has recently received a valuable gift of anti-slavery material for the Moorland Foundation, its Collection on Negro Life and History. Oswald Garrison Villard, the donor, is a grandson of William Lloyd Garrison and until recently the editor of The Nation. The slavery items which Mr. Villard has presented to the Library consist of 228 issues of early anti-slavery newspapers, several volumes of the "Liberty Bell," the most outstanding literary annual of the American Anti-Slavery society, and a copy of "Right and Wrong in Massachusetts," autographed by Nathaniel P. Rogers.

Of primary importance to the research worker are the newspapers which boldly rebuked the slave system. The Herald of Freedom (1835-1846) published in Concord and edited by Nathaniel P. Rogers; the Emancipator (1833-1850) published in New York and Boston under various titles and edited by several different persons; the Liberator (1831-1865) published in Boston and edited by William Lloyd Garrison; the National Anti-Slavery Standard (1840-1870) published in New York and edited by Sidney H. Gay are some of the more important titles presented to the library by Mr. Villard. These papers not only reveal the white men's efforts toward emancipation, but they contain many expressions of Negroes on slavery, current economic, political and social problms of the day. Literary productions written by Negroes are scattered through these papers. These newspapers served as a great stimulus to emancipation and were responsible for many intellectual battles.

Serving a similar purpose as the Anti-Slavery newspapers were the several Anti-Slavery literary annuals or gift books of the day. The chief gift book of the American Anti-Slavery society was the "Liberty Bell" which appeared at the opening of the sixth annual anti-slavery Fair in Boston in 1839. Mr. Villard has presented the Library with this first volume and volumes for the years 1841, 1844, 1852, 1853, and 1856. Contributors to the fifteen yearly volumes of the "Liberty Bell" numbered two hundred prominent men and women in America, Ireland, England, France, and Russia. A few of the most outstanding writers were Ralph Waldo Emerson, Theodore Parker, Frederick Douglass, Henry W. Longfellow, Charles H. Redmond, Thomas Clarkson, George Thompson, Alexis de Tocqueville, Nicholas Tourgneneff, Fredrika Bremer, John T. Hilton, Lydia Maria Child, and Victor Schoecher. These writers contributed without renumeration biographical sketches, poems, descriptive and moral essays and short stories bearing for the most part on the Negro and slavery.

In addition to his gift of materials on slavery to the Negro collection, Mr. Villard presented the Main Library Collection with a complete set of the selected speeches, correspondence, and political papers of Carl Schurz.

Urban League

By JESSE O. THOMAS

The purpose of the Bulletin is to chronicle the worthwhile things done for, by, and with the Negro, as a basis of increasing inter-racial good-will and understanding.

Howard University's new library has become a clearing house for the collection of rare books. This library has more than 100,000 publications relating to the negro in America and other parts of the world. Through the co-operation of the Works Progress Administration a 500-page catalogue of the books in the Moorland collection has just been issued together with 30,000 index cards, recording educational books and pamphlets by and about the negro in the United States and elsewhere.

This long-hoped-for position has been made possible by 23 workers of the Works Progress Administration who have successfully completed 10 months' work on a library project at the University. The entire project was planned and divided into two main parts. One was compiling and editing "A Catalogue of Books in the Moorland Foundation" a collection of 5,000 publications by or about the negro, now housed in the $1,106,000 founder's library at Howard University. The other part of the project was the preparation of a card file at the library on all publications by or about the negro made known to the project workers by co-operating librarians in public, university and private libraries throughout the country.

Project Completed.

Both parts of this project just have been completed with a staff of workers assigned to the project through the District of Columbia Works Progress Administration. Prior to their assignment, these workers had neither bibliographical training nor experience. Through library science training and practical work the workers were enabled to complete the task of uniting in a systematic manner the largest card record of publications by and about the negro ever made available in one place.

A careful check of the major part of this library project of the WPA reveals fewer errors than would be expected of such a huge undertaking.

Volume Dated 1682.

Among the rare books listed in the completed "Catalogue of Books in the Moorland Foundation," are Hiob Ludolf's "A New History of Ethiopia," published in London in 1682; two volumes of memoirs and poems published by Phyllis Wheatley in 1773 and 1834, and "An African's Anti-Slavery Views"—a pamphlet printed in 1787. Original copies of these and other valuable books have come into the possession of Howard University and are now a part of the Moorland collection.

The 500-page catalogue is divided into six sections, listing books and pamphlets in the Moorland colection alphabetically and by periods. These books and pamphlets extend from works of early writers and thinkers to some 238 unpublished theses written by Howard graduates.

Phasas of the library project having to do with card files on all books directly or indirectly related to the negro required the co-operation of public, college and university librarians in various parts of the country.

Slave Era Laws.

Titles of special interest sent in to the project at Howard University and recorded by the WPA workers, were the collection of "Slave Laws of Slave Holding States," from the Brookline, Mass., public library, the titles of a collection of books on African languages forwarded by the Cleveland public library, and anti-slavery publications in the library at Oberlin University.

Among other co-operating libraries were the Congressional library, Prairie View State Normal, Prairie View, Texas; Hampton Institute, Hampton, Va.; the Benson library, St. Augustin College, Raleigh, N. C.; the Houston public library, Houston, Texas; and Drew University library, Madison, New Jersey.

Another interesting part of this work has been the listing of the fine private collection of Henry P. Slaughter, collector of Washington. In his collection of more than 8,000 volumes, the WPA workers found many rare autographed books and pamphlets. In addition, his collection was found to be rich in manuscripts and prints.

A Clearing House.

Because of the central clearing house created at Howard University through the library project of the WPA, many thousands of books related to the negro are now receiving renewed attention in the Founder's library. Many of the valuable publications for years lay unknown in the basement of the old Howard University library. Others were scarcely heard of in public and school libraries in distant localities. Many other volumes, which had become literary or historic treasures in private collections, were unknown to the general public.

The WPA project at Howard University has laid the groundwork for simplifying inter-library loan services. The project is also bringing a wealth of information from old volumes to the attention of research students and others.

State Director, D. E. Williams

State Director of Negro Schools D. E. Williams visited the school Monday afternoon. He was accompanied by Miss Snyder, state library consultant and librarian at the Women's College at Tallahassee.

Mr. Williams spoke to the teachers in the faculty meeting and he complimented them for their effort in getting such a well equipped library.

Libraries Important to Minorities --- Ickes

The following are excerpts from the address, "More Than a Library," which was delivered by Harold L. Ickes, Secretary of the Interior, at the dedication of Howard University's new Founders' Library on Thursady.

In 1935 only 85 of the 565 public libraries in the Southern States served colored people.

Of the 9,000,000 colored persons in these States only 1,500,000 or one sixth, reside in places where public library service is available.

According to reports received in the Office of Education, in 1935 ninety colleges for colored people located mainly in the South, had a total of only 1,000,000 volumes in their libraries as compared with 10,000,000 in 451 institutions of higher learning for whites.

Whites Have Ten Times as Many

In other words, the whites had exactly ten times as many books as the colored people.

Among high schools, the situation is even worse. The last available information indicates that colored high schools have about one volume per pupil.

These deficiences have a significant relationship to the efforts of colored people to improve generally, to advance educationally, and to prepare their more gifted sons for creative work and leadership.

Although there are great inequalities in the availability of library resources, there is an element of democracy in the situation that isn't found in many other social institutions.

Some Dixie Libraries Opening Their Doors

Some libraries in the Southern States are inclined to open their doors to competent scholars regardless of race. Colored people have been allowed to use State, local and institutional libraries in North Carolina, Tennessee, and Alabama.

No doubt similar opportunities have been offered scholars in other Southern States.

With the extension and increase of inter-library loans, regional libraries and union catalogues, it is hoped that very soon every library resource in the country will be as accessible to colored people as to others.

In the meantime, fortunately, colored colleges are entering upon a program of library development.

Howard Attracts World Interest

Because of its collection relating to colored people everywhere, and because of the fact that Howard's students come from the four corners of the earth, this new Founders' Library takes on international importance.

Its capacity of 200,000 volumes, which easily may be expanded to a half million, is adequate for the needs of this university for many years.

Another unique feature of this library is the fact that a colored man designed it. Its construction was supervised by a man of the same race. Many persons have already been attracted to it to study its interesting features and its superior design.

stitutions and are entitled to share in the benefits derived therefrom.

As Mr. Ickes so well says—"A library is more than a building; it is more even than the volumes that rest upon its shelves. A library is a depository of ideas with which to sharpen the intellect, a source of ideals with which to satisfy the soul. The more it is used. the more it is capable of being used."

We, who live in the North, do not use the library facilities at our disposal as much as we should, but that is no reason why Negro citizens of other sections should be deprived of this service, which should be free to all citizens of a true democracy. Along with the problem of supplying equal school facilities in sections where there is a dual system, is the equally important probem of supplying the same library service to give a more abundant life to all sections of the population.

LIBRARY FACILITIES

SPEAKING at the dedication of the new million dollar Founders Library at Howard University, Harold L. Ickes Secretary of the Interior and head of the Public Works Administration, called attention to the lack of library facilities for the Negroes of this country. Said Mr. Ickes:

"In 1935 only 85 of the 565 public libraries in the Southern states served Negroes. Of the 9,000,000 Negroes in these states only 1,500,000 or one sixth, reside in places where public library service is available. According to reports received in the Office of Education in 1935 ninety colleges for Negroes, located mainly in the South, had a total of only 1,000,000 volumes in their libraries as compared with 10,000,000 in 451 institutions of higher learning for whites. In other words, the whites had ten times as many books as the Negroes. Among high schools the situation is even worse. . . These deficiencies have a significant relationship to the efforts of Negroes to improve generally."

In the early part of his address, the Secretary called attention to the fact that the public Works Administration has had an important part in increasing library facilities throughout the country durinfg recent years. During the past six years, no less than 103 public libraries have been built with P.W.A. aid at a total cost of $11,000,000; only a small percentage of this amount was spent on Negro schools.

At the present time a fight is being waged in Alexandria, Va. to either force the city to permit Negroes to use the tax-supported public library of that city or to provide a similar library for Negroes. The outcome of this suit will be watched with interest by Negroes everywhere, for there is no denying the fact that they help support all public in-

The Community Library

An aged and infirm Negro clergyman, who, despite his failing health, continued to have great ambitions for his people, saw one of his fondest dreams come true in September of 1937 with the establishment of the Community Library for Negroes. Less than a year later this clergyman who pointed the way to the establishment of the library died, but his ideal has been carried forward by the Community Forum, local civic organization, whose members have worked untiringly in the interest of expanding the services of the library.

This week the Community Library will begin its annual campaign for funds.

The library is situated at 1237 Gwinnett street in the very heart of the colored section. The building which houses the library is the property of the city. It had been abandoned as a fire engine house and was leased to the Community Forum at the nominal sum for a period of five years.

Approximately three hundred books have been purchased since the establishment of the library, and during the eighteen months that it has been in operation, the library has served 1,766 persons who made application for the privilege of borrowing books. At least 1,000 of these borrowers are children, some of them so young that mothers or teachers must read the books to them. At present an average of 1,200 books are being circulated each month, and a renaissance of reading seems to have touched the Augusta colored populace through the medium of the library.

The Chronicle commends the Community Library to the citizens of Augusta as its financial campaign begins. It is performing a worthy service, and deserves the support of all those able to make a contribution in the interest of its operation and expansion.

Negro In American Life Shown At A. U. Library

Atlanta, Ga.

An exhibit of unusual library material outlining the part played by the colored race in the history of the United States from the time of the Revolution down to the Civil War opened in the foyer of the Atlanta University Library yesterday, and will continue on view for two weeks. The second of four exhibits devoted to the Negro in American life, which have been assembled by the Case Extension Circuit Cooperative, it traces by means of contemporary documents, the progress of the abolition movement during the above-mentioned period, and the resulting formation of a free Negro society in this country.

In the exhibit are two items directly pertaining to the Emancipation movement. One is an address by William Lloyd Garrison, the American author and orator who devoted his life to the anti-slavery fight, and the other concerns the early life of Wendell Phillips, the other great white leader of this movement.

Two editions of "Uncle Tom's Cabin," the first English and the other early American, are included in the showing. This famous book by Harriet Beecher Stowe probably aroused the nation on the slavery issue more than any other single literary work.

Also displayed is a copy of Walker's Appeal, a stirring challenge made by a Negro to his own race. First printed in 1869, the appeal represents the first instance of a Negro advocating his people obtaining their rights by actual rebellion. More strongly worded in each successive edition, it had a far-reaching influence in inciting the Negroes to action.

Of particular interest are examples of the slave narratives which were written by the hundreds for propaganda purposes during the Emancipation agitation. Most of these first-hand accounts of the desperate escapes and harrowing experiences of run-away slaves had little literary value. A few, however, were documents of great strength and eloquence. Notable among the latter is the story of Frederick Douglas, who turned his experiences into a scorching indictment of the slavery system. The exhibit includes other creative writings of Negroes, and the first bound volume of the Anglo-African Magazine.

Also shown is the first Negro novel, "Clotelle," by William Brown, professional Negro playwright and writer. The novel was originally published in England because it could not be printed in the United States without careful editing.

NEGRO LIBRARY IS COMMENDED

Eliza Atkins Inspects Work Done in Waycross Institution

The Waycross Negro Public Library has been commended for its service to the community by Eliza Atkins, fellow of the American Library Association, and a student of the Graduate Library School of the University of Chicago.

Following an inquiry as to the work of the Waycross Negro Library, of which Anna Sirmons is librarian, Eliza Atkins made a personal inspection of the library while on a trip to outstanding Negro libraries of the South. She expressed general approval of the plan on which the local institution is operated and commended the project.

She is making a study of "Government and Administration of Public Library Service to Negroes." She is a graduate of Fisk University, of the Library School of the University of Illinois and holds a master's degree in librarianship from the University of California.

Negro Library Work On Exhibit At A. U.

Daily World 10-29-39

An exhibit of library material on "The Negro in American Life" is being shown in the feyer of the Atlanta University Library, and will continue on view through Nov. 13. The exhibit, covering the period from the Civil War down to the turn of the Century, was assembled by the Case Extension Circuit Cooperative of New York City from the Schomburg Collection of the 135th street Branch of the New York Public Library.

Outstanding in the display are books and manuscripts on slavery, the place of Negro soldiers in the Northern armies, the Reconstruction Era, and the development of Negro schools and colleges.

Photographs and writings of some of the leaders of the period also are displayed. Noteworthy are "Fletcher's Studies in Slavery" written in defense of slaveholding; Siebert's "The Underground Railroad" considered one of the best books on the subject; and Walker's Appeal, issued in 1829, the first work of a Negro advocating outright rebellion. An interesting item deals with famous exodus led by "Pap" Singleton to Kansas in 1879.

Literary works of widely varied quality written in this period are displayed. John Jasper, a Baptist pastor of Richmond, Virginia wrote little. Chestnut by contrast, was a supreme stylist, while Beker was an earlier poet in the North. Scarborough's "Lessons in Greek" was a work of another kind.

In the Reconstruction Era, when so much history of the Negro was being enacted, there was much history writing. The exhibit includes the best work of this kind, namely "The History of the Negro Race in America," by George Washington Williams and the best biographical compilation of the era written by William J. Simmons, president of the State University in Louisville, Kentucky. Most widely known writer of the period was Paul Lawrence Dunbar, whose life and works are part of the display. Booker T Washington one of the best know Negro educators in American history is represented in the exhibit by his famous address given at the opening of the Atlanta Cotton States Exposition in 1898.

Morgan Gets $3,000 For Library Books

BALTIMORE, Md. — President D. O. W. Holmes of Morgan College recently announced that the General Education Board has advised him of a grant of $3,000 for library books available as soon as he certifies that $5,000 has been raised for that purpose from other sources.

This contingent gift of the General Education Board means that every hundred dollars given will get $60 from the Board, and the total will buy one hundred and sixty dollars worth of books.

The music department, under the direction of Miss Violet S. Banks presented its second annual program of High Lights from Grand Opera on Wednesday, January 18.

The program consisted of arias and choruses from Lohengrin by Wagner; Il Trovatore by Verdi; Pagliacci by Leoncavallo. The soloists were Helen Oldham, soprano, and G. LeRoi Bennett, tenor.

DEAN MAYS VESPER SPEAKER

In a recent challenging sermon to Morgan students Dean Mays of Howard University called attention to the "weights" or encumbrances to human living. He declared: "There are three of these weights which college youth in particular should cast off: First that of being satisfied with inadequate conditions whether they are mental, physical or spiritual; second, that of putting off until tomorrow that which can be done today; and third, a lack of sense of mission or responsibility."

On Sunday, January 2nd, at 4:00 p.m., the Reverend Dr. Edgar A. Love, District Superintendent of the Washington District of the Methodist Church spoke at the Vesper service.

Maryland Gets First Library For Negroes

Women's Club Opens Doors In Cambridge; Mrs. Fernandis Speaks

CAMBRIDGE, Maryland (WNS) — Threatening skies failed to stop several hundred people of all races and from several states from hearing Mrs. Sarah Fernandis of Baltimore and organizer of the Cooperative Women's Civic League and member of the National Youth Administration Council, deliver the principal address at the opening of the first Negro established library in the Free State.

Using as the theme for her message, "Cooperation and Construction," Mrs. Fernandis stressed the point that "this library is a place where everybody is welcomed and should get the foundation for building a better group."

The library, the dream of a local woman, Mrs. Helen B. Sampson, come true has volumes of books of more than 1800 and carry subscription to several daily papers, 5 weekly, all Negro, and several magazines, all donated by citizens of this community and well-wishers.

The library, the only one in the State organized and controlled solely by Negroes is a public free library under the trusteeship of the Mes Aines Club which was organized several years ago by Mrs. Sampson for the sole purpose of establishing this library.

WANT NEGRO BOOKS

Mrs. Helen C. Waters, chairman of the library committee stated to your correspondent that it is the hope of the club to obtain as much Negro literature and history as possible. They believe that we don't know quite as much as we should about our own race and that thru this library we may be able to obtain more of that much needed knowledge.

Other speakers on the program were: Edw. Wilson, register of Morgan State College; Rev. Elmer Gibson, nationally known speaker of Salisbury, Md., J. F. Stewart, Grand Traveling Deputy of the I.B.P.O.E. of W., and member of the Md. State Interracial Comm.; Atty. S. E. W. Camper, only Negro attorney on the Eastern Shore; Prof. Lycurgis Kiah, principal of St. Clair High of Cambridge; Revs. E. R. Tillery of Bethel AME and C. B. Gerald of Waugh M. E., both of Cambridge.

SCHOMBURG STILL LIVES, AMID FOND MEM'RYS ENTWINED, IN HEARTS OF FAMILY AND FRIENDS, HE LEFT BEHIND.

An organizing committee, consisting of friends, co-workers and admirers of the late Arthur A. Schomberg, scholar, Bibliophile and curator, are planning to have Thursday, June 8, a memorial in his honor, sponsored by the 135th Street Branch New York Public Library, Miss Ernestine Rose, librarian. An elaborate program, well worthy the subject, is in process of formation and will serve as a most commendable exception or refutation of the statement so universally quoted:

"The evil that men do lives after them, the good is oft interred with their bones."

Arthur A. Schomberg was, in many ways, a grand character, charming personality, unselfish, far too generous for his own good. An earnest student, who never hesitated to bestow upon friend or foe, the wealth of historic information that came as a result of his indefatigable labors. In common with all God's children, he was not free from human frailities, but the good he did, so far over shadowed the ill, that as years pass, more gloriously transcendent will stand the achievements, that his memorial will so fittingly and eloquently emphasize. L. D. Reddick Successor To A. Schomburg

Jacksonville Man Chosen Curator At Harlem Library

NEW YORK, June—(ANP)—The New York public library, through its chief of circulation, Franklin F. Hopper, has announced the appointment of Dr. Lawrence D. Reddick to the position of Negro literature and history, located in the 135th street branch at which Ernestine Rose is librarian.

A native of Jacksonville, Fla., Dr. Reddick was graduated from Fisk university in 1932, received his M. A. from the same institution in '33, and has this year received the degree of doctor of philosophy in history from Chicago university.

Before going to Chicago, he served as instructor in history at Kentucky State college, Frankfort; and associate professor of history at Dillard university, New Orleans. He has also been associated with the Journal of Negro History as assistant editor.

Reddick will report on August 1 to take over this important position in the library system of New York City, which was formerly held by the late Arthur A. Schomburg.

See Effort Of School Plans To Halt Fight

Picketing And Mass Meeting Plans Laid By Norfolkians

NORFOLK, Va.—(SNS)—Miss Aline Black, a local high school teacher whose court case is the spearhead of the legal battle now going on in this state to equalize the salaries of Negro and white teachers, is out of a job.

Miss Black was notified through her principal June 14 that the school board had refused to issue her a contract for another year. It was also revealed that Miss Black had had $4.01 deducted from her June pay check for her appearance in court June 1.

Immediately Thurgood Marshall, assistant special counsel for the Association came to Norfolk from New York to confer with City Attorney Alfred Anderson. Anderson and his assistant, W. Old, Jr., represented the school board in Miss Black's mandamus action which was argued before Judge Allan R Hanckel in the circuit court of Norfolk June 1.

DENIED PETITION

Judge Hanckel denied Miss Black's petition, which sought to compel the school board to pay her and all other Negro teachers in Norfolk the same salary as white teachers with similar qualifications and doing the same work.

Marshall and his associates, Dr. Leon A. Ransom, and J. Thomas Ewin, immediately noted an appeal. It was while this appeal was pending that the school board indirectly notified the teacher that she would not be reappointed.

Citizens of Norfolk are determined to fight the case to a finish. A mass meeting will be held here June 5, and plans for picketing the office of the school board have been made by members of the Virginia State Teachers Association, which is financing the legal fight.

It was also announced that the teachers' committee would see to it that Miss Black's salary for next year is paid.

ISSUE STATEMENT

Pledging full support in the fight, N. A. A. C. P. officials issued the following statement from the organization's national headquarters in New York today:

"The attitude of the Norfolk, Va., school board in denying Miss Black reappointment and deducting $4.01 from her check for the day she lost, due to the necessity of her appearance in court June 1, is utterly shameless.

"Her brilliant record both in college and during her teaching career makes the board's action stand out in contrast. If members of the board feel that they can intimidate any teacher through such tactics they are in for a rude awakening.

"Instead of lessening the fight, this action on the board's part will only make citizens and teachers alike see the necessity of really putting up a stiff fight until Miss Black's case in won not only for herself, but for every other Negro teacher in Virginia."

New Books in the Schomburg Collection

Dr. L. D. Reddick, curator of the Division of Negro Literature, announces many new additions to the important collection at the 135th Street Library. Dr. Reddick hinted that one of the best ways to forget the summer heat is to take a good book and drift away with the story.

Among the new books are:

"Star Spangled Virgin" by DuBose Heyward, author of "Porgy" and "Mamba's Daughters." Here is the story of what happened when the New Deal came to the people of the Virgin Islands. It is not history, but it is highly entertaining.

"O "Canaan" by Waters E. Turpin is a novel of the great migration. These Southern Negroes who treked to the promised land of Chicago, found a Canaan that turned out to be not so promising after all.

"Crime and the Man" by Harvard's Anthropologist E. A. Hooton, is a scientific study well written. The illustrations are graphic. This book is especially recommended for the uninformed who still believe that the Negro leads in the crime of rape.

A solid study of Negro Education In Alabama is the one of Dr. Horace Mann Bond. This was the prize essay at the University of Chicago. Dr. Bond, formerly head of the Department of Education at Fisk University, is now the newly elected president of Fort Valley State Teacher's College. His penetrating study shows how the form and content of Tuskegee and other Alabama institutions were determined by the struggle between the steel and cotton barons with their politicians.

"Let Me Breathe Thunder" by William Attaway is a novel which reverses the usual formula of whites writing about Negroes. Here a young Negro author writes with insight of a lost generation of white youth.

Dr. Carter G. Woodson's Associated Publishers has again given us an important historical work, "The Negro In Brazil" by Arthur Ramos, a South-American scholar, is an easily read account of the history and life of Negroes in a Latin American country about the size of the United States. In this land there is much less agonizing over skin color.

In this day when labor struggles constitute such an important part of the current picture, "Black Workers and the New Unions," by Horace Cayton and George Mitchell is indeed timely. This is a scholarly work sprinkled with valuable statistics. It brings up to date he account begun by Abram Harris and Sterling Spero in the Black Worker. Cayton and Mitchell tell of the Negro and the C.I.O.

Two Ph.D. dissertations published by the Columbia University Press should hold a special interest for Harlemites. These are "The Negro Immigrant" by Ira De A. Reid and the "Puerto Rican Migrant in New York City" by Laurence B. Chenault. These studies analyze the conflicts and adjustments of foreign born Negroes to America.

The photography in "Forty Acres and Steel Mules" by Herman C. Nixon is almost as good as that is that in "You Have Seen Their Faces." These pictures and the accompanying script tell the story of the exploited poor white and poor Negro tenant farmers of the South. The possibilities of social change through mechanization are urged. Even the children will enjoy the pictures.

"Animal Tales from the Old North State" by Lucy M. Cobb and Mary A. Hicks is a new collection of Negro folk tales. This is a children's book but very often grown-ups are discovered reading it.

Schomburg Collection Has Books On Negroes In Wars

"If one-half of the soap-box orators and the barber shop debaters would interrupt their speeches for a couple of hours and sit down and read the facts of history, there would be less noisy, ill-informed talk of what the Negro did in this war or that battle or what he will do in any present or future war," Dr. L. D. Reddick, curator of the Schomburg Collection at the 135th Street Branch of the New York Public Library, declared Monday.

The Schomburg Collection located at 103 West 135th street, formally known as the Division of Negro Literature, was established to preserve the historical records of the people of African descent, to stimulate race consciousness and encourage race pride, to inspire writers and art students, and to give information about the Negro.

Set Up 5 Negro Book Stations In County

Friday of this week the Gaston County Public Library will inaugurate a new branch of service in the establishment of five book stations for the Negroes of the county. Inauguration of this phase of the library service is the culmination of several months of planning by the board of trustees of the library.

The five stations, which bring the total of book stations in the county to 45, will be located at Lincoln Academy, Stewart junior high school at Bessemer City, John Chavis high school at Cherryville, Reid high school at Belmont and the Negro Community Centre of Gastonia.

In each of those five places a special library committee will have charge of the work and a volunteer librarian will be in charge of the stations. The bookmobile, under the supervision of Miss Barbara Eaker, will visit each station once a month. A special selection of books for this purpose has just been received and are ready to go out. The work is begun with 500 volumes and this will be added to from time to time.

Books at these stations will be available not only to school children but to adults in each community as well.

"You might be surprised to know," Miss Lottie Blake, the librarian told the reporter, "that we have found two trained librarians among the Negroes of the county, that is persons who have had special training in library schools. You would also be surprised to see the list of books the Negroes requested us to buy for them. We asked those in each community to send in request lists. The large majority of books that Negroes want are those of a serious nature—history, biography, books dealing with agriculture, with manual training, various crafts and very little in the way of fiction."

The library management, including members of the board of trustees, are delighted at the prospect of extending the services of this institution to the Negroes of the county. They express the belief that it will not only be appreciated but that it will be used to the fullest extent.

Library Planned For Use Negroes

Small Building to be Erected On Lot Near Church on Granville Street

In connection with an effort of the Granville County Library Board to provide facilities for serving the Negroes of the county and town, the National Youth Administration will assist in the erection of a library building and development of a recreational ground on Granville street.

The Board of Town Commissioners on Tuesday night told B. W. Parham, representing the Library Board, the city would grant title to a town-owned lot, adjacent to the Negro Baptist church, for development of library facilities and a playground, with the provision that should the property ever cease to be used for such purpose that it would revert to the Town of Oxford.

It was stated that such a plan had been outlined to National Youth Administration officials and that they had tentatively accepted the plan and agreed to provide materials and erect the needed building for the library.

While the town contemplates no extensive development, swings and other playground equipment doubtless will be made available for use of Negro children on the property.

NEGRO INITIATIVE.

(Winston-Salem Journal)

Durham negroes have successfully completed a campaign to raise $33,000 for a new public library for their race in that city. The funds have been pledged and the structure will be built in the near future.

This is just one of many instances which go to show that much of the progress made by the negro in Southern communities stems out of his own initiative and effort. Of course at Durham the city and county authorities will give the colored people appreciable help in carrying out the enterprise, but the project began with the negroes and it was their interest, zeal and determination to help themselves in the matter of library facilities which assured success for the project.

The progress of any individual community or group largely depends upon this spirit of initiative and self-help.

Rural Library Reports Gains

Lexington.—The Davidson county library in its new home here offers new enjoyment for the reading public. Mrs. Louise J. Sink, librarian, is pleased over the greater number of regular library readers who are using the library and the number of new readers who have signed cards since November.

The Davidson county library system has the distinction of being the first county system to be installed in new buildings in one year; the Thomasville branch in April moved into new quarters in the city hall building, and the Lexington branch moved in November to the new Junior Order library building.

The Davidson county library is also first to inaugurate library service to its rural Negro residents, this being done through the colored branch in Lexington.

This library enjoys the distinction of being the first library in the South to receive aid from the Julius Rosenwald Foundation. There were only two libraries to receive this aid in North Carolina, the Lexington branch and the Mecklenburg county library in Charlotte.

Bennett College Is Looking Ahead Through New Library

Emphasis Is Placed Upon Reading Books That Will Liberalize Education of Students—Reading Periods Inaugurated.

By C. H. MARTEENA.

The recently dedicated Thomas F. Holgate library, picturesque in its setting of massive oaks, is a distinct asset to the beauty of the Bennett college campus in Greensboro. It is Georgian in design, corresponding with the architecture of the other recently constructed buildings on the campus. The addition of this, the 18th building, to the campus structures iis indicative of the steady consistent physical growth of the college; but more than that, this library represents on the part of the administration an ever-widening concept of education to fit the demands of a progressive age.

In actual operation the Thomas F. Holgate library exemplifies the philosophy of education which Bennett college has adopted. "The library gives life and substance to every activity of the college. The activity and the spirit of eager inquiry that one observes in the library and in the laboratories is a measure of the success of a modern college," said Dr. Jackson Davis, associate director of the General Education board, of New York city, in dedicating the Holgate library on April 16.

Bennett Program.

In planning for the use of the library, the administration has kept in mind the basic ideals of the college. All of the experiences of a student on the Bennett college campus are considered educative, since education is that training of the whole individual that will best fit that individual to become a productive member of society.

Thirteen years ago, when Bennett college was reorganized as a college exclusively for the higher education of young women, its president set up certain specific aims which, since that time, have been the guiding motives of all the activities of the college. Bennett has aimed to emphasize fitness, religious and ethical growth, the proper use of leisure time, interest and participation in community welfare, knowledge and experience in the art of home-making, adequate preparation in a given vocation, and an appreciation for things intellectual and cultural which stimulate creative expression. Many agencies on the campus work together for the accomplishment of these ends, but the library is the co-ordinating unit through which the Bennett college graduate is to be made ready to assume the full responsibilities of citizenship.

Reading Periods.

Special recent innovations in the work to further the ideals of the college enhance the importance of increased library facilities. Reading periods have been introduced for juniors and seniors, in lieu of formal class periods. For one week prior to examinations upperclass students may use class time in self-directed study or in conference with instructors. The individual student is at liberty to do intensive reading in accordance with her greatest needs or interests. For the first time this semester honor students are not subject to class attendance regulations, these students being given an opportunity to utilize their time in collateral reading to supplement classroom work. Clinics for individual help in reading, speech, writing, French, and the natural sciences have been organized for intensive individual study.

The department of music, directed by Dr. R. Nathaniel Dett, noted composer and conductor, has augmented its work by the addition of instruction in four wind instruments and the organization of an orchestra. This may lead later to the introduction of a course in orchestra or instrumental ensemble. Courses in secretarial science and office practice to meet an increasing demand in business are being added. The program of the department of home economics, directed by Dr. Flemmie P. Kittrell, the only Negro woman in the country holding a Ph. D. degree in the field of home economics, is consistantly expanding. This year a nursery school-parent education center was established to serve both college and community needs. Constantly expanding library facilities will obviously be needed to develop effectively an ever-widening field of usefulness.

The Holgate library has a book capacity of more than 60,000 volumes. Its collection, now limited, will be increased from time to time with a view toward meeting specific needs. "Friends of the Holgate library" have recently made valuable contributions toward this collection. Important among these is a collection of Lincolniana, 43 volumes on the life of Abraham Lincoln, given by Bishop Robert E. Jones of Columbus, Ohio, a member of the board of trustees. The library will build collections in the humanities, the natural sciences, social sciences, and home economics to meet the needs of the curricula of these divisions. Its collections for reference, in the arts, in books of general interest, in books for pure entertainment, including books on hobbies, are also to be increased as funds permit. It is hoped that a collection of rare books will also be procured.

From time to time interesting educational exhibitions will be presented in the exhibition rooms. Already, there has been held an exhibition of oil paintings loaned by the National Collection of Fine Arts, the American Federation of Fine Arts the National Museum, the American Federation of Arts, and Howard University. A part of this exhibition is to be continued through May 8. The library has provisions for informal group meetings of students and for community meetings, in addition to the rooms devoted exclusively to reading, reserved books, and the technical work of the library staff.

A conference of North Carolina librarians at the time of the dedication considered questions of major importance to the library administrator and to the faculty. At this conference there were discussions of contemporary literature, students' reading interests, and the planning of the small library. The most important finding was that emphasis should be placed on the library as a focal point for all educational activities on a college campus. The technical work of the librarian is indispensable, but getting the students to read books that will liberalize their education was considered of paramount importance.

Assembles Father's Papers As Gift To Ohio Library

TOLEDO, Ohio--(A N P)--Mrs. Florida Ruffin Ridley, prominent resident here and daughter of the late great Judge George L. Ruffin of Boston, is busily engaged on the commendable work of assembling the valued papers of her illustrious father and adding them to her family data for presentation to some outstanding library.

Mrs. Ridley's collection of authenticated records shows the Ruffin family dating from the birth of John Lewis, grandfather of George Ruffin, in Richmond, Va., in 1744. The record, kept by George W. Ruffin, father of George L., runs from 1824 to 1860, is wonderfully complete and revealing, showing, by means of receipts, bills, wills, deeds, newspaper clips and court transactions, the status and standard of life of a free Negro family in slave Virginia.

The records show life of the Ruffin family in Boston since 1853, when they settled there, of George Ruffin's social and political activities and his certificate of graduation from Harvard Law School in 1879, first Negro to win that distinction.

Also included in the collection: George Ruffin's diary of the Syracuse convention, 1864; copies of the ballots on which he ran successfully for Boston Common council, 1872; papers showing his election to Massachusetts State legislature, 1860-70; a copy of his commission as judge of Charlestown court, Mass.; and letters from Frederick Douglass, famed Negro orator and abolitionist, William Lloyd Garrison and other celebrities of that day.

LIBRARY FACILITIES FOR COLORED PEOPLE PLANNED

At a recent meeting of the Darlington county board of education extensive plans were discussed for extending the Darlington county traveling library facilities to the Negro schools throughout this section of South Carolina.

According to Mr. Kelley, superintendent of education, all of the schools in the county will participate in the new arrangement, except the city schools of Darlington and Hartsville. Each of these Negro schools have their own library conveniences, and it will not be necessary for them to be included in the library plans.

Due to lack of funds it will be necessary to limit the library facilities for some time. However, this is the beginning of what county officials believe will be one of the most satisfactorily conducted plans ever undertaken in this county. Several hundred books are being ordered for the Negro school children, and as soon as these books arrive, the plan will go into effect. It is hoped that more funds will be available next year for the purchase of additional books. None of the schools have had books, and necessarily the beginning will be on a small scale. A separate exchange of books will be available to the white and colored school children. This separate collection of volumes will make it possible for several thousand boys and girls of the county to read books which they have been eager for. It is planned to put a separate collection of books in the Negro schools for a period of six weeks, after which this deposit will be exchanged for another. The books will be circulated through the schools and the volumes will be borrowed from the schoolrooms.

In order for the Negro schools to become eligible for this county library facility, it is necessary for each school to furnish a securely locked bookcase. There are thirty-six Negro schools in Darlington county which will soon be taking advantage of the new library facilities and a teacher will be designated in each of the schools to keep records of the borrowed books, and thus be responsible for same.

Allen Seeks Library Fund At Batesburg

Batesburg, March 31.—The Allen university music department of Columbia will sponsor a program of solos, quartets and ensemble singing at the Negro school here at 8 o'clock Monday evening, according to announcement from Principal N. L. Bush.

The late Dr. E. H. McGill, who died recently in Baltimore, had a budget to raise $10,000 for a library building on the campus of Allen. The meeting Monday night has been arranged for friends of Batesburg and Leesville to subscribe to this fund irrespective of denomination.

The acting president, Therman E. O'Daniel, will accompany the singers and will make remarks concerning the library drive and will answer questions pertaining to administration of the university since the death of Doctor McGill.

Principal Bush also announced that large crowds of Negroes from Saluda, Leesville, Edgefield and other places were expected to to hear Doctor O'Daniel.

A small admission fee will be charged and arrangements will be made for white friends who care to come. Prof. F. B. Abraham is the director of the music department.

Library Books On Negroes Offered on Approved List

Library books portraying great and insignificant negroes and everyday negro life will be offered on the state-approved library list this fall.

The volumes, written by negroes or white persons who understood and sympathize with the race, range from works dealing with Dr George Carver, the scientist, to "Tobe," a fictitious "Darky" who encounters snakes, cotton-picking cow-milking and 'possum-hunting. The illustrations are all of negroes.

The books are for elementary grade pupils only, as, state department of education officials explained, the great number of negro pupils are found there.

James H. Hope, state superintendent of education, when asked the object of adding the books to the annual library list, commented:

"Inasmuch as the negro schools will be buying books for their libraries, we feel that they should have an opportunity to buy some books by their own authors, if they want to."

The books are for libraries only and do not include textbooks by negro writers.

One department official explained that some of the books brought out the natural humor of the negro without making him appear ridiculous.

One volume, entitled "Negro Art, Music and Rhyme," shows how rhythm enters the colored man's life so extensively, as in singing while cotton-picking, hoeing or wielding a pick.

The negro pupils heretofore, it was pointed out, have had to read books carrying illustrations of white children but now they will be offered some works showing negroes in their natural surroundings.

"The Child's Story of the Negro" presents a broader viewpoint on the slavery question.

It states:

"At no time were all negroes in this country slaves. Although it was difficult, it was always possible for a few slaves to become free. Some negroes were never slaves, and in 1830 as many as 3,777 had become slave holders themselves."

Another volume explains that slavery was not peculiar to the negro race in the south but that many races have been enslaved at various times throughout history.

"An Elementary History of America," carrying a picture of Abraham Lincoln in the front, records contributions to human progress by noted negroes. It starts with the negro in Africa and details how he came to America and began shedding his African ways of living in favor of the American way.

Legends are prepared for the library catalog about all the boks. The one about this volume says:

"The negro child will enjoy this book because it deals with the life of the great men of his own race. The white child will also be helped in the reading of this book because it will give him a better understanding of the accomplishments of members of the negro race and will help him to know negroes beyond the few with whom he comes in contact in his local community."

Titles of some other boks are:

"'Bout Cullud Folkses," poems written in negro dialect; "Shine," the antics of a boy by that name; "Nicodemus and Petunia"; "Nicodemus and His Gang"; "The Picture-Poetry Book"; "Negro Folk Tales."

One book tells of negro myths and how they originated in Africa.

Miss Martha Thomas, director of the elementary grade division of the education department and who has charge of the library books, explained that "it is much easier to understand a person if you understand his background." These books give the background of the negro's life.

Noted members of the race whose lives are related include Dr. Carver, Booker T. Washington, Phillis Wheatley, Jan E. Matzeliger, Paul Laurence Dunbar and Paul Cuffe.

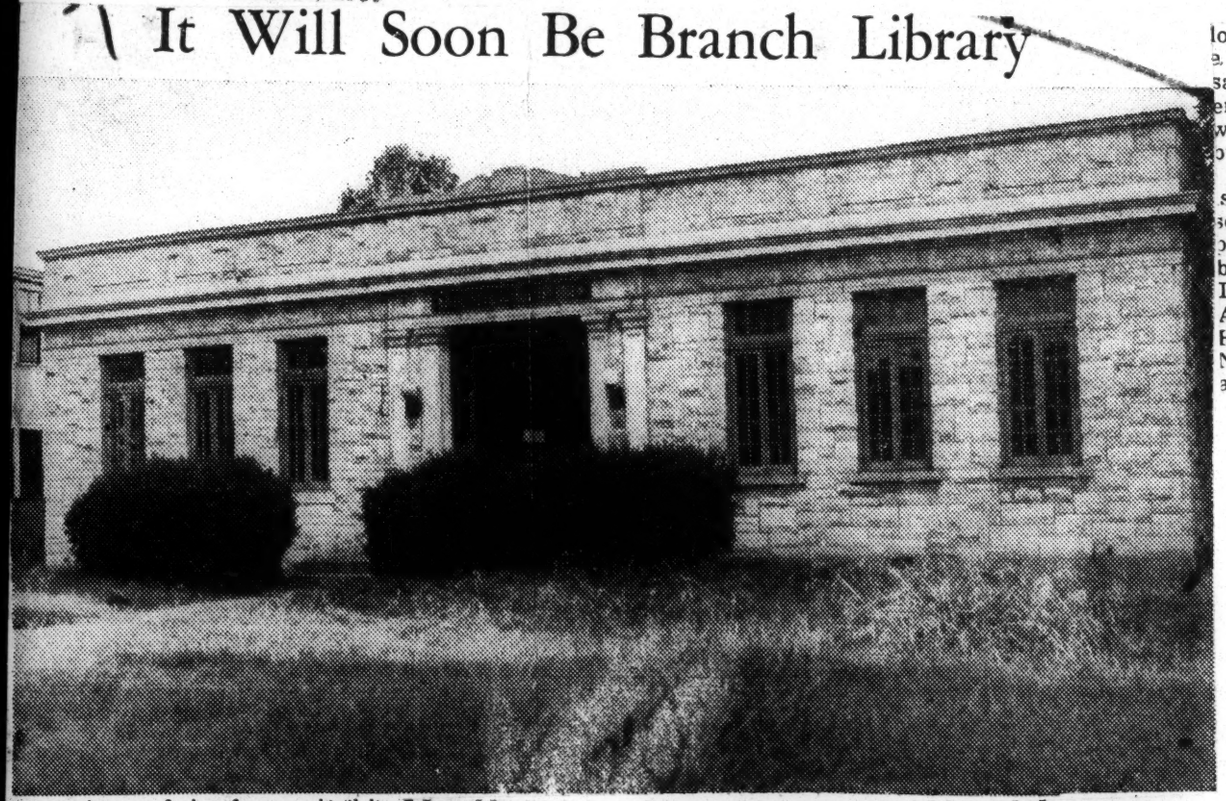
It Will Soon Be Branch Library



Purchase of the former building occupied by McDowell & Monteverde on Vance is being made by the Cossitt Library, which will operate a branch there to serve negroes of the Foote slum clearance project.

Building Purchased To House Library Branch For Negroes

Cossitt Library is buying the former McDowell & Monteverde Funeral Home building at 531 Vance and will convert it into a branch to serve the Henry Foote Homes slum clearance project for negroes.

The new library building will replace the library branch on Butler which recently was closed because it was in the area which had to be demolished to make way for the new better housing project. Location of the former branch was leased, with option to purchase.

Few Changes Needed

Cossitt officials yesterday said they considered the McDowell property ideal for a library branch, as virtually no remodeling will be necessary for the exterior and very few changes will be needed inside. The one story stone veneer structure now contains four large rooms. One of them, the former chapel, can easily be converted into a reading room, and the others will require only the installation of book shelves and office equipment, they said.

The property, which has been in receivership, is being bought from F. M. Robinson, receiver. W. Curtis Pope, attorney for the receiver, said the purchase price is $7000. The Dean-Paine realty firm is agent in the transaction.

The McDowell & Monteverde property has a frontage of 113 feet on Vance and originally ran to a depth of 520 feet. In laying out the Foote Homes slum clearance erea, housing offiicals excluded a strip 150 feet deep along Vance wes from Lauderdale, including th McDowell property.

Rear Was Cut Off

Result was that the funeral home building, which is well back from the street, had its rear section cut off. The rear part of the structure, howver, included only the workrooms and garages, and the main building still is intact.

Sale of the property to the library was approved in Chancery Court early this week.

Wassell Randolph, president of the Cossitt Library Board of Trustees, said yesterday that remodeling would start as soon as title is transferred and an architect selected. He stressed that the present interior arrangement would need revamping for efficiet library use, forecasts a total construction cost of about $3500.

Praises Location

"The board is happy to obtain this location because it seems ideal as a branch library for negroes," he said. "It is possible that Cossitt's entire work for Memphis negroes will eventually radiate from this building."

Board of Trustees of the library is scheduled to meet this week to select an architect and expedite plans for the new branch. On the board are Mr. Randolph, president; Thomas Wellford, Frank Gailor, Alfred Mason, A. W. Ketchum, Horace H. Hull, E. W. Hale Jr., Neely Mallory and Mayor Overton as an ex-officio member.

Presbyterian School Holds Many Honors

Is Denomination's Only School For Negro Youth

Knoxville College was established on its present site by the United Presbyterian Church in 1876. It is the only college for Negro youth in the denomination, and it is the only Negro college within a radius of 200 miles of Knoxville.

This pioneer institution in the education of the Negro was first started in Nashville a few years prior to its establishment in Knoxville, operating there as the McKee School. Knoxville was eventually selected as a better field for the school, and under the Rev. J. P. Wright was opened in East Knoxville in September, 1875. Removed to its present site a year later, it was established as a college under the name it now bears.

Started by the Rev. Joseph G McKee, the school has had only four presidents since its establishment as a college: Drs. J. S. McCulloch, 1877 till 1899; R. W. McGranahan, 1899 till 1918; J. K. Giffen, 1918 until 1936, and Samuel M. Laing, 1936 until the present.

This liberal arts college has academic recognition, being a member of the Association of American Colleges and of the Southern Association of Colleges for Negro Youth, and is fully accredited by the Southern Association of Colleges and Secondary Schools.

The faculty and staff of the college are bi-racial, totaling 38 in number.

The college has a campus of about 80 acres, the front 25 acres comprising the campus proper, with the remainder being used as farmland. It has 10 major buildings, and counting residences, barns, and other structures, has 26 buildings in all.

Drawing students from 20-odd states, the enrollment averages around 400 annually. Three degrees are offered: Bachelor of Arts, Bachelor of Science and Bachelor of Music.

Support for the institution is provided from incomes from productive endowment of over $600,000, grants from the denomination students' fees and occasional gifts

Knoxville College spends over $50,000 in the city of Knoxville annually, all imported money, coming largely from Northern sources. It receives no state aid, and other than NYA grants, no Federal aid, and is not helped by any of the Foundations. Other than a few occasional gifts, it receives no financial aid from Knoxville.

The product of the college is such that 90 per cent of graduates find gainful employment upon graduation. The majority of the Negro teachers in Knoxville are Knoxville College trained. Numbered among graduates are many nationally and internationally recognized men and women.

Entrance To Library At Knox College

Knoxville College is the only Negro college within a 200-mile radius of Knoxville, and is one of the most important institutions of its kind in the country. Above is pictured the entrance to the college's Carnegie Library, an unusually complete and well-equipped college building.

Dixie Homes To Obtain Library

MEMPHIS, Mar. 2.—It was recently announced that Dixie Homes will open its own library March 2, through the cooperation of Cossitt Library, the public library of Memphis. The opening stock of books, authorities estimated, will number around 500. The Dixie library, as it will be called, will be open not only to tenants of the Homes settlement, but also to residents in the surrounding community.

The project will be under the supervision of H. E. Oates, the Homes' director of social and recreational activities.

NEGRO BRANCH LIBRARY OPENS AT 531 VANCE

Building Purchased By Cossitt As Permanent Site

The negro branch of Cossitt Library, now open in its third home at 531 Vance, has three times as much space and is fully equipped as a center for negro library activities, Jesse Cunningham, Cossitt head, said yesterday.

Its location, in front of the William H. Foote Homes, worked out with the Memphis Housing Authority, makes it adjacent to a large negro area. A library station, open three days a week, already is operated at Dixie Homes on Poplar.

"This gives us outlets for library service on both north and south," Mr. Cunnigham said. "Classroom collections in public schools will be handled from the negro branch."

In the stone veneer building are children's reading room, circulation and reference sections, stacks workroom, and an office.

Rosa Cooke, librarian, is a graduate of LeMoyne College and has had professional library training. Hours are 2 to 8 daily, except Sundays.

The negro library was first opened in 1934 in Church Audito-

Dr. Gandy

State Board To Get Data Next Month

Dr. John M. Gandy, president of the State College for Negroes at Petersburg, was authorized by the State Board of Education yesterday to compile data on faculty, library and laboratory facilities necessary to provide for additional graduate instruction at the institution.

The data, including cost estimates, may be considered at the board's next monthly meeting, according to Dr. Sidney B. Hall, State superintendent of public instruction.

He said the board adopted a policy two years ago providing for the development of graduate work in liberal arts and sciences at the Petersburg college as speedily as conditions would permit. Dr. Gandy reported in January that graduate instruction already was being offered in the social and natural sciences.

Board Visits Petersburg

The provision for further expansion of graduate work at the institution is in line with a recent United States Supreme Court decision in a Missouri case holding that States must provide educational "equal facilities" for Negroes.

There is no State institution which provides for the instruction of Negroes in law and medicine, but under a law enacted a few years ago the State pays the difference between the cost of such instruction in Virginia and the cost at some Northern or Western institution which admits Negro students.

Members of the education board visited the Petersburg college yesterday afternoon after a session here yesterday morning during which they approved summer school faculties for State Teachers Colleges.

The meeting was the quarterly one for consideration of teachers college problems. The Petersburg visit was in accordance with the board's custom of holding one meeting annually at each of the State educational institutions.

CITY LIBRARY BOARD OUTLINES POSITION ON COLORED BRANCH

Statement is Issued Today Through Mrs. A. A. Smoot, President

HISTORY IS OUTLINED

Efforts to Secure Present Library Cited; Survey Conducted

The Alexandria Library Board, through its President, Mrs. Albert A. Smoot, today issued the following statement to the press referring to the recent incidents at the Library, with the avowed intent of setting before the public some of the principal facts about the library situation in Alexandria:

There was no library of any kind in Alexandria until 1794 when a private one was founded. It remained entirely private until August, 1937. In other words for nearly 200 years the city had no public or semi-public library either for white or colored people. From the founding of a private library it took 143 years for the white people to obtain the library the city now has. Our colored citizens have been seeking a similar privilege for only 2 years.

Indeed it is perhaps inaccurate to say that they have been seeking such a privilege for two years. Shortly after the present library opened, the Library Board appointed a committee to meet with a number of prominent colored citizens of Alexandria. Out of these discussions came the recommendation that the drive for a colored library be temporarily dropped in favor of efforts to acquire a colored boys' club and community center. It was the unanimous opinion of this particular group of people that there was a tremendous immediate need for a boys' club and not a real demand for a colored library at that time.

However, when the present library was built, the Board realized the problem of affording facilities to the coilored people and discussed this matter with City Council. Council verbally stated at the time that when the demand arose they would furnish a colored library. To the knowledge of this Board no organization or group of colored people has ever waited upon City Council and asked for a colored library. Still the Library Board has been investigating all possibilities. It has obtained information from Richmond, Roanoke, Lynchburg, Danville and Petersburg relative to the best methods of erecting and administering a colored library. This past spring, Miss Katherine Scoggin, the Alexandria Librarian, voluntarily took part of her own brief holiday to go to Danville to examine personally the advanced colored library facilities in that town.

During the early part of this year and before any of the pending legal steps had been taken by certain private individuals, the Library Board considered and recommended to City Council certain very definite steps which would secure colored library facilities immediately This recommendation was discussed at a meeting of the Alexandria Interracial Commission. Shortly afterward, and without warning, a suit was filed to compel the Librarian to issue reading cards to colored people.

Later in the spring a joint meeting was held between representatives of the Library Board, the Interracial Commission and City Council. The definite decision was made to ask City Council for a separate colored library rather than for an addition to the present one for colored people. The Library Board has been intensely interested in this project ever since its beginning in 1937. We believe that the majority of the colored citizens in Alexandria realize and appreciate this fact.

The difficulties of getting a library are many. Actually our present library was the result of the generosity and hard work of many of our citizens. The building was given by Doctor and Mrs. Robert S. Barrett. The books were given by the Alexandria Library Society which had accumulated them through years and years of energy, thrift and adversity. The land was given by the Society of Friends. In other words, it did not cost the public of the city one cent to start the library. All of these gifts showed a tremendous interest in and demand for the present library.

We understand that collections are being taken in some parts of the city for the benefit of a colored library. Under our plans and those of City Council no such donations are necessary. If these gifts are being asked for the purpose of paying court expenses or attorneys' fees, we sincerely believe them unnecessary. The Library Board will continue its past interest and efforts to provide complete facilities in Alexandria regardless of steps taken in court by some over-zealous persons.

BOOKS VIA BUS IN APPOMATTOX—Appomattox County's public school circulating library, three years old this month, has taken books to all children of all schools and been hailed as a success in helping youngsters to learn. In lower photo, students at Spout Springs Negro school receive books from Mrs. Mozella Price (standing at right of car), elementary school superviser.

Three Years of Service to Rural Youth Marked By Appomattox Library This Month

APPOMATTOX—The Appomattox County circulating public school library this month celebrates the completion of the third year in which it has broadened educational horizons for both white and Negro youngsters in this county.

Authorized by the State Board of Education as a demonstration of a unified county public school library system, it now has a dual collection of books including about 6,000 volumes each for white schools and Negro schools. It operates under a professionally trained librarian who also serves as librarian for Appomattox High School.

Objectives Listed

The library's objectives, as listed by Miss Violet Ramsey, county school librarian, are:

"To supply the schools of Appomattox County with more and better books and the centralization of materials and books for broader use; to enrich the curriculum and to provide supplementary materials; to make possible the teaching of many books; to afford opportunities for enriching and broadening the book experience of children; to teach the use of books as tools and libraries as sources of knowledge, so that in the present and in the future by co-operation with all types of libraries these skills will make possible the gaining of information and the carrying out of independent investigation and study; to develop effective reading habits for pleasure and skill; and to supply the inhabitants of the town of Appomattox and the surrounding rural communities with recreational reading."

The county library staff is augmented by workers furnished through WPA. Four WPA helpers assist the librarian at the high school, and one full time WPA helper is employed with the aid of a part-time NYA worker at the Negro school. One Negro teacher, who has had library training at Hampton Institute, is released from teaching duties two afternoons a week to conduct and supervise technical work in the Negro library.

Busses Take Books

Books are circulated from the Appomattox High School to 100 other white schools in the county by bus. Teachers send in requests by bus drivers in the morning, and the books are placed in boxes, furnished free by local merchants, and delivered to the teachers on the same day.

Many boys and girls write directly to the librarian for specific books. In cases of this kind, the librarian answers the note and sends the book directly to the boy or girl, thus giving direct service which appeals to the child and causes the library to become a personal thing to him. When either the rural supervisor or the librarian visits a school, she finds directly through talking to children in each grade their interests and hobbies and has a corresponding lot of books sent to their grade.

The time limit for returning books to the central library is indefinite, but teachers are urged to keep the books only so long as they are being used regularly. Unselfish co-operation of the schools enables a regular rotation of books.

Financed Co-operatively

The Negro collection is circulated by the Negro rural supervisor who visits each of the 10 Negro schools in the county. Negro teachers also come to the county training school for books.

The library is financed on a co-operative basis. Each school is asked to raise a certain amount of money, varying according to size and enrollment. Last school year each one-room school raised $11.25. The consolidated high school at Appomattox raised the largest amount, $1,500. A gift of $500 was made to the Negro library when it was organized in 1937. About $7,270 has been spent for purchases of books for both races. The county school board has agreed to buy $2,200 worth of books each year, and the county librarian is allowed $150 a year from county school funds for expenses of transportation.

Community groups and organizations have become library-minded to the extent of contributing money to the library. There are three organized library clubs whose members meet regularly to discuss books and libraries. Book week is observed in each school in the fall.

Adults to Get Service

Extension of services to adults will be made possible through the WPA Statewide library project, which will place $500 worth of recreational books in the central library for circulation to 15 home demonstration clubs with co-operation of the county agent. Additional loan stations are to be established at postoffices, filling stations and general stores, and book also will be circulated at 4-H Club meetings.

The county library remains open all year. Books are mended and repaired in the summer months, and story hours are held at Appomattox and Pamplin.

"The success of the county library is evidenced by the interest shown by the boys and girls and the enthusiasm with which they have accepted it," Miss Ramsey said. "Classrooms have become less formal. Brownsing tables and chairs have made the library corner an attractive feature of each classroom. Books are making these children's lives richer and happier. Although the Appomattox County circulating library has been an experiment, the superintendent, the county school board, the rural supervisor and the teachers feel that it has answered an immediate need and the service rendered has been priceless."

It was stated by Manager Budwesky that the building and equipment would cost $3,950 and $750 for the lot. On motion of Councilman Lamond it was referred back to the library committee and this committee select a sit and this was adopted.

BOSTON, Mass., June 15—When the will of John Wells Morss, of Marlboro street Boston, retired attorney who died June 4, was filed with Registrar of Probate Arthur W. Sullivan yesterday, it was found that many thousands of dollars were left to colored institutions for social service work and educational purposes. Among the bequests the largest to a colored institution not organized under the laws of this state, was the sum of $20,000 left to Fisk university Nashville, Tenn., principal and income to be used for running expenses; no less than $2,500 or more than $5,000 a year to be turned over. Robert Gould Shaw House in Boston receives $10,000 as does Utica Normal and Industrial Institute, in Utica, Miss. Five thousand dollar bequests were left to the Boston Urban League, Hampton Normal school, the Street Manual Training school in Minter, Ala.; and to Tuskegee Institute. A total amount of $537,500 was divided among colored and white institutions including Harvard, Radcliffe, Wellsley, Mass. Tech, Northfield school, and others. The entire estate was not estimated.

Half Million Public Gifts In Hub Will

10 Schools and Colleges, Hospitals, Employes Receive Bequests

BOSTON, June 8 (UP)—The late John Wells Morss of Boston, a large shareholder in the Simplex Wire and Cable Company, left $500,000 in public bequests under his will on file in Probate Court today.

Among the beneficiaries were 10 educational institutions, including five Negro colleges. The will did not indicate the value of the estate.

He bequeathed $20,000 to Fisk University, Nashville, Tenn.; $10,000 to Utica Normal School, Utica, Miss., and $5000 each to Hampton Normal and Agricultural Institute, Hampton, Va.; Street Manual Training Institute, Minter, Ala., and Tuskegee Institute, Tuskegee, Ala.

Other gifts were: Harvard College, $200,000; Massachusetts Institute of Technology, $50,000; Wellesley College, $5000; Radcliffe College, $5000; Bradford Academy, $5000; Massachusetts General Hospital, $25,000; Boston Museum of Fine Arts, $25,000; Old South Society, $25,000; Harvard's Fogg Museum, $10,000.

All who worked for Morss either at his home or office will receive $100 each for every year they were in his employ. He specifically gave $20,000 plus a 10 per cent. bonus on all salary paid since 1937 to Ione A. Howard of Brockton, an employe, and $5000 to Edward B. Hinckley of Tampa, Fla., also an employe.

State Allotment To Tuskegee Doubled

On motion of Representative C. D. Norman of the Blackbelt county of Bullock, the Legislative Recess Committee on Finance and Taxation, Wednesday vote dto recommend that the present annual state appropriation to Tuskegee Institute, largest higher institution of learning for Negroes in the world, be doubled, beginnnig with the present year.

For many years, the annual appropriation to the Institute has stood at $5,000, a figure that has caused considerable criticism from both inside and outside of the State from time to time, which has always been countered by the argument that because of endowments from various foundations and other sources in the North and East, the Institute did not need a large State appropriation.

When the Alabama Legislature meets next week, the Recess Committee will include in its recommendations one that the appropriation be increased from $5,000 to $10,000 per year, of $40,000 for each quadrennium. It is understood the recommendation will be unopposed.

LEGISLATURE TUMULT DYING AS END IS CLOSE

Hectic Summer Session Speeds Tamely Toward The Final Week

DOCKET NEARLY CLEAR OF CONTENDED BILLS

Hundreds Of Minor Bills Remain; Booth Amendments Up This Week

By WALTER DUSTMANN
United Press Staff Correspondent

MONTGOMERY, Ala., Sept. 9.—Alabama's hectic summer Legislature sped tamely towards its final week today with calendars virtually cleared of controversial legislation.

Hundreds of minor measures still pending, however, foretold long, arduous sessions during the two remaining legislative days before final adjournment until June 25, 1940, when the Legislature will return for a three-day session to adopt a new state code.

Many of the lesser measures will be killed in the final mad scramble. A fortunate few may survive to come up during the brief session next summer for possible enactment.

In addition, the possibly-explosive truck load limit bill still had a few hurdles to negotiate this week, while a joint conference committee argued out how a portion of the $550,000 additional aid to cities was to be paid.

The fast-moving Legislature this week put behind it more than a hundred measures, enacted during protracted sessions. They included the once-controversial stock law proposal and numerous spending measures.

Also, it passed a joint resolution denouncing "war profiteering," declined to act on a House bill proposing to repeal the Booth utility-acquisition law and put into motion for final passage next week several clarifying amendments to the embattled Booth law designed to placate Federal Works Administrator John Carmody and secure release of millions of dollars in PWA projects now upheld by the works administrator.

Kill Dry Referendum

Other action this week included killing of a Senate measure seeking a state-wide referendum on the sale of liquor, final legislative enactment of a bill to appropriate $60,000 annually to advertise Alabama and minor appropriations to Tuskegee Institute, Southern Industrial Institute, and Alabama Vocational School for Girls.

The Senate temperance committee speedily dispatched the liquor repeal bill at its first meeting on the measure, but reported favorably another to legalize possession of liquor for personal use in dry counties. The measure, however, is expected to be lost in the adjournment rush.

Final legislative approval also was given a series of bills raising by $600 annually salaries of the state superintendent of education, state auditor, state treasurer, agriculture commissioner and lesser officials. A bill providing retirement for Supreme Court justices as supernumeraries also received final passage and the Governor's signature

Looming as a possible storm center at next year's session was a bill introduced by Senator Emmet Hildreth, Eutaw, proposing a constitutional amendment through which the state could issue $4,026,045 in bonds to pay schools for funds allegedly taken from them prior to 1933. Too late for passage next week, it will hang fire until the June, 1940, session.

Washington, March 15 (ANP)—Government appropriations for Howard university and Freedman's hospital were revealed last week, showing that the university had been alloted $745,000 and Freedman's $480,820 to carry on during the coming year.

The Howard allottment of $745,000 is the same as the budget recommendations, but is $22,000 in excess of the current appropriations. The Department of Interior which has charge of the business of the university found that the most urgent need at the school is for additional personnel, particularly in the schools of medicine, the graduate school and the college and the school of law.

The estimates submitted to the house for consideration by the Department of Interior will have to be passed on by the legislative body.

Florida College Gets Another Large Grant From WPA and RFC

TALLAHASSEE, Fla. — President J. R. E. Lee announced that through another grant from the WPA in the amount of $83,785 the erection of a science building on the Florida A. & M. College campus would be a reality before the next school year.

The contract for this building, which will be when completed, a $150,000 structure as a result of an additional amount being added to this original grant from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, has already been signed. This grant from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation along with another in the amount of $12,079 with additions from the same organization to raise approximately $20,000 has poured into the building program of the Florida A. & M. College approximately $170,000 in the last few days for the science building and for the improvement of the athletic field and the grounds of the institution.

The $170,000 added to $286,000 which was recently received for the erection of a boys' and a girls' dormitory, which were occupied this year for the first time, brought the money grants to this institution for the past eighteen months to nearly a half million.

These grants and improvements are but part of the expansion program that was launched by President Lee recently and the administration hopes that within the next six months all the units in the expansion program will have been approved.

Construction of the science building and improvement of the athletic field will be inaugurated within the next few weeks.

Friends Of Dr. Mary McLeod Bethune Give Over $5,000 To College On Her Birthday

DAYTONA BEACH, Fla.—Several hundred friends from this city and other parts of Florida gathered in the college auditorium last Monday evening for a most unique celebration of Dr. Mary McLeod Bethune's birthday. As the outcome of suggestive invitations sent out in advance by admirers of the president of the institution, guests, instead of offering personal gifts, made a series of contributions to the school's growing endowment fund. These contributions, from those present and from friends who could not be present, aggregated $5,000.

Perhaps the most unique feature of the birthday celebration was the presentation of a huge chain whose links consisted of dollar bills, $168 in all—the contribution for the occasion from the instructors and students of the Summer School. Edward Bethune made the presentation in behalf of the student body, and hung the chain in three great folds about Dr. Bethune's neck and shoulders amid rousing cheers and an original song of greeting by the choral ensemble, seated on the rostrum.

Originally planned for an outdoor fete, the entertainment, forced indoors by a heavy afternoon shower was in three parts. For one hour beginning at 5:30 p. m., Dr. Bethune stood in receiving line, flanked by Dean J. A. Bond, Prof. and Mrs. T. D. Dansby (principal of the local public school, and wife) and representatves of the summer school student body. At 6:30 p. m., members of the receiving line, with others, advanced to the rostrum, and the program of felicitations, musical tributes and responses followed.

Dean J. A. Bond, master of ceremonies, introduced the program with a glowing tribute to Dr. Bethune, and called attention to the importance of perpetuating her "Brain-child" after advancing age shall have forced her retirement, by an adequate endowment which is greately need at this time, he explained, to enable Bethune-Cookman College to meet technical requirements for rating as an "A" class school. The administration plans to advance the school to the four-year type he informed the company, after the "A" class rating has been attained.

Mrs. Rose Marie Bryon ,teacher in the Daytona Beach public school, brought greetings from the local alumni club, including a statement of over $260.00, raised since last October for various purposes, on behalf of the club, presented an Endowment gift.

In her response, Dr. Bethune expressed heartfelt gratitude to all who had contributed in any way to the welfare of the school which she had founded. She expressed a firm faith in a finer future for the school, and re-dedicated herself to continued service in the hope of still more worthy achievements.

In addition to the music of the choral ensemble under the direction of Miss J. W. Roberts, musical tributes to Dr. Bethune were brought in the form of vocal solos by Mrs. Edna Watts Dansey, Miss Annie Mae Williams, and Mme. Lachiquot (white). An opportunity for greetings from the assembled guests brought a series of brief felicitations. The felicitations were concluded with the approach of little Miss Marcia Mitchell, five-year-old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Benjamin Mitchell, (Mrs. Mitchell is Secretary of the College), with a huge four-layer birthday cake on a tea wagon.

Members of the Ladies' Advisory Board were joint hostesses in serving delicious refreshments to the happy throng.

After a whirlwind of office interviews and conference, Dr. Bethune departed Tuesday afternoon for Washington, D. C., to be at her desk Wednesday as federal administrator of the NYA for Negroes.

BURDEN OF FIGHT FOR EQUALITY IS RACE'S OWN TASK

Walter White Says Whites Curtailing Gifts More and More

DURHAM, N. C. — Because wealthy white philanthropists are less and less willing to spend money for purposes that are calculated to disturb the status quo, the only hope of carrying forward an uncompromising fight to gain equality of educational opportunity for Negro citizens in this country lies within the broad ranks of the Negroes themselves.

This was the view expressed by Walter White, executive secretary of the NAACP, in a speech delivered here Thursday, December 7 before an education conference sponsored by the Association of Colleges and Secondary Schools for Negroes.

Pointing to the Rockefeller-sponsored General Education Board and the Carnegie Corporation as examples of huge foundations whose 1938 annual reports show that more and more they are spending principal and not interest, with a view to eventual liquidation of their resources for philanthropic purposes, Mr. White told the educators that the nation-wide drive to open the doors of higher education to Negroes in southern and border states is facing a crisis unless Negroes themselves bear a major portion of the financial burden.

Salary Cause Jeopardized

"The same thing obtains," he said, "in the fight now being conducted by the NAACP to equalize the salaries of Negro and white teachers in the public schools of southern and border states."

Despite the fact that duplication of graduate and professional schools for Negroes is economically impossible in the poverty-ridden South he said, that section of the country insists on the luxury of a dual education system in order to maintain the myth of Nordic superiority.

Decrying the die-hard attitude of southern reactionaries who have sought, through scholarship, laws, to get around the problem of equalizing higher educational opportunities for Negroes, as a short-sighted policy that has carried over into the field of industry and labor, the NAACP secretary said that these expediency measures will not solve the problem which will not be denied a solution.

Although dealing primarily with education, Mr. White declared the whole fight for Negro rights in every field must be assumed more and more by colored people themselves.

Educators Aid Jim Crow

"A deplorable development growing out of the determination of the South to head off this educational program," he said, "is the attitude shown by the heads of several southern Negro schools, who have sought to aid their states in evading the Supreme Court decision in the Gaines case, by offering plans to have the states make their schools segregated professional institutions."

"A bright ray of light in the educational equality fight," he said, "has come from Kentucky, where the governor's education committee went to record last fortnight as recognizing the legal right of Negro citizens to attend the University of Kentucky, when such courses as they want are not given in Negro colleges of that state."

PHILANTHROPY IN THE SOUTH

The recent announcements of fellowship awards by the Rosenwald and Guggenheim foundations, from which Southerners have considerably benefited, should quicken the South's interest in the great problems of philanthropy. In this age of high taxation and small returns on investment, endowed institutions are faced with diminishing incomes, and the great philanthropists are largely of the past.

These facts are of first concern to the South, for this region has benefited from the philanthropy of others out of all proportion to its own gifts. In fact, most of the large philanthropic work in the South has been done by Northerners and Easterners with Northern and Eastern capital.

In the amount of donations for philanthropic purposes the Southeast gives far less than any other region, with a per capita contribution of $1.58, as compared with the Southwest's $1.92; the Northwest's $1.96; the Far West's $3.30; the Middle States' $4.08; and the Northeast's $7.51.

The South, which is poor, cannot expect to benefit from philanthropy to the same extent that does rich New England, but it is worthwhile to remember that the South has benefited from the gifts of outsiders. In 1882, for example, Mr. John F. Slater of Norwich, Connecticut, created an original trust fund of a million dollars for the purpose of "uplifting the lately emancipated population of the Southern states and their posterity." Since then the John F. Slater Fund has distributed more than five million dollars to Negro educational and religious institutions, virtually all of which have been in the South.

The Phelps Stokes Fund, created in New York City, the Anna T. Jeanes Foundation, made possible by a Pennsylvanian, the Julius Rosenwald Fund, built with the wealth of a Chicago multi-millionaire, have all distributed most of their gifts in the South, chiefly among the Negro.

The Carnegie Foundation of New York has spent more than half its total in the South, mainly in building schools and public libraries. The International Health Board and the Rockefeller enterprises have spent millions of dollars in the South fighting hook worm, malarial fever and rabies.

The General Education Board has expended in the Southern States more than $38,000,000 for Negro education, and more than that for white education. The Rockefeller groups combined have spent more than $100,000,000 in the Southern States.

The earlier Peabody Fund, created by George Peabody of Massachusetts, has contributed heavily toward the advancement of teacher training in the South.

The General Education Board, through the Social Science Research Foundation, made possible the classic study which resulted in the monumental "Southern Regions of the United States," the final authority on Southern problems.

In the South the Duke family of North Carolina has contributed large sums to hospitals, to Davidson College, Furman University and the Johnson C. Smith University, as well as to orphanages and rural churches. Last year the brother and sister of the late Smith Reynolds established a $7,000,000 endowment for the control of syphilis in North Carolina.

Our educational institutions such as Vanderbilt and Tulane have been blessed by large donations, but most of the other Southern universities have never had large endowments, indeed most of them have endowments that are of almost no consequence. And we can no longer hope for large contributions from outsiders; our endowed institutions must begin to shift for themselves and to trust to the support of the South.

Dr. Howard Odum says that it is not possible for the South "so to master its situation as to transvaluate its deficiency into adequacy without a great deal of outside cooperative assistance in men and money and technics, from federal aid, from business enterprise, from endowed agencies."

Fortunately, many of the older foundations are able to continue their work in the South on a large scale, performing the two-fold task of sending trained men into the South and training a few of the more promising Southerners. Federal aid through such activities as the Farm Security Administration and the TVA helps meet the need for trained assistance and guidance.

But when we consider the need of the South, we must recognize that all these federal and philanthropic activities combined are yet insufficient. The responsibility now rests directly upon the Southern people, who must shoulder additional burdens and literally lift themselves by their own bootstraps if the region is to prosper and realize its destiny. The whole energies of the South must more and more be concentrated on developing such things as greater universities and educational systems, more expanded public health agencies, better agricultural practices designed to save and enrich the land. In the meantime, the South must acknowledge its debt to the philanthropists from the North and East who have seen fit to endow our educational and other activities. In the future, Southerners of wealth must be encouraged to make the contributions which in the past they could not afford to make.

FUND AIDS SCHOOLS

Of the four million dollars appropriated for Southern schools and colleges by the General Education Board of the Rockefeller Foundation last year, Georgia institutions received nearly two and a quarter million dollars. One million eight hundred thousand dollars were allotted to Emory University and $400,000 to Agnes Scott contingent upon their raising an additional $5,000,000 for the establishment of a university center in which those two schools along with Georgia Tech, the University of Georgia, High Museum and the Columbia Theological Seminary would co-operate.

The report stated that co-operation of Georgia Tech and Columbia Theological School are still in the formative stage.

Atlanta negro schools, Morris Brown, Morehouse and Clark received aid also in the sum of $117,612.

Great fortunes accumulated in the past thus find useful application in many directions, these sums as allocated to Georgia Institutions being only a part of the Foundation's distribution for this year.

Georgia Baptist College Drive For Endowment Interests Macon

Daily Worker 11-7-39 Atlanta, Ga.

MACON, Ga.—(SNS)—The entire Baptist laity and hosts of interested friends and benefactors of Georgia Baptist College were literally up in arms this week working and planning for raising the Macon quota of the $5,000 necessary so that the school might receive a $10,000 gift from Mr. James H. Porter, local philanthropist, who seeks to aid the school by establishing a trust fund for it.

Colored citizens were elated over this interest being again shown by Mr. Porter who recently paid the school out of debt when it failed financially and in turn granted the property to school officials.

At a recent meeting of the Lions Club, white, Attorney Arthur Lewis, a member of the advisory board of the college, related interesting facts concerning the program of the school and its struggle for existence.

Attorney Lewis pointed out that Georgia Baptist offers practical vocational training to Negro youths in types of work that are more commonly available to them. He also evaluated the progress of the school in the past three years pointing out the addition of four new teachers, graduates of reputable universities, and the erection of two new buildings under the administration of the school's present head administrator, Prof. H. R. Harris.

At this meeting, the faculty quartet rendered a group of spirituals and Miss Gladys Hill sang a solo.

Editor W. T. Anderson of the Macon Telegraph and News gave front space to the story of Georgia Baptist's struggle for existence and the appropriateness of Mr. Porter's gift from the standpoint of creating a more serviceable 40 per cent of Macon's population.

Mr. Porter was characterized as being the individual who will "if money bags hold out..make Macon the most friendly, sociable and best educated town in the world."

The first official announcement of the gift was made at a dinner held at the school a week ago and the first public announcement was carried by the MACON BROADCAST According to the program outlined by the committee in charge of raising Macon's quota of $2,000, several friends of the school will make a house to house canvass of the city contacting friends of the school for contributions.

The local program was scheduled to get underway Wednesday of this week. Every colored person in Macon is urged to "give until it hurts," for it is our children and our children's children who will be benefited.

DURHAM, N. C.—The recent Supreme Court decision in the Gaines case against the University of Missouri Law School has wrought havoc in educational circles in Virginia and North Carolina, as well as other sections of the South. Several of the Negro educators feel that agitation for equal facilities for graduate study within the state for Negro students will react against the Negro. One high school principal with whom I talked went so far as to refer to Walter White as the greatest menace facing the southern Negro today. Said he by way of explanation:

"The southern white man will not be driven and has proved time and time again that if pressed by outsiders he will turn on the Negroes nearest him and make things tough. If left to himself, he is inclined to give the Negro a square deal but if pressed, he becomes stubborn and vindictive. The amicable relations between the races in North Carolina are being seriously jeopardized by the present agitation fostered by the N. A. A. C. P."

Others, however, especially among the younger teachers and student body, are not so much alarmed. At Chapel Hill, N. C., for instance, a recent round table discussion was held between white and Negro teachers —the Negroes being represented by several members of the faculty of the State Teachers College at Winston-Salem, A. and T. College, Bennett, North Carolina College for Negroes, Shaw and other schools in the state, while members of the faculties of the University of North Carolina and Duke presented the white point-of-view. The discussion, was quite frank and open, with Dr. R. Nathaniel Dett, presenting a scholarly paper on the Negro point-of-view. The white professors said that they would have no objection to teaching Negro students but pointed out that the recent Supreme Court decision was in conflict with the state laws. As a compromise, it was suggested that as far as possible graduate work should be introduced in one of the state supported Negro institutions.

Evidence that this may be the result, at least in this state, was shown by the recent enlargement of the North Carolina College for Negroes at Durham, which is completing a $700,000 building program, which will make this institution the largest and most modern educational plant in the state. Dr. James E. Shepard, president of this institution, would not comment on the Supreme Court decision, nor would he state whether the curriculum of his college would be enlarged to include graduate work. He did grant an interview on the building program and reports that: Two years ago North Carolina College received an appropriation of $155,000 from federal PWA funds and $155,000 from the state for the erection of a new library building, a modern auditorium with a seating capacity of 1000 and a dormitory for men. Last year there was an additional grant of $150,036 from the federal government and $187,000 from the state and the college has now under construction from these funds a new science building, a dormitory for girls, laundry, home economics building and science cottage.

So far as this writer knows, no state supported school for Negroes in the country has gotten as much money during the depression as has Dr. Shepard's school. All the new buildings are fireproof and modern in every way. The college has a student body of 503 and a faculty of 28, many of whom hold masters degrees from leading universities of this country and abroad. Several have secured or are working toward securing the degree of doctor of philosophy in some specialized field.

There are teachers, however, who o not concur in the belief that to ut graduate schools in one or more f the Negro colleges, would be a olution of the problem. They point ut that it would require millions of ollars to establish a medical school, r a law school at a Negro college, nd then there might not be enough tudents within the state to make his expenditure wise. They offer as n illustration the experience of Howrd and Atlanta Universities, which have had a decreasing enrollment in heir graduate schools in recent years. If such national institutions as these cannot increase their enrollment in graduate work, how is a state university going to do so, they inquire. One thing is certain, the Gaines case has caused more discussion and serious consideration of the dual system of education in the South than anything in the past fifty years.

PHILANTHROPIST DIES, LOCAL FOLK ADVISED

He and His Wife Gave Half Million to Bennett.

News has just reached Bennett college of the death yesterday of Henry Pfeiffer, manufacturer and philanthropist of New York city, who with his wife, has contributed to Bennett colege during recent years nearly half a million dollars.

Because of his death the meeting of the board of trustees of Bennett college, scheduled to be held Saturday morning of this week has been postponed until Monday morning. Mrs. Pfeiffer is a member of the board of trustees.

The dedication of the Thomas F. Holgate library, scheduled for Sunday afternoon at 4 o'clock, will be held as previously announced. This gift of the General Educational board, of New York city, was matched by an endowment of $100,000 by Mrs. Pfeiffer and the late Mr. Pfeiffer, this being their last donation to the college. Other gifts included Pfeiffer hall, a dormitory, Merner-Pfeiffer Heating plant, the Henry Pfeiffer Science hall, and Annie Merner dormitory, completed in 1938 and named in honor of Mrs. Pfeiffer.

Dr. Robert Tyler Gives Shaw University $1,000

RALEIGH, N. C.—A contribution of one thousand dollars by Dr. Robert Tyler of Washington, D. C., to be used for the improvement of the University Library has been received by Shaw University according to announcement made by President Robert P. Daniel. This is the second large donation made to the University by Dr. Tyler who some years ago made a gift of five thousand dollars to be used for the library which he started during his student days at the University.

The use of the most recent gift is contingent upon the raising of a similar sum by the Shaw Alumni who have already raised a considerabel portion of the amount stipulated.

WOVEN INTO THE PATTERN.

North Carolina and Greensboro n particular share the keen sorow occasioned by the death in New York Thursday of Henry Pfeiffer, president of the manuacturing pharmaceutical firm which bears his name and philanthropist by whose outpourngs this section has been greatly blessed.

Mr. Pfeiffer and his wife, the former Miss Annie Merner, several years ago became greatly interested in Bennett college and subsequently made benefactions aggregating nearly half a million dollars to the institution for negro girls. A group of buildings on the campus stands as their material memorial; the inspiration which they provided, the influence which they exerted and the intangible forces of the spirit which their benefactions symbolized are incalculable and endless.

The Pfeiffers' philanthrophy, however, has not been confined to Bennett college, great and stimulative as it has been there. Other educational institutions in this country, in Korea and in Argentina, have the imprint of their generosity. Bearing the name of the donors themselves is Pfeiffer college near Albemarle in Stanly county, a junior college which was reconstructed and renamed after their liberal benefactions and which is filling a vital need in the educational field as it is presently challenged.

It is meet indeed that friends and acquaintances, Greensburgh-ers and North Carolinians think upon these things and the debt which they owe to the Pfeiffers as, almost simultaneously with the passing of Mr. Pfeiffer, comes dedication of the new Bennett college library, which will operate through the years largely as a result of the latest benefaction in which he shared. Here are donations woven not merely into the educational pattern but into that advancement of racial understanding and co-operation which is even more fundamental.

Texas $50,000 Scholarship Fund 'Goes Begging

DALLAS, Sept. 14—(ANP)—The number of persons applyin for aid from the student ai scholarship fund which is bein administered in the state of Texa to equalize educational opportunities for Texas Negroes is disappointing, said Dr. R. T. Hamilton Tuesday when he received a report from Chairman T. D Brooks of College station.

Homer Dyson, son of Dr. and Mrs. A. H. Dyson, who is a senior medical student at Meharry Medical college, received notice Monday that his application had been accepted and that he will receive the scholarship grant to cover tuition, railroad fare and incidentals for the 1939-40 term in medical school. The grant amounts to approximately $350 and comes from the graduate student aid fund which was recently made a law by the Texas legislature.

Dr. R. T. Hamilton, local civic leader who originated the idea that has made $50,000 available to Negroes for graduate study, expressed disappointment Tuesday at the number of students who are applying for help from this fund. He received a communication from Dean T. D. Brooks, that only 60 applications had been received and that 45 of them had been approved for the 1939-40 school terms. It is understood that all persons of graduate standing who have resided in the state for more than eight years are eligible to receive this aid. Other information received shows that only six persons had made application for studies in out-of-town universities during the 1940 summer session.

Senator Ritzhaupt's Student-Aid

Last spring, following this writer's appearance in an open hearing before the senate committee on education, in which we opposed State Senator Ritzhaupt's student-aid bill, and met the opposition of State Senator Paul Stewart, many members of the Langston alumni felt we had done the wrong thing, and that Student-aid was the best method by which the state could comply with the U. S. Supreme Court decision in the Lloyd Gaines case.

We said then, and we say now, that student aid, as planned by the various Southern states for Negro education, is offered black citizens in open defiance to the order of the high court. The court in the Gaines case expressly referred to out-state scholarship and, condemning this arrangement, said equality of education must occur within the state.

Of course we understood well those persons who had been getting some meager assistance from state government and had almost acquired their degrees were the foremost in leading a fight for out-state scholarships, and they were the ones who openly condemned the fight of the Black Dispatch. They held to that position even tho Senator Stewart was reported in daily papers as saying that the editor of the Black Dispatch should be the central figure in a "neck-tie party."

It now appears that Senator Ritzhaupt's Student-Aid Bill passed in the legislature should be taken to a neck-tie party or to some other graveyard program, if the letter recently sent out by the State Board of Education reflects the service this bill is to Negroes desiring to take graduate and professional work out of the state.

Here is a letter sent out by L. Norman Duncan, executive secretary of the State Board of Education, under date of November 6th:

The State Board of Education, at its meeting November 3, 1939, adopted the following resolution:

"Be it resolved by the State Board of Education that no part of the balance of the $3,000.41 now remaining in the appropriation for the current year for the purposes set forth in Senate Bill 203, S. L. 1935, as amended, be expended until the end of the current fiscal year, and that said balance be prorated at that time among those students who shall have bona fide claims on file with this Board."

The effect of the foregoing resolution is that the claim which you now have on file in this office for tuition aid under the provisions of Senate Bill 203, S. L. 1935, as amended, covering your attendance during the summer term of 1939, cannot be approved for payment until after July 1, 1940. At that time, the balance remaining in the tuition aid fund will be prorated among those persons who attended school during the summer term of 1939 together with those who attended during the regular term of the school year 1939-40.

We sincerely regret that sufficient money was not appropriated to pay all claims properly and in full. At the end of the present fiscal year your claim will be approved for the pro rata part of the balance then due you.

We understand that the above letter has been sent to all applicants for student aid, since the November 3 meeting, referred to in the above letter. But the full effect of the above communication is not apparent unless we give some other statistics which will reflect the careless, unconsidered measure sponsored by Senator Ritzhaupt and uniformed members of the alumni association.

For instance the young woman who received this communication owes $75.00 at Fisk University for tuition fees for the 1938-39 term. She owes $37.50 for the 1939-40 term. This young woman has returned home because Fisk University refused to credit her any longer, following the refusal of the state to pay only $14.00 on this account, and this amount was paid in September of this year.

The picture becomes more alarming when it is discovered that 183 Oklahoma students are now out of the state and have their applications filed with the state department of education. If all of these students taking courses out of the state received $14.00 as did the young lady to whom the above letter was written the department has already expended $2,562.00 out of the $5,000.00 appropriated by the legislature.

If on the other hand the average tuition these 183 out-state students must pay is $75.00, the total amount of tuition due to be paid for the 1938-39 term is $13,725. We do not, however, want to stop here. If the tuition bills of these students extends forward as does the young lady in question, and therefore includes the last half of 1939, the grand total of state obligation under Senate Bill "Number 203" is $20,587.50.

You can't blame the State Board of Education for refusing to determine how many times twenty thousand goes into five thousand, no such mathematical gymnastics are indulged in outside insane asylumns. Don't criticize the State Board of Education, condemn the fellow and his advisors who had a student aid bill enacted by the state legislature without giving thought to the assembly of facts dealing with this subject.

In the light of the figures given above it appears that Senator Ritzhaupt was more intent on dodging the Gaines decision, which said the state must give equality of education within the state, than he was seeing to it that Negroes received equality out of the state. The bill was heralded as a great improvement on the old student aid measure, but when one puts the mathmatical yard-stick on the appropriation as indicated above, the Guthrie Senator does not loom very large as a friend of Negro education.

Surely there would have been available some figures which would have shown that at least 100 Negroes wanted student aid, and if the figures showed this the Guthrie Senator who sheds so many tears regarding the condition at Langston University should have at least been impressed with the need for not less than $10,000.

The next question is who advised Senator Ritzhaupt? Where did he secure his figures regarding the need. We know that certain members of the alumni were, and are, very close to the Senator. Did he get this information from any Negro? The truth is that $5,000.00 is about the amount that any five parents in the state will have to expend on their five children when they are sent out of the state. Attorney B. C. Franklin, of Tulsa declares that it has cost him $25,000 to educate his children out of the state, and this is fairly representive of the terrible economic penalty forced upon black citizens of the state in order to pet prejudice in Oklahoma.

There is so much animosity generated when the Black Dispatch strikes straight from the shoulder that from time to time, as a defense technique, we have to stop and say "I told you so." We said last spring when we were talking about a regent bill for Langston University that the bill should be drawn identical as is the regent bill for the University of Oklahoma. At that time certain influential members of the alumni opposed our view point. These same members are now committed to that policy. Recent events have forced them to back-track, too many people see the light for them to oppose this vital slant at what should obtain out Langston way.

Most of this sort of opposition develops out of selfish motives. A great deal results from failure to assemble facts about anything. We believe the Black Dispatch has made the only effort to assemble date covering Oklahoma students who are matriculating outside the state and to secure other valuable information upon which to later base demands for justice and fair play. Several years ago, during the Hubert administration this publication wrote to every college in this country, where we felt Negro students attended, to secure this type of information. We wonder does the Langston alumni have any such fact assembling agency?

Now we know that some of the alumni members will become angered at this charge, but we feel that the few who will become intelligently alert to form this type of information bureau within the alumni fully warrants the challenge. Langston is supposed to be an agricultural and normal university. We wonder whether the alumni have ever assembled statistics to show the actual trend taken by its students. Has the Langston type of education trended away or towards its declared purpose?

All of what we have said in the last two paragraphs is somewhat aside from the discussion we indulged in at the outset, but in the last analysis it is not. Senator Ritzhaupt certainly introduced his bill in the legislature and asked for an appropriation based upon some assembly of facts. If members of the alumni, who conferred with the Guthrie Senator advised him a five thousand dollar appropriation was adequate, when the amount should have been $25,000 somebody is guilty of gross ignorance, or needs to be furnished free room and board at Taft.

Okla. Scholarship Aid Inadequate

Claims Approved For $9,759.49; $3,000.41 Available to Pay Claims

By SUSIE HAYWOOD

The fact that many people have failed to receive payment of claims for school tuition and railroad fare filed with the State Board of Education for summer school attendance at colleges and universities outside the state has caused much dissatisfaction among the people of Oklahoma.

In many cases, persons whose claims were paid for the second semester of last year received very small amounts and they are wondering why their checks were so small.

Senate Bill 203, fostered by the legislative committee of the Langston University Alumni Association and enacted by the 15th legislature in 1935, provided for part tuition and railroad fare at 3c a mile to and from any accredited college or university outside the state where Negroes might do graduate or professional study. The bill proved unsatisfactory, so the legislative committee of the Langston University Alumni Association, with the assistance of others, worked very hard and got the bill amended in the 16th legislature. The bill now provides that students who have finished their junior college work, and are bona fide citizens of Oklahoma may attend any college or university of their own choice in America, said students are to have railroad fare at 3c per mile paid to and from the school by the state. The bill also provides for the payment of full tuition, minus the registration fee charged at Oklahoma University by the state, which amount to about $24.

Parents have sent their sons and daughters to school with the understanding that the state would pay a certain portion of the expenses as set out in the amended Senate Bill 203. Many teachers also went away to summer school with the understanding that they would receive scholarship aid, and they are disappointed because they have not received compensation for the money they spent. I shall try to explain why certain claims have not been paid and why some of those that were paid were so small.

In the first place, the 16th legislature failed to pass the emergency clause on the amendment to Senate Bill 203, hence the amendment did not go into effect until July 29, 1939. Students who returned home from school or those who went to school before July 29, 1939, did not profit by the amended bill in the matter of railroad fare. That is to say, up to and including July 29, 1939, the state would pay railroad fare only to and from the nearest school of recognized standing outside the state where Negroes could study. It was not until after July 29, 1939, that the payment of tuition and traveling expenses were governed by the amended bill.

Oklahoma City Oklahoma

In June, 1939, the claims approved for tuition and traveling expenses amounted to $854.40. The amount of money in the scholarship aid fund at that time was $185.27. The $185.27 was prorated among the approved claimants. You can easily see why some received such small sums. One person received only $2.23. All received less than 22c on the dollar of the money due them.

On July 1, 1939, $5,000 became available for scholarship aid. In the meantime, a law which gives the governor power to designate the amount of money spent each quarter, became effective. The governor allocated $2,000 for Negro scholarship aid for the first quarter. $1,999.59 was paid out, leaving a balance of 41c. You must keep in mind that $5,000 became available on July 1, 1939. The amount already spent out of the $5,000 is $1,999.59. That leaves a balance of $3,000.41 still available. The accumulated approved claims now on file amount to $9,759.49. Of this amount, $4,759.49 is for approved claims of summer school students. The other $5,000 is for students who have gone to school this fall. Other claims will be coming in for this semester. There will also be claims to come in for next semester, and all will have to be paid out of the $3,000.41. In fact all claims up to June 30, 1940, will have to be paid out of the $3,000.41 now on hand.

Five thousand dollars will become available on July 1, 1940. Below is a copy of a resolution recently passed by the State Board of Education relative to the payment of claims:

The State Board of Education, at its meeting November 3, 1939, adopted the following resolution:

Tuition Aid For Negro Students

Be it resolved by the State Board of Education that no part of the balance of $3,000.41 now remaining in the appropriation for the current year for the purpose set out in Senate Bill 203, S. 1935, as amended, be expended until the end of the current year, and that said balance be prorated at that time among those students who shall have bona fide claims on file with this board."

The above resolution means that no claims on the scholarship aid fund will be paid before July, 1940. A number of people have asked me what I think should be done about it. I think we should go in and fight for a larger appropriation. We should have at least $50,000 a year to satisfy our needs. Why can't we have it? Oklahoma is plenty able to educate her citizens. It is far cheaper to send us to school three or four years and train us for good citizenship than it is to care for us all our lives, either in penal institutions or out. You may wonder how we can get an appropriation as large as that passed. My answer is, to get a representative of our own in the legislature. I firmly believe we will never get what is justly ours until we do. It is time for Negroes to organize and stand together, on one common question. There are enough Negro votes in Oklahoma to elect a representative at large. Kentucky has her representative in congress. We can do the same thing. Since Kentucky has had a representative in congress their civic and educational welfare have improved 50 per cent. The time has come when we can not trust our destinies to others. We should look after ourselves. You are yourself's best keeper. I grant you we have some friends in the legislature. We could never have gotten where we are if we did not have some friends. Some politicians mean what they say when they say they will help us, and they have learned it well.

The law is "Self-Preservation Comes First." What I mean is that they will as long as that help does not hurt their political advancement, and they do not have to go very far before it is hurt. We should have our own to plead our cause in the legislature. We should select some worthy person and then every Negro in Oklahoma should get behind him and see to it that he wins. Elect our own representative so that the cause of justice for the Negroes of Oklahoma will not be neglected.

Please let me know whether as treasurer of South Carolina you will receive this fund, credit it to the institution, invest it in state of South Carolina bonds and pay to the institution the interest from the bonds . . ."

Treasurer Miller is looking into the matter to see what is his authority in such a situation. Time was when $10,000 would bring in $600 a year in safe securities. Now, however, $200 would be a pretty fair yield.

President Whittaker did not give the name of the donor.

ITEMS LISTED

Senate Finance Body To Introduce Measure Today

COLUMBIA, Feb. 23.—(AP)—A $695,185.19 supplemental appropriation bill for the current fiscal year was drafted today by the senate finance committee for introduction tomorrow.

The measure would restore to a large extent the reductions made in the current appropriations by the state budget commission several months ago and, in one instance, would provide more funds than originally appropriated.

ANOTHER ONE COMING UP

This was not the regular supplemental appropriation bill, Chairman S. M. Ward of the committee explained. The regular bill will be drafted later when "we find out how long we are to be in session," Ward said.

Asked where the money was coming from to cover the appropriations, Ward said, "we have appropriated from the state's general fund."

The only item increased beyond the amount of the budget commission reduction was that for the department of education, which would get a supplemental appropriation of $333,837 against a cut in its original 1938-39 appropriation of $144,867.

"This was necessary," Ward said, "because of the decrease in revenue specially allocated for school purposes."

LIST OF APPROPRIATIONS

The supplemental appropriations: Governor's office $1,862; secretary of state $371; Comptroller general $3,907; adjutant general $1,214; University of S. C. $30,000; The Citadel $20,000; Clemson college $21,000; Winthrop college $20,000; Medical college $7,500; State Colored college $10,700; John De La Howe school $4,000; Deaf and Blind school $3,000; Supt. of Education $333,837; School book commission $334; State library $300.

NEGRO LIBRARY IS NOW OPENED

Located on Treadwell St. as Branch of County Free Library

The Negro branch of the Orangeburg County Free Library will be opened on Saturday morning, Dec. 2, at 9.30 o'clock, and remain open until 4.30 o'clock. This library is located in the front room at the community center on Treadwell Street. This room has been re-conditionad, painted, shelves installed, and tables and chairs built.

The Negroes of the county collected 170 usable books, WPA loaned 155 books, and the County Library donated 50 magazine story books made and bound by WPA workers and used when that library first began. There are 147 textbooks donated mostly by Lend-A-Hand Book Mission. These books were prepared for circulation under the direction of Mrs. Georgia Adams, librarian of the Orangeburg County Free Library. This small nucleus has been supplemented by gifts of approximately 175 magazines.

A colored WPA worker, Icie Wilkins, will be in charge of the library. She will keep the library open every afternoon and six hours each Saturday. She has been employed on the Educational program in this county until her transfer to the library project. With her wide experiences as a former teacher, she will be of great assistance to those who visit the library to select suitable books.

Because of the very limited book stock those in charge of the new library are encouraging colored teachers in rural communities to borrow a few books and magazines at a time for use in their school centers, and as often as these are returned others may be borrowed.

Because of the available school libraries in the city of Orangeburg people here are asked to use the library as a reading room each day for the next two months. Books and magazines may be read freely and then remain in the building at night. When the book stock increases, regular lending will begin.

The new library is a branch of the Orangeburg County Free Library and is in charge of those governing this institution. They would like to express appreciation for assistance in making this new project a success to everyone who aided in any way.

Cooper Favors Amendment For Income Tax

Tells Legislature That Governor's Term Should Be Four Years.

NASHVILLE. — (A. P.) — Gov Cooper told Tennessee's Genera Assembly today that he favored three proposed constitutiona amendments, including one provid ing for taxation of net incomes and classification of personal property for tax purposes.

The amendments, first passed i the last General Assembly and nov before the present body for a sec ond passage, provide:

1. Increase per diem com pensation of legislators from $4 to $10.

2. Revision of the tax structure "by permitting more equitable distribution of the tax burden, in that net incomes may then be taxed and personal property classified for tax purposes."

3. Increase Governor's term from two to four years.

Cooper said that increasing the chief executive's term "is one sure way of advancing the aims of civil service in Tennessee, it will make for continuity of policy, and it will free the State from the expense and turmoil often incident to the biennial gubernatorial contest."

BACKS REORGANIZATION

The Governor, appearing before the Legislature to deliver his first message since inauguration January 16, also made an appeal for passage of his reorganization bill introduced earlier in the week. The bill vests in the Governor complete control over State personnel both as to salary and tenure of office.

Cooper said that since the constitution "vests the supreme executive power of the State in the Governor," he should have "administrative control over the State's employes in the executive department, at least to the extent of being able to stop the pay, or increase or decrease the compensation of those State employes appointed by the Governor or named by his appointees."

He added that the measure provided that no legislative appropriation for a department be exceeded.

"Such a provision would give to the executive no more power than he already has," Cooper said of the personnel provisions, "but would enable him to pursue a flexible policy in the interest of efficiency and economy in the administration of the State's affairs."

The educational appropriations bill, for the first time in State history, sets up a sum for free text books. It provides $325,000 for pupils in the first three grades and leaves distribution of the books to the "discretion of the State Board of Education and the commissioner."

FIRST STEP

The appropriation is described as the first step toward free books for all public school students with future legislatures to advance the program.

The bill also meets the demands of school leaders in that all appropriations are exempt from impoundment—a method by which the Governor and budget director could slash legislative appropriations when revenue declined.

Elementary schools, under the measure, would receive $7,000,000 a year, the same appropriation as in the last biennium, but approximately $500,000 more than made available after impoundments. High schools would get $900,000 compared to former appropriations of $750,000 which impoundments later reduced to $707,000.

The increased high school appropriation was in line with a recommendation from the Tennessee Education Association, which said salaries had dropped below elementary schools.

LESS FOR U. T.

The University of Tennessee fell short by $250,000 of the appropriation sought by President James D. Hoskins. The bill provides $750,000 annually for the university, the same as in the last biennial appropriation, but by escaping the impoundment clause the institution stands to receive about $110,000 more than in the last year.

Other appropriations:

School libraries, $60,000; elementary school supervision, $50,000; supplementing salaries of county superintendents, $95,000; cooperative agricultural extension work, $135,000; vocational education, $250,000 to be matched by Federal funds.

Teachers' College at Johnson City, Murfreesboro and Memphis were set down for $110,00 each annually, the same appropriation but about $20,000 more than received after impoundment. The same amount was allocated Tennessee Polytech at Cookeville and the A. & I. College for Negroes at Nashville.

The total appropriation for schools and institutions was $10,245,000, a duplicate of the 1937 bill. Provisions for free textbooks were made by eliminating items which were described as unnecessary.

The bill was presented yesterday to the House and Senate Educational Committee with a statement from Commissioner B. O. Duggan that school leaders agreed to the appropriations "after discussing the financial situation of the State and listening to the Governor's ideas on a program of economy."

$125,000 Already Appropriated By Council

By THOMAS L. DABNEY

LYNCHBURG, Va.—The movement to improve the housing facilities for the colored pupils of Lynchburg registered a victory Saturday night of last week when the City School Board, with one member absent, approved unanimously the construction of a new building to replace the old Payne building at a cost of about $180,000.

The City Council had already appropriated $125,000 for the project. On Monday of the week the board indicated that it favored the construction of a new 26-room building, but the special meeting was called Saturday night to give all an opportunity to vote on the proposition. The successful motion was made by Clarence G. Burton, who recently became a member of the school board.

Since the proposal calls for about $55,000 more than the City Council has provided, the matter will have to be referred to that body. The board's building committee was designated to present and to explain the matter to the council.

The Payne building is a condemned structure which no longer meets the standards of housing for educational purposes. Colored citizens through their PTA's and other organizations have prevailed on the school board to improve the housing for schools in the city. The Polk Street (wooden) school has been a target for criticism for several years. The congestion at the Dunbar High School has also been a subject for discussion at several PTA meetings.

BUILDING PROGRAM FOR SCHOOLS FOR DEAF AND BLIND IS RECOMMENDED

Dormitory Facilities Called To Attention Legislative Committee

ROAD CONDITIONS VIEWED BY COMMITTEE

A $155,000 building program for the Alabama Institute for Deaf and Blind was recommended to the touring recess legislative committee on education and highways Thursday morning by Superintendent J. S. Ganey.

At Mr. Ganey's invitation, the party arrived in Talladega at 10 a.m., assembled in Manning Hall at ASD and went immediately on a tour of the three units of the institute.

At the suggestion of L. J. Wright of Talladega, a member of the committee, the body noted especially the condition of the Anniston-Talladega Highway as it motored here from that city.

After the inspection of the state schools, the committee was to be headed by Dr. Wright on an inspection of a portion of the Talladega-Ashland Highway.

Mr. Ganey recommended:

Construction of a new dormitory for girls at ASD to house 75 girls and to cost approximately $75,000.

Construction of a dormitory at the school for the blind to cost $40,000.

Construction of a dormitory for girls at the school for the Negro deaf and blind to cost $40,000.

Under Mr. Ganey's recommendation the dormitories also would include other facilities to be used in carrying out the program of the schools.

Representative L. E. Brown of Covington headed the general group as chairman and Senator Renzo Guy of Lowndes served as chairman of the special subcommittee on education.

Included in the joint committee, which functions as one with two subdivisions, are Senators Dan T. McCall of Mobile, W. A. Dozier of Russell, W. L. Howard of Talladega and Bruce Henderson of Wilcox, and Representatives Max Branyon of Fayette, Frank Haynes of Franklin, W. H. Jenkins of Chambers, A. J. McDanal of Houston, C. S. Nation of Blount, Miss Sybil Poole of Marengo, W. W. Waldrop of Lamar and Dr. Wright.

"The Talladega-Anniston Road is in bad shape," Mr. Brown commented after his trip to Talladega. "It is very bumpy and narrow."

Mr. Ganey welcomed the touring legislators at ASD and immediately went into a description of the overcrowded and unsuitable nature of the fourth floor dormitory for girls in Manning Hall.

"If a fire ever were to come, it would be a holecaust," he said as he recommended construction of a new dormitory which would include a dining room and space for home economics work.

Before leaving ASD the party was escorted through the Manning Hall dining room, thence out to the front of this historic structure, where the motorcade was formed.

Mr. Ganey led the way immediately to the Negro school for the deaf and blind, where there are 150 Negro male and female, deaf and blind children.

He led them upstairs to a dormitory for boys which is so crowded that it has been necessary to install double decked cots.

The room was immaculately clean, but the cots were placed within a few inches of each other and the windows were without screens.

"You see you can hardly get through this dormitory," Mr. Ganey said, "we want to get the girls out of them at some suitable spot that will include a dining room and a small auditorium.

"I am figuring we will want at least $40,000 to do what we want to do to care for these Negro children in a decent way."

Downstairs the committee was shown through a small dining room in which 108 deaf students are fed three times a day.

At the school for the blind the group heard a brief musical program at the auditorium and then heard again the story of overcrowding that makes officials believe expansion is necessary.

The proposed $40,000 dormitory at ASB would relieve conditions there, Mr. Ganey told the committee.

Returning to ASD, Mr. Ganey bolstered his plea for the construction program with facts and figures on the growth of the student bodies of the various institutions and the extent of the services which the schools are rendering.

The committee had lunch in a body at the Purefoy Hotel and departed soon after for Auburn and Opelika.

It heard educational authorities of this district at Anniston Wednesday.

"What we are trying to do is to see as much as we can in order to learn highway and education needs and make recommendations when the Legislature convenes in July," Mr. Brown said.

He emphasized an assertion that the committee "is not out on a tax-raising junket."

As he discussed the highway situation with regard to this county, he said that many counties over the state are joining in the three-way construction program, which includes the state, counties and the federal government.

"They are going after this money while it is available," he said.

Colored Orphans Are Reception Committee To President's Wife

As Mrs. Roosevelt drove up to the door of the Dodge home, a group of forty boys and girls from the Colored Orphan Asylum in Riverdale, were on hand to greet her. One of the smallest boys presented her with a corsage. Still another extended her an invitation to visit the children at their Home. Welcomed Appropriation

PLANS FOR IMPROVING the properties of the East Tennessee School for the Deaf, as will come from an adequate appropriation to be voted by the legislature, meet the approval of citizens throughout our state who are interested in the proper development of the unfortunates who attend these institutions.

Work at both the white branch and Negro institution, under the capable superintendency of Mrs. Harry T. Poore has made excellent progress during the past few years. The Negro unit of the institution is now under efficient management and recent changes which place affairs under Prof. and Mrs. Edmunds are serving to cause the efforts in behalf of the students to prove thoroughly effective.

With the announced appropriation, new buildings and additional equipment will be provided for the Negro unit and the money is about to be directed to an altogether worthy cause that will prove highly beneficial to humanity.

Colored Deaf And Blind Learn Useful Trades At State School Near City

(By Stahl Butler, Superintendent)

Just outside the city limits off Kecoughtan road is a State institution that provides for the education of a hundred under-privileged children and employes 30 people. This school has a property valuation of $250,000, and spends an annual appropriation of more than $30,000. Many people do not know that it is the Virginia State School for Colored Deaf and Blind Children.

The history of its founding is inseparably connected with the biography of its founder, William C. Ritter. Born in Clarke county, Mr. Ritter was deafened at the age of 9 by a severe illness that took the lives of two younger brothers. He subsequently attended the Virginia School for the Deaf and Blind at Staunton, where he learned the printing trade at which he began to work in 1890. As Mr. Ritter traveled about the State, again and again the fact that colored deaf and blind children were growing up without an opportunity for an education was brought to his attention.

In 1898 Mr. Ritter urged the Virginia Normal Institute at Petersburg and Hampton Institute to accept departments for the deaf and the blind, and in 1903 he wrote an act of assembly to provide for a school but it failed. In 1904 a resolution written by him providing for a commission to investigate the need for such a school also failed. In 1906 a bill carrying an appropriation for $5,000 was passed but was ineffective because of a typographical error.

Houston Supports Bill

Finally, in 1908 a bill was passed providing $20,000 for a building and $5,000 for support. Col. Harry R. Houston of Hampton, then speaker of the house, was influential in getting the bill through the general assembly. Twelve cities were asked to aid in the establishment of the school and only the chamber of commerce of Newport News offered any help, providing a 25-acre site. The cornerstone of the first building was laid in August, 1908, with Masonic ceremonies and the school opened for its first session in September, 1909.

Enrolled in the school in those first sessions were many grown colored men, taking advantage of their first opportunity at an education.

Only one other such school has a separate identity; all others are departments of larger schools for white children. The staff consists of a white superintendent, white teachers, and a white matron; all other employes are colored and most of them are deaf. They have a good rating in the community.

The blind pupils as a rule make a grade a year by use of special equipment. They learn to read and write Braille, use special figure slates for arithmetic problems, special relief maps for geography, and eventually learn to use a typewriter and write their names with a pencil. The boys learn to make and repair mattresses, make brooms, and cane chairs. The girls learn to weave, make belts, rugs, and do all kinds of handwork. Special emphasis is placed on vocational work in an effort to equip graduates with a means of making a living. Music is stressed as an avocation. The school has a good band and an orchestra is being organized.

Can't Hear Speech

The education of the deaf is much more difficult in that deafness is not the greatest handicap of a deaf child. If all the education of the deaf had to do was to substitute something for lack of hearing, the child's education would be comparatively simple, but a child deaf at birth or soon after, is also deprived of natural speech and a natural understanding of language. The girls are drilled in home-making and the boys receive at the school instruction in wood-working, general mechanics, the various phases of farming, barbering, and shoe repairing.

The school is free to all colored deaf and blind children in the state of sound mind and body. The pupils come from 48 counties, there being 12 enrolled from Henrico. A boarding school is necessary in order to bring all these children together, and board, lodging, laundry, and medical care are furnished free to all. Parents are expected to provide clothing and transportation.

The school term is from the second Wednesday in September until the second Wednesday in June, with regular holidays at Thanksgiving, Christmas, and Easter.

There has been a great upswing in the education of the colored in the South. Even more marked is a greater emphasis being placed on the education of the handicapped. As a result of both of these trends, the Peninsula can expect to have a greater school than it has now.

THIRD WPA GRANT FOR BLIND SCHOOL NEAR HERE ASKED

Supt. Butler Announces $20,000 Requested for More Buildings; Earlier Sums Almost Exhausted

Application for a third WPA grant for work on buildings at the Virginia School for Negro Deaf and Blind Children here has been made, it was announced yesterday by Stahl Butler, superintendent.

The application is for an additional $20,000 to be used for the erection of additional garages and other buildings. The superintendent said that the second grant received for erection of buildings has been almost exhausted. The two previous grants total $30,000 combined.

Thus far three buildings have been completed, including two garages and a store house. Work has been almost completed on a poultry house.

Butler said that it is expected that the request for the third grant will result in funds at an early date.

The garage buildings being erected and those anticipated are for the purpose of storing school equipment and the use of employes of the institution.

The grants for work here are included in a list of 67 provided in Virginia during the period July 1, 1935 and Sept. 1, 1939. Another school unit provided in the list is that at Gloucester Court House

'Satisfactory,' Majority Says; Cows, Hogs Better Treated, Others Report

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Baltimore, Sept. 11.—The Baltimore grand jury yesterday submitted two reports on conditions at the Cheltenham School for Colored Boys in Prince Georges County—one describing the administration of affairs as "very satisfactory" and the other stating that "cows and hogs get much better attention than the boys themselves."

The majority report, filed by Luis G. Groener and Henry C. Miller, praised the management of the institution. The minority report, submitted by Howard H. Murphy, colored member of the jury, stated:

"Prince Georges County seems to regard Cheltenham as a private political plum and through its control of the board membership foists upon this institution incompetent political employes whom Commissioner Jones (State employment commissioner) says are unfit."

Murphy said an investigation revealed that "barns and cowsheds are far superior in structure and cleanliness to the dormitories and the cows and hogs get much better attention than the boys themselves, who are not provided with shoes and walk about barefoot."

INSIDE STORY OF THE WORST REFORM SCHOOL FOR BOYS IN THE ENTIRE U.S.

Reform Schoool Place for Dead End Kids Only

450 Youngsters Cruelly Beaten, Encouraged to Cheat, Lie

EYEGLASSES ARE DENIED TO ALL

Youths Kept 3 Years after Terms Expire

Youngsters become hardened behind prison bars.

ENGLEWOOD, N.J. — The State corrective school for boys at Cheltenham, Md., is a place where 450 "Dead End Kids" live under conditions that are many times worse than conditions portrayed in the movie of that name, according to Raymond Hobson, until recently an instructor there.

Hobson says that he was dismissed from his post the first of January, because:

He spoke to Superintendent Benjamin Sunderland, white, without addressing him by name;

He has constantly refused to humble himself before officials and the 60 or 70 white instructors there;

He was too popular with the boys imprisoned there.

"Rotten Set-up"

"I spoke up when things seemed wrong to me," he said Thursday. "They told me to mind my own business and they would mind theirs.

"It is a rotten set-up," he continued. "The boys are supposed to be prepared to re-enter society with a new point of view. Actually they are prepared for nothing They are encouraged to lie and cheat. No control is exercised over them. They are cruelly beaten.

"One boy was beaten and confined to the hospital nine months He was struck in the face with a bunch of keys, but the official report was that he was hurt playing football. On the road to recovery he was beaten again with the result that both of his eyes were closed. His nose bled for four days.

No Report Made

"There was no report on his condition from the hospital. A cottage master struck the boy whose name is Fred Ames. The superintendent knows these conditions but says nothing."

Hobson, former Hampton football and basketball star, was appointed to instruct at Cheltenham three and one half months ago. But today he says he will never go back.

"I can take only so much," he said. "Any time after that I might forget myself."

He charges the school is anything but an educational institution. There are never any meetngs of teachers, nor does the superintendent ever confer with them as a group. There are no direct reports of their work. All reports reach the superintendent by means of snoopers who accuse behind closed doors, he says.

Accused by Plumber

For instance, he was accused in one case by a plumber at the school and in another by a cottage master.

"The boys' physical condition receives little care," Hopson continues. "Many of them are barefooted. All are continually dirty They are supposed to bathe twice daily, but seldom do.

"The boys are always hungry, and what food they get seems entirely inadequate. They complain of getting only dry cereal for breakfast and some charge that they have found rats in their food supply.

"In my classes at recess, many of the boys would dash into the parsley and raw potato field outside and come back hungrily eating the raw vegetables.

Visitors Kept Mum

"When visitors come they are never permitted to talk to the teachers. Everything is made ready for their visits so that outsiders will see nothing wrong."

He said there are only eigh or nine colored workers and sixt to seventy white, the latter mostl ignorant farmers. And the whit and colored workers don't spea when they meet. They simply pas each other by.

The white, apparently dislik the colored workers.

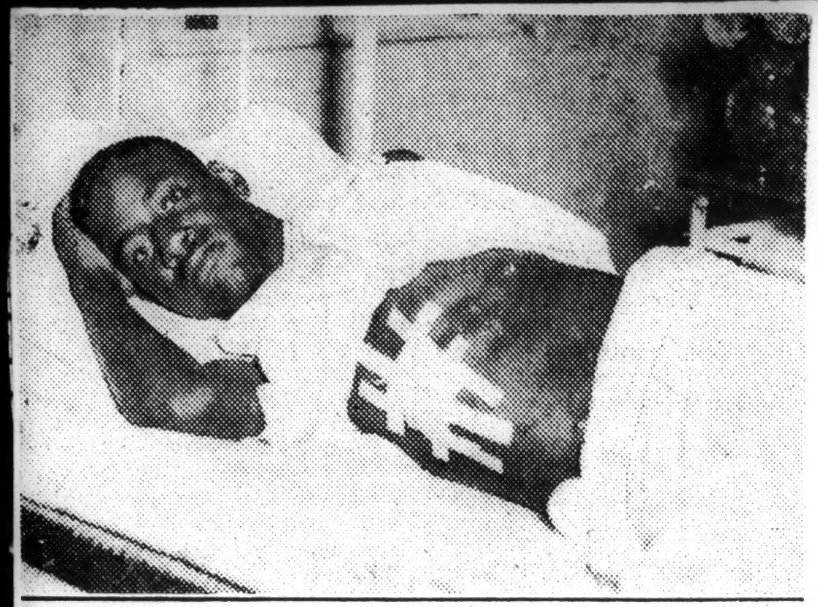
Hobson charges that the boys are struck at will and the principle of physical violence is the accepted one. He himself was told once to beat

Colored Masters Not Wanted

"I learned Superintendent Suderland did not want any colored men as cottage masters.

"The school has six cottages, five presided over by white masters. The board, by a vote of 6 to 5, voted down the application of one Baltimore colored man for the post of master.

"Many of the small boys in the instutition should really be at home with their parents. Mrs. Hawkins, wife of the only colored cottage master, has to act as a mother to seventy-five little boys."



AUDREY BRUNSON,
who was shot by a white guard.

seats. One charge against me was that my classroom was too noisy. If true, the noise is almost unavoidable with the conditions that obtain."

No Real Recreation

Athletic directors who have been sent to the school never stay long, he said. Sunderland will not have them, he charges. As a result, there is no sustained recreation instruction, although each cottage has an athletic ground. Once or twice he went onto the grounds to talk with the boys and he was immediately accused of plotting with them.

His principal was Ellis Dean, a colored man, with whom he lived in a small house near the school. The house has no modern arrangements, he said.

Asked about the pay and other features of the job he said he had no complaint on this score. He said there had been investigations at Cheltenham in the past before he went there, but they did not bare much of the conditions actually in existence.

GIVE THEM A BOOK TO READ.

Word comes to The Observer from Superintendent BOYD of the Morrison Training School for Negro boys that these delinquents who are being trained there, and not being imprisoned, are without reading material of the crudest sort of books.

He makes a plea for contributions of old books with which to start a small library containing such reading material as such minds are capable of absorbing and in which an interest will be taken.

This newspaper thinks so much of the idea that it gladly utilizes this means of letting the public know of the situation and, also, in adding a word of support and encouragement to any and all who may wish to respond to such a request.

The Morrison Training School was established during the Governorship of Hon. CAMERON MORRISON and properly bears his name.

It is maintained for the training of delinquent negro boys, and the results of the work that has been done there by Superintendent BOYD and his competent staff far exceeds the hope and expectation of those who in the years ago set themselves to the task of creating this sort of institution, and in reclaiming these wrongly slanted boys to better living.

At present there are about 200 negro boys at this training school, and it is a matter of local interest, if not local responsibility incident to this appeal, that about one-tenth of the entire enrollment there has entered from Mecklenburg's juvenile court.

These boys, of course, ought to have books to read after they have been schooled to read, and such books as will have a wholesome, educational and altogether beneficial effect upon them.

The kind of books that they need will suggest itself at once to the minds of any who may be interested in making a contribution and if The Observer can be further helpful in the matter, the books contributed may be left at this office and they will be turned over to the proper authorities.

Trusty Convict Escapes From Reformatory

Slips Away in the Night; Was Transferred From State Prison as Cook

Clarence Martin, 25, of Greenwood, state prison trusty detailed as cook at the Negro boys' reformatory less than a week ago, "slipped off" from the reformatory between midnight and daybreak yesterday and made good his escape. The farm is located seven miles from Columbia on the Newberry highway.

Col. James S. Wilson, superintendent of the state penitentiary, said Martin had been chief cook for the prison mess hall until his transfer to the reformatory "three or four days ago." The transfer had been made, he said, on request of Roy Powell, secretary to former Governor Johnston and now head of the reformatory, who told the colonel a cook was needed badly due to the fact the reformatory itself had only youthful, inexperienced inmates.

Colonel Wilson said that Martin had been a yard trusty within the state penitentiary proper, and also had been given the freedom of the grounds when transferred to the reformatory. The prison yard is fenced in but the reformatory yard is not.

Prison records showed Martin June 27 had been sentenced to two years by Judge C. C. Featherstone in the Greenwood county court of general sessions after being convicted on two counts of housebreaking and larceny and two more of housebreaking and grand larceny.

Grady Starnes of Columbia, whose life sentence for murder was commuted in December by Governor Johnston to five years, also is at the reformatory doing plumbing work. His time expires within the next few months.

PENITENTIARY BOARD BILL

The senate sent to the house the bill by Parler of Dorchester and others to create a new board of directors for the state penitentiary which would also supervise the industrial schools for boys and girls and the negro reformatory.

The state training school was originally included in the bill, but it was eliminated from the proposed new system by an amendment agreed to by Parler.

Also sent to the house were a bill by Harvey of Beaufort to remove the requirements for grand jury indictments in misdemeanor cases in which the defendants wish to plead guilty and a resolution by Baskin of Lee requesting Congress to make provision for the repayment to farmers of taxes paid by them for exemption certificates into government-sponsored crop pools.

SUPPLEMENTAL BILL CARRIES $695,000 FOR CURRENT BEAR

A $695,000,185.19 supplemental appropriation bill for the current fiscal year was drafted last week by the senate finance committee for introduction.

The measure would restore to a large extent the reductions made in the current appropriations by the state budget commission several months ago and in one instance, it would provide more funds than originally appropriated.

This was not the regular supplemental appropriation bill, Chairman S. M. Ward of the committee explained. The regular bill will be drafted later when "we find out how long we are to be in session," Ward said.

Asked where the money was coming from to cover the appropriations, Ward said, "We have appropriated from the state's general fund."

The only item increased beyond the amount of the budget commission reduction was that for the department of education which would get a supplemental appropriation of $333,837 against a cut in its original 1938-39 appropriation of $144,867.

POWELL APPEALS FOR REFORM PLAN

Says Vocational Education System Needed at Negro Training School

Columbia, April 11.—(AP): Superintendent Roy A. Powell wants vocational education set up at the state negro boys' industrial school so that the institution will no longer be "little more than a preparatory school for the penitentiary".

Powell, who became superintendent in January after concluding his work as secretary to former Governor Olin D. Johnston, has arranged for $13,000 in funds for the establishment of a school for the 225 boys at the institution, contingent upon $200 appropriation by the legislature.

The one-teacher school there now is "virtually no school at all," Powell said, due to the number of boys.

"These boys—some of them as young as seven—are sent here for varying terms, some until they reach the age of twenty-one. They are all in the formative age and with proper training could be sent out properly equipped to lead a decent life," the superintendent said. "Now, however, we have no facilities for training them in vocations. They work in the fields, but that is about all."

Vocational Education Held Aim For Negro Reformatory

Powell Works For Training School; $2,000 Needed From Legislature

Vocational education for the 225 negro boys at the John G. Richards Industrial school, eight miles from Columbia on the Broad River road, is the aim of Supt. Roy A. Powell, of the institution.

Mr. Powell, who took charge in January, already has arranged for $13,000 in funds for establishment of a school at the institution contingent upon $2,000 from the legislature. The senate already has approved the appropriation and only approval by the house and the governor is necessary.

At present the institution has a one-teacher school, but if Mr. Powell's plans go through the school would be taken into the state public school system. Supt. of Education James H. Hope has expressed his support of the idea.

One Teacher Now

"We have virtually no school at all now," according to Mr. Powell, "and the institution is little more than a preparatory school for the penitentiary. These boys—some of them as young as seven—are sent here for varying terms, some until they reach the age of 21. They are all in the formative age and with proper training could be sent our properly equipped to lead a decent life. Now, however, we have no facilities for training them in vocations. They work in the fields, but that is about all."

With the new school, Mr. Powell said that there would be elementary education, but that vocational work would be stressed, like carpentry, brick-laying and other worthwhile trades.

Since taking charge of the institution in January, Mr. Powell has brought about a number of major improvements, including a $15,000 mess hall, to take the place of one which will be converted into a dormitory to increase the institution's accommodations by 100 boys. New guards quarters, costing several thousands of dollars, has just been completed, and work will start within a few days on erection of a 9,000-foot heavy wire fence, eight feet high, around all of the buildings. At present there is no fence and the boys must be under constant vigilance when they are out of their barred dormitories.

Recreation Yard Planned

The fence will include a large space which will be used as a recreation yard for baseball and other games. Since Mr. Powell has been at the institution arrangementts have been made to use the penitentiary's portable motion picture equipment to have two picture programs a month.

"The pictures are fine for the morale," Mr. Powell said. "For punishment we use a system of denial. Unruly boys are denied the right to see the pictures or participate in games."

Another major improvement has been the installation of a well-equipped medical examination and treatment room in the small hospital. Modern sterilization and other facilities have been installed.

The bakery has been improved. Where before only cornbread could be baked, Mr. Powell has obtained necessary equipment, mostly giftts from local bakeries of discarded pans, etc., for rye and wheat bread. Clemson college experts have recommended new farming and dairying programs which are being put into effect. New roofs have been put on all the barns and other outbuildings. All of the work done so far, costing around $25,000 or $30,000, has cost the state only $5,000. The rest of it has been accomplished through cooperation of various federal agencies.

Many Pass Through

Mr. Powell estimates that between 400 and 500 different boys spend some time at the institution every year, although the capacity population is held at 225 because of lack of accommodations. There actually are beds and cots for only 150 boys, but by doubling up and crowding 225 are accommodated.

Improved heating facilities have been arranged by Mr. Powell with only a minimum of cost. He went to the state sinking fund commission when the old South Carolina Education association building was torn down to make way for the new state office building and was given the furnace which had been used in the old building. This now is being installed and will take the place of wood-burning stoves in the dormitories, mess hall and hospital.

"The boys themselves are showing great interest in the renovation program," Mr. Powell said. "They have requested flower seed and are beautifying parts of the grounds on their own initiative. I believe that the school plan would do more to improve conditions than any other one thing."

Would Remove Negro School Here

The Chattanooga Interracial Committee will be asked to assist in the movement here by a group of colored citizens to remove the State Training and Agricultural School for Colored Boys from Pikeville to this city.

Prof. Cortez Tipton and Dr. L. C. Patton, representing colored sponsors of the movement, Monday discussed the situation with Raleigh Crumbliss, associate director of the Chamber of Commerce, and asked the Chamber's assistance.

Prof. Tipton and Dr. Patton declared that the school is going to be moved. They pointed out that on various occasions State officials had recommended that it be condemned both from the standpoint of location and equipment.

Located in the mountains eighteen miles from Pikeville, Dr. Patton said that the school is "out of reach, out of harmony and out of touch." Both the Negro leaders said that the mountaineers of the region are not in sympathy with the reformatory. There are no Negro teachers connected with the school, which normally has about 300 inmates and expends around $62,000 annually.

Needed--$6,500

ONLY six days remain for the interdenominational committee of both the white and Negro races, which is seeking $10,000 for a chapel at the State Industrial Farm for Women in Goochland County, to secure the remainder of the quota. Formal opening of the farm's new buildings is set for next Saturday, and those in charge hope to obtain the needed amount by that time.

It is occasionally asked why the State of Virginia does not pay the cost of erecting this chapel, since the institution is owned and operated by the Commonwealth. There are two answers. In the first place, there are chapels at six State institutions at the present time, and the State did not pay the entire cost of any of them. In the second place, the State will furnish convict labor and convict-made bricks for the chapel at the women's farm, so that a $30,000 structure can be built for $10,000.

Working under considerable difficulty, the Protestant, Catholic and Jewish women who are seeking this amount have managed to obtain nearly $3,500. They urgently require $6,500 additional by next Saturday. It seems a trifling sum for a State of 2,500,000 people to provide for so important a purpose.

Why cannot 6,500 Virginia women send in $1 each for this worthy cause? Of course, larger or smaller amounts will be equally welcome. When it is stated that unless the needed sum is forthcoming, the hundreds of Virginia women at the farm will have to hold their religious exercises in the same room where on week days cards are played and dances are held, it is difficult to believe that the people of Virginia will fail to respond with the necessary contributions.

Those in charge of the institution feel that the mere fact that the women of Virginia show sufficient concern for the moral and spiritual welfare of the farm's unfortunate inmates to build a chapel there, will count tremendously toward improving their morale and their mental attitude. All persons wishing to contribute to the building of the chapel should send their contributions to MRS. CHURCHILL J. GIBSON, Treasurer, 1208 West Franklin Street, Richmond.

He Teaches Boys What They Need to Know to Pass West Point Exams

LEAVENWORTH, Kas. — Every Christmas, a 72-year-old colored man of Leavenworth receives cards from every state in the country and from a dozen nations of the world.

They are from his "boys," 1,800 of them, for whom he has been a stepping-stone and respected friend in their progress toward a career of military service.

He is Professor B. K. Bruce, who Friday, October 6, announced his retirement as principal of the Sumner school after more than 54 years of service.

Professor Bruce probably has had more to do with developing officers for the army, navy and coast guard than any other single man in the United States. It is a life's work, begun somewhat as a practical gesture, but turning into a labor of love. Professor Bruce has earned the friendship and respect of some of the nation's highest-ranking officers. At least one of his "boys" is on every ship in the U.S. navy, and one or more in the 48 states.

Coaches for Exams

When his "boys" are married, they send him a wedding invitation, and several times a year they stop here with their wives and family to visit the man who has helped them.

Professor Bruce for 35 or 40 years, (he doesn't remember exactly) has been a "coach" for entrance examinations to West Point, Annapolis, and the Coast Guard Academy at New London, Conn., the only man in the country to do such coaching in all subjects. Professor Bruce doesn't particularly like the appelation, "coach."

"I don't coach my boys to answer types of questions," he says "I try to teach them thoroughly in a number of subjects—so thoroughly they needn't fear any question they may be asked."

And he has been singularly successful. Out of 1,800 young men who have been his students, only three have failed to pass entrance examinations.

Back in 1885, an 18-year-old youth just graduated from the University of Kansas, Mr. Bruce came here as principal of the Sumner school. With rare vision, he saw the opportunity for grooming young applicants for military life in the basic subjects, English, mathematics, history, geography—those fundamentals in which young men were surprisingly deficient.

From All Over Country

After years of preparing himself, Mr. Bruce began what was to be an unusual and highly successful career. It was a slow start. But today, students are sent to him from all parts of the country, and he never lacks for a sizeable class.

Perhaps Mr. Bruce's success lies in several factors. Of genial yet determined personality, Mr. Bruce has loved his work. More particularly, he has taken a realistic attitude toward the task.

"I begin with the assumption that my boys know nothing," he explains. "When I was a boy, I used to carry water to a huge barrel. We would estimate the water in it by thumping on the side. I thump the boy to see what he has in him, and then assume he hasn't anything."

After examining his boys' scholastic records, Mr. Bruce sets to work. Right off, he has it understood that the responsibility is the boy's. He has to work. And so far, Mr. Bruce has found few who weren't willing students. Then he tells them what may be expected of them as future officers of the army. He doesn't mince words.

It ordinarily takes about five months of long sessions with an insistent teacher, who takes nothing for granted.

Large Class During War

On that score, Mr. Bruce impresses his boys with the necessity of specific knowledge of a subject. Many of the young men have come from large schools, where they perhaps were called upon to recite half a dozen times a year.

"In your military school," Mr. Bruce tells them, "you will be in classes of about ten for periods of an hour and forty-five minutes each. The boy isn't born who can hide his ignorance for an hour and forty-five minutes."

During the war, Mr. Bruce often had classes of 20 or 30 students. They were the "provisional class" applicants, who entered military service from civilian life by examination. In those days, and nights, Mr. Bruce rented a downtown office, with classes lasting sometimes until 11 oclock at night.

Old-time students remember Mr. Bruce in various ways. One student recalls an eccentricity of which Mr. Bruce laughs today (he still has it). Looking at a boy shrewdly, he would ask: "And what are we going to let 'X' equal?" and pull at his chin. When other memories have fled, that one remains.

Always a man of excellent health, ("I've never had a headache,") Mr. Bruce has been absent from the Sumner school 32 days in more than 54 years. He was in a motor car accident in 1923, forcing him to stay out for a little more than a month. Otherwise he has reported every school morning, never tardy.

Boys 'A Credit'

He took his pupils who wanted an Army career in groups—several from 5 to 7 o'clock in the evening at his home; from 5 to 9 o'clock, —for almost 40 years drilling and repeating with the lights shining through the windows of his home late into the night.

It's kept me young and interested "I've loved every minute of it. in the world about me."

Two years ago, two of his boys who took the entrance examination at Annapolis ranked first and second in a class of 660.

"My boys stay. They don't flunk out. I watch their progress, and they have been a credit."

They come back to the professor to visit and to send their sons. He has taught two generations of students, father and son, and been able to recall to his boys what their fathers had said and done.

A smile and an infectious laugh, Mr. Bruce remembers some of his favorites:

Richards Vidmir, now sports editor of the New York Herald-Tribune, who would rather "go to a party than study," happy-go-lucky and a favorite of Mr. Bruce.

"He didn't even take the examination. It's just as well. He's in his glory now. Dick was an unusually smart boy, but he wasn't interested in an Army career."

Or Major Ward H. Maris, now at Fort Leavenworth, who this summer sent his son to Mr. Bruce for instruction.

Recalls Favorites

Or Willard (Hunk) Holbrook, who became a famous football player at West Point.

Or Joe Cranston Jr., who went to the 1920 and 1924 Olympic games as a boxer.

Or Maurice (Ozzie) Simons, who was a West Point star football player.

There are dozens of others. They aren't hard for Mr. Bruce to remember, remember that is when they were eager and slightly frightened young boys.

Mr. Bruce has a wealth of prominent relatives. His uncle, B. K Bruce, was U. S. senator from Mississippi and register of the treasury under President Garfield and President McKinley.

His son-in-law, Carrington L. Davis, is principal of a Baltimore, Md., high school, with 1,600 students.

Although he has retired as principal at the Sumner school, Mr. Bruce will continue with his coaching. After a few months of rest, during which he will visit his daughter, Mrs. Davis in Baltimore, and a few of his host of friends in the east, he will return to take up again his work.

Dillard Professor Gives Two Papers Before Scientists

CHICAGO—(ANP)— A group of specialists from leading American universities has been gathered at the University of Chicago to carry out cooperative research upon problems of children and adolescents, and upon personality development in relation to learning.

Among the group is Allison Davis, professor of anthropology and head of the division of social studies at Dillard University. This panel of social scientists was called together by the American Council of Education.

GIVES 2 PAPERS

Mr. Davis, who is on leave on a Ronsenwald fellowship, has given the first two in a series of papers dealing with his researches upon social controls and personality development among Negroes. The influences of the system of color-caste in America upon the learning processes and habits of colored children, as well as the differential types of child training by social classes within the colored society itself, will be developed in further talks by Mr. Davis.

A recent research conducted by Mr. Davis for the American Youth Commission of the American Council on Education, with the collaboration of Dr. John Dillard of the Yale Institute of Human Relations, has dealt with color-caste and social class influences in the training of adolescents. This study of colored children will be discussed by the psychologist and sociologists at the University of Chicago, and is to be published by the council during the winter.

RICH, FULL YEARS

(An editorial from the Leavenworth Daily Times which The Call reprints both as a tribute to B. K. Bruce, one of the Southwest's foremost educators who has retired from the Leavenworth public school system, and in appreciation to the Times for its commendable handling of the story dealing with one of Leavenworth's prominent figures.)

Prof. B. K. Bruce, who has asked to be retired after 54 years as principal of Sumner school, has contributed a valuable heritage to the young people of his race in education, culture and personal example of upright living and individual self-respect. Few men have rendered so great a service to education in Leavenworth as has Prof. Bruce. What he has done is beyond computing; and the high respect that he commands in the minds of all our citizens testifies better than words to the esteem in which he is held and the appreciation there is here in this city for his splendid achievements in the school room scholastically and in character building.

But the influence of Prof. Bruce has not been confined to the pupils who have attended his school. It has permeated the United States Army and Navy as well. For to him young men ambitious to attend West Point and Annapolis have come from all over the nation these many years past to tutor for their examinations under his expert instruction. And all who shared in his tutelage have been impressed with the splendid qualities of Mr. Bruce's mind and heart and the high standard he always has set for himself as a man and a citizen.

Urban League + Bulletin +

Last week we gave a few examples of "Success Stories" of negroes in all walks of life. Other artists whose lives and accomplishments furnish a wealth of material for "success stories" are Sam Brown, of Philadelphia; Dox Thrash, of Georgia; Eldzier Cortor, Charles Davis, Archibald J. Motley Jr., Walter Ellison, Charles Sebree and Earl Walker, natives of Illinois; Allan R. Crite, of Massachusetts; Wilmer Jennings, Rhode Island; John A. Glenn, Palmer Hayden and Georgette Seabrooke, of New York, and John Lutz, of Ohio. All of these craftsmen have been on the WPA Federal Art Projects.

No series of "success stories" is complete without a hero who risks his life for others. Eugene Stewart, 28-year-old laborer on a WPA project in Boston, last year tried desperately to save the lives of two persons trapped in an automobile when it plunged from the Dover street bridge. For more than a quarter of an hour Stewart could be seen by scores of spectators who had gathered on the bridge above, diving repeatedly under the surface of the river at the spot where the motor car was submerged, but all his efforts to complete a rescue were of no avail. Stewart himself was finally removed from the water exhausted and suffering from exposure and immersion. "I lost a very good white friend of mine that way last year," he said, "and I never want to see anybody else die that way."

This same WPA laborer in 1937 helped avert a possible explosion in the Boston City hospital, at the expense of severe burns and other injuries to himself.

Stories of Heroism.

Other tales of heroism can be written around WPA and National Youth Administration project workers who have gone to the aid of persons endangered by tornados and floods in various parts of the country. During the hurricane and floods in New England and the tornado in Charleston, S. C., the efficiency with which these workers dealt with the emergency won for them the title of "shock troops of disaster."

The "success story" of Shirley Graham, supervisor of the negro unit of the Chicago WPA Federal Theater, had its climax in the award to her of a $2,500 Rosenwald Fellowship this year. She will continue studies in drama and music at Yale University.

The sculpture produced by Olivia Caldwell, of Chicago, has placed this 22-year-old blind artist in the front ranks of another branch of the cultural arts. Sightless since birth, her training in the art classes of the WPA has enabled her to overcome that great handicap. She has learned sculpture through her fingers, and has executed some remarkable work. A display of her work at the Wabash Y. M. C. A. last October was jointly sponsored by the Y. M. C. A. and the adult education program of the WPA. A more recent exhibit of her sculpture was held during the convention of the Detroit branch of the National Negro Congress in March of this year, attracting much interest among the delegates.

Perhaps the best known of these success stories is that of Richard Wright, employed on the Federal Writers' Project in New York city. A former WPA laborer in Chicago, he won a $500 prize in 1937 for the best short story submitted by a Federal Writers' Project worker to Story magazine. His novel, "Uncle Tom's Children," won instant acclaim. This year Wright was the only negro named among those who were given the Guggenheim award of $2,500 for further creative writing. The youthful author struggled to success by surmounting racial hatred in certain sections of the south after running away from his native Natchez, Miss., home.

Organizes Band.

In Portland, Ore., Bert Turner organized a 32-piece band and a drum and bugle corps composed of 166 talented boys and girls under his instruction in the Negro Federal School of Music and the WPA recreation program. Patience and careful planning nave rewarded Turner's efforts. The youthful musical units under his direction have succeeded in appearing in recitals and other performances in many schools and parks on the west coast.

In the relatively new science of aerial map tracing, the names of Clifford Spottsville and William T. Brown take their places in the lists of those who are winning merits and success through opportunities opened to them by federal agencies. Difficult phases of this science of cartography were quickly mastered by these and 107 other negro draftsmen during their employment on a WPA project sponsored by the Rural Electrification Administration at Washington, D. C. Through diligent work and constant study, Spottsville and Brown are particularly efficient in their work. They are ready to take a place in private industry when the opportunity arises.

Colonel Philip Mathews, state WPA administrator, has announced the resignation of Crystal B. Fauset from her post as member of the Pennsylvania state legislature to accept an appointment as assistant state director of the education and recreation program of the Work Projects Administration. The first negro woman ever to be elected to a state legislature will also act as consultant and advisor on all race relations questions and problems in the works program in Pennsylvania.

ACHIEVEMENT COMMISSIOIN

THE NATIONAL Negro Achievement Commission, Inc., has announced a reorganization of its organization and is now beginning plans for an "appropriate, dignified, spirited New York World's Fair 1940 exhibit, well designed and well organized, to show his (the Negro's) contribution to this country's life and development and his growing importance in its future."

After such a fiasco which the Commission had during this year's work, it is refreshing to note that things are now shaping up so that when the World's Fair reopens next year the Negro will be shown in a good light and to good advantage.

While other groups were building and opening exhibits, the Commission was planning and wasting valuable time with useless meetings and sending out meaningless releases to newspapers—releases which praised this officer or that but which were so lacking in news values that most of the Negro papers refused to use them.

One valuable year has been lost by the race because some individuals on the Commission put their interests first and made the race's secondary. Let's hope that the newly-incorporated group expeditiously sets out to plan an intelligent, workable program and that it carries it through to fruition. Here is a splendid opportunity for the race as a whole to benefit. May the Commission make the most of it!

HONORING THE CURIES

What a splendid lesson in internationalism it is to consider the contribution which the famous Curies have made to modern civilization! In New York this week Americans in one day twice honored the illustrious daughter of Marie and Pierre Curie, and with the Americans were the Ambassador from Poland and the Ambassador from France, representing their respective peoples.

Eve Curie, the distinguished daughter who has written the "Life of Madame Curie," was awarded the Clement Cleveland Medal by the New York City Cancer Committee. The award was made to Mlle. Curie because of "her rare achievement in writing so superb a life" of her mother, Marie Sklodovska Curie, the famous Polish chemist and wife of Pierre Curie, the famous French physicist.

In accepting the medal, Eve Curie thanked the group of American women who in 1921 presented Mme. Curie with "the only gift on which her heart was set—a gram of that radium which she had given to the world for nothing and which she was now too poor to buy to continue her research work."

Later, in 1929, a group of American women again presented Mme. Curie with a gram of radium so that the Curie Institute might be founded at Warsaw.

"Isn't it amazing," said Mlle. Curie, "that during the life of Marie and Pierre Curie, and even beyond their death, all these dreams have become realities? Marie Sklodovska's patriotic dream was the resurrection of Poland, her native land. The scientific dream of my parents has been accomplished by the discovery of radium which has led to a whole series of discoveries and given us a new picture of the universe, of the structure of matter.

"And their humanitarian dream has also become a reality. Soon after the discovery of radium a great hope dawned on the world. Radium, by destroying diseased cells, could cure lupus, skin diseases and certain types of cancer. This new treatment was given the name of Curietherapy and was used for the first time in Paris hospitals."

Thus we see how a Frenchman and his Polish wife, later assisted in a small way by American philanthropy, made such a stupendous contribution to all nations. In his recent book "Union Now," Clarence Streit points out how absurd it is for a nation to think it can live alone and prosper. Our debts to all manner of men are too numerous to mention.

But Mr. Streit does mention a few of these debts. "We had no way of divining," he writes, "that the man who would give us paper would be born in China, and that an Arab would bring it to us, an Englishman would give us a Turk's idea of vaccination against smallpox, an Italian would give us wireless, a German Jew would find the cure for syphilis with the help of a Japanese, and that Negroes instead of white men would be the first slaves to establish an enduring republic of self-freed slaves. No one could have predicted that a Pole would be the writer who would bring the salt of the sea best in English to the English, or that a Dutch dry-goods merchant would be the man to make the lens that freed our eyes to discover the microscopic world. We can no more tell today what bargeman on what river will rise to steer our freedom through a dangerous civil conflict than our great-grandfathers could tell that a lanky Mississippi raftsman would be the man to save from suicide the first great union of the free."

In honoring the Curies today, we Americans honor the human being, the divine thing called man, which is above any one race or any one religion and beyond that petty spirit of nationalism that threatens the cornerstones of humanity. The Curies today are remembered among the great of the world. And citizens of the world they are called. Does it matter now what their race or what their nationality?

REDDICK WINS CHICAGO Ph. D.

Lawrence D. Reddick Gets Ph. D., From Chicago University

Brilliant Fisk Graduate Now Professor at Dillard U.

CHICAGO, June 8 (ANP)—When the June convocation of the University of Chicago is held this week, among the hundreds of candidates from all sections of the United States and many foreign lands will be one Negro for the Ph. D., L. D. Reddick.

The winning of the highest scholastic degree by this scholar comes as a fitting climax to a brilliant record extending back to the public school days in Jacksonville, Fla. Here young Reddick, a chubby youth in knee pants, graduated as Valedictorian of the Davis Street public school; repeated the feat at the Stanton High school (where James Weldon Johnson years before had been principal), and then as a scholarship student was off to Fisk. The diffident freshman was, he has confessed, fearful that he might flunk out in the rigorous disciplines of college study, but when the academic "averages" for the year were added up, it was found that, like Abou ben Adhem, L. D. Reddick's name led all the rest. Three terms later he graduated as the ranking Fisk student magna cum laude. During the undergraduate years, time had been found for three years of debating against teams such as Northwestern, Purdue, Western Reserve, Howard, Talladega, and a ten-day tour of the Southwest with Wiley college. The local middle-weight boxing championship was also won..

An additional year was spent in picking up the master's degree. Reddick's thesis was an incisive study of "The Racial Attitudes in American History Textbooks of Southern Schools."

The next six years, 1933-39, were busy years: four of these were spent in college teaching in Kentucky and New Orleans; two in study at the University of Chicago; in between these academic pursuits, the young scholar, rapidly maturing, collected the detailed testimony of 1,000 ex-slaves, served as an assistant editor of the Journal of Negro History, and contributed a score or more articles to the various periodicals of the nation. Meanwhile, fellowships were won from the General Education Board and the Julius Rosenwald fund.

During the next few months, the young doctor will sail for the West Indies and other points in Latin-America where he will observe race relationships there, search for historical data on the Negro, and take a well-earned rest.

At the University of Chicago, Reddick's dissertation on anti-Negro propaganda in the Southern press has been conceded by members of the faculty to be a distinct contribution to scholarship.

Mass. Governor Names Chicagoan As Aide At Harvard U. Commencement

His son, Anexander L. Jackson III, will graduate from Phillips Academy at Andover, June 16. During his senior year young Jackson was elected co-captain of the Andover track team and played end on the football team for two years. He will enter Harvard in September. Two younger brothers, William and Winslow, are preparing for Harvard.

At the Harvard exercises June 22, Governor Saltonstall will present the university with a certified check for $100,000 on behalf of the class of 1914.

Other members of the class include Junius Morgan of the New York banking firm of Morgan; Gilbert Seldes and Nicholas Roosevelt, authors; William Tudor Gardner, former governor of Maine, and Sumner Welles, undersecretary of state.

Wilkerson and Bunche With Research Group

WASHINGTON, D. C. — Doxey A. Wilkerson, associate professor of education, and director of summer school, Howard University, has been granted sabbatical leave for the academic year 1939-40, during which time he will be associated with the study of "The Negro in America," sponsored by the Carnegie Corporations of New York.

The Howard University Board of Trustees previously granted a year's leave of absence to Dr. Ralph J. Bunche, professor of political science, who will also be associated with the Carnegie Corporation study of the Negro. Professors Bunche and Wilkerson are the two Negro members of the full-time research staff which will direct the study.

The Carnegie Corporation study seeks to interpret the position of the Negro in all areas of American culture. Professor Wilkerson will direct the educational aspects of the study, major emphasis being given to the role of education, for both whites and Negroes, in relation to the problem of race relations; to what white and Negro students learn about the Negro in American society; to the information and attitudes of school teachers and administrators regarding the problems of race conflict; to the nature of controls which shape educational policies in Negro schools.

This investigation will seek to supplement Professor Wilkerson's recent study of "facilities" for Negro education, conducted under the auspices of the President's advisory committee on education. This latter study, bearing the title "Special Problems of Negro Education," is to be published during the next few weeks by the Government Printing Office.

The offices of the Carnegie inquiry on the Negro have been established in the Chrysler Building, New York City.

Name Race Man To Horological Society Executive Committee

NEW YORK, June 29—(ANP)—Establishing another precedent, the Horological society of New York elected a Negro, P. L. Huffstead, a member of the executive committee of the organization for the ensuing year when the annual election of officers was held last week.

Being one of two Negroes who are members of the institute branch in New York, Mr. Huffstead has steadily impressed his associates with his fine qualities and his ability as a master craftsman. Therefore, it occasioned no surprise among his associates when a former president placed Huffstead's name in nomination for membership on the executive committee.

The election was unanimous and thus, for the first time, the society named a Negro to its board. Composed of some of the world's greatest watchmakers and technicians, this society has a membership of about 300, elected by virtue of their accomplishments in the field of watchmaking.

Teachers Hear Son Of Ex-Slave, Once Georgia Educator

ATLANTIC CITY, N. J., July 28.—(AP)—When the Civil War was over and children of former slaves were attending school in the South, a delegation of Northerners made an inspection tour of the schools.

While visiting one school, an "inspector" asked the class what he should tell the people "up North" when he returned.

A little Negro boy arose and, in solemn voice said:

"Tell 'em we's risin'."

The phrase inspired John Greenleaf Whittier to write the poem by that title.

The little boy, now 87 and a successful businessman, was a principal speaker before the American Teachers' Association, an organization of Negro educators, at its annual convention Friday.

He is Major R. R. Wright, founder and president of the Citizens' and Southern Bank of Philadelphia, president of the National Negro Bankers Association and formerly president of the Georgia State Industrial College.

MAJOR R. R. WRIGHT, Philadelphia banker, former president of Georgia State College, and Atlanta University's oldest graduate, visiting scenes of his student days as guest of his alma mater was presented during the week to the student bodies of A. U., Morehouse and Spelman Colleges, Morris Brown University, Booker T. Washington High School, and to the home office personnel of the Atlanta Life Insurance Company.

At each institution the venerable educator-financier inspired his listeners with vivid accounts of the progress of the Negro since emancipation as seen thru his eyes—eyes which first saw the light in the days of slavery.

Injecting occasional bits of infectious humor, the former Georgian narrated in a manner which amused and inspired his audiences. His keen wit, eloquence of speech, and lovable personality endeared him to all. To this correspondent he is indeed the symbol of Negro progress.

He has certainly lived the phrase he coined "Tell 'em we are rising," and if ever an individual portrayed the successful realization of "Up From Slavery' that person is the Major. For his has been a full life, rich with vast experiences.

Born a slave, Major Wright organized Georgia's first Negro high school, also the states first Negro college, of which he served for thirty years as president, and after a period of fifty years of service in the school room in his native state, organized a bank twenty years ago, which he is now serving as president.

Visiting the scenes of his youth, the Major was impressed with the progress Georgians have made, and of the places which deeply touched him the old campus of Atlanta University and the old home of the late Dr. Crogman, classmate and lifelong friend.

Following is the text of Major Wright's various Atlanta addresses, compiled in one volume, entitled: "Pressing Need—Greater Economic Activities by the Higher Ups." It reads:

MAJOR WRIGHT

"PRESSING NEED; GREATER ECONOMIC ACTIVITIES BY THE HIGHER UPS

Atlanta University has been so long interested in and associated with the Economic history and social condition of the Negro in America, that it may appear like bringing coals to New Castle for me, scarcely an amateur, to stand here and call your attention to the pressing need for greater activities relating to manufacturing, industry, domestic and foreign commerce, aviation, domestic service and other economic developments.

I am not certain that I have the slightest qualification for such an undertaking except my continuing enthusiasm for business. I did spend fifty years in your state, trying to teach the young idea how to shoot; beginning my teaching career by the approval of the famous General Robert Toombs, in Washinton, Wilkes County, Georgia; next founding the Howard Normal School in Cuthbert, Georgia, of which a graduate of this school, Professor Henderson, is still principal; then as its first principal, organizing and naming Georgia's first High School and naming it the Ware High; and lastly organizing the Georgia State College of which I was president for thirty years. By these commitments I came more or less in contact with the social and economic condition of the Negro in various walks of life.

..Now I am head of the only Negro bank north of the Mason and Dixon Line and President of the National Negro Bankers Association; I have familiarized the people of Philadelphia with Haitian Coffee from the little Black Republic to the south of us, to which I have sent a Goodwill airplane message carried in a planed owned and piloted by a Negro. Hence, I feel that these connections warrant me to express my deep concern in economic activities, to give my opinon as to how the educated may be of great economic benefit to the masses.

We note that to some extent the educated and uneducated Negro is in almost every line of economics as a laborer or in some other capacity as an employee. In my early manhood I used to hear many challenges to prove that the Negro never invented any useful article or built as a free man in Africa, any of its ancient ruins. These questions are now as obsolete as the question as to whether a Negro could learn Latin, Greek, Science and higher mathematics. But there remains a more serious question as to what extent the Negro is entering into the World's Business as a proprietor, a master or an entrepreneur. A casual scrutiny of the Government's commercial and business statistics, I think, will reveal a sad deficiency in the larger economic activities, but a most helpful invitation to the well trained Negro to try his hand in what may be considered new and at present doubtful fields of industry manufacturing, domestic and foreign commerce, industrial chemistry, physics, botany, and zoology. The search for knowledge is not only interesting and essential but we feel that our economic leaders must follow in the wake of an Edison, a Marconi, and the developers of the sowing machine, the harvester, the automobile, the airplane, and the many discoveries in agriculture and mechanics which our scholars know almost as well as any others. We have men and women of talent to depend upon for this leadership.

We have produced more than 250 Ph. D.'s, many thousand A.B.'s; in fact so many A.B.'s of high rank that our one hundred or more colleges are beginning to hesitate to engage a teacher who does not have a Ph.D. or a Master's Degree. This number will increase and thus the usual lines of higher occupation—teaching, preaching, law and medicine, will in their order offer less lure. Even if this is not the fact it must be obvious that these white collar artists must continue to have collars and bread which will or can come alone from those lower down in the scale of income, who must toil that our professional people may live.

Hence, the pressing need for a stronger leadership for greater economic activity among our group increases. Sometime ago I wrote to a number of people who were interested in securing a larger share of economic opportunities and possessions and received from them their reaction upon this subject. I was interested in what Mr. T. Arnold Hill, Director of Industrial Relations of the National Urban League, said. This is his comment: "There is no need denying the fact that our economic situation in this and other countries has everybody guessing as to what the future offers." I think this is about the opinion of most of those who think that there should be more definite activity on the part of those who are directing vocational training of our youth.

At every turn of business and employment there appears need of more intense study of the possible business opportunities which lie open for our worthwhile group and a large and more intense use of our scientific and artistic discoveries and inventions.

Our competent men must lead a survey of the Social-economic setup which will reveal the fact that there are quite a number of industries in which there are no entries for our group. This is especially true in the trade group. There are many divisions of this trade group in which there are no entries whatsoever for our group. In my opinion, the six large groups of social-economic activities should be broked down, and there should be listed for the observation and the consideration of our young people, those activities in which only a few, as proprietors and entrepreneurs, are engaged. Perhaps this done and there is made a thorough investigation of the industrial Seigfried line which protects all of the big and worth-while businesses of others, there will be disclosed places where we can break through and join our fellow men in making economic victories for ourselves and our youth. It has been noticed that in some lucrative occupations that might be opened to our group, there are engaged only seven tenths of of 1 percent of those who are employed. It again appears that our competent ought not only to point out these opportunities but should put the action to word and set the example by entering these pursuits themselves. It may be that right here is the place to bring the splendid example of founding a business, and developing it, out of which white men are at present coining fortunes. I refer to your own Prof. Jesse B. Blayton who states very properly that he had selected a virgin and lucrative field as a C. P. A. This is what we call business leadership. Some time ago it was my privilege to be in Butte, Montana, where I made observations as to the copper mining, and there were a number of colored people who had been employed as laborers, but less than one-haf of one percent had secured the slightest proprietorship, notwithstanding the fact that there appeared to be some fair opportunities for colored people to enter into this business. We need some well trained graduates of our schools to tackle the job. Down in Texas I made a survey of the oil business and found that a number of colored people had owned land which they could have kept and sold the mining privileges to those who had the money to develop them, no leadership there, but instead of this, they sold the land. I feel somewhat guilty myself, along this line, fo over fifty year ago I bought 100 acres of land near Aiken, South Carolina, which turned out to contain kaolin deposits. A party who was wiser than I purchased the mineral rights on my land and now these lands are being worked to a very large extent by those who have set up factories for the development of this mineral industry, Kaolin. Here is where our agricultural and minerological scientists can find opportunities. The cheapest land may sometimes offer the finest values. I have found this to be true the few years that I have been intensely interested in the development of business among my racial group.

Some twenty years ago I entered into the banking business as an experiment, having been associated with some of my friends in a light way in banking, I decided to try it myself. This experiment has opened by eyes to so many business opportunities which need only knowledge, sacrifice, courage, ingenuity and patient hard work.

Since then I have experimented somewhat in the importation business. I went to Haiti and introduced Haitian coffee in my community; it had not been used there before. I have sold nearly one million pounds of this coffee and have since seen that importation rise from less than one hundred thousand pounds to over ten million pounds of Haitian coffee used in this country. Here is also a broad field for operation in transportation.

A short while ago I undertook to encourage the youth of my community along the line of aviation. For this purpose I secured the use of a second-hand airplane had it repaired, rode in it myself and then sent it on a Goodwill mission t Haiti and return; it was successful I see no reason why aviation pilot may not be as much in demand a chauffeurs nor why some enterprising Negro company should no be organized as the Wright Brothers organized their aviation corporation.

Sometime ago I conceived the idea that our people should have a a Negro face upon a United States postage stamp. I worked and contended and finally the result was 'Booker T. Washington stamp. Here is another opportunity for some bright young man or woman to engage in the collection and sale of stamps from all countries where Negro faces are represented on Government stamps. W need a Negro philatelist. Now, these experimental excursions in such lines of activity convinced me that the talent that we have among our people can develop greater opportunities for themselves than have yet been created.

It is true that in the past twenty years many changes have been taking place in the relative position of Negroes in the nation's labor force and in the social-economic grouping of gainful workers. This fact demonstrates to me very conclusively that there is room for greater economic activity among our educated men and women.

In the past five years over 2,300 have graduated from our colleges and over 48,000 Negroes have received the A.B. degree in this country. We have now nearly 250 Ph.D. degrees among our people. Are we using our intellectual investment in the economic field to its full extent? It is very pleasing to read of the achievement of our chemists. Are they, like other chemists, using their abilities to commercialize some of their discoveries in science, in chemistry, and in physics, etc? Is it not possible that there should be greater economic activity among these groups?

I think that everyone of the thinkers of our group has come to the conclusion that we shall have to double our energies in taking advantage not only of the economic opportunities that are offered but to use our talents to create new openings. No one doubts that we have the talent and the enterprise, but we need, perhaps, the courage and ingenuity, the foresight and insight to enable us to accomplish the various results which our scientific discoveries and inventions and other talents warrant. It seems useless to rely upon the laudations heaped upon the progress we have made. We should seek new fields to conquer. We must not only have ideas but follow and develop those ideas for an economic welfare in which our group may participate. We all are greatly intrigued by the scietific discoveries of our greatest scientist, Dr. Carver, which others are utilizing for their benefit. The race would be happier still if it heard of the promotion of some Negro commercial undertaking or some Negro company which was capitalizing these wonderful scientific ideas.

1. We have the same opportunity as others to make sacrifices for the purpose of building up businesses or laying foundations for greater future business. We must not forget that the people of other races or population groups have made the greatest success in the line of endeavor where they have made the greatest sacrifices. The story of the lives of the successful men who have founded the various estates and businesses, discloses that they were the men who were willing to work as pioneers for a time for practically nothing. Many have given their lives to found a business , the fruits of which they never enjoyed, and have sent this business along to subsequent generations who are now enjoying the fruits of their sacrifices.

2. It is known that most of our young educated men and women are unwilling to start at the bottom and toil up. Most of them appear to wish to eat in the afternoon the fruit of the seeds sown in the morning; they live up to their highest immediate possibilities; they wish to attain at once the things that others have toiled for for years.

3. The question is, how long will it be before these people can ever learn to make the sacrifice which will enable them to lay the foundation for future success? Is there anything fundamental in the character of our education or in ourselves that prevents us from making the same sacrifices and reaching the same goals that other people have reached in the World's business?

Now, these are some of the considerations that confirm us in saying that there is a pressing need for greater economic activity among our group.

May I, in conclusion, fire a shot at the scare-crow, a figment of the mind, that Negroes won't patronize each other, by mentioning the fact that nineteen million dollars of Negro insurance is carried now by our insurance companies and the success of our undertakers and rich physicians is due to Negro patronage. If you retort that their success is due to dead business, a business coming from those who are dead or are preparing their shrouds, I suggest that it is nevertheless a valuable hint and test as to possible success in many other lines.

Let some enterprising Ph.D. get out a suggestive chart as a suggestion for new business for Negroes and display it in every school church and home. Soon there will be seen a revival in Negro commercial and economical activities.

Finally what we need are broad visioned conscientious, educated leaders in business, leaders in deed as in word.

BLIND SOUTH CAROLINA MAN TO GET PH. D. DEGREE SOON

GREENVILLE, May 27—(AP) — The Rev. Sam M. Lawton, born blind, dean of North Greenville Junior college, Tigerville, will on June 2 receive the Ph. D., degree from Peabody college for teachers, Nashville, Tenn.

According to the records of the American foundation for the blind only eight persons now blind now hold this degree. Of the eight five were not born blind. Records as to the other three are not available.

Mr. Lawton spent six years on his thesis, "Religious Life of Coastal and Sea Island Negroes of South Carolina." During this time he attended more than 250 negro religious services in the coastal region of the state. He developed a pocket device for recording data so as not to disturb the subject of an interview or a religious service in progress.

He received his bachelor of arts degree from Furman university, Greenville; his masters degree from Peabody college for teachers at Nashville and his Th. D. degree from the Southern Baptist Theological seminary at Louisville, Ky.

Mr. Lawton has served as pastor of churches and missions in Arkansas, Tennessee and South Carolina. He has traveled abroad. His entire life, with the exception of one year, has been spent with people who can see.

That year he attended Cedar Springs school for the blind at Spartanburg, where he learned to use a typewriter, to read Braille and New York point and to play some on the violin. 4

50 Years Of Service

For 50 years now, Arthur Harold Parker has been working ever faithfully and well to bring light into shadowed places, to bring hope, ambition and inspiration to generation after generation of Negro youth. His has been a long and great service not only to the thousands of children and youths he has directly aided, but to this entire community and state. Indeed, the influence of his good works spreads to all parts of the country. He has already found his satisfactions and rewards beyond reckoning. But tomorrow afternoon Birmingham will make acknowledgement of its indebtedness and gratitude to Dr. Parker and observe the golden anniversary of his service with ceremonies in the auditorium of the Industrial High School, of which he has been principal since its establishment in 1900.

Erskine Ramsay, president of the Birmingham Board of Education, and Dr. C. B. Glenn, superintendent of city schools, will be among the speakers. Dr. Glenn will present a gift to Dr. Parker. Spokesmen for the citizens of Birmingham, the Industrial High School student body, for its alumni, and for Birmingham teachers also will be heard. There will be music by the high school's famous A Cappella Choir.

Dr. Parker entered the Birmingham public school system in 1888 and, with the exception of one year, has served continuously since then. The great school he has headed for nearly 40 years is largely a monument to his ability and devotion. Such an immeasurable contribution as he has made to others finds its supreme return in the soul-stirring knowledge of something of what that service has meant to struggling human beings. But if, besides, any crowns are deserved, surely a resplendent one is due Dr. Parker. Figuratively, it will be presented to him by Birmingham Sunday—with admiration and affection.

Negro Educator Is Praised By Mayor on Retirement

A veteran Negro educator who is retiring this year after 65 years' service in the Richmond school system has received the congratulations of Mayor Bright. He is Albert Vaughn Norrell, 82, a teacher at Booker T. Washington School. The Mayor wrote to him as follows:

"I express the sentiment of the people of the City of Richmond in congratulating you upon your service, devotion to your work and contribution to the welfare and advancement of the colored school children who have come within the scope of your influence through three generations. Your example is worthy of emulation by all within the public service or private industry."

The veteran teacher was graduated at 17 from the Richmond High and Normal School in 1873, and immediately started teaching at Navy Hill School. In 1883 he was appointed principal. A year later, however, when Negro principals were removed under the administration of Governor Fitzhugh Lee, he went back to teaching at Navy Hill and remained in that post until 1923, when he was transferred to the Booker T. Washington School.

He was educated by his father before attending local high and normal schools. Later he studied at Union University, Virginia State College and Hampton Institute.

He has participated in many religious, civic and fraternal activities and served as president of the Negro Teachers' Association. He has nine children, and these, as well as his wife and seven grandchildren, all graduated from Richmond High and Normal, now called Armstrong High School.

SCHOLARSHIP AND OTHER DISTINCTIONS

Dartmouth Students Honor Tidewater Youth

(Special to Journal and Guide)

HANOVER, N. H.—The highest honor that Dartmouth College can bestow on a student went this week to a colored senior, Charles Twitchell Davis of Hampton, Va. This scholarly youth, already the recipient of many of Dartmouth's highest scholarship honors, was voted the "most intelligent" member of the class of 1939 by his white classmates, in one of the most liberal gestures ever made in any of the East's traditionally conservative colleges.

Toward the end of his junior year, young Davis was named a college fellow at Dartmouth. This honor carried with it a scholarship covering his senior year expenses and he was not required to attend classes and could sit in on any courses he desired to. Not being required to take any examinations, he automatically received "A" in all senior year courses.

Early this year young Davis, son of Don A. Davis, head bookkeper at Hampton Institute, and Mrs. Davis, was nominated for a Rhodes Scholarship. However, when the awards were finally announced, his name was omitted.

But in March he was awarded the Fred DeMerritte Barker Fellowship of $900 to be used toward graduate study. The conditions of the award are based on qualities of leadership, manhood, force of character, literary and scholastic ability and attainments, and physical vigor.

Mr. Davis plans to study for his M.A. degree at Harvard or Yale, majoring in English, and will enter the field of teaching upon completion of his studies.

Young Davis is secretary of the board of governors of Junto—the undergraduate liberal society, and is a member of Phi Beta Kappa scholarship society, and the American Student Union.

He was recently a delegate to the Cornell - Dartmouth - Pennsylvania Forum. He received his preparation for college at Hampton Institute.

He is one of the most popular students on the campus. He has participated in many of the extra-curricular activities at the college and is considered an all-around student.

CHARLES DAVIS

He was won the respect and admiration of his fellow students and the members of the college faculty.

His brother, Don A. Davis, Jr., also finished Dartmouth a few years ago and is now a teller in the Mechanics and Farmers Bank of Durham, N. C.

L. D. Reddick Climaxes Brilliant Scholastic Career To Get Ph.D.

When the June convocation of the University of Chicago is held next week, among the hundreds of candidates from all sections of the United States and many foreign lands will be one Race candidate for the Ph.D. degree, Lawrence D. Reddick.

The winning of the highest scholastic degree by this scholar comes as a fitting climax to a brilliant record extending back to his public school days in Jacksonville, Fla.

Here young Reddick, a chubby youth in knee pants, graduated as valedictorian of the Davis street public school; repeated the feat at the Stanton high school (where James Weldon Johnson years before had been principal)and then as a scholarship student was off to Fisk.

Afraid of Flunking

The diffident freshman was, he confessed, fearful that he might flunk out in the rigorous disciplines of college study, but when the academic "averages" for the year were added up it was found that, like Abou Ben Adhem, Reddick's name led all the rest.

Three terms later he graduated as the ranking Fisk student magna cum laude.

An additional year was spent in picking up the masters degree. Reddick's thesis was an incisive study of "The Racial Attitudes in American History Textbooks of Southern Schools."

The next six years, '33-'39, were busy years: four of these were spent in college teaching—in Kentucky and in New Orleans; two in study at the University of Chicago.

Survey Ex-slaves

In between these academic pursuits, the young scholar, rapidly maturing, collected the detailed testimony of 1,000 ex-slaves, served as an assistant editor of the Journal of Negro History, and contributed a score or more articles to the various periodicals of the nation. Meanwhile, fellowships were won from the General Education Board and the Julius Rosenwald fund.

At the University of Chicago, Reddick's dissertation on anti-Race propaganda in the Southern press has been conceded by members of the faculty to be a distinct contribution to scholarship.

To Visit West Indies

During the next few months, Reddick will sail for the West Indies and other points in Latin America where he will observe race relationships there, search for historical data on the Race, and will take a well-earned rest.

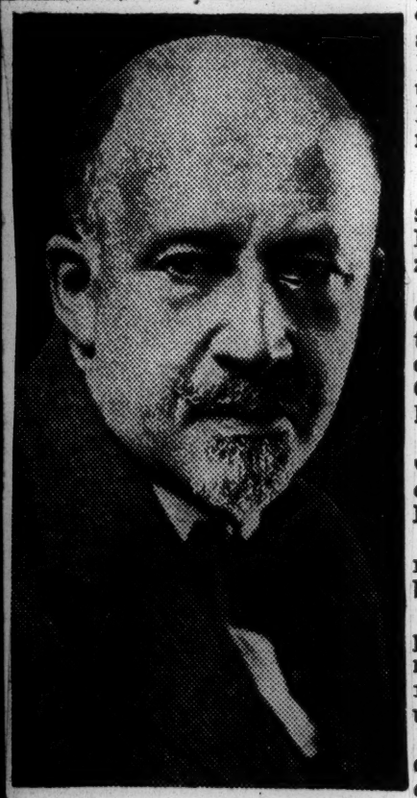
DuBois Defends Dr. Just, Hinton

Says They and Dr. Julian Would Have Done Better Without Color Prejudice

By JOHN JASPER

Writing in the summer issue of the American Scholar, Dr. W. E. B. DuBois, former editor of the Crisis, defends the thesis that without the color line colored scientists today would be as well known as colored leaders in music, literature and the stage.



DR. W. E. B. DuBOIS

Dr. DuBois says colored Americans have the exact and intensive habit of mind, the rigor of mathematical logic demanded of those who would be scientists.

He cites the cases of ten different colored scientists who have been handicapped by the color line. Although he doesn't mention names, it is possible in three instances to identify the scientists he discusses.

EDITOR'S NOTE — In the quotations from Dr. DuBois's article which follow, the persons referred to are identified, and their names inserted, by the writer.

Dr. Gus Hinton

Among them is Dr. Gus Hinton, instructor in Boston Medical School and chief of the Wassermann Laboratory in the Massachusetts State Health Department. Dr. DuBois says:

"His test for syphilis is said to be better than the Wassermann test in some respects, yet this man who is one of the foremost authorities on syphilis in the United States has received no promotion, occupies no assured position and recently refused a distinction conferred upon him by a colored organization (Spingarn Medal) for fear that emphasis upon his color would handicap him even more than it has already."

Dr. Ernest E. Just

Another of the unnamed persons referred to by Dr. DuBois is Dr. Ernest E. Just, professor of zoology at Howard University.

"He has contributed a chapter to Cowdry's 'General Cytology' and to a similar German work. His own volume, 'The Biology of the Cell Surface' has just been published.

"For twenty-five years he has worked during the summer in the celebrated laboratory in Woods Hole, Mass.

"As the leading authority in methods there he was consulted by staff and students alike.

"Contrary to almost invariable precedent, however, he was never made an instructor and has never received a call from a leading university but one.

"Although he was a friend of the greatest American scholar of general physiology and a man who admired him in his work, Dr. Just was never invited to occupy a research position.

"Finally, [Dr. Just] quit going to Woods Hole, because of the treatment his wife had to endure one summer when he took her with him.

"He was vice president of the American Society of Zoology but never became president, a quite usual promotion. There seems to be no explanation for the treatment of [Dr. Just] but his color. Personally, both he and his wife are modest, pleasant and unassuming."

Dr. Percy Julian

Another easily identified person is Dr. Percy Julian who was professor of chemistry at Howard University.

"There was no question as to his training and his ability in chemistry. He became graduate research counsellor at his alma mater, DePauw University, Indiana.

"From 1934 to 1937, his course in chemistry was currently reported to be the most popular at the institution, and he stood well with the president and the administration.

"But any chance for continuing his work there or for securing promotion was frustrated by the propaganda of the American Legion. He resigned and became head of the research department of the — Paint Company where he has twelve white chemists working under him. Commerce welcomed what the educational world rebuffed."

Seven Others

In addition to these three, Dr. DuBois lists the handicaps under which seven other scientists work. He doesn't give their names and the writer does not identify them.

His most recent work is "Black Folk Then and Now," Price $3.50, published by Henry Holt and Company, New York. He tells of the days when colored people ruled the world.

TEACHES IN WHITE UNIVERSITY

Mrs. Margaret Davis-Bowen, principal of Gilbert Academy, New Orleans, La., who was the only faculty member or student present at the summer session of the Epworth League Institute at Missouri Wesleyan university in Cameron, Mo. Miss Bowen delivered a series of lectures on "Friendship Among the Races" and "The Church at Work in Southern Lands." Mrs. Bowen is the wife of the Rev. J. W. E. Bowen, prominent Methodist minister of New Orleans. She is a graduate of the University of Cincinnati with degree of M.A., and is the grand basileus of the Alpha Kappa Alpha sorority. She was recently a delegate to the Pan Hellenic Council held in New York.

Negro Singer Given Degree By University

Ohio Wesleyan Honors Roland Hayes, Who Sings Here August 24

Roland Hayes, the celebrated Negro tenor, who will give a song recital at the Calhoun city auditorium on Thursday evening, August 24, was signally honored at the ninety-fifth commencement of Ohio Wesleyan University, at Delaware, Ohio, on June 12 this year when the university conferred upon him the honorary degree of Doctor of Music.

In conferring the degree, Dr. Edward L. Rice, president of the university, said: "By the beauty of your voice; by your scholarly interpretation of the classics and the folk music of your race; by your unswerving loyalty to the highest ideals of your art, you have brought pleasure and inspiration to our campus and to multitudes in many lands."

The career of Roland Hayes, born on a Gordon county farm a few miles from Calhoun, is without a paralel in the annals of the Negro race. Moving from this county to Chattanooga in early life, his voice attracted the attention of those in position to aid and advise him, and he was enabled to enter Fiske University. After completing his college course, he pursued the study of his art under Sir George Henschel and other leading masters in Europe and America.

On dozens of concert tours in this country and abroad, Hayes has been acclaimed as one of the great artists of his day. The New York Herald-Tribune proclaimed Hayes' recent appearance in that city as "One of the season's memorable recitals," while the Evening Journal said: "His diction, in whatever language he sings, is marvelous. In addition, he never forces, so that the tones never lose their suave mellowness, even when he raises his admirably trained voice to its full power, which he does with striking effect for a needed climax."

Sell-Out Predicted

Tom David, in charge of ticket sales for the Hayes recital, stated Wednesday that tickets would go on sale some time next week. He predicted that every seat in the large auditorium would be sold out before the doors open on the night of the performance.

There are 1,104 seats in the auditorium, and of this number 597 will be reserved at $1 each. These seats will be numbered and tickets will bear corresponding numbers. The remaining 507 seats will be sold at 75c each; they will not be numbered, but the purchaser of every ticket will be assured of a seat somewhere in the section, as no tickets will be sold beyond the seating capacity of the auditorium.

A section has been reserved at one side of the auditorium for the colored people, consisting of 114 numbered and 124 unnumbered seats.

At the request of Roland Hayes, the net proceeds of the recital, after the payment of actual expenses, will be divided between the Boy Scouts and the Calhoun-Rosenwald school for colored.

Denver U. Craduates Its First Negro Lawyer

DENVER, Aug. 11—(ANP)—Archie Willard McKinney, son of Dr. and Mrs. T. T. McKinney, graduated from the department of law of the University of Denver at the commencement exercises of the famous institution in June and became the first Negro in the history of the university to graduate from the department of law. However, there have been numerous Negroes who studied law there.

He took the Colorado bar examination June 28, but plans to take a graduate course in the University of Michigan before actually taking up the practice of law as a profession. His father, who is a distinguished Denver physician and supreme physician of the American Woodmen, is a graduate of the University of Michigan. The McKinney family hails from Texas and is one of the most prominent Negro families of the country. The uncle of young McKinney, John W. McKinney, is a bishop in the Colored Methodist Episcopal church and resides at Sherman, Texas. The Dr. T. T. McKinney family has resided in Denver for the past 14 years.

New Curator Takes Over Duties At Library

During the past week Dr. L. P. Reddick, above, recent Ph.D. from the University of Chicago, assumed the duties of his appointment as Curator of the Division of Negro Literature and History of the 135th Street Branch of the New York Public Library system. Dr. Reddick succees the late Arthur A. Schomburg, noted bibliophile.

The new Curator expressed great interest in the sights—cultural and otherwise—of the city, particularly Harlem. Moreover, he said, "I have been pleasantly surprised in that so many messages of congratulations have come in. I had no idea that so many eminent persons had taken note of the appointment. It is a tribute to the importance which the Schomburg Collection is attaining in the public mind.

"My one hope is that my coming will in some way increase this interest on the part of scholars and the public and will result in a wider usage of the most valuable Negro collection in the world."

Prairie View Confers Two M.A. Degrees

By NAPOLEON B. EDWARD

PRAIRIE VIEW, Tex.—(SNS)—The close of the recent session of the Summer School of Prairie View State College was epoch-making, bringing in a new era in education to the college and the citizens of Texas.

For the first time in her histor Master of Art Degrees were conferred. Principal W. R. Banks conferred the Master of Arts Degrees on Mrs. Armye Jones Harrison and Miss Frieda Rhone amid imposing ceremony before a concourse of citizens who had gathered to witness the closing exercises from all parts of the state.

During the same hour the Principal had previously conferred the Bachelor Degree upon 77 seniors as follows: Agriculture 9; Arts and Sciences 40; Home Economics 24, and Mechanic Arts 4.

The special sermon to the graduates was preached by Dr. Charles D. Hubert, president of Morehouse College, Atlanta, Ga. The commencement address was delivered by Dr. Earl L. Sasser, head of the Department of English, Prairie View State College. The Georgia prelate stressed the importance of doing justice and living humbly with God. The way to find God is through service. If you go down the lane of life doing your duty day by day, you will find God, said Dr. Hubert.

Dr. Sasser made a scholarly and forensic appeal to the graduates to contribute their time and talents in promoting the welfare of humanity. He urged as a matter of right and duty, that men and women learned in the profesions should tackle and solve the social problems that confront our civilization.

YOUNG COLORED WOMAN IN VIRGINIA ACADEMY OF SCIENCE

A young colored woman, Miss Amanda Eunice Peele, Assistant Professor of Biology at Hampton Institute, appeared on the seventeenth annual program of the Virginia Academy of Science at Danville, Virginia, recently.

The significance of the statement above is in the fact that Miss Peele is the first Negro woman to present a research paper in any program of the Academy, and was the only colored person on the program of this particular meeting of the body. Two colored men, Dr. Thomas W. Turner, Director, and Professor K. B. M. Crooks, Associate Professor of the Hampton Institute Department of Biology, have presented theses to the body, but no other colored woman has offered a work in research.

Miss Peele's paper dealt with the floral anatomy of trapa natans (the water chestnut), looking to the discovery of a truer relationship of flowering plants.

More than 300 Virginia scientists, laboratory research workers, college professors, and university students attended the meeting. One hundred research papers in eleven different sections were presented. The Academy outlined the following two projects, with moves to promote them: (1) Preservation of the Dismal Swamp because it offers a valuable field for exploration and may well serve as a sanctuary for wild life; and (2) the formation of science clubs in high schools, in order to acquaint youth with scientific thinking and the scientific approach to the solution of problems.

Miss Peele's work, even in the high school, gave indication of her bent toward scientific studies. Entering Hampton from a high school in Garysburg, North Carolina, she brought a record of high attainment in mathematics and English; and she rose to honor rank in the completion of secondary work at the Institute. Later in the College, she became a marked student in chemistry, physics, biology and botany. She was graduated from Hampton in 1930. Called to serve there, she later entered Cornell on a General Education Board scholarship and received the degree of Master of Science in 1934. While in Cornell, she was elected to membership in the National Pi Lambda Theta fraternity.

Miss Peele's pleasing personality as a teacher was prefigured by the award to her, while a student at Hampton, of a prize for the most correct posture. Her serious work in her chosen field gives promise of distinction in a virgin area for colored women—the field of science.

"We Are Rising"

Sirs:

Major R. R. Wright is a really remarkable individual for more reasons than you had space to tell in your excellent report of the National Negro Bankers' Association convention (TIME, July 17, p. 69). After fourscore restless years most men are ready to lay down their arms and leave the fighting to younger men with stronger bodies. But the Major is just beginning, and there is no telling when he will stop. . . .

Occasionally, the calm and quiet of his private office becomes dull and uninteresting. In such instances it is no rare sight to see this 84-year-old bank president in one of the cages, himself, serving patrons and dictating letters to a secretary at the same time.

A philanthropist from New York was touring the South three-quarters of a century ago. He stopped at a shanty in rural Georgia where a handful of little colored boys and girls were being taught their three Rs The teacher implored him to say a few words of encouragement to the students. When he had finished he asked the children if there was any message they wished him to take back to their friends in the North.

For a few moments there was silence. Then a little dark boy with a sparkle in his eye rose to his feet.

"Yes, Sir," he cried. "Tell them we are rising."

That little boy was Richard R. Wright.

TWO URBAN LEAGUE FELLOWSHIPS IN SOCIAL WORK GO TO WOMEN

New York, N.Y.—(Calvin Service)—Dorothy B. Fassit of Philadelphia, Pa., and Ruth G. Hamlin of Indianapolis, Ind., were named this week by the National Urban League as recipients of fellowships for study in the field of social work.

Mrs. Fassit was assigned to study at the New York School of Social Work on a fellowship of $1,200 given annually in memory of Anthody Benezet.

Miss Hamlin was assigned to the School of Applied Sciences of the University of Pittsburgh on a fellowship of $1,000 maintained jointly by the National and the Pittsburgh Urban Leagues.

Utah Girl Awarded $100 Pan-Hellenic Scholarship

NEW YORK CITY.—The awarding of the $100 scholarship fund of the National Pan-Hellenic society and a resolution commending President Roosevelt for his peace efforts were two of the highlights of the eleventh annual meeting of that body here August 25-27.

Miss Judra Blakey, of Ogden, Utah, a junior at Wilberforce university, was awarded the scholarship in recognition of outstanding work done at the college last year.

At the first general session of the body greetings were brought by the following persons and their respective organizations: Frank A. Walker, Alpha Phi Alpha; Olive Outram, Alpha Kappa Alpha; Dorothy Hendrickson, Delta Sigma Theta; James Egert Allen, Kappa Alpha Psi; Dudley A. Clark, Omega Psi Phi; B. Franklin Vaughn, Phi Beta Sigma; Mrs. Gertrude A. Robinson, Phi Delta Kappa; Mrs. Frances Moss Mann, Sigma Gamma Rho, and Mrs. Ruth Holder Edgehill, Zeta Phi Beta. Bertha M. Black, St. Louis member of the executive committee, made the response.

Among the many attending the convention were the following leaders: Margaret Davis Brown, New Orleans, grand basileus of the AKA's; Nellie Rogers, Indianapolis, Ind., grand basileus of the Zeta Phi Betas; A. W. Dent, grand basileus of the Omega Psi Phi; George W. Lawrence, Chicago, grand basileus of Phi Beta Sigma and Bertha M. Black, St. Louis, grand basileus of the Sigma Gamma Rho sorority.

Mrs. Mary McLeod Bethune, who spoke at the meeting, urged the group to realize what a great responsibility rested upon their shoulders. Ernest Wilkins of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, discussed the educational program and pointed out to the council how it might help them to furher the program and Edgar Brown spoke concerning the unemployment problem as it affected the Negro.

According to the report of the secretary, George W. Lawrence, 12 local charters were issued during the last year. A special drive is to be made this year for additional charters.

The council voted to encourage a Negro writer of some worthwhile book by a guaranteed sale of 1,000 copies. These sales are to be made in the society or among other organizations.

This new program, it was felt, would do in the contemporary field what the Association for the Study of Negro Life and History is doing in the historical field. It would free Negro writers and thinkers of the necessity of pandering to a white audience to get their books published. It would insure the publication and wide distribution of creative works, and scientific and literary studies made by Negroes.

To organize a Pan-Hellenic bureau of artists and speakers, a circuit is to be organized. The local Pan-Hellenic council could secure these at lower rates and could help relieve some of the unemployment in this line.

The 1940 convention will go to New Orleans and is scheduled for the spring.

Officers for 1940 are as follows: Council officers: William C. Pyant, Evanston, Ill., chairman; George W. Lawrence, Chicago, secretary; Mrs. Joanna H. Ransom, Xenia O., vice-chairman; C. Clifford Washington, Philadelphia, Pa., treasurer.

Members of the executive committee: Bertha M. Black, St. Louis; Etrel Ramos Harris, New Kensington, Pa.; Frederick Weaver, Washington, and Mrs. Margaret Davis Bowen, New Orleans, La.

Negro Woman Caps Her List of Precedents

BY EDWIN STOLL.

Ever since she was a small girl, Mrs. M. O. Bousfield, 9323 Michigan avenue, has been setting precedents.

Mrs. M. O. Brousfield.

Starting her list, she became the first Negro student in the Kunkel Conservatory of Music, St. Louis. Then she was the first colored girl graduate of the University of Illinois. She added the title of the first Negro dean in Chicago at Wendell Phillips High school in 1922. She followed up by attaining the position of the first colored principal at Keith school in 1928. But, with the beginning of the present term, she established her foremost record. She became the first Negro high school principal in Chicago, with Wendell Phillips High school as her charge.

Pioneered for Negroes.

A cultured woman of middle age with the will of an executive, she has pioneered for her people continually, proving the opportunities existing for an underprivileged race. Her life has been full of thrills, she explains, and she is happy just being what she is, helping all those she can.

Teaching was her natural heritage, although she almost became sidetracked by music. She was born in St. Louis of parents who were both teachers. Indicating the influence of education on the family is the fact that her father, 84 years old, is still principal of a St. Louis school after 63 years of service.

In the Kunkel Conservatory she so impressed the head that he advised her to make music her career, but she decided to obtain an academic education before making a decision. She enrolled in the University of Illinois and finished with honors in three years with the class of 1906, the first Negro girl and the third colored graduate.

Gave Music Lessons.

Her musical training and ability assisted her in paying her way. She gave music lessons and played for dances in the gymnasium, in addition to helping in sorority house cloakrooms during dances and other social events.

After teaching for eight years in St. Louis and Baltimore schools, she married Dr. M. O. Bousfield, a struggling young physician, now director of health for the Julius Rosenwald fund. They came to Chicago, but she found the job of housewife too light to satisfy her pattern of life. So, after seven years of domestic activity in which their daughter had passed the infant stage, she turned back to education.

She was assigned to the Chicago schools in 1922, serving as teacher and dean of girls at Wendell Phillips until 1928. Then she was principal of Keith school for three and a half year and of Douglas school for eight.

Gets Master's Degree.

During this time in Chicago, meanwhile, she managed to acquire a degree of master of arts in education from the University of Chicago and a teacher's certificate and diploma from the Mendelssohn Conservatory of Music.

Her daughter, incidentally, is carrying on the educational tradition of the family and is a teacher at Tuskeegee institute in Alabama. She is a graduate of the University of Wisconsin and traveled with a group of students in Europe observing the social program in Russia, the housing project in Sweden, and the folk schools in many countries. She experienced early European war jitters way back in 1936, as Warsaw practiced one of its first blackouts and air drills the night she stayed there.

Gardening outstrips by far Mrs. Bousfield's other hobbies of golf and bridge, and her idea of a perfect evening is working on the lawn and garden of the new home which she and her husband have just built. Irises are her pets, and she lavishes much care on them.

Has Traveled Much.

Past national president of Alpha Kappa Alpha, Negro social sorority, she is a member of the Woman's City club and of the Midwest Bridge association.

She has traveled extensively in this country and has been abroad twice, her most recent trip being a visit with friends in Scandinavia in 1929. Her mother is a first cousin of Henry O. Tanner, the famous painter, and he executed "Flight Into Egypt" especially for Mrs. Bousfield.

She insists that unusual opportunities exist for members of an underprivileged race, and that her life proves it. An inspiration for her 3,000 students, she is "first in the hearts of her countrymen."

THOMAS R. SOLOMON WORKED 12 YEARS TO OBTAIN HIS DEGREE

DETROIT, June 22—When Thomas Ralph Solomon received his Ph.D. degree in political science from the University of Michigan Saturday evening, it meant the end of a hard and laborious road which he had been traveling for the past 12 years.

Solomon, the father of three boys from 10 to 13 years of age, has worked five days each week as a clerk in the Roosevelt Park Annex here for the past two years while attending classes at the University of Michigan, 40 miles away. He worked Saturdays and Sundays for two years, so he would be able to attend classes in Ann Arbor on Tuesdays and Thursdays. Most of his university work was spent in research at night in the library. He moved his family to Ann Arbor, commuting five days a week back and forth to Detroit.

Solomon graduated from Wayne University in 1929 with an A.B. degree. He received his master's degree from Wayne in 1933. He now hopes to become a professor of political science in a school in the South. He has already received many offers.

Prior to coming here, Solomon graduated from Ballard Normal school, in Macon, Ga., a high school operated by the American Missionary Association. He later spent two years at Talledega College, Talladega, Ala. There he met his wife, and he quit school temporarily after their marriage.

Working as a porter in a Detroit hotel in 1926, Solomon decided he needed some more education, so he started to Wayne. He worked four hours in the early afternoon as a substitute postal clerk and then worked from 11 p. m. to 2 a. m. for a Detroit creamery. After finishing Wayne, he was promoted to fulltime postal clerkship at a salary of $1,700 a year.

As his thesis, 209 pages, he wrote on "The Negro in Detroit Elections."

President Hutchins in the commencement address warned the graduates that though they possessed, perhaps, the best degree in America, there was no certainty that they would make much money or become social lions. He admonished them to live the intellectual life even though they might end up as ditch-diggers.

At the same service an honorary degree was conferred upon Hu Shih, Chinese ambassador to the United States.

Normally, it is expected that two or three fellowships will be awarded annually in sums of $400 to $750 for approved travel and study during the summer or the academic term.

This fellowship fund is particularly significant because it is the first time in the history of the Negro education that a Negro has given an appreciable amount of money for travel and study fellowships for students in a Negro institutions.

More than 100,000 Negro students in high schools and colleges throughout the country participated in the annual contests conducted by the National Tuberculosis Association and its affiliated organizations. Miss Hampton is winner in the high school group and Miss Golden among college students.

Major Wright, Georgia's Grand Man

THE recent visit of Major Richard Robert Wright to Atlanta and his native Georgia called to mind the pioneer activities of this grand man in the field of education and industry. Few men of his era and school survive who toiled side by side with him in his early struggles for putting Georgia on the educational map. Graduating from Atlanta University in 1876, eleven years after the Emancipation, Major Wright immediately applied himself in the field of education. As principal of Howard Normal School at Cuthbert he charted the path of high school education in this state. Here he toiled long and well and many strong men and women in Southwest Georgia are proud to point to the fact that they were among his first pupils.

Possibly the most outstanding achievement of Major Wright was the establishment of Georgia State College at Savannah. Here he surrounded himself with a strong faculty and laid so well the foundation of that scvhool that today the state has distributed in pivotal points strong branches for the education of Negro youth.

A few years ago, Major Wright moved his family to Philadelphia. Here while engaging in another field, he never lost the personal touch of education for the youth of his group. He founded and has since presided over the Citizen and Southern Bank and Trust Co., of Philadelphia, a growing institution. Its influences spread all over the north and east and wherever Major Wright appears, there is accorded him the high honor as the thrifty and resourceful pioneer in the field of banking fo his goup in the north.

The south is delighted in that she has sent so many pioneers into the north and east to lead the way to business and educational independence. Major Wright has made well his contribution.

He comes south occasionally to mingle with his relatives.... and friends and is nevert without that wild acclaim of a grea man who lived useful and delighted in lifting others as he climbed Atlanta and Georgia welcome him. Everybody is proud of him and wherever he goes he shall feel that warm welcome and that kindly and tender spot in the hearts of thousands his great life has touched.

May he live many more years to carry on his helpful activities and the training of young men for the great task of honorable leadership when he retires to the sidelines of a life well spent

FRANKIE N. GOLDEN,

GEORGIA STATE'S STUDENT IS WINNER

Frankie N. Golden Gets N. T. A. Award

Frankie N. Golden, student at the Georgia State College, has been awarded first prize in a national essay contest for colored college students conducted by the National Tuberculosis Association. The prize carries a cash award of $50.

More than 100,000 students throughout the country participated in the contest, which was divided into college and high school groups. Over 5,000 essays were written by colored college and high school students in the state of Georgia. These facts were called to student Golden's attention in a letter of congratulations to her from James P. Faulkner, executive secretary of the Georgia Tuberculosis Association. She also received a letter of notification of her national award from Dr. Kendall Emerson, managing director of the National Tuberculosis Association.

Mr. Faulkner wrote: "It seems to us that this essay contest is probably the best health education program that could be devised. When I first spoke to Dr. Hubert several years ago about interesting his boys and girls in the contest I asked him if he did not think the boy or girl who studied the subject sufficiently to write an interesting essay would probably insure himself against tuberculosis, he assented and added something that has seemed to me since to be very significant: 'It will not only do that, it will spill over into the contestants' family and community.' Dr. Hubert meant, of course, that not only the contestants would be helped or insured against the disease, but the effects of the essays would be far reaching."

NEGRO WOMAN WINS TUBERCULOSIS AWARD

OCILLA, Ga., Nov. 2.—(AP)—A young negro woman engaged in rural educational work in Irwin county is winner of first prize in a national essay contest sponsored by the National Tuberculosis Association.

She is Frankie N. Golden, a graduate this year from Georgia State College at Savannah. Her essay, for which she was awarded $50, was adjudged best among 5,000 submitted on the theme of preventive action against tuberculosis.

Benjamin F. Hubert, president of the college, said the prize would be presented formally to her at Savannah November 8.

NEGRO TUTORS TO GET AWARDS

18 Teachers In South Piedmont Qualify For Listing In Book.

Eighteen negro teachers of the South Piedmont district of the state adult education program have qualified for listing in the "Who's Who" in literacy work, it was announced yesterday by Miss Mabel Bacon, head of the Work Projects administration's educational program in the district.

These teachers will receive their awards in a meeting to be held in November. Those who receive this honor have to teach 60 or more illiterates to read and write, to interest five students to join the Parent-Teacher association or some other local club, to help at least one student to develop into a speaker or interpreter of the adult education program, to interest five or more students to join the Community School council, and to stimulate at least 50 per cent of the students enrolled to find one or more new illiterates.

In Anson county, the negro teachers have made a 100 per cent record while the highest number taught was 101 by James Stokes, negro teacher of Mecklenburg county.

Statistics for the work done in the year 1938-39 show that enrollment included 6,259 white men, 10,065 white women, 3,046 negro men, and 4,825 negro women, a total of 24,205. Miss Bacon said the state is in forty-second place in literacy with 236,261 illiterates of which 93,372 are white persons, 139,105 are negroes, and 3,784 are of other races. The North Carolina adult education program has taught 85,656 of these men and women and hopes to teach the remaining 150,000 by 1940.

Certified Public Accountant

PROF. R. B. J. CAMPBELLE

By CHARLES S. MORRIS, II

NASHVILLE, Tenn.—Professor R. B. J. Campbelle, for 16 years business manager of A. and I. State College, and now holder of the chair of Accountancy and Commercial Law at the institution, has just been issued a certificate as a Certified Public Accountant after a battle in the courts of Tennessee.

Professor Campbelle, himself an attorney, was represented by Z. Alexander Looby, his associate at the Kent School of Law, and W. D. Hawkins, Jr., but also took an active part himself in directing his series of applications and appeals before the various tribunals.

Race citizens are rejoicing in the victory which it is said makes Professor Campbelle the first race man to become a certified public accountant in Tennessee or the South. He met all legal requirements and was granted the certificate last Friday by the Board of Accountancy.

Upon being refused the certificate at first he filed suit for a writ of mandamas, which was denied by Chancellor James B. Newman on demurrer of the board. He appealed to the Tennessee Supreme Court. Here the Chancellor was reversed and the writ was ordered issued by that august body. It is said that his signal triumph opens the way generally for other certified public accountants to be licensed in the South.

Professor Campbelle is a graduate of A. and I. College, has studied at Howard University and during the World War was a sergeant major in the 365th Pioneer Infantry. He is a member of the Alpha Phi Alpha fraternity and is a 32° Mason.

He resides at 3109 Centennial Boulevard with his wife, Mrs. Margaret R. Campbelle, Jeanes supervisor of Dickson county, and his two children, Roy, Jr., and Margaret who are students in Pearl High School of this city.

There are 34 Negro schools with an enrollment of 14,000 students in the city, and with the potential strength of parents transferred to ballots, Grigsby said he felt confident of election. A long-time resident here, he was one of the first citizens to file a suit challenging the exclusion of Negro voters from Democratic primaries.

Opinion of white school board members differed as to the advisability of having a colored citizen added to the board, but one, Dr. Henry A. Petersen, opined: "It will probably be a good thing for Grigsby to make this campaign. Certainly it will mean that a great deal more interest will be shown in affairs of the Negro schools."

H. L. Mills, business manager for the school system, said Grigsby's candidacy will mean that "we will have a much more representative vote of Houston citizens than is usual in school board elections."

The possibility "social" angle was quickly eliminated by Dr. E. E. Oberholtzer, superintendent of schools, who declared that if Grigsby were elected, luncheon sessions of the school board would be ended.

URGE REV. GLENN T. SETTLES AS WORTHY OF SPINGARN MEDAL

Cleveland, Ohio, March 27 (Special)—The Frontiers club, in a letter made public this week to the chairman of the Spingarn Medal Committee, named Rev. Glenn T. Settle, founder and director of the international feature radio program "Wings Over Jordan" for the 1939 award. The action resulted from a resolution adopted unanimously several weeks ago when Rev. Settle addressed the Frontiers.

In commenting on the letter A. P. Bentley, president, said "No man in America has contributed more to practical education in interracial understanding and interpretation of Negro life." "Wings Over Jordan" is one of the three most popular radio program in the country, and is sent by short wave to Europe and South America where it has many listeners.

Sister Frontiers Clubs and other civic organizations are being asked to support this nomination. The letter said in part, "In a world torn by racial and national hatred, any great force for tolerance and understanding must be nurtured and cherished and deserves the highest rewards our nation provides."

"Wings Over Jordan" has done more to soften southern white prejudice, gain wholesome respect for Negroes, and draw all races and creeds together than any other thing in recent years. In referring to the letter A. P. Bentley said: "The Frontiers Club of Columbus is more than glad to take this step. It is obligated to take the leadership in gaining recognition for this service to the nation."

The First And Only Negro

Journal and Guide, Norfolk, Va.
3-11-39

In this editorial, we are not speaking of individual weakness; but of a weakness common to the Negro as a race. This weakness is generally manifested when a Negro boy excells a white boy in school, or otherwise. We give expressions to our enthusiasm, by saying, he is the only Negro that ever lead a class at Harvard University, or won a scholarship to Oxford, England, or he made the highest mark in a class of white men, where he was the only Negro who took the Civil service examination. He was the first Negro to fill that office, and he is the only colored man in the city hall.

We should feel no surprise or make any noise when one of our race excells or rises above a member of any other race. The winner has done what we expect any Negro boy or man to do, when he has equal opportunity with the other fellow to reach the top. The other fellow is not surprised, and lives in honest fear during the struggle, that his Negro competitor will exceed him in reaching the goal. We accept the ability of the black boy to excell the white boy as a miracle, and often exclaim, "God was with him"; when God has had nothing to do with the Negro since he gave him the same talent he gave the white man and told him to use it without fear of being out stripped.

Negroes have a self realization of an inferior complex when he compares himself with white folks; and lives under that obsession in spite of his culture and education or whatnot. We have got to outlive this obsession, and demonstrate it before the white man will admit equality. Joe Louis has proven to the white man that no white man is in his class and trims both colors alike when they challenge his scientific physical superiority. Joe has won world distinction because of his faith and confidence in himself as a Negro pugilist. And when his race believes as firmly in its moral, intellectual ability to do, things like other people do them, and its power to do, by doing as Joe Louis has done, other people will respect us in all lines of human activity, as the world now respects Joe Louis in his field of accomplishment. If we can excell physically, we can do it morally and intellectually.

Professor Quiz, You Can't Baffle This Little Girl

By LAMAR Q. BALL.

Marlene White is colored and only 4 years old, but already she has carved herself a niche in the Hall of Fame directly adjoining that of the immortal Charles Laughton. Marlene can recite—without prompting — Lincoln's Gettysburg address and as far as is publicly known no one else has ever done that but the English Laughton. Even Abraham Lincoln had to refer to scribbled notes. Marlene doesn't understand exactly what she is saying, but she knows all the words and can't be confused.

More than that, Marlene can answer more than a hundred difficult questions of the type that would make Professor Quiz fumble and blush.

Who wrote "Treasure Island?" Where is paper money printed? Who founded Georgia? What causes rain? Who invented the kodak? Where was the Pan-American conference held? And for what purpose? Who was Patrick Henry? Who is secretary of state? What is the smallest form of plant life? You call the questions, Marlene has the answers.

No. 1 Child Prodigy.

Until someone with a better memory comes forward, Marlene will hold the honors as Atlanta's No. 1 child prodigy.

Her grandmother works for a Peachtree road family and her parents, Jerome and Ernestine White, live at 54 Ashby street, S. W. Jerome studied for two years at LeMoyne College in Memphis and is now working on the WPA teachers' program of adult education. Marlene, however, is storing up her mental encyclopedia under the guidance of her mother, who discovered her gifts as soon as she learned to talk. Marlene crawled at the age of three weeks, had pulled herself to her feet beside a bed at five months and was walking at nine months.

Can Count to 100.

She can count to 100 with a little prompting, but can make it up to 45 under her own power.

Marlene is just a natural child. She plays with her sister, Loretta, who is three years old and who yawns indifferently while audiences gasp at Marlene's intelligence. Loretta, however, is beginning to show some jealousy over the interest Marlene creates and she can answer 20 of the questions herself.

Former Chicagoan Finishes Work On Ph.D. at Harvard

B. T. McGraw, well known economist and former Chicago business man, has recently completed the final requirement at Harvard university for the degree, Doctor of Philosophy in Economics. McGraw's thesis, "French Monetary Policy, 1927-1938" was appraised by Professors A. H. Hansen and R. V. Gilbert of the university's division of History, Government and Economics, as an extremely important piece of research and urged its publication in book form as soon as possible.

Although McGraw is devoting the next few months to revising the manuscript in form for publication, he was non-committal concerning the publication of his book. The presumption is, however, that it will provide another volume in that important series of Harvard Economic studies, published at the Harvard University Press.

McGraw holds several other degrees, among which are: A. B., 1923, Atlanta University; A. M. (in Economics), 1924, and M. B. A. (Master of Business Administration), 1926, University of Michigan; M. A. (in Economics), 1934, Harvard University. Although formely engaged in the banking business in Chicago, Mr. McGraw is currently a Rosenwald Research Fellow while on leave from his position of professor of Economics and registrar of Lincoln University of Missouri.

Louise Allsup Wages Battle For An Education, Undaunted By Loss Of Rides In Police Cars

Handicap Couldn't Stop Her

Policeman's Bullet Made Her Cripple Decade Ago

The police automobiles can't take the time to stop by the door of Louise Allsup at 902 Campbell Street, but the Negro girl who was left half paralyzed by a stray bullet from a policeman's pistol a decade ago is fighting determinedly for an education.

Musical talent lies in the fingers of the 26-year-old girl, such talent that Knoxville College has given her free training in piano, such talent that the girl's teacher has paid time and again the taxicab fare to take Louise from her home to the college.

Somebody had to pay—because the police automobiles stopped taking Louise to Knoxville College.

"Every time the police cars took her it took a car out of service," was the only comment of Mayor W. W. Mynatt who assumed responsibility for ordering the transportation stopped.

Louise made two trips a week to Knoxville College for her lessons. The police automobile started carrying her two years ago this fall.

STOPPED COMING

"They carried me until December, when the school closed for the holidays," Louise said as she sat in her wheel chair at her home yesterday. "Then when school started up after the holidays they didn't come any more."

She didn't know why the police stopped coming but she remembered "It was about the time the city managers changed." Mayor Mynatt took office Jan. 1, 1938.

Students at Knoxville College always carry Louise from the automobile to the classroom, but without an automobile Louise couldn't get to the college. Miss Martha Helen Heinrich "paid for my taxicab for a long time," Louise said. "Then she got some other people interested and they raised some money for me."

Friends on Dandridge Avenue held a "bridge benefit and invited me, even though I don't play bridge," Louise laughed.

Crippled Louise Allsup, Negro girl of 902 Campbell Street—the police automobiles don't call for her any more.

The tragedy of Louise's life began when she was 15, a student in the 11th grade. That was in 1928, a stray bullet fired from a policeman's pistol as he was pursuing a fugitive struck her in the spine, paralyzing her legs.

For several years she was almost helpless and then she began to recover some use of her body. A wheel chair enabled her to get about. Then came the opportunity to attend Knoxville College.

"Then I found out I ought to finish high school if I wanted to really study music," Louise said. So she went to night school and will be through next June if she can continue. Fortunately for her night school now is held directly across the street from her home.

"I can get over there in my wheel chair," she exulted.

The training Louise has received at Knoxville College "has been without expense to her," said President S. M. Laing.

TRIBUTE IS PAID TO PULLMAN PORTERS FOR THEIR HONESTY

Courier 7-29-39
Pittsburgh, Pa.

Monthly Magazine Reveals How Thousands of Dollars In Valuables Are Returned to Owners—Rewards Given

CHICAGO, July 27—(ANP)—The Pullman News, monthly magazine published by the Pullman Company, pays tribute in its current issue, to the honesty of sleeping car porters, who in the course of their duties. find a variety of articles—from discarded magazines and newspapers, to fat wallets and valuable jewelry—and turn them in to the proper authorities. The magazine cites the following recent cases as examples that honesty pays:

"Porter John Agnew of Chicago Northern Districton May 14 found a pearl necklace in a compartment and remembered the occupant as a woman who had left the train at Winnetka. He promptly turned in the necklace at the Chicago Northern office; and soon afterward the owner, a resident of Lake Forest, telephoned Pullman of her loss and delivery followed quickly.

"Ten days later Dist. Supt. J. C. McCormick received a letter from the Chicago office of the Commercial Union Group enclosing a check for $250 for Porter Agnew; the necklace, valued at $12,000, having been insured with that organization. Pullman service and Porter Agnew were strongly commended.

"Jewelry valued at about $30,000 and two $50 bills, all in a chamois bag, were found by Porter W. M. Pearison (Boston Southern) after a Lakewood, O., woman passenger had left the train at Cleveland. The property was returned to her within a half hour, and she bestowed a reward because of the porter's promptness and honesty.

"A well known Dallas oil man boarded a train for Center with more than $2,000 in currency, deposited in various pockets. Porter H. H. Hornsby (Dallas) while patrolling his car found a roll of five $100 bills and one of $50, which he turned over to Conductor L. A. Wood (Dallas). The next morning the oil man found his hip pocket bank had paid out and reported his loss. When he recovered the $550 he insisted upon giving $150 to the Pullman crew, so each received $50. Porter W. A. Middleton (Dallas) being the third in the pot.

"We Are Rising"

Sirs:

Major R. R. Wright is a really remarkable individual for more reasons than you had space to tell in your excellent report of the National Negro Bankers' Association convention (TIME, July 17, p. 60). After fourscore restless years most men are ready to lay down their arms and leave the fighting to younger men with stronger bodies. But the Major is just beginning, and there is no telling when he will stop. . . .

Occasionally, the calm and quiet of his private office becomes dull and uninteresting. In such instances it is no rare sight to see this 84-year-old bank president in one of the cages, himself, serving patrons and dictating letters to a secretary at the same time.

A philanthropist from New York was touring the South three-quarters of a century ago. He stopped at a shanty in rural Georgia where a handful of little colored boys and girls were being taught their three Rs. The teacher implored him to say a few words of encouragement to the students. When he had finished he asked the children if there was any message they wished him to take back to their friends in the North.

For a few moments there was silence. Then a little dark boy with a sparkle in his eye rose to his feet.

"Yes, Sir," he cried. "Tell them we are rising."

That little boy was Richard R. Wright.

TUTOR OF MILITARY MEN RETIRES FROM 54-YEAR PRINCIPALSHIP

B. K. Bruce Prepares White Youths for Entrance to U.S. Academies; Headed Kansas Faculty Since Age of 18

LEAVENWORTH, Kans. —Retirement of a grade-school principal in a small Midwestern town last week made news throughout the world.

Interest in the event extended far beyond the many thousands of native Kansans of his own race who attended Sumner Elementary School at Leavenworth during the fifty-four years he headed the faculty, far into the upper brackets of Uncle Sam's military service, whose personnel is scattered over this and a dozen other countries.

For B. K. Bruce, who at 72, voluntarily relinquished the post he had held since his graduation from Kansas University in 1885, has also established a widespread reputation as a coach for white youths taking examinations for entrance to the U.S. Army and Coast Guard academies.

Only 3 of 1800 Fail

During the past thirty-five or forty years, he has tutored some 1800 of these prospective officers—two generations of a family in a number of instances—and only three of them have failed to pass the tests for which he prepared them.

Every ship in the navy bears at least one Annapolis graduate who credits Mr. Bruce with insuring his success in meeting the entrance requirements; the army has one or more Bruce-trained former West Point cadets in each of the forty-eight States, and the Coast Guard Academy at New London, Conn., has felt the veteran educators influence in equal proportions.

Among his favorite "boys" were Major Ward H. Maris of Fort Leavenworth, Kans., whose son was sent to Mr. Bruce for coaching last summer; Willard (Hunk) Holbrook, once-famous West Point football star; Maurice (Ozzie) Simmons, also of West Point grid fame, and Richards Vidmir, sports editor of the New York Herald-Tribune, who passed up a military career for work more to his liking.

Pupils Rank High

Two of them ranked first and second, respectively, among a class of 660 taking the Annapolis entrance exam two years ago.

This unusual career had its beginning in the realization that most young men aspiring to military careers are deficient in the basic subjects of English, mathematics, history and geography.

It required years of self-preparation for the particular problem of instilling a sufficient background in these subjects within the five months usually allotted. The beginning was meager, but Professor Bruce's reputation spread gradually and now many States are represented in his classes.

Tells of Testing Formula

Of his procedure he says:

"I begin with the assumption that my boys know nothing.

"When I was a boy, I used to carry water to a huge barrel. We would estimate the water in it by thumping on the side. I thump the boy to see what he has in him, and then assume he hasn't anything."

His classes are usually limited to about ten pupils, to permit individual attention, and periods are one hour and three-quarters.

"The boy isn't born," he says, "who can hide his ignorance for an hour and forty-five minutes."

Made Principal at 18

The public school career which Mr. Bruce ended on October 6, was perhaps equally phenominal.

Although only 18 when he was graduated from K.U., he immediately assumed the principalship of what was then known as the South Leavenworth Colored School, the name of which was changed to Sumner, at his request, upon erection of a new building.

B. K. BRUCE

Throughout his fifty-four-year tenure, he was never tardy in reaching his desk, and never absent except for thirty-three days while recuperating from injuries received in an automobile accident in 1923.

He has maintained excellent health, despite the strenuous requirements of his dual career, and boasts that he has "never had a headache."

Won't Stop Coaching

His private tutoring will continue, after a few months of rest, during which he will visit his daughter, Mrs. Irma Davis, of Baltimore, and numerous friends in the East. His son-in-law, Carrington L. Davis, is principal of Baltimore's Dunbar High School.

Mr. Bruce is a nephew of the late Blanch K. Bruce, one-time U.S. Senator from Mississippi and Register of the Treasury under Presidents Garfield and McKinley. His wife died during the past summer.

William Murphy Is Admitted to Univ. of Md.

Was Registered at the Law School on Tuesday

BALTIMORE — William H. Murphy of 1741 Druid Hill Avenue, son of Mr. and Mrs. George B. Murphy, Sr., was admitted to the University of Maryland Law School by President H. C. Byrd, Tuesday, after the NAACP threatened to institute suit to compel the university to admit him.

Mr. Murphy, a graduate of Oberlin College, applied for admission to the law school in February, 1939. After repeated telephone and personal calls to the university, to which he received no reply, Mr. Murphy was finally called on September 6, for a conference with President Byrd.

Is Second Admitted

At this conference, he was told that the University of Maryland would go so far as to turn its plant over to private management rather than admit more colored students to its law school.

After this conference, Mr. Murphy threatened to institute suit with the aid of the NAACP and on September 19, he was informed that his application had been accepted.

Mr. Murphy, who is the third colored student admitted to the law school, registered at the school on Tuesday morning. Donald G. Murray of 1522 McCulloh Street, an Amherst honor graduate, who was admitted to the school three years ago after a fight by the NAACP, was the first. Mr. Murray has since graduated and last month passed the Maryland Bar examination.

The second, Calvin C. Douglass, a graduate of Shaw University, is still enrolled.

Reynolds, fellowship director, has stated there is a dearth of high calibre applications in non-academic fields and says the fund is interested in receiving applications from specialists in journalism, political science, labor relations, business, ministry, etc., where an academic background is secondary to demonstrated ability for leadership.

COLORED HEROINE SAVES LIVES OF 5 WHITE CHILDREN

NEWARK, N. J., Jan. 7—(CNA)—A heoric colored maid, Mrs. Mary Flint, this week saved the lives of five white children when, forgetting her own safety, she refused to abandon a fire-stricken house here until she had removed all of the youngsters.

Mrs. Flint worked as a maid in the two-story residence of Mrs. Patrick Ruane of Bathgate Place. Mrs. Ruane left the five children with Mrs. Flint and went out shopping. Mrs. Flint was working on the second floor when, noticing smoke, she ran downstairs and discovered the fire in the basement. Her first act was to seize the sleeping two-months-old baby, William, from his crib in a room on the first floor and rush him to the street. Then, braving the dense smoke, she went back into the house and carried out the other children whom she found huddled together, terrified, in the cellar. Almost overcome by smoke herself, she hauled them to safety. The other rescued children were Patrick, Jr., 7; Marine, 5; Dennis, 3; and John, 22 months.

Firemen declared they believed the fire was caused by a burning stick which one of the children cast into a pile of papers in the cellar. Neighbors sounded the alarm and the fire was confined to the basement.

MERITED HONOR

To LUTRELLE FLEMING PALMER, Negro, principal of Huntington High school, has come singular honor. He was selected by the Richmond Times-Dispatch as one of 12 outstanding Virginians for its second annual honor roll, having been named as result of his outstanding work in education.

His interests have not necessarily been confined to the betterment of his race. For that reason as much as any other he has endeared himself to those Newport News residents who have come in contact with him.

In including LUTRELLE F. PALMER in its list of honor residents of Virginia, the Times-Dispatch, in part, said:

"LUTRELLE FLEMING PALMER, principal of the Huntington High school in Newport News, is a public employe who has done his work so superatively well that its good results have extended far beyond the bounds of his own field of employment.

"During the 18 years in which he has been its principal, Huntington hase become one of the leading Negro high schools of the South, and it now represents a model achievement in the field of secondary education for Negroes."

Thus the principal of Huntington high school won not only for himself, but for Newport News and this section by adherring to the principles that lift an endeavor above the common-place.

His can be an example to spur others of Virginia and of this section to better endeavor; to adherence to their task to achieve distinction in their chosen fields of work.

The Daily Press is proud of the recognition that has come to a citizen of this community and joins with others in extending congratulations to Principal PALMER for having been so selected.

Sex Hormone from Soy Bean

Former H.U. Professor Tells How U.S. Skill Enables Glidden Company to Undersell Germans

CHICAGO — Synthetic female sex hormones, which have been selling in the United States at $100 per pound, because Germans controlled patents for the process, will be made available at a much lower price because of the research work at the Glidden Paint Company laboratories here.

Dr. Percy L. Julian, director of research of the soya products division of the Glidden company, said the company evolved a system for developing the sex hormones from soy beans.

The new method is said to offer a greater yield than the German method, and is expected to prove beneficial commercially and an aid to medical science, he said.

In the plant where Dr. Julian is engaged, 350 tons of soy beans are processed each day. He has laid emphasis on preparation of a pure commercial protein and utilization of the oil and its derivatives.

Dr. Julian is a former Howard University professor.

Sex hormones are used to help improve hearing and in treatment of impaired smelling ability.

PRESS CLUB'S ANNUAL AWARD ON PALM SUNDAY

Two Bostonians, a man and a woman, will receive an unusual honor on Palm Sunday morning.

On this occasion they will receive public acknowledgement of what The Press Club of Boston considers "The outstanding contribution to the community" and a beautifully-engraved scroll attesting the honor.

One award is being made to Rev. S. L. Laviscount of St. Mark Church, at the regular morning service in the church on April 2nd. The club states that it is being awarded to Rev. Laviscount in view of his broadening of the program of his church, his ready participation in affairs other than the strictly religious, and the activities he engaged in during the past year.

The other award goes to Dr. Mary C. Wright of Cambridge, and will be made at Union Baptist Church on the same day and at the morning service. The Press Club states in regard to Dr. Wright that the award is being made to her in view of her outstanding work for public health both here and in past months in the South, her effort to establish a community dental center, and her untiring participation in civic and public affairs.

The decision to make the awards to these two persons out of more than two dozen who were considered came after several meetings in which proposals for the award were made. Others who had been proposed had been considered to have made great contributions in human welfare, politics, religion and literature.

Both awards were voted unanimously by the members of the Club. They represent the first of an annual series that will be made.

Former WPA Laborer Wins $2,500 Fellowship Award

NEW YORK CITY—(SNS)— A thirty-year-old former manual laborer on a Chicago project of the Works Progress Administration has just been announced as a recipient of one of the fellowship awards of the Guggenheim Memorial Foundation for 1939. The award is $2,500 on which to do creative work in writing for a year.

The winner of this coveted honor is Richard Wright, who ran away from his native Natchez, Mississippi, home at the age of 15, and hitch-hiked Northward, working at any job that was offered him and reading at every opportunity.

Exactly one year ago, Mr. Wrigh sprang up on the literary horizon as a promising writer when four of his stories of Negro life were published in the book entitled 'Uncle Tom's Children". Earlier, this collection of short stories won the first prize in a contest conducted by Story Magazine for employes of the Federal Writers' Project of the WPA.

The young author's talent for prose was first noticed three years ago when he submitted to the WPA officials in Chicago samples of his work. The excellence of these pieces led to his transfer from a manual labor job of the WPA to the Federal Writers' project. Mr. Wright came to New York shortly afterwards and won a place for himself on the Writer's Project here.

Before the WPA gave him his first regular employment, the author wandered from city to city in search of work. He read as often as circumstances would permit. In some communities where Negroes were not allowed to borrow books from the public libraries Mr. Wright made friends with white men who got books for him on their cards. In other communities he quietly observed and noted the life and types of persons by "just hanging around".

In a letter accompanying the manuscript entered in the Story Magazine contest Mr. Wright said "Before I left home my grandmother despaired of trying to keep me from fighting, lying, stealing and playing hookey; my grandmother predicted I would end on the gallows; and an aunt attempted to bring me under the softening influence of religion without success, but I eventually began to read and learn, and achieved reformation. The WPA job in Chicago gave me my first opportunity to think, and to put those thoughts on paper.'

The former WPA laborer is the only Negro receiving one of the sixty-nine Guggenheim Fellowship awards granted this year. More than one thousand applicants originally vied for the honors totaling $150,000. The awards were given "finalists" whose work in many fields of knowledge and creative effort in all the arts shows scholarship and promise of greatter productions in the future.

This is the fifteenth year in which the Guggenheim Memorial Foundation Fellowship awards have been given. The Foundation was set up in 1925 by former Senator and Mrs. John Simon Guggenheim as a memorial to their son.

U. of P. Honor Student Honored By Election To Honor Society On Penn Campus. Some Honors! OUTSTANDING

Leroy T. Barnes Completes 4-Year Course In Record Time

Leroy Theodore Barnes, 20, son of Dr. and Mrs. W. Harry Barnes, 1315 north 15th street, achieved the distinction last week of being the first colored student of the University of Pennsylvania to be elected a member of the Pennsylvania Delta chapter of the Phi Beta Kappa society.

Barnes, a member of the senior class of the College of Arts and Sciences, will be graduated this June, completing the regular four-year course in three years and a half.

Barnes was first honor man in the class of January, 1936, of Central High School, the first colored student to head a graduating class at that school, and was awarded a scholarship to the University of Pennsylvania.

To be considered for election to the Phi Beta Kappa society, scholastic standing throughout the candidate's career must be excellent, and candidates must be at the top of their respective classes. Promise of creative ability and breadth and culture of the studies pursued are two other important factors.

The "Pennsylvania", daily publication of the University, in announcing Barnes' election, said: "Leroy Barnes Outstanding." Barnes has been accepted for admission to the Medical School of the University this Fall. He will thus follow his father and another brother, Dr. Lloyd Barnes, an interne at Harlem Hospital, New York City, into the medical profession.

The main speaker was a representative of the Industrial high school alumni association. He is now connected with the Provident hospital, Chicago, Ill.

Weeks of preparation had been put into the celebration. Dr. C. B. Glenn, president of the City Board of Education had sent out a bulletin several weeks ago to teachers of the city asking them to assemble at the high school to honor Dr. Parker on May 7.

Numerous floral offerings, telegrams and letters weer received by Dr. Parker on "his day."

Lasting Memorial Enshrines Work Of Man Who 'Made Dream Reality'

Name Of Industrial High Is Changed By City Education Board To A. H. Parker High School

Birmingham's Negro Industrial High School today bore the name of a man who describes the institution as "A dream that came true."

The City Board of Education, in recognition of the work of Dr. A. H. Parker, principal of the school and an employe in the Birmingham school system 50 years, has declared the school henceforth shall be known as the "A. H. Parker High School."

Thus did the board publicly acknowledge, and for all time, its gratitude for Dr. Parker's unique contributions not only to the education of his own race, but to the entire educational system.

His firm and unswerving belief that education is "learning to do better many of the common and ordinary things of life" has fostered a level-headed workaday philosophy among his people that will be evidenced for many days to come.

And the going hasn't always been easy. His ideas of education have been assailed on every side, but his severest critics, as he testified today, have been "the members of my own race." When he added laundry and cooking courses to the curriculum, carrying out his belief in "doing efficiently one's daily work," he was accused of "trying to make servants out of the children."

"A. H. Parker" Day

Monday was proclaimed A. H. Parker Day in the city schools by Dr. C. B. Glenn, city superintendent, and Sunday afternoon an elaborate fiftieth anniversary program was held at the high school in honor of the principal. A big surprise to the honoree was Dr. Glenn's announcement that the name of the school would be changed. The decision to name the school for Dr. Parker had been a closely guarded secret for several weeks.

It was fitting that Dr. Glenn should be the one to inform Dr. Parker the school would be named for him. For, back in 1915, it was to Dr. Glenn, then assistant superintendent, that Dr. Parker first voiced a dream.

In his autobiography, published five years ago, Dr. Parker recalls: "I told him (Dr. Glenn) of being offered a position at Tuskegee, but I would not accept it—as I had a dream I wanted to realize. He asked me what was that dream. I told him that my dream was to see built in Birmingham a high school for Negro boys and girls that would be second to none in the South. That dream has come true."

Dr. Parker's happiness in the realization of his aspirations is reflected in the title of the autobiography, "A Dream That Came True."

Throughout his life Dr. Parker has tried to follow the example of Booker T. Washington, founder of Tuskegee Institute, who believed in training the Negro along trade and industrial lines. Dr. Parker calls Washington his "patron saint."

Dr. Parker, white-haired, stocky and 69 years old Sunday, is proud of the fact that "the Industrial High School has helped change the idea of what education can mean."

Earlier Criticism

"At first," he said, "they (referring to his own people) hooted at the idea of teaching laundering, and wanted to know what we were doing teaching cooking down here. They said I was making servants of the school children and that I should be teaching them French and Spanish and Greek. But the criticism has stopped now. They seem to be sold on the idea of fitting themselves into the community."

Industrial High School students are now fitting themselves for community participation by studying laundering, cooking, sewing (all three required for girls), carpentry, nursing, shoe repairing, art, music, furniture repairing, in addition to the routine subjects. A standard-size department is maintained to teach girls domestic service.

Dr. Parker hopes some day to have a complete domestic service department and a foundry department.

The development of Negro education in Birmingham somehow follows the development of Dr. Parker. When he came here 50 years ago there were only three Negro schools, taught by 12 teachers—he was the thirteenth. There was no high school.

Now there are 25 Negro schools, two of them secondary institutions.

The first high school, of which Dr. Parker was principal, was started in 1900 in one room of what is now the Cameron School and there were 18 students. The Industrial High School alone now has 2,985 pupils.

Asked to express his feelings about his service in the Birmingham schools, Dr. Parker pointed to the concluding paragraph of his autobiography. It reads:

"Tonight, as I write this last paragraph, I wonder if anyone is as happy as I am. I wonder how many people, after 45 years of service at one job, find themselves many times happier than when they began. I wonder if this is any sign that I have been successful. I wondered when I started and, tonight I am wondering just as much."

DR. A. H. PARKER TO BE HONORED

Program Planned As Tribute To 50 Years Labor In City School System

Exercises celebrating the fiftieth anniversary of Dr. A. H. Parker in the city school system will be held at the Negro Industrial High School, of which he is principal, at 3:30 p.m. Sunday.

Dr. C. B. Glenn, city superintendent, will present a gift to Dr. Parker from the Board of Education, and flowers and gifts will be presented from school children and friends. It will also mark the occasion of Dr. Parker's sixty-ninth birthday.

Graduates of the school from as far away as Chicago have signified their intention of attending the celebration. A busload from the Windy City was to arrive Sunday, and the main address of the program will be made by a graduate from Chicago—Dr. Homer P. Cooper, of the Chicago Provident Hospital, one of the largest Negro hospitals in the world.

W. B. Johnson, assistant principal of the school, will be master of ceremonies, and the high school a cappella choir will sing. In one number to be presented by the choir, the solo part will be taken by Sara Chapman Williams, of Birmingham, a graduate of the school in 1908.

Appreciation for the services of Dr. Parker in the city schools will be expressed by Erskine Ramsay, president of the Birmingham Board of Education, and by Dr. Henry M. Edmonds, pastor of the Independent Presbyterian Church.

Others on the program will include Mary Alice Clarke, an instructor at the school; the Rev. W. L. Cash, of the First Congregational Church; Ruby Richards, of the student body; Marjorie Brown, a teacher in the Lincoln School; Mrs. B. H. Hudson, widow of the principal of the first Negro school in Birmingham, and the Rev. E. W. Walton, pastor of the Tabernacle Baptist Church.

Dr. A. H. Parker And "A Dream That Came True"

Fifty years of service in any profession should be a matter of pride and congratulation. There are times when such a record deserves a public celebration.

That last is true in the case of Dr. A. H. Parker, principal of Industrial High School. His work in the Birmingham public school system since 1888 has been more than that of a routine teacher. He has been a leader, a developer, a pioneer, an educational statesman for his race and people.

The Industrial High School out on Eighth Avenue, the school with the largest enrollment of any in the city system, is a fulfillment of Dr. Parker's dream. He envisioned the school before it became a reality in 1900. He has been building and realizing his dream ever since as the only principal the school has had to date.

But the monument to Dr. Parker's zeal and ability is to be found not only in that spreading structure. It rests more permanently and securely in the character of the students who have passed under his hands, in the improved relationships between the races, in the finer appreciation of the meaning and value of high school education for Negro youths.

Fitting and proper it is that a program celebrating Dr. Parker's fine and faithful and progressive service should be made a city-wide event for both races. The program to be given Sunday afternoon at Industrial High School, however, could at best represent only a part of the honor and esteem that are his due.

Original Forty Club Holds Father-Son Banquet

On June 22nd at the Harvard University commencement exercises, Alexander L. Jackson, of Chicago, graduate of the University of the Class of 1914 will celebrate with his class at its 25th reunion. This reunion will include the wives and children of the members of the class.

Jackson will return with his wife and his three boys, A. L. Jackson, III, William E. Jackson, students at Phillips Academy, Andover, Massachusetts, and Winslow L. Jackson, student at the Williston Junior school, Easthampton, Massachusetts. At the Commencement exercises, Governor Leverett Saltonstall, of Massachusetts will present from the members of the class a certified check for $100,000 as a gift to the University. Governor Saltonstall has been selected as Chief Marshall for the Commencement Exercises. Among the Aids he has chosen to assist him are his friend and classmate, A. L. Jackson. As far as anyone knows, this will be the first time that a representative of the Negro race has been designated for such distinguished honor, as the Aids and Marshalls are selected on the basis of their prominence in Harvard affairs and their activities since their graduation.

Jackson was elected twenty-five years ago as the Class orator of his class for the class day exercises and was highly regarded by his fellow students throughout his college career. As a member of the Harvard track team he won a countrywide reputation as a hurdler, running both high and low hurdles for his Alma Mater. Since his graduation he has devoted most of his life to social and civic enterprises, including the directorship of the Chicago Y. M. C. A., Student Secretaryship of the National Urban League, and serving as Trustee and president of the Greater Provident hospital for twenty-two years, heading the drive for three million dollars which made the new and Greater Provident hospital possible.

For many years he has been a prominent member of the National Boy Scouts committee and various other organizations. His present business in Chicago is real estate investment.

His oldest son, A. L. Jackson, III, will graduate from Phillips Academy, Andover, Massachusetts, June 16th, the school at which his father prepared for Harvard. Young Jackson has followed in his father's footsteps, has played end on the Andover football team for two years, on the track team for three years, and during his senior year was elected co-captain of the Andover track team. Young Jackson expects to enter Harvard in September. The other two boys are following in the footsteps of their father and older brother, all headed for Harvard after finishing their preparatory work at Andover.

Among some of the prominent graduates, members of Jackson's class are Junius Morgan, of the famous New York banking firm, Morgan Belmont, New York banker; William Tudor Gardner, Boston banker and former Governor of Maine, Sumner Welles, the Under Secretary of State, of Washington, Gilbert Seldes, and Nicholas Roosevelt, Distinguished authors.

Lawrence D. Reddick Gets Ph. D., From Chicago University

Brilliant Fisk Graduate Now Professor at Dillard U.

CHICAGO, June 8 (ANP)—When the June convocation of the University of Chicago is held this week, among the hundreds of candidates from all sections of the United States and many foreign lands will be one Negro for the Ph. D., L. D. Reddick.

The winning of the highest scholastic degree by this scholar comes as a fitting climax to a brilliant record extending back to the public school days in Jacksonville, Fla. Here young Reddick, a chubby youth in knee pants, graduated as Valedictorian of the Davis Street public school; repeated the feat at the Stanton High school (where James Weldon Johnson years before had been principal), and then as a scholarship student was off to Fisk.

The diffident freshman was, he has confessed, fearful that he might flunk out in the rigorous disciplines of college study, but when the academic "averages" for the year were added up, it was found that, like Abou ben Adhem, L. D. Reddick's name led all the rest. Three terms later he graduated as the ranking Fisk student magna cum laude. During the undergraduate years, time had been found for three years of debating against teams such as Northwestern, Purdue, Western Reserve, Howard, Talladega, and a ten-day tour of the Southwest with Wiley college. The local middle-weight boxing championship was also won.

An additional year was spent in picking up the master's degree. Reddick's thesis was an incisive study of "The Racial Attitudes in American History Textbooks of Southern Schools."

The next six years, 1933-39, were busy years: four of these were spent in college teaching in Kentucky and New Orleans; two in study at the University of Chicago; in between these academic pursuits, the young scholar, rapidly maturing, collected the detailed testimony of 1,000 ex-slaves, served as an assistant editor of the Journal of Negro History, and contributed a score or more articles to the various periodicals of the nation. Meanwhile, fellowships were won from the General Education board and the Julius Rosenwald fund.

At the University of Chicago, Reddick's dissertation on anti-Negro propaganda in the Southern press has been conceded by members of the faculty to be a distinct contribution to scholarship.

During the next few months, the young doctor will sail for the West Indies and other points in Latin-America where he will observe race relationships there, search for historical data on the Negro, and take a well-earned rest.

Negro Scientist Wins World-Wide Acclaim

Daily Journal 7-23-34

WASHINGTON, D. C.— (Amalgamated)— Dr. Ernest Everett Just, Spingarn Medalist and Professor of Biology and Zoology, Howard University, is being hailed this week by the scientific world because of the publication of his monumental work, "The Biology of the Cell Surface".

It is, in non-scientific terms, a discussion of the Science of Life Dr. Just is generally regarded in the scientific world as being closer to the mystery of the beginnings of life than any other scientist in the world. From a purely biological point of view he presents a thesis which sets a new goal for Biology. He unravels the problems of animal development, exposes them singly, defines them. and relates them to the activity of the cell surface and to the larger questions: What is Life and how does Life reveal itself?

Dr. Just is an experimental embryologist of thirty years experience, has a peculiar talent for handling living eggs and observing vital processes This talent together with his rare analytical mind has made him known in biological circles throughout the world. He has also an exceptional ability to express abstract truth with simplicity and clearness and thus relate it to human experience. In this book he brings his readers into an arena of conflicting biological thought, expressing himself with such clearness that all can follow his argument.

The conception upon which this book is built, Dr. Just says, did not come fully until 1930 while enjoying the hospitality of the Kaiser-Wilhelm Institute fur Biologie at Berlin-Dahlem There he fell under the inspiration of Adolph von Harnacks personality. He feels that his work was influenced by these rich experiences of personal contact.

"The studies which gave rise to my conception," he states, "were made during some twenty years largely at the Marine Biological Laboratory, Woods Hole, Mass.; some few were made at the Zoological Station at Naples, Italy. For the support of many of these researches I am indebted to the late Mr. Julius Rosenwald. However, this book could not have been finished but for the spontaneous and sympathetic understanding of my work shown by Dr. F. P. Keppel, president of the Carnegie Corporation A grant from this corporation made possible a year's study necessary to complete the work. I have further been sustained and encouraged by many friends, biologists, medical men, and others outside of these fields."

The book contains 42 illustrations. 116 figures, Tables, and a complete Bibliography, 392 pages Undoubtedly, this final scientific achievement will assure him a permanent place in the Field of Biology. (P. Blackiston's Son and Co.. Inc., 1012 Walnut Street, Philadelphia, Pa., publishers.)

Eyewitnesses Tell of Heroism, Narrow Escapes

Boys Saved Lives By Hanging Onto Cable

(Special to Journal and Guide)

CHARLOTTE, N. C.—Tales of heroism and hair breath escapes from death in the Sugaw Creek Bridge disaster which claimed the lives of at least six children here Friday, were gleaned by a Journal and Guide reporter in interviews with some of the eyewitnesses to the tragedy.

Among the persons interviewed were two small boys who were on the bridge at the time of its collapse, and who owe their lives to the fact that they were holding onto a cable which remained intact.

One of these boys, Billy Fleming, 13, of 1213 Austin Street, was standing in the middle of the bridge.

But let Billy tell his own story:

THREW BLACK CAT INTO WATER

"I was on the bridge watching a boy throw a black cat into the water," Billy said. "Before the cat got out of sight the bridge broke.

"I was on the middle of the bridge. I was holding my hands on the cable and I walked on off the bridge, holding the remaining cable when the other cable broke.

"I saw about nine or ten fall into the water." I saw Willie McCray save a lady," Billy related very calmly.

"I was scared," he said. "The bridge had about 25 people on it and all of us fought to save ourselves while others were pulling some out of the water."

SAW PLAYMATES FALL INTO WATER

Billy's companion, John D. Wiley of 221 Cherry Street, was so shaken up over the affair that he could tell very little. "I was on the middle of the bridge with Billy and lots of others when the cable broke," he said. "I was holding onto the good cable and I got off the bridge the way that Billy did" by holding onto the cable.

"I saw several of my playmates and pals fall into the water and I was so scared until I just stood there on the bank and looked, then I ran home and told my papa."

Mrs. Hattie Cathey, mother of Zeada Cathey, one of the drowned victims, related a vivid account dealing with events leading up to the disaster.

"I was here at home when Zeada left the house," she said. "I was eating here at this table and the kids ran to me and asked me could they go to the creek to see the flooded waters."

"I wanted to say no, but I said "yes." "Zeada was not gone over 15 minutes before some one ran and told me the bridge had broken. I ran to the creek and got as close as I could." "My son came and got me and brought me home." "A crowd of kids in the community

Son in Missouri

Dr. Alexander stopped here last week on his way to Chicago. He left Africa on November 10. After spending sometime in Oak Park, a suburb of the Windy City, he will visit his son in Missouri.

Born in Lincoln County, Mo., he began traveling when he was 6 years old spending sometime in Kansas, Colorado, Utah, Wyoming, Nebraska, the New England States, New Jersey and New York. He went abroad in 1907 and visited the Continent and England.

Earthquake in Sicily

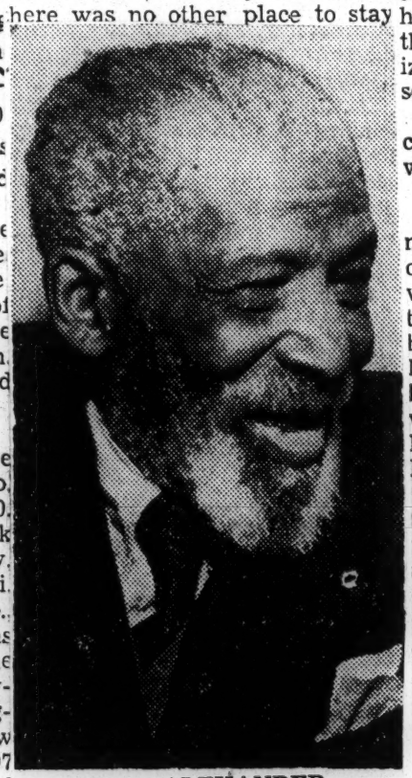
In 1907, he was on the southside of Sicily when an earthquake on that island killed about 26,000 persons. He took a steamer to Fort Said and spent sometime in the northeast part of Egypt. He went also to the Holy Land and Arabia.

During this time he became used to hardships, for he slept on a cot on the deck of the steamer with a suitcase for a pillow and no covers. Down in the hull of the ship were slaves being taken to Persia to be sold.

In Quarentine

The boat he was on struck a larger boat and everyone disembarked but a few Arabs and Indians. Mr. Alexander says he was quarentined on an island and told to sleep in a watercloset or on the ground but was saved from this fate by a letter brought him from the American Consul, telling him how to get ashore.

Hotel rates for him at this time were $5 a day and since there was no other place to stay but with the natives, he slept in a shed on a little narrow bed.



D. R. ALEXANDER

No Rain in 4 Years

One of the most interesting experiences was in Aden in Southern Arabia, where he said that there had been no rain for four years. He prayed for rain for the natives and that same night rain fell. They believed that he was responsible.

Taking a steamer to Africa, he wound up in Djibouti, whence he traveled fifty-six days on foot to Addis Ababa. Often the only soft place he found to sleep during that journey was on a manure heap. The natives with him slept on the ground.

Opens Blacksmith Shop

Wanting to establish himself in business in the capital of Ethiopia, he opened a blacksmith shop with the last of his money, six pounds. While there he shod horses for the king and the different legations for about eight years. Later he added a shooting gallery to the shop and the natives patronized him by the thousands and some days he said he made $100.

Two civil wars and the Italian conquest of Ethiopia took place while he lived there.

Married Three Times

His last and third wife, Ghetti, meaning My Jewel, was 17 years old when he married her. She was a native of Ethiopia brought to him by a young man whom he had partly raised. She died on November 4, poisoned, he thinks by a jealous rival. His other wives were Violet Green and Emma Figgins of Pike County Mo.

Mr. Alexander tells of the custom of the country that keeps the wife of the big chiefs hidden, but allows the other women to squat on the streets, wearing usually one piece of clothing which they spin out of cotton.

Property Used as Mission

His relics of his stay abroad include a spear, coral, an Egyptian pocketbook, a wooden comb furs, the Ethiopian flag, rugs cloth, an oxhorn, and a loin cloth spun by his late wife.

During his stay there he was sick only three times, with sleeping sickness, black water fever and a stroke. When Italy took over the country he gave his property to the Presbyterian mission. He says he still can't forget the horrors of poison gas and other instruments of war

A NEGRO HERO

Jim Kuykendall, negro farmer living near Batesville, is tall, lean, gaunt and stoop-shouldered with the weight of years, but he has within him the stuff of which heroes are made.

A few days ago while riding along a rural road Jim saw the little daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Jim Freeman, running from the yard with her clothing in flames. A frantic mother was in pursuit but could not catch the terrified child. "Long Jim," as he is known in the neighborhood, jumped from a moving auto captured the child,, jerked off his jumper overalls, and wrapped the garment around her. Then he rolled her on the ground until the flames were extinguished, getting his hands badly blistered.

The little girl, while painfully burned, will recover. She had been standing near a pot of boiling clothes in the yard when a spark ignited her dress.

All honor, praise and glory for "Long Jim" Kuykendall who was not afraid to risk his old bones to save the life of a child.

Heroic Efforts Of Race Man Save White Man's Life In Titantic Fire

Daily World 12-29-39 Atlanta, Ga.

By JAMES H. PURDY, Jr.

MEMPHIS, Tenn.—(SNS)

It was the heroic efforts on the part of Walter McCray, 23, 1365 Cummings, chauffeur of Mrs. E. B. Frazier, Peabody Hotel, with the assistance of J. B. Shoults (white), 1333 Cummings, that Malcomb M. Glidwell, sleeping in a rear room of the store owned by his sister, Mrs. A. B. Clark, owe his life when he was rescued from the burning frame store-home at 1045 S. Parkway, Sunday night.

A group of Race citizens passed the burning building and saw the flames shoot skyward. They began to pound upon the door of the grocery store owned by Mrs. A.B. Clark, who also lived in the rear of the building. The shouting and the screams were heard by Mrs. Heard, who lived just a few doors away. She awakened her son, Walter, and told him there was a fire in the neighborhood. He rushed out into the streets unclad, regaining his composure, hurriedly dressed and hastened to the scene of the disaster.

Reaching the store he found it to be a burning inferno, its flames spreading with a lightning-like rapidity; Walter knew that Mrs. A. B. Clark, 54, her brother Malcomb M. Glidewell and their aunt, Mrs. Nannie Jones, 76, lived in the rear of the store-home. Assisted by J. B. Shoults, he began to pound loudly on the windows trying hard to awaken the occupants. The knocks were answerd by Malcomb Glidewell. They tried to persuade him to leave the burning building. Apparently dazed and rendered semi- unconscious he did not seem to conceive what he was being told by the rescuers.

McCray stated "Mr. Shoults and I grappled strongly at the window and pulled with all our strength. The guards were so secure, I grabbed up a piece of broken stone and began to pound and finally we were able to pull the guard from its hold. We broke the window pane and pulled Mr. Glidewell out of the window to safety. We then rushed to another window at the forward part of the store and repeated the same thing. We removed the window guard and broke the pane of the window of Mrs. Clark's room. The intense heat and the onrushing flames drove us back and we were unable to reach her."

It was fully forty-five minutes before the firemen, fighting bravely as they did, using every available fire-fighting apparatus could bring the stubborn blaze under control enough for them to reach the entrapped woman who, by this time had been overcome by smoke and suffered various burns.

She was taken from the burning building, scantily clad, apparently dead, and rushed to the Methodist Hospital for treatment, but too late to do any good.

Standing in a blackened room, that once was his pride, but now guttered by the ruthless flames, woke up hearing my sister calling Malcomb M. Glidewell stated, 'I the fire department over the grocery phone. I jumped out of bed, ran to the door of my room. Flames were shooting down the hallway from the store. I heard my sister scream.

"I ran to the windows. Those iron guards were there. I grabbed them and tried to break them loose. I just couldn't do a thing.

"I shouted as hard as I could and I heard Negroes calling outside. Several of them tore an iron guard loose and smashed the panes. They helped me out, but by the time I got to the front room where my sister was it was too late.

"I know that my sister called the fire department and she ran back into her room for some prized possessions and didn't think that the fire would have spread so quickly.

"I would have gone too, if it had not been for those Negroes."

Neighbors said apparently the fire started from an overheated radio or a carelessly thrown cigarette, as the Clarks were accustomed to playing the radio very late and possibly went to sleep unmindful of the electricity still being on and maybe a shortage occurred in the wiring. However the exact nature of the fire could not be determined by the fire department.

The fire occurred next door and across the streets from Prof. W.H. Warren who was seriously injured in an automobile accident in Illinois a few weeks ago. The excitement was very shocking to Prof. Warren, who was on the road to recovery, and unnerved him very much.

Mrs. Nannie Jones, aunt of the victim, was away on a week-end trip at the time of the disaster.

Minister Made Member Of Distinguished Order

Defender 12-11-39 Chicago, Ill.

NEW YORK, Nov. 10—Rev. C. E. Chapman, well known publicist and minister was accepted into membership in the Academy of Political Science here this week.

The academy, which maintains headquarters at Fayerweather hall at Columbia university, invited the clergyman to become a member several weeks ago on the recommendation of Bishop Randall A. Carter.

The organization is made up of distinguished scholars, economists, attorneys, social workers, churchmen, journalists, bankers and educators.

The academy promotes impartial and scientific discussions of current problems, and embraces a wide range and scope of all issues of the present day which are vital to the economic, civic, political, educational and religious welfare of humanity regardless of race, color or creed.

The next annual meeting of the academy is to be held November 15, at which the subject will be "The Effect of the European War on America's Idle Man and Idle Money."

In his letter of acceptance, Rev. Chapman wrote: "Accept this expression of deep appreciation for the honor bestowed through your kind and generous invitation. Membership in such a learned society as yours will present rare privileges, of which every effort will be made to avail myself."

The Reverend Mr. Chapman is well-known throughout the country for his civic, social, religious and educational activities. He has been most outspoken on educational inequalities, the lack of opportunity for Negroes in contrast to those enjoyed by other racial elements—even foreigners and non-citizens. He is a general officer in the Colored Methodist church, being its general secretary of public relations. He also pastors the Jamison Temple church in Kansas City.

NEW YORK, N. Y.—(SNS)—In an address before the student body of Washington University, St. Louis, Mo., Jesse O. Thomas, acting executive secretary of the National Urban League said: "Because racial prejudice and intolerance, together with a struggle for economic supremacy, threaten to engulf the civilized world in the most devastating war known to mankind, it would seem appropriate that we in America, so far removed geographically from the scene of action, should give some intelligent concern as to how the various race elements in our country might live together harmoniously and helpfully.

"It is significant that so large a percentage of persons here assembled comprise the younger element. The people who make up our citizenship all speak one language. The aims and objectives of all Americans insofar as they embrace our national culture are identical. No group of American citizens owes allegiance to any other flag or country. We read the same papers, books, periodicals; we profess the same religion; and we salute the same flag.

"This ought to make it much easier for us to find a common denominator as a way of life than is true in many countries where they have different language-speaking groups, many conflicting religious cults, and contradictory political philosophies.

"The Negro has been identified with every phase of American culture since the foundation of this government. He has performed every duty imposed, from the battle fields to our legislative halls, with efficiency, fidelity and patriotism. He has never betrayed a trust or refused to answer his country's call. Crispus Attucks, the first martyr of the American Revolution, gave his life that white men might be free. Today, is knocking at the doors of the most outspoken on educational inequalities, the lack of opportunity for Negroes in contrast to those enjoyed by other racial elements—even foreigners and non-citizens. Two more Bradley college chemistry students were selected for special honor with the announcement today that Francis S. Mitchell and Roland Lohmar have been given scholarships for graduate work at the University of South Dakota and at the University of Wisconsin, respectively.

Mr. Mitchell will continue his work in the field of paint chemistry at the University of South Dakota. Mr. Lohmar has received one of the coveted awards granted by the alumni graduate research fund at the University of Wisconson and will do his work in bio chemistry, according to the announcement.

Among the other Bradley chemistry students who have received similar honors recently are Robert Dimler, completing his third year on an alumni research fellowship at the University of Wisconsin in the field of organic chemistry and Howard Teeter, completing his second year of a fellowship in physical and organic chemistry at the University of Illinois.

Bradley officials called attention in the announcement to the excellent record which Dr. George C. Ashman and Miss Mary G. Harvey have established in the Bradley chemistry department. Dr. Ashman has earned recognition, in his 38 years as head of the department, as a tester of commercial and industrial products as well as a teacher.

Joseph Fuller, another former Bradley chemistry student, is now head of the department of mathematics at Tuskegee institute in Alabama. The announcement of these two awards swells the list of Bradley chemistry students who have received honor scholarships in recent years. Among the many who have received such honors are Robert Dimler, who is just finishing his third year on an alumni research fellowship at the University of Wisconsin in the field of organic chemistry, and Howard Teeter, who is completing his second year of graduate work as a fellow in physical and organic chemistry at the University of Illinois. Dimler has already received his master's degree at Wisconsin.

The recognition which Bradleyites have received from large universities is tribute to the record which Dr. George C. Ashman and Miss Mary G. Harvey have established in the Bradley chemistry department. Dr. Ashman, for 38 years head of the department, has built up a reputation, not only as a teacher but also as a tester of industrial and commercial products.

The District of Columbia Tuberculosis association, a member of the Southern Tuberculosis Conference, believing that a state in the deep South should have a representative at the University of Michigan, Dr. James G. Townsend, association president, has announced that his organization will pay Miss Tanner's scholarship fee, thereby making available a third award. As a result of this unprecedented gesture, Mrs. Nettye M. Perkins, Jackson, Miss., also will study at Michigan.

Miss Lyttle was educated at the Academy of the Immaculate Mother and graduated from the School of Nursing of the George W. Hubbard hospital, Nashville. She received her Bachelor of Science degree from the Tennessee Agricultural and Industrial State college and studied at the Colorado State Teachers College of Education.

Miss Lyttle is now dean of the School of Nursing at the George W. Hubbard hospital, which is associated with MeHarry, the only Negro medical school in the South.

Better Late Than Never

Louisiana Weekly

FROM Howard University, often referred to as the "capstone of Negro education," comes the announcement that Matthew A. Henson, discoverer of tthe North Pole, will be the recipient of the honorary degree of Doctor of Science. The degree will be awarded at the forthcoming annual commencement exercises of the University.

6-3-39

It may be that the award is to be made because the enormous contribution of Mr. Henson has just now sufficiently impressed itself on the minds of men of letters. It may be that Howard honors itself by listing Mr. Henson as one of its "doctors," in an effort to atone for that neglect by men of his own race who were in a position to do him honor. It may be that the belated recognition comes as a result of Lowell Thomas' cry of "Shame" a few weeks ago.

New Orleans, La.

But whatever the motive occasioning the presentation, we hope Mr. Henson will not be compelled to live longer in the slave-like position from which he has eked a meagre living. We hope men of means see to it that the recognition now showering around him has some monetary side which will make his life more comfortable and that, having hastened to join in the plaudits of such men as world-famous commentator Thomas, they will not wait to give such praise as is within their power to men who achieve, through hardship and privation, the pinnacle of the world. That pinnacle may be of the physical world or of the world of work and experience, but those who reach the top should not have to wait as long for expressions of appreciation as has Matthew Henson.

DR. BETHUNE VISITS YALE

Prominent Race Woman Addresses Yale Students

NEW HAVEN, Conn.—(ANP)—Dr. Mary McLeod Bethune, president of Bethune Cookman college and director of the NYA Negro division, was the speaker Tuesday in Marquand chapel of the Sterling Divinity quadrangle of Yale university. Pointing out some of the outstanding contributions she has made during her illustrious career, Dean L. A. Weigle of the Yale Divinity school introduced Dr. Bethune as "one of the great Negro women of America." It is probably the first time that a Negro woman has spoken in this chapel.

In her masterful way Dr. Bethune spoke with reference to the contributions which Yale has made to American life and culture, and pointed out that in the critical times in which we live the Yale men have an even greater opportunity to help to create a real democracy in America. "In the South," said the speaker, "the rays of human brotherhood are slowly but surely breaking it through, and we are counting on you to carry the light of this brotherhood to all the darkened corners of this land of ours."

The effect of Dr. Bethune's address was profound. Many of the students were surprised at the outset to see the illustrious Negro woman march into the chapel in the processional with the dean of the divinity school. The audience was kept spell-bound by the quiet dignity of the speaker and showered her with enthusiastic praise when the service was over. Dr. Bethune's address represents a very significant contribution to the cause of racial understanding in America.

Accompanying Dr Bethune to the campus was Edward H. Goins, supervisor of the New England division of NYA work among Negroes.

ALLISON DAVIS LECTURES AT CHICAGO UNIVERSITY

CHICAGO.—(ANP)—A group of specialists from leading American universities has been gathered at the University of Chicago to carry out cooperative research upon problems of children and adolescents, and upon personality development in relation to learning.

Among the group is Allison Davis, professor of anthropology and head of the divisio nof social studies at Dillard university. This panel of social scientists, called together by the American Council of Education, includes professors from the Universities of California, Chicago, Cornell, Syracuse, Mt. Holyoke, Michigan, Wisconsin, and other leading institutions.

As a member of this group, Mr DaDvis, who is on leave on a Rosenwald fellowship, has given the first two in a series of papers dealing with his researches upon social controls and personality development among Negroes. The influences of the system of color-caste in America upon the learning processes and habits of Negro children, as well as the differentia types of child training by socia classes within the Negro society itself will be developed in further talks by Mr. Davis.

A recent research conducted by Mr. Davis for the American Youth commission of the American Council on Education with the collaboration of Dr. John Dollard of the Yale Institute of Human Relations has dealt with color-caste and social class influences in the training of Negro adolescents.

This study of Negro children will be discussed by the group of psychologists and sociologists at the University of Chicago, and is to be published in popular form by the American Council on Education during the winter.

Joe E. Herriford Sr. Has Unusual Attendance Record for 34 Years

KANSAS CITY, Mo. —(Special) Joe E. Herriford, principal of the W. W. Yates school, has just received from the board of education a transcript of his loss of time since he first was employed in 1906.

He taught for nine years before he lost his first day in 1915. Another nine years went by before he lost another two days. In the year of 1928, a severe attack of neuritis sent him to the hospital for 20 days and with two more days added in 1934, his total "sick leave" during the 34 years he has been in the school system amounts to only 35 days.

Added to Mr. Herriford's items of absence are 12 and a half days of quarantine and two and a half days due to deaths in his family.

The veteran principal still has a credit of 95-and-a-half days "sick leave" under the school board. This is more than one entire semester.

DEAN G. W. GORE GETS PH.D. DEGREE FROM COLUMBIA U.

Brilliant Educator Awarded Highest Scholarship Honor On Public School Thesis

Word was received in Nashville today that Director of Instruction George W. Gore, Jr., had successfully passed the final examination in Educational Research under the faculties of Political Science, Philosophy and Pure Science of Columbia University, New York City, and that he would be awarded the degree of Doctor of Philosophy. The subject of his Dissertation was: "The Professional Improvement of In-Service Negro Public School Teachers in Tennessee."

Dean Gore is an alumnus of De-Pauw University, Greencastle, Ind., where he received the Bachelor of Arts degree and later he was awarded the Master of Education by Harvard University. Graduate work at the University of Chicago followed. He received both General Education Board and Rosenwald fellowships for his residence at Harvard and Columbia respectively. At the latter institution he was elected a member of Kappa Delta Pi for distinguished scholarship.

Among the other recognitions which have come to him during his outstanding educational career are included membership in the Alpha Phi Alpha fraternity and the Sigma Pi Phi franternity; executive secretaryship of the Tennessee Negro Education Association; Past Presidency of the National Association of Collegiate Deans and Registrars; editorship of the Broadcaster, mouthpiece of the Colored Teachers of Tennessee; and contributing editorship of the Quarterly Review of Higher Education Among Negroes; "Flash," and the National Educational Outlook Among Negroes.

For sixteen consecutive years, he has been a member of the faculty of Tennessee A. and I. State College and for three-fourths of that period the Director of Instruction. His friends throughout America rejoice in this signal distinction which has just come to him.

DR. G. W. GORE, JR.

In attaining the degree of Doctor of Philosophy, the highest scholarship honor given educators, Dean George W. Gore, Jr., of A. and I. State College can scarcely have more pride in his achievement than his host of friends in Nashville, and especially the officials and staff of the Nashville Globe.

As a youth, young Gore was a carrier for the Globe. The industry and honesty with which he performed his duties as a newsboy have remained as outstanding qualities of the splendid man he later became. He always recalls with pride his work as a newsboy and the interest he manifested in newspaper work has remained with him until now when he so capably teaches the course in journalism at the great college where he has served with distinction for the past sixteen years.

As confident as are all of his friends that Mr. Gore has earned by true merit his degree of Doctor of Philosophy, they are sure this scholarship honor will have no effect upon the modest and unassuming way he deports himself.

Gentleman and scholar, Dr. Gore, the Nashville Globe salutes you and predicts you will, by your life and work, reflect lasting credit upon Columbia University which has so signally honored you.

50 Years Of Service

For 50 years now, Arthur Harold Parker has been working ever faithfully and well to bring light into shadowed places, to bring hope, ambition and inspiration to generation after generation of Negro youth. His has been a long and great service not only to the thousands of children and youths he has directly aided, but to this entire community and state. Indeed the influence of his good works spreads to all parts of the country. He has already found his satisfactions and rewards beyond reckoning. But tomorrow afternoon Birmingham will make acknowledgement of its indebtedness and gratitude to Dr. Parker and observe the golden anniversary of his service with ceremonies in the auditorium of the Industrial High School, of which he has been principal since its establishment in 1900.

Erskine Ramsay, president of the Birmingham Board of Education, and Dr. C. B. Glenn, superintendent of city schools, will be among the speakers. Dr. Glenn will present a gift to Dr. Parker. Spokesmen for the citizens of Birmingham, the Industrial High School student body, for its alumni, and for Birmingham teachers also will be heard. There will be music by the high school's famous A Cappella Choir.

Dr. Parker entered the Birmingham public school system in 1888 and, with the exception of one year, has served continuously since then. The great school he has headed for nearly 40 years is largely a monument to his ability and devotion. Such an immeasurable contribution as he has made to others finds its supreme return in the soul-stirring knowledge of something of what that service has meant to struggling human beings. But if, besides, any crowns are deserved, surely a resplendent one is due Dr. Parker. Figuratively, it will be presented to him by Birmingham Sunday—with admiration and affection.

The Julius Rosenwald Fund's Annual Series Of Fellowships

The fellowships awarded annually to Southerners by the Julius Rosenwald Fund constitute an increasingly important factor in the encouragement of advanced study in various fields.

The third series of fellowships for white Southerners has just been announced, and included on the list are representatives of a wide variety of vocations. The substantial awards will make it possible for the recipients to devote their full energies for a year to the work of their choice.

It is interesting to note that the current series includes a number of individuals who intend to study in South America, indicating that the foundation believes the South can profit by closer collaboration and understanding with our neighbors. Chess Abernathy, Jr., editor of The Cobb County Times, Marietta, Ga.; Albert Edwin Carter, Sunday editor of The Chattanooga Times, and T. Lynn Smith, professor at Louisiana State University, will conduct various studies in Central and South America.

Two Alabamians are included on the list. Claude Shannon, young artist of Montgomery who has attracted attention with his portrayals of Negro life and who was awarded a fellowship by the fund last year, will receive another for the coming year. Shelby Southard, a graduate of Birmingham-Southern College and at present connected with the WPA writers' project in Birmingham, will devote a year to creative writing.

Paula Snelling and Lillian Smith, of The North Georgia Review, were awarded a joint fellowship to be devoted to a study of Southern literature. About four years ago these young women undertook to publish a small, four-page literary quarterly which they named Pseudopodia. They have continued this sprightly journal, and the fellowship they are to receive is a fitting recognition of their efforts.

Others included on the list are: John N. Lyle, Atlanta, Ga., a study of British banking; Marcus Bartlett, of radio station WSB, Atlanta, study of radio in education; Melvin E. Thompson, of the Georgia Department of Education; Prof. Walter E. Sewell, of Georgia Tech, and Prof. R. E. Yates, of Hendrix College, Conway, Ark., studies in educational reorganization; the Rev. Wiley C. Newman, Indianola, Miss., sociology; Puryear Mims, Nashville, Tenn., sculpture; Prof. R. C. Cotner, of Stetson University, DeLand, Fla., research for a history of Florida citrus industry; E. P. Dryer, assistant state director of federal writers' project in Louisiana, studies in American literature; J. E. Fleming, of the University of Georgia, sociology; A. B. Hill, of Vanderbilt University, economics; R. M. Hodges, editor of The Daily Times-News, Burlington, N. C., creative writing; May Justus Tracy, Tracy City, Tenn., Southern mountain folklore; J. W. Kendrick, of the University of North Carolina, economics and sociology; Dorothy H. Tisdale, of the University of North Carolina, a study of Southern youth; Dan R. Vining, University of Arkansas, economics, and John D. Black, University of Arkansas, zoology.

The above list illustrates the range of activities covered by the awards. The purpose for which the Rosenwald Fund has made the fellowships available is the encouragement of advanced study in the social and natural sciences and also the encouragement of literature and the arts. Through these awards, and through a similar series to Negroes which has been offered for a number of years, the fund is helping to make the South a better place in which to live.

50 Years Of Service

For 50 years now, Arthur Harold Parker has been working ever faithfully and well to bring light into shadowed places, to bring hope, ambition and inspiration to generation after generation of Negro youth. His has been a long and great service not only to the thousands of children and youths he has directly aided, but to this entire community and state. Indeed the influence of his good works spreads to all parts of the country. He has already found his satisfactions and rewards beyond reckoning. But tomorrow afternoon Birmingham will make acknowledgement of its indebtedness and gratitude to Dr. Parker and observe the golden anniversary of his service with ceremonies in the auditorium of the Industrial High School, of which he has been principal since its establishment in 1900.

Erskine Ramsay, president of the Birmingham Board of Education, and Dr. C. B. Glenn, superintendent of city schools, will be among the speakers. Dr. Glenn will present a gift to Dr. Parker. Spokesmen for the citizens of Birmingham, the Industrial High School student body, for its alumni, and for Birmingham teachers also will be heard. There will be music by the high school's famous A Cappella Choir.

Dr. Parker entered the Birmingham public school system in 1888 and, with the exception of one year, has served continuously since then. The great school he has headed for nearly 40 years is largely a monument to his ability and devotion. Such an immeasurable contribution as he has made to others finds its supreme return in the soul-stirring knowledge of something of what that service has meant to struggling human beings. But if, besides, any crowns are deserved, surely a resplendent one is due Dr. Parker. Figuratively, it will be presented to him by Birmingham Sunday—with admiration and affection.

SCIENCE ACADEMY HEARS PAPER BY AMANDA E. PEELE

Assistant Professor of Biology at Hampton Institute First Negro Woman to Appear Before Body

A young Negro woman, Amanda Eunice Peele, assistant professor of biology at Hampton institute, appeared on the 17th annual program of the Virginia Academy of Science at Danville this month.

The significance is in the fact that she is the first Negro woman to present a research paper on any program of the academy, and was the only Negro person on the program of this particular meeting of the body. Two Negro men—Dr. Thomas W. Turner, director, and Professor K. B. M. Crooks, associate professor of the Hampton institute department of biology, have presented theses to the body, but no other Negro woman has offered a work in research.

Her paper dealt with the floral anatomy of trapa natans (the water chestnut), looking to the discovery of a truer relationship of flowering plants.

More than 300 Virginia scientists, laboratory research workers, college professors, and university students attended the meeting. One hundred research papers in eleven different sections were presented. The academy outlined the following two projects, with moves to promote them: (1) Preservation of the Dismal Swamp because it offers a valuable field for exploration and may well serve as a sanctuary for wild life; and, (2) the formation of science clubs in high schools, in order to acquaint youth with scientific thinking and the scientific approach to the solution of problems.

Entering Hampton from a high school in Garysburg, N. C., she brought a record of high attainment in mathematics and English; and she rose to honor rank in the completion of secondary work at the institute. Later in the college, she became an outstanding student in chemistry, physics, biology and botany. She was graduated from Hampton institute in 1930. Beginning her service there, she later entered Cornell on a general education board scholarship and received the degree of master of science in 1934. While in Cornell, she was elected to membership in the national Pi Lambda Theta fraternity.

First Colored Woman Makes Address Before Virginia Scientists

DANVILLE, Va.—Miss Amanda Eunice Peele, assistant professor in the Biology Department at Hampton Institute, has been noted as the first colored woman research student to read a report at the annual program of the Virginia Academy of Science, which has headquarters here.

Miss Peele was presented at the seventeenth annual program held May 4th to 6th, last week. Her paper, dealing with the floral anatomy of trapa natans (the water chestnut), was read before an assembly of more than 300 Virginia scientists, laboratory research workers, college professors and university students.

At previous annual sessions two colored men workers in the field, Dr. Thomas W. Turner, director, and Prof. K. B. M. Crooks, associate professor, superiors of Miss Peele in the same department, were invited to report their findings before the body.

University Prof. Honored

Prof. E. FRANKLIN FRAZIER, head of the Department of Sociology at Howard University, who was named to the executive board of the Eastern Sociological Society at the closing session of the 19th annual convention of the organization. Americans Pay Tribute To African Educator

LYNCHBURG, Va.—Educators in various sections of the nation recently paid tribute to Dr. Orishatukeh Faduma, native African, a member of the faculty at Virginia Theological Seminary here. Dr. Faduma was honored for his achievements in the field of education in America since he became head of the Peabody Academy at Troy, N. C., 1895-1914.

The Peabody Academy, which was founded about 1887 by the American Missionary Association, was developed during Dr. Faduma's administration into a first class high and normal institution. It was noted for training teachers.

In 1914 he was granted a leave of absence to return to Africa where he spent eight years in general education work and on a lecture tour. While there he became head of the Government Model School, director of educational work in West Africa, and inspector of schools in his colony.

When Dr. Faduma returned to America after the close of the World War his school at Troy had been taken over by the government. He then accepted a position at Kings Mountain, N. C., as assistant principal of Lincoln Academy, where he remained until five years ago when he was placed on the retired list.

DR. O. FADUMA

Following his retirement at Lincoln Academy, Dr. Faduma came to Virginia Theological Seminary and College. He was the first West African to successfully pass the Intermediate B. A. at London University, England, in 1885. But previously he won first place in a competitive scholarship examination in nine subjects, and was sent to Queens College, England, in 1812.

Atlanta Child Prodigy So Smart Parents Can't Explain Source Of Her Brilliance

Five-Year-Old Marlene White Astounds Listeners on 'We, the People' Program with Extent of Her Knowledge—Turkish Princess Pins Own Corsage on Her.

NEW YORK, Sept. 14.—Harlem had a new child prodigy this week—a five-year-old Atlanta, Ga., lass who can recite the complete Gettysburg Address without prompting, answer 175 difficult questions promptly and correctly, and perform other prodigious feats of memory which would stump intelligent adults.

The remarkable little girl, Marlene White, appeared last Tuesday evening with Gabriel Heates on the "We, The People," radio program and justified reports of her talents which had preceded her from her native Georgia.

SHE'S ACQUAINTED WITH HITLER

Speaking in a high-pitched but musical voice, Marlene named the Great Lakes, the various planets, the founder of Georgia, the author of "Treasure Island," the Chancellor of Germany, the author of "Gone With the Wind," and other brain teasers put by the famous radio quizzer.

Her performance so amazed other stars on the program that they immediately rushed around the little child to congratulate her and ask questions of their own. All were promptly answered. The new quizzers included Cornelius Vanderbilt Jr., William Holden, star of the movie "Golden Boy," and Princess Humarye Yenice of Turkey, who pinned her own corsage on Marlene.

CHILD'S BRILLIANCE MYSTIFIES PARENTS

Jerome White, Marlene's father, who brought her here for the radio appearance, was unable to explain his daughter's precocity when a Courier reporter visited the family at 160 West 132nd street. Neither could Mrs. Ernestine White, the mother.

"It all started when someone gave Marlene a globe map when she was two years old," the father said. "She asked us to name the continents on it for her. We did and she promptly remembered them. Her mother was very fond of the Gettysburg Address and happened to read it to Marlene a few times. We were amazed to find that she remembered that also. So we started teaching her."

Mrs. White said Marlene was always an unusual child. She crawled at three weeks, stood up at five months and walked quite easily at nine months.

DON'T LET HER KNOW SHE'S SMART

"We have taken good care not to let her know she's unusual though," the mother said, "so we seldom let her see her pictures in the papers or hear us talk about her."

Marlene's pictures have appeared quite frequently in the Southern papers, daily and weekly, as a result of her mental exploits. Recently she recited the full Gettysburg Address for Governor E. D. Rivers at the state capital in Georgia, and gave two recitals. The Whites called their daughter in, and in answer to questions she described the Munich Agreement, the solar system, the composition of water, the resignation of King Edward VIII of England, the force of gravity and the printing of paper currency.

OTHER CHILDREN GIFTED, TOO

The Whites also brought their other two young daughters to Harlem with them and revealed that both are endowed with the same mental capacity. Barbara Jean, just two years old, gave an unsolicited demonstration of her abilities during the interview by climbing upon a chair and reciting an eight-line poem.

Her father smilingly asked her what famous lady conducted a syndicated column called "My Day," and Barbara Jean promptly interrupted her recitation to mutter:

"Elenur Rose-velt."

The youngest daughter is expected to exceed even Marlene, her father said. At eighteen months, she could remembr the answers to twenty difficult questions, he stated, and her list is increasing daily. The third daughter, Loretta, now three years old, can answer approximately forty questions now, he declared, but she doesn't have much interest in the practice.

PARENTS EDUCATED

Neither of the parents have unusual memories, they revealed, although both are college graduates. Mrs. White finished Spellman college and her husband attended LeMoyne in Memphis. Mr. White, an accountant, is currently employed as an adult education teacher on WPA in Atlanta.

Mr. White is now negotiating several new radio engagements for Marlene, he said, and Harry Popkin, president of the Million Dollar Pictures Corporation, is discussing the possibility of placing her in a forthcoming movie short.

Two National Urban League Fellowships To Women This Year

Mrs. Dorothy E. Fassit of Philadelphia, Pa., and Miss Ruth G. Hamlin of Indianapolis, Ind., were named this week by the National Urban League as recipients of fellowships for study in the field of social work.

Mrs. Fassit was assigned to study at the New York School of Social Work on a fellowship of $1,200 given annually in memory of Anthony Benezet. She is a graduate of the University of Pennsylvania, class of 1924 and received her B. S. in social service work at Simmons College, Boston, in 1933.

Miss Hamlin was assigned to the School of Applied Sciences of the University of Pittsburgh on a fellowship of $1,000 maintained jointly by the National and the Pittsburgh Urban Leagues. She is a graduate, magna cum laude' of Butler University, Indianapolis, Indiana, class of 1932.

Since the National Urban League was organized in 1910, it has awarded ninety fellowships to colored students, all of whom are now engaged in some phase of social work among Negroes. This year's fellows were selected from a total of more than 100 candidates by the fellowship committee of the League, of which Miss Dorothy Straus, New York City lawyer, is chairman.

Boost Rev. Settle for Spingarn Medal

COLUMBUS, O. — (ANP) — The Rev. Glenn T. Settle of Cleveland, founder and director of the radio program, "Wings Over Jordon," was boosted as a candidate for the 1939 Spingarn Medal in a letter sent to Oswald Garrison Willard of New York, chairman of award committee, by the Frontiers' Club of this city, A. P. Bentley, president, and J. S. Hines Jr. secretary.

There is abundant evidence to show that this program is educating millions, is softening racial prejudices, and has gained unprecedented respect and tolerance for the colored Americans in all quarters.

Social Worker Given $1,000 To Attend School

Has Engaged In Work For 5 Years

MEMPHIS, Tenn., Sept. 22—Mrs. Margaret Lewis-Cooke, for the past five years engaged as a social worker out on the office of the Family Welfare agency, was awarded a $1,000 scholarship recently to matriculate at the Western Reserve university in Cleveland, Ohio.

Mrs. Cooke became connected with the Family Welfare agency in November, 1934. During these five years she has distinguished herself as one of the foremost social matrons of Bluff City. She has attended a series of regional institutes of the Family Welfare association of America, held in Chattanooga, Tenn., Atlanta and Clayton Georgia.

During the critical flood of 193 she established volunteer training for sociology students.

Mr. and Mrs. L. S. Lewis of 61 Edith street are Mrs. Cooke's parents. The social worker received her training in the public school and LeMoyne college of Memphis.

FIRST OF RACE TO HEAD CITY HIGH SCHOOL

Douglas Post Is Still Vacant

Mrs. M. O. Bousfield, well known educator and wife of the Negro health director of the Julius Rosenwald fund, assumed her new duties Tuesday as principal of Wendell Phillips high school as the fall term began. Appointment of Mrs. Bousfield, first Negro to become principal of a high school in Chicago, was not revealed until last weekend.

Wendell Phillips high school's new principal enjoys the distinction of being the foremost woman educator in the country. Besides being the only colored ever named to the principalship of one of Chicago's high schools, she is the only woman of her race to occupy a similar position.

Mrs. Bousfield taught for five years at Wendell Phillips, then in 1927 was named principal of Keith elementary school, and in 1931 principal of Douglass elementary school. During the depression several schools were shut down and consolidated, so in 1933 she returned as principal, holding that tor and also head teacher at Dunbar school. A year later Douglass was reopened and Mrs. Bousfield returned as principal, holindg that position until her recent appointment.

Post Still Vacant

The Board of Education revealed Wednesday that no election has been held to appoint a principal to Douglass school, which post was left vacant by Mrs. Bousfield's new assignment.

A campaign, headed by the BEE and having the wholehearted support of civic leaders, groups and organizations is being launched to secure that position now filled by Miss Grace S. Mason, white assistant principal at the school, for a colored appointee. It has been pointed out that Douglass' enrollment is predominantly colored and the school board and Superintendent Johnson are urged to name a Negro as principal there.

Among those suggested for the post are Avery French, assistant principal at Medill high school on the west side, and Mrs. Helen Glover, adjustment teacher at Farren elementary school.

Mrs. Mary Bethune Speaks At Yale Chapel

Dunjee 10-29-38 Chron.

NEW HAVEN, Conn., Nov. 16—(A N P)—Dr. Mary McLeod Bethune, president of Bethune Cookman college and director of the NYA Negro division, was the speaker Tuesday in Marquand chapel of the Sterling Divinity quadrangle of Yale university. Pointing out some of the outstanding contributions she has made during her illustrious career, Dean L. A. Weigle of the Yale Divinity school introduced Dr. Bethune as "one of the great Negro women of America." It is probably the first time that a Negro woman has spoken in this chapel.

In her masterful way Dr. Bethune spoke with reference to the contributions which Yale has made to American life and culture, and pointed out that in the critical times in which we live the Yale men have an even greater opportunity to help to create a real democracy in America. "In the South," said the speaker, "the rays of human brotherhood are slowly but surely breaking it through, and we are counting on you to carry the light of this brotherhood to all the darkened corners of this land of ours."

GOVERNOR AMAZED BY CHILD PRODIGY

Marlene White Daily World Appears Before 5-31-39 State Executive Ga.

By LUCIUS JONES

Governor E. D. Rivers is the latest addition to petite Marlene White's growing list of admirers of all ages. The four-year-old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Jerome White, 54 Ashby St., S. W., won lofty praise from the Georgia executive Monday morning, shortly before noon. when she appeared in his office to recite the Gettysburg address and answer more than thirty difficult historical, political, and scientific questions for his approval.

The amazing little child prodigy "rattled off" Former U. S. President Abraham Lincoln's memorable address in a manner which made it seem that it was merely her method of "warming up".

TOUGH QUESTIONING

After that, her mother, the former Ernestine Williams, who was educated at Booker T. Washington High school and Spelman college, "fired" a barrage of tough questions at her. She answered them without hesitation and did it with such cool casualness that, upon exhausting the list, the expression on her pretty little face seemed to suggest:

"Now, why don't you ask some hard ones?"

Mrs. White also had Loretta, three-year-old sister of Marlene, with her. Baby Barbara Jean, a third daughter now almost two years old, remained at home.

GOVERNOR AMAZED

You can imagine Governor Rivers' amazement Monday morning as the mere slip of a young lady, recently the source of widespread newspaper comment because of her phonemal mentality, correctly answered such questions as.

Who discovered America? Why was the United States forced into the World War? What are the planets? The five continents? The Great Lakes? Who was Pope Pius XI? What is the chemical symbol for water?

MARLENE WHITE

INVITED BY GOVERNOR

Mrs. White went to the Capitol at the invitation of Governor Rivers' personal secretary who had heard about the child prodigy through a recent feature article in a local daily written by Lamar Q. Ball.

Monday evening, June 12, at eight o'clock at Allen Temple A.M.E. church. little Marlene is scheduled to appear in her first formal recital (she plays and sings as well as recites and answers questions). The general public will be extended a cordial welcome.

COLUMBIA COLORED ALUMNI

"COLUMBIA," the alumni journal of Columbia University, contains an interesting record of the part the world's largest university has played in the education of Negroes. A summary of the activities of living Negro graduates of the various schools of this famous university has been compiled by the Rev. John H. Johnson, himself an alumnus of Columbia College and an M.A. from the university.

Rev. Mr. Johnson, who is now vicar of St. Martin's P. E. Church and Protestant chaplain of the New York Police Department, very aptly says that:

"Columbia has made her most valuable contribution to the colored race by training teachers. Many of the leading southern educators hold degrees from Columbia. While the colored undergraduates at the University are largely from northern cities, the great majority of graduate students are from the South. It is gratifying to note that so many of Columbia's "sons" have entered the teaching profession and gone to that section of the country where the needs is greatest, to serve the members of their own race."

Besides the large number who have studied at Teachers' College, there are listed ten who finished the Columbia School of Physicians and Surgeons; 10 who finished the Columbia School of Dentistry; 5 who finished the course in Social Work; 2 from the School of Music; 1 from the Art School; 1 from accountancy; 1 from architecture; and 1 from the School of Pharmacy.

Some outstanding Columbia graduates include: The late Dr. James Weldon Johnson, Paul Robeson, Magistrate Myles Paige and Assemblyman William T. Andrews, who completed courses in the Law School; George Gregory and Ben Johnson, who distinguished themselves in athletics as under-graduates, becoming captains of the basketball and track teams, respectively; the Revs. Adam Clayton Powell, jr., and Shelton Hale Bishop, prominent Harlem ministers; Charles L. Franklin, director of the New York State Temporary Commission on the Condition of the Colored Urban Population; Dr. George E. Haynes, the first colored student to take his doctorate at Columbia; Dr. Willis N. Huggins, noted historian, who received his master's degree from Columbia; John Louis Wilson, noted architect; A. Maurice Moore, pharmacist, who is at present chief buyer of drugs and chemicals for the City of New York Department of Purchases; Charles Alston, mural and magazine painter; and Alfred W. Tucker, certified public accountant.

Columbia is not only the greatest university in this country but is also one of the most expensive. But despite this fact, it is gratifying to know that more and more Negroes living in New York and vicinity are taking advantage of the unexcelled educational opportunities that are here afforded..

Negro Girl Named Managing Editor At Hunter College

First of Her Race to Hold Position

Newsweek

NEW YORK—(ANP)—Journalistic history was made here this week when Miss Shirley Simpson, a student in Hunter college, became the first Negro to be elected to the position of managing editor of the Hunter College Bulletin published by the student body of the college under the supervision of the department of journalism.

Miss Simpson is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Walter Simpson of New York and is a junior at the college. She has been working on the paper since September, 1938. Serving a six-month apprenticeship, she was promoted to cub reporter in January and a full reporter in March. When the managing editor resigned a temporary officer was selected until the staff held an election. The staff elected Miss Simpson.

Miss Simpson is active in many fields at school, being a member of the Toussaint L'Ouverture club the American Students union, and the YWCA. She also belongs to the Thomas Negro Composers Study group, Harlem Christian Youth council, N. Y. Winni club and is a deep student of Negro history. She also was one of the three colored members of a college group which presented a drama at the college of the City of New York this past week.

Her father is a linotype operator and is employed in a downtown publishing house. Other members of her family include a sister, Ila Simpson, a student of Knoxville college, and a brother Walter, Jr., 10 years old.

Urban League

By JESSE O. THOMAS

The purpose of the Bulletin is to chronicle the worthwhile things done for, by, and with the Negro, as a basis of increasing inter-racial good-will and understanding.

Dorothy B. Fassit, of Philadelphia, Pa., and Ruth G. Hamlin, of Indianapolis, Ind., were named this week by the National Urban League as recipients of fellowships for study in the field of social work.

The former was assigned to study at the New York School of Social Work on a fellowship of $1,200 given annually in memory of Anthony Benezet. She is a graduate of the University of Pennsylvania, class of 1934, and received her B. S. in social service work at Simmons College, Boston, in 1933.

Ruth Hamlin was assigned to the School of Applied Sciences of the University of Pittsburgh on a fellowship of $1,000 maintained jointly by the National and the Pittsburgh Urban Leagues. She is a graduate (magna cum laude) of Butler University, Indianapolis, class of 1932.

90 Fellowships Given.

Since the National Urban League was organized in 1910, it has awarded 90 fellowships to colored students, all of whom are now engaged in some phase of social work among negroes. This year's fellows were selected from a total of more than 100 candidates by the fellowship committee of the league, of which Dorothy Straus, New York city lawyer, is chairman.

For the first time the National Urban League has secured fellowships for two young men to study at the Rochdale Co-operative Institute, located on 12th street, New York city. This institution is incorporated by the Consumers' Co-operative Association and devotes its energies to training its students in the technique and history of the co-operative movement, with the view of increasing the possibilities of developing co-operative societies among the low-income groups in the United States.

Barrington Dunbar, who is a graduate of New York University, and has done 30 hours of work on his doctorate at the same institution, and John L. Harmon, graduate of Howard University and who has had a good deal of experience with co-operative movements, are the two Urban League fellows with this organization.

Five Months' Course.

The scholarship provides for five months' course of study. Three months will be spent in classroom and two months field work with a co-operative organization, such as a restaurant, grocery store or housing unit.

In securing these scholarships, it is the hope of the league movement that through the contacts made and the grade of work done by these two fellows, we might be able to interest persons who appreciate both the possibility and necessity of co-operative societies in the United States and a larger number of colored people will have an opportunity of receiving this type of training, and that some capital can be obtained to make a demonstration in Harlem.

Blind Boy Wins Prize For Best Essay On Americanism

CHICAGO —(ANP)— An 18-year old junior at Wendell Phillips High School, who is blind, fatherless and under-privileged even for a Negro, nevertheless feels so deeply about this nation that he has just won a $25 prize for the best essay on Americanism written by any high school pupil in Cook County.

The boy, William King, was guest of honor down town at the Kiwanis Club where several hundred clubmen had gathered. The Kiwanians cheered as the youth was led to the platform and introduced by President Herbert S. Simpson of the club.

"Billy King represents the true American," Simpson said. "It is in such a struggle as [illegible] making, and in such pride he takes in his country that the history of the nation has been written. Somehow I am more stirred than I have been in years when I contemplate that among all the rich and poor, the overprivileged and the underprivileged youth of our high schools the one to write the best essay on Americanism is this boy who battles such handicaps.

"I predict that when those more fortunate than he are writing alibis for their failures he will be creating a record of real success. All honor to him."

NEW YORK CITY, Dec. 8 —The second of two fellowships of $1200 each for study in the field of social work will go to Vernor C. R. Duckrey, a graduate of the University of Pennsylvania, the National Urban League announced this week. The fellowship is maintained through a fund established "In memory of Anthony Benezet."

Mr. Duckrey is a native of Philadelphia. He attended State Teachers college, Cheyney, Pa., from 1931 to 1933, and the University of Pennsylvania from 1935 to 1937. of the class of 1939.

He is Charles Twitchell Davis of Hampton, Va. Davis is also the only Negro at Dartmouth to win a coveted senior fellowship, which he was awarded last year.

Davis is one of the most popular young men on the campus, maintaining the respect of both his fellow students and the faculty.

Gets Second Degree From Same School

6-17-39

PINE BLUFF, Ark., June 15—(Special)—Among the outstanding American educators to receive the honorary Doctor's degrees at the annual commencement exercises of Morehouse College last Tuesday was Dr. John B. Watson, president of Arkansas State College. In 1924, Morehouse conferred upon President Watson the Master of Arts degree for outstanding achievement, and it is fitting that this well-known Atlanta institution should, after 15 years, see fit to confer on Dr. Watson the Doctor's degree for still greater success as an educator.

A Texan by birth, Dr. Watson is a man of wide business and educational experience. For twelve years he served on the International Y.M.C.A. committee, organized during the World War the laborers in the shipyards and munition plants, and took over in 1921 the affairs of the then defunct Atlanta State Savings bank. His experience in education has been even wider, for in one capacity or another he has taught the Negro youth for a period of fifty years. At Leland College in Louisiana he served as president for five years, during which time the school made rapid strides forward. In 1928, he resigned the presidency of Leland College to become president of Arkansas' new State College for Negroes.

Negro Student Gets High Diploma, Age 43

F. A. Thompson in Morning News

Conway. May 22—When one preaches his own baccalaureate sermon—that would seem to be news.

When the graduating class of the Whittmore high school, which is the ig scool for colored students at Conway, assembled on Sunday, May 14th to hear the baccalaureate sermon, Rev. John Charlton occupied the pulpit and he was at the same time a senior who this year received a diploma. His scholastic standing has been excellent thru out the four years of his school work and he graduates second from the top. His age is 43 and, incidentaly, he has a daughter in the high school.

Son of a Methodist preacher, Charlton was born in Summerton and moved from place to place as change in pastorate require. He had received about three years of schooling when he came to Conway some 15 or more years ago where he began work as a fireman on one of the steam boats which at that time plied between Conway and Georgetown. At intervals he also preached.

Recognizing the need of more training, he entered high school four years ago. While keeping up with his classes he supported and educated his family, consisting of a wife and three children by working at night at a local veneer manufacturing plant. He also preached in Marion without salary, furnishing his own transportation to and from that point.

The end is not yet in his education. He is planning to enter a theological school, probably in Atlanta.

Always a respected citizen of Conway, several years ago Charlton was the central figure in an episode which attracted more than local attention. Near Fayetteville, N. C., he extricated two white men from a wrecked and burning automobile, saving their lives at the expense of severe burns to himself.

NEGRO WINS WORLD'S FAIR ESSAY PRIZE

Bell-Boy Student of University of Michigan Is Awarded $300

NEW YORK. — (ANP) — Last summer when Manhattan's World of Tomorrow was opened to the public, a contest was started, billed as the 8th annual competition of the New History Society, and held in conjunction with the publication of "The Bible of Mankind", compiled and edited by Mirza Ahmad Schrab.

Open to the Fair visitors and to all Americans and Canadians, contestants were to write on the subject: "What Influence Would A Bible of Mankind Exert On The World of Tomorrow."

Last week the award committee handed down its decision, declared that the best essay on the subject had been written by a Negro Cornelius Lacy Golithy (A.B., A.M.), 22 years old, now serving as a bellboy while he pursues graduate study in philosophy at the University of Michigan, Ann Harbor. Golithy, graduate of Talladega college, Ala., received the first prize of $300.

The award was made last Sunday in Gotham's Caravan Hall. Second and third prizes, a special prize and "honorable mention", all went to white contestants. Typical excerpts of Golithy's essay, follow:

"As we read the teachings of the nine Great Religions and compare them with each other, as we may so easily do when they are placed side by side in one fine volume, we are convinced that their foundations are identical. We read in them all the perennial and intrinsically human impulses to maintain and further human values.

"Whether in the New Testament or in the Vedas, whether the words of Confucius or Abdul Baha, we see religion pure and simple directed at human salvation. Minus its organizational creeds and dogmas religion, we find, is not primarily concerned with the adulation of any supernatural or cosmic agency, but with humanity. From the words of the Founders of the Great Religions we begin to fully comprehend that the essential nature of religion is a humanistic Weltanschauung. This conception, based upon our insight into the foundations of all the World Religions, constitutes a new philosophy. That this new way of thinking will play a vital part in the World of Tomorrow there can scarcely be a doubt. For the philosophy made available to all by the Bible of Mankind is confirmed by the findings of the new social sciences."

The New History society, an international organization, has been working for the last 11 years for the promotion of universal peace by offering, as one of its activities, public lectures by prominent educators every Sunday night at the Caravan Hall.

These lectures are followed by a general discussion. It has also supported "The Children's Caravan," which is an educational movement for international correspondence among the children and young people throughout the world

Major Wright Named 'Ideal' Colored Father

Bank President Honored By 'Southernaires' In Radio Broadcast

MAJOR wright etc 24 pt . . . . fl

John Greenleaf Whittier's poem, "Howard at Atlanta," written by the famous Hoosier poet in tribute to Major R. R. Wright, president of the Citizens & Southern Bank and Trust Co., was read over an NBC network last Sunday morning by the Southernaires, radio quartet, who devoted their entire program to Father's Day, selecting Major Wright as the father they would present to their nation-wide audience.

Whittier's poem commemorated the visit to the one-room schoolhouse in Georgia, where the Major was a school boy of General O. O. Howard, founder of Howard University, D. C.

Sent Famous Message

The one-armed General, addressing the pupils, asked what message must he take back to the North. Standing up, the Major replied, ::Tell 'em we're rising." Whittier, visualizing the scene, wrote a lengthy, one stanza of which reads:

And he said: "Who hears can never
Fear for or doubt you;
What shall I tell the children
Up North about you?"
Then ran round a whisper, a murmur,
Some answer desiring,
And a little boy stood up, "General
Tell 'em we're rising!"

FAMILY HEAR BROADCAST

Listening to the broadcast were the following members of Major Wright's family:

Bishop R. R. Wright, Jr., who recently arrived from Capetown, South Africa; Dr. Whittier H. Wright, physician-surgeon of CCC camp at Gettysburg; E. C. Wright, cashier, Citizens and Southern Bank and Trust Co.; Miss Edwina M. Wright, supervisor of Home Economics, St. Louis Public Schools; Mrs. Harriet W. Lemon, teller, Citizens & Southern Bank and Trust Co.; and Miss Julia O. Wright. Major Wright is the father of eight children, all of whom are living.

The absentees were: Mrs. C. C. Clayton, of Jacksonville, Florida, and Mrs. L. B. Thompson, of Philadelphia. There are ten grandchildren and one great-great-granddaughter.

Howard Honored in Honoring Henson

EXECUTIVE Secretary Walter White of the NAACP and President W. J. Hale of Tennessee A. and I. College are widely known intellectuals, who have achieved notably in the fields of civil liberties and education, respectively. That their accomplishments are fresh on the minds of college administrators and trustees charged with the selection of persons who have earned the accolade, is to be expected.

Thanks, however, to the insight that characterizes the administration of Howard University, a name, only dimly remembered by those who lived in the era in which it became famous, and almost completely forgotten by younger men and women, was picked out of the list of American pioneers and honored at the 70th Howard commencement recently.

Those who were present at the time that Matthew Henson, Negro explorer, who first set foot on the North Pole, walked acrosss the platform at the Howard finals say that act of bestowing the honorary degree of master of science on this long-forgotten hero was one of the most dramatic moments in the history of the 70-year old university.

Howard is to be congratulated for reaching back into the past and bringing this long overdue honor to the man who set foot on the North Pole 45 minutes before Commander Peary—in command of the expedition that explored the Pole—reached the top of the world.

It was a great day for Matt Henson, resurrected from oblivion to reap some of his just reward. It was an equally great day for Howard University, because the presence of a man who achieved so magnificently in the practical world of affairs will be a never forgotten inspiration to the young intellectuals that Howard graduated this June.

Four Richmond Girls Get 'Y' Scholarships

RICHMOND, Va.—Miss Ivory Lee, a student at Virginia Union and an active member of the industrial department of the Phyllis Wheatley YWCA of Richmond, has received a scholarship to attend Hudson Shore Labor School in New York for seven weeks this summer.

She is interested in Workers Education and hopes to take part in the Workers Education Institute being planned by Miss Ida Coker, industrial secretary, and the Industrial Committee of the YWCA for next year.

Workers Education scholarships have also been received by Misses Florence Garnett and Helena Carrington, who are planning to attend the labor school (N. Y.) in the future, and Miss Olga Pemberton who received one to the summer school of Office Workers which meets in Chicago.

The industrial department of the Branch "Y" has been very much concerned with education that will benefit the worker—factory, domestic, laundry, and clerical—on and off the job.

One of the objectives set for this year's program was emphasized on workers' education in relationship to Negro women in industry and white collar jobs.

The granting of the scholarships by the two schools came after conscientious efforts put forth by Miss Coker and the industrial committee led by Mrs. Corinne E. Galvin.

Other members of the committee are: Mrs. Othelia Brown, Mrs. Madeline Chessman, Mrs. Celest Evans, Mrs. Ethel Overby, Mrs. W. L. Ransome, Mrs. Martha Spriggs, Mrs. Lillian T. Jones, and Misses Annie Woltz and Lillian Hill.

MAN BORN BLIND TO RECEIVE PH. D.

Greenville, May 27 (AP).—The Rev. Sam M. Lawton, born blind, dean of North Greenville junior college, Tigerville, will on June 2 receive the Ph.D., degree from Peabody College for Teachers, Nashville, Tenn.

According to the records of the American Foundation for the Blind only eight persons now blind hold this degree. Of the eight five were not born blind. Records as to the other three are not available.

Mr. Lawton spent six years on his thesis, "Religious Life of Coastal and Sea Island Negroes of South Carolina." During this time he attended more than 250 negro religious services in the coastal region of thes tate. Mr. Lawton has served as pastor of churches and missions in Arkansas, Tennessee and South Carolina. He has traveled abroad. His entire life, with the exception of one year, has been spent with people who can see.

Awarded Ph.D.

MARY LAVERTA HUFF

On June 9 when graduating exercises were held at the University of Minnesota, Miss Mary LaVerta Huff, a former St. Louisan, was granted her degree as Doctor of Philosophy. The award is significant in that it is the first Ph.D to be granted a Negro in the field of Social Work and Miss Huff is the first to receive the award from that institution.

Following her graduation from the Sumner High School, Miss Huff worked as case worker with the St. Louis Relief Administration for two years. She did her college work at the University of Minnesota, from which she graduated Magna Cum Laude, and with the Phi Beta Kappa Key. In 1937 she was appointed to the teaching staff of the Graduate School of Social Work, which marked the first time the school had employed a Negro in such capacity. The appointment was made on the basis of her unusual record maintained as well as the ability demonstrated in getting along with people of all races.

In addition to the regular duties and studies at the University, Miss Huff engaged in active research in the field, and published several articles in various national Social work and Sociological magazines.

The new Ph.D. is a senior member of the American Association of Social Workers, the Family Welfare Association of America and the American Sociological Society, and the Alpha Kappa Alpha Sorority.

In private life the graduate is Mrs. G. Milton Diggs.

A Hard Climb for The Negro Scientist

IF you have ever wondered why there were relatively few renowned Negro scientists, scholarly Dr. W. E. B. Du Bois supplies the answer in an article, "The Negro Scientist," published in the summer edition of the professional periodical, THE AMERICAN SCHOLAR.

The answer is not only interesting but is exceedingly revealing. But it isn't the answer frequently advanced by people with ideas of racial superiority and other pseudo-scientific bunk. Dr. Du Bois quite convincingly and quite thoroughly refutes the argument that the nature of scientific research precludes Negro achievement in that field because the Negro is not possessed with the keenly analytical mind required.

Instead, Dr. Du Bois reveals that the path to Negro scientific attainment is studded with almost impregnable obstacles, some professional and some educational.

To begin with the Negro science student is frequently held back in white universities and more often than not denied scholarships to which he is entitled.

When he graduates, he can seldom get a chance to work in scientific research laboratories, is seldom allowed to teach in the bigger colleges or even in his own alma mater, though he has proven his worth in competition with other students. He is refused every opportunity to exploit the scholarship he has attained in his formal training. In many cases he is not permitted to belong to scientific societies, to study in libraries of the South.

If he is able to get a job in a small college or high school, he is hampered by lack of adequate facilities for research and study and has neither the time, the equipment, or the money for creative work in pure and practical science.

To prove his point, Dr. Du Bois cites the individual case records of many Negro scientists who achieved notably in some of the best colleges and universities in the country, but who, despite eminent preparation and the highest calibre of scholarship, were not permitted to climb as far up the ladder as they might have gone but for the color of their skins.

Dr. Percy Julian, Dr. Ernest Just, and Dr. Gus Hinton, are only a few of these victims of color prejudice in the field of scientific endeavor. But they prove Negroes can be great scientists and that given a chance they will contribute more than their share to scientific progress.

BLIND BOY WINS FOR BEST ESSAY ON AMERICANISM

CHICAGO, Dec. 7—(ANP)—An 18-year-old junior at Wendell Phillips high school, who is blind, fatherless and under-privileged even for a Negro, nevertheless feels so deeply about this nation that he has just won a $25 prize for the best essay on Americanism written by any high school pupil in Cook county.

The boy, William King, was guest of honor Thursday downtown at the Kiwanis club where several hundred clubmen had gathered. The Kiwanians cheered as the youth was led to the platform and introduced by President Herbert S. Simpson of the club.

"Billy King represents the true America", Simpson said. "It is in such a struggle as he is making and in such pride he takes in his country that the history of the nation has been written. Somehow I am more stirred than I have been in years when I contemplate that among all the rich and poor, the over-privileged and the underprivileged youth of our high schools, the one to write the best essay or Americanism is this boy who battles such handicaps.

"I predict that when those more fortunate than he are writing alibis for their failures he will be creating a record of real success. All honor to him."

Dr. IRA A. McCOWN

Dr. Ira McCown Is First On N. Y. State Civil Service Exam.

Dr. Ira A. To Dr. McCown goes the distinction of being the first Negro to finish number one on a state civil service examination.

The Civil Service Commission announced that the list was established as of January 30 and it is believed that in a few days Dr. McCown will be appointed to the position of examiner in compensation of the state Labor Department stationed at 80 Centre street, Manhattan. While no salary scale has yet been released, it is believed that it moy range anywhere from $5,000 to $7,500 per year.

The exact nature of Dr. McCown's duties will be to examine women claimants for compensation to determine the extent of their injuries of a gynecological nature and also to give expert testimony in court, if necessary, relative to the injuries sustained.

Loathe to discuss his accomplishments other than to affirm the fact that he had received number one rating, Dr. McCown would only reveal to reporters that the examination had very high clinical and oral parts and that he was the only Negro doctor to take the examination in competition with some of the outstanding specialists in the state. Qualifications for the examination were rigid, applicants being required to have five years experience in industrial medicine and surgery and three years on surgical and gynecologicol staff of a Grade A hospital.

A graduate of Ohio State University where he took both his baccalaureate and medical work, Dr. McCown was the first Negro interne at Harlem Hospital, from 1926 to 1928, afterwards becoming the first Negro resident obstetrician in the hospital. Chauffeur Gets 1938 Carnegie Hero Citation

BOSTON, Mass, Feb. 3—(UNP)—Twenty-eight-year-old Marshall McIver, chauffeur who rescued another chauffeur from drowning on July 11, was awarded the Carnegie Hero Fund Commission's medal, it was disclosed here this week.

According to accounts of the incident related earlier, Jack Beatty, 29, called for help while swimming in water 10 feet deep and 365 feet from the bank on July 11.

McIver, a chauffeur, heard his call and swam to his aid and after knocking him in the forehead, pulled Beatty 140 feet toward the shore when a motor-boat arrived and brought them to shallow water.

COLORED HERO WINS MEDAL

White Man Also Rewarded For Saving Life Of Negro

PITTSBURGH.— (ANP)— At the 35th annual meeting of the Carnegie Hero Fund Commission held last Wednesday in the Oliver building, 17 acts of heroism were recognized, a bronze medal being awarded in each case. Five of the heroes lost their lives; and to their dependents pensions aggregating $2,940 a year were granted.

Among the medal winners was a colored man who saved the life of another man, and a white miner who saved the life of a colored mine worker.

Marshall McIver, Boston, 28, a colored chauffeur, saved Jack Beatty, colored, 29, chauffeur, from drowning at Ossining, N. Y., July 11, 1937. While swimming in the Hudson river, Beatty called for help in water 10 feet deep 365 feet from the bank. McIver swam 70 feet to Beatty and took hold of his bathing suit. Beatty took hold of McIver's bathing suit, and they were submerged briefly. Failing in an attempt to break Beatty's hold, McIver released him and struck him on the forehead with his fist; and Beatty released his hold and was almost helpless. Again taking hold of Beatty's bathing suit, McIver swam pushing Beatty 140 feet toward the bank dipping under the surface several times in his effort to support Beatty, who was unconscious, and also to try to touch bottom. He touched in water seven feet deep and repeatedly pushed himself upward. A motorboat then arrived, and McIver and Beatty were taken by it to the water three feet deep. Beatty was revived.

Oliver Bushby of Wylam, Ala., white mine foreman, saved Coleman Burrell, colored, 25, trackman's helper, from bleeding and a cave-in in a mine, Birmingham, March 28, 1938. When runaway mine cars in a coal mine collided with standing cars, Burrell was knocked to his knees between the ends of two cars, the cars coming to a stop after one of them had dislodged two roof supports. The roof began slowly to sag above Burrell. Burrell's leg was caught under a car and was fractured; and an artery was severed from which blood spurted. Busby crawled under the sagging roof to Burrell. Lying on his side in a confined space on the floor, he pressed the artery, stopping the flow of blood almost entirely. He was thus engaged for 10 minutes, all the time regarding the sagging roof with apprehension. The car was then raised and Burrell was carried to safety. A very short time later roof timbers came to rest on the car alongside of which Busby had lain; and a large rock slid down on it, followed by a fall of small rock. Burrell's leg later was amputated.

OTHER PAPERS SAY—

LEE BAKER AND CARNEGIE HERO FUND

(St. Louis Post-Dispatch)

One of the most appealing benefactions of the late Andrew Carnegie was the establishment in 1904 of the Carnegie Hero Fund, with an endowment of $5,000,000. Yesterday at Pittsburgh 17 persons or their surviving kin received from the Carnegie Hero Fund Commission medals or financial reward, or both, for heroic deeds.

St. Louis has a man worthy of an award for heroism in the person of Lee Baker, Negro witness in the Isadore Londe bombing case. Baker, spirited by two gangsters from the farm where he was awaiting the trial, was shot twice and left for dead in an abandoned house. One of the shots was fired through his neck. Another cost him an eye.

Baker crawled out of the old house just in time to escape his attackers, who had evidently come back to bury him. Summoning his reserves of physical strength, he walked several miles for help and was taken to the hospital. Some weeks later, when the Londe trial took place, Baker took his place on the witness stand and boldly identified the dangerous criminal Londe as the man he saw bombing a cleaning shop. His testimony played a vital part in Londe's conviction.

Throughout his ordeal, Baker displayed superlative mental and moral courage. Never did he flinch from the duty at hand, though he had been cruelly maimed and had reason to fear for his very life. The people of St. Louis, as a token of admiration and gratitude, raised a fund for Baker and the mayor offered him a job when he is able to take one.

It appears, however, that under the terms of the Carnegie awards, limiting them to "heroic effort to save human life," Baker would not be eligible. The commission, if it has the discretion, would be wise to broaden the narrow provision, for this case and others. High courage for the public welfare may involve even greater risks than life-saving, and Andrew Carnegie doubtless would agree in endorsing such heroes for reward.

Elderly Negro Cherishes Carnegie Heroism Award

Jim Brice Is Old and Feeble Now But He Carries On As Heroes Should

By MRS. LUCIUS FULLER
(Telegraph State Correspondent)

CULLODEN, April 24.—"Greater Love Hath No Man Than this," are the words in bold relief on the bronze Carnegie Hero Medal awarded James W. Brice Sr., Negro of Culloden for his heroic efforts in saving James Jones from suffocation at the bottom of a well.

Brice was by trade a well digger, and a good one, until one day he "went back" on a shot of dynamite and the explosion of the delayed shot resulted in the loss of one hand and the sight from both eyes.

After months of suffering Jim was well again, but with a physical handicap that would have defeated lesser men and left them helpless charges upon society. Jim, though, was destined to be a hero; and heroes are made of sterner stuff. He could no longer see to follow his trade alone, so he teamed up with his brother. The brother furnished the eyes, and Jim the experience and the aid of his one good arm. Thus he plied his trade until the death of his brother.

Not content with idle time on his hands he became adept at sawing stovewood for the neighborhood, earning a little this way. He was a carrier of The Macon Telegraph for six years. He learned by feeling to distinguish between weeds and vegetables and hiring himself out as a gardener, did his work so efficiently that he was always in demand. He would not allow himself to be pitied and never sought charity. In fact his many white friends could not get him on relief nor on the pauper list because he wouldn't quit working.

On the T. M. Haygood place was a well, known to well diggers as a "Jonah" well because of peculiar circumstances: an anvil weighing 200 pounds used to tap down dynamite had been blown out of the well to about 40 feet in the air and in falling crashed through the room of the newly built house and buried itself in the basement; cave-ins had frequently obstructed work and a rattlesnake had chosen his hole to raise a brood. Work on the well was abandoned for a few years then the owner decided to make another effort to complete it. James Jones descended into the well and was soon overcome by poisonous gas. No one would volunteer to go down and fasten a rope about Jones so that he might be hoisted out; until someone thought of Jim Brice. When Jim was summoned, though blind and crippled, he unhesitatingly went down in the well, found that Jones was still alive, fastened a rope about him and signalled for him to be hoisted out.

For this act of bravery Jim was on October 20, 1914, awarded the Carnegie medal for bravery.

Twenty-five years have passed and Jim now 75 years of age is old, feeble and not able to work much, but is still cultivating his little corn patch, dragging a home-made plow fashioned out of a discarded mattock with a pine pole for a handle.

PITTSBURGH—(ANP) — At the 35th annual meeting of the Carnegie Hero Fund Commission held here in the Oliver building, 17 acts of heroism were recognized, a bronze medal being awarded in each case. Five of the heroes lost their lives; and to their dependents pensions aggregating $2,940 a year were granted.

In two cases awards aggregating $1,000 were made for educational purposes; and in seven cases awards aggregating $4,500 were made for other worthy purposes. Payments in these cases will not be made until the beneficiaries' plans for the use of the awards have been approved by the commission.

Five of 17 Heroes Lost Their Lives

ONE COLORED

Among the medal winners was a colored man who saved the life of another man, and a white miner who saved the life of a colored mine worker.

Marshall McIver, Boston, 28, a colored chauffeur, saved Jack Beatty, colored, 29, chauffeur, from drowning at Ossining, N. Y., July 11, 1937. While swimming in the Hudson river, Beatty called for help in water 10 feet deep 365 feet from the bank. McIver swam 70 feet to Beatty and took hold of his bathing suit. Beatty took hold of McIver's bathing suit, and they were submerged briefly.

Failing in an attempt to break Beatty's hold, McIver released him and struck him on the forehead with his fist; and Beatty released his hold and was almost helpless. Again taking hold of Beatty's bathing suit, McIver swam, pushing Beatty 140 feet toward the bank, dipping under the surface several times in his effort to support Beatty who was unconscious, and also to try to touch the bottom.

He touched in water seven feet deep and repeatedly pushed himself upward. A motorboat then arrived, and McIver and Beatty were taken by it to the water three feet deep. Beatty was revived.

WHITE SAVES NEGRO

Oliver Busby of Wylm, Alabama, white mine foreman, saved Coleman Burrell, colored, 25, trackman's helper, from bleeding and a cave-in in a mine, Birmingham, March 23, 1938. When runaway mine cars in a coal mine collided with standing cars, Burrell was knocked to his knees between the ends of two cars, the cars coming to a stop after one of them had dislodged two roof supports. The roof began slowly to sag above Burrell.

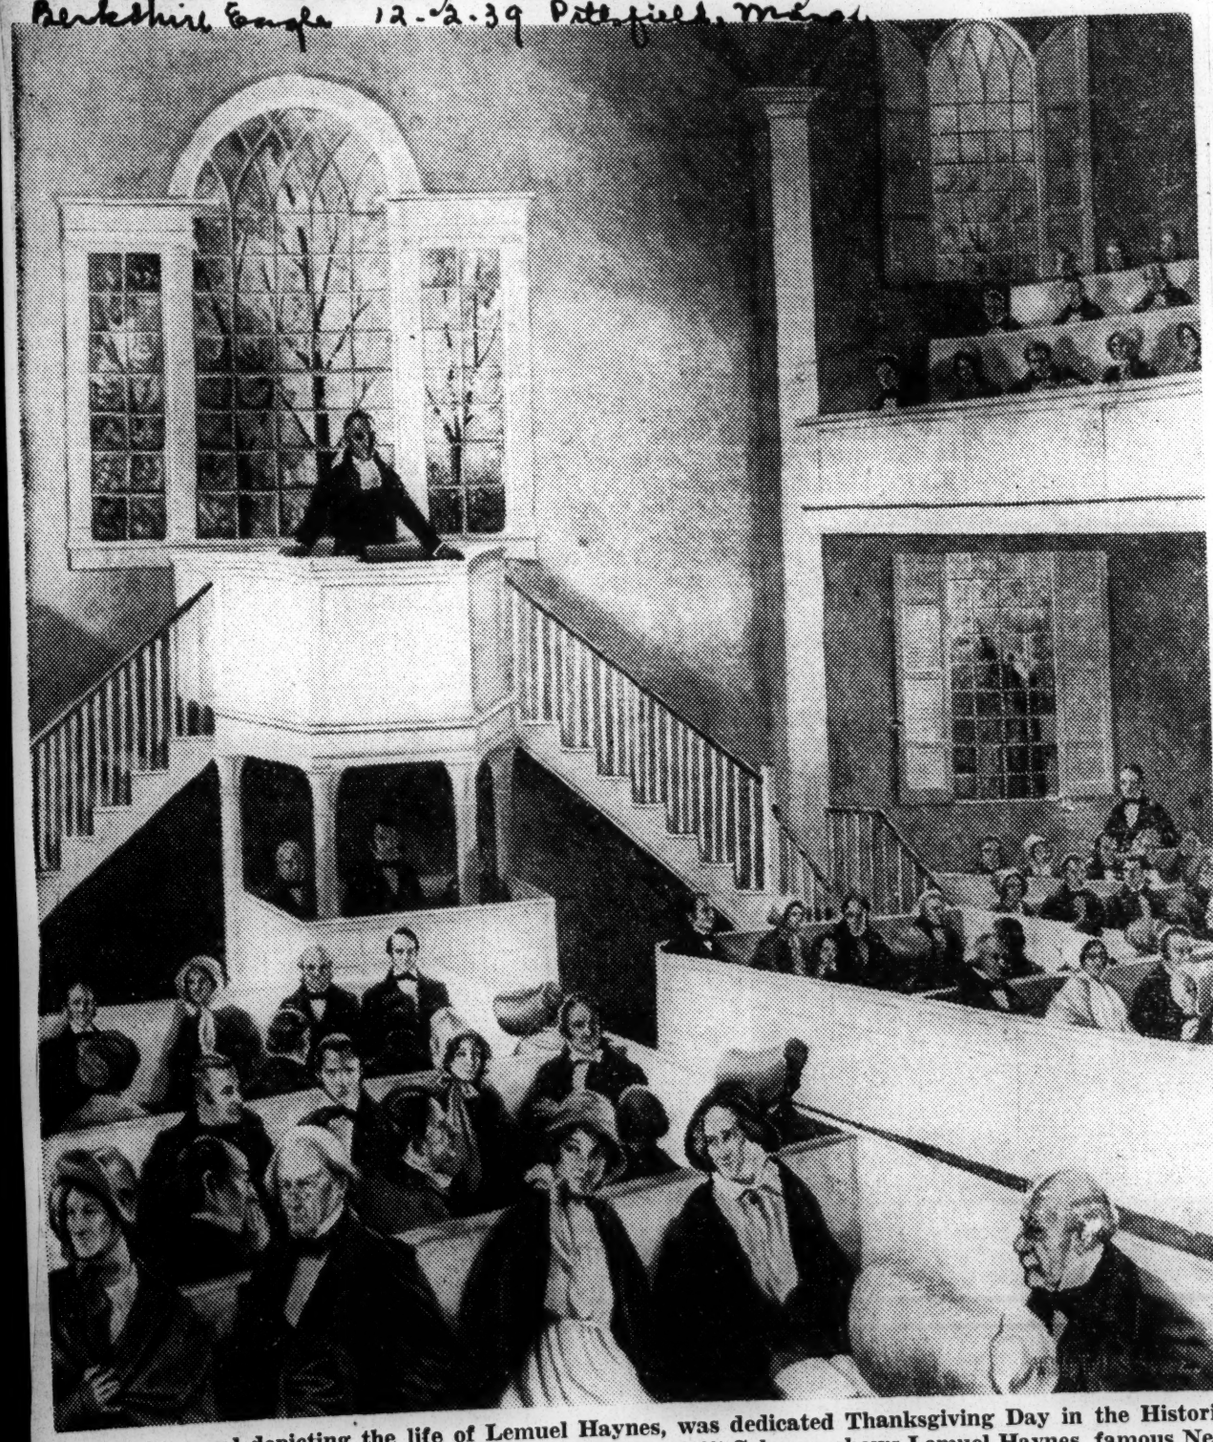
Burrell's leg was caught under a car and was fractured; and an artery was severed from which blood spurted. Busby crawled under the sagging roof to Burrell. Lying on his side in a confined space on the floor, he pressed the artery, stopping the flow of blood almost entirely. He was thus engaged for 10 minutes, all the time regarding the sagging roof with apprehension. The car was then raised and Burrell was carried to safety.

A very short time later roof timbers came to rest on the car alongside of which Busby had lain; and a large rock slid down on it, followed by a fall of small rock. Burrell's leg later was amputated.

STATISTICS: Awards made prior to this meeting, 3,069; awards made at this meeting, 17; awards made to date, 3,086; cases refused to date, 34,813; cases pending, 185; total cases reported to date, 38,084.

Vermont History Recalled by Mural

Berkshire Eagle 12-2-39 Pittsfield, Mass.
Pittsfield, Mass. 12.2.39



The historic mural depicting the life of Lemuel Haynes, was dedicated Thanksgiving Day in the Historical Museum at Bennington, Vt. The painting by William Tefft Schwarz shows Lemuel Haynes, famous Negro preacher, conducting a service in the Bennington meeting house at the beginning of the 19th century.

BENNINGTON, Vt.—Dedicatory exercises for a mural of great historical interest took place at the Historical Museum here, Thanksgiving Day, Thursday. Among those taking part were John Spargo, president and director of the museum; Lieut.-Gov. William H. Wills, Henry B. Walbridge, assistant director of the museum; Mrs. Robert M. Parmelee, chairman of the woman's committee of the museum, and Mr. and Mrs. James S. Dennis, members of the museum's board of trustees and woman's committee, respectively. Berkshire

The mural, painted by William Tefft Schwarz of Sandgate, Vt., and Merion, Pa., depicts a scene in the life of Lemuel Haynes, a Negro minister and Revolutionary soldier who, during the closing years of the 18th and the first quarter of the 19th centuries, was a commanding figure in the life of Vermont and enjoyed an international reputation.

Is Now a Shrine

In the painting, which is six by eight feet, "Father" Haynes as he was often called is shown preaching in the historic meeting house in Bennington which was restored to its original form two years ago and is now a shrine visited each year by thousands of persons from all over the country. In the congregation are depicted more than 50 persons who lived in Bennington during the days when Father Haynes occasionally preached here and whose likenesses were found by the artist in old portraits and daguerreotypes still in the possession of their descendants.

Interesting features of the painting are the bright autumn foliage which shows through the Palladian window at the rear of the high pulpit, the three elders of the church who sit in an enclosed space beneath the pulpit, and the old-fashioned box pews locked by the ushers when the congregation was assembled and so arranged that half of their occupants had their backs to the preacher.

Story Is Incredible

The story of Lemuel Haynes, the chief figure in the mural, is an almost incredible one. His father, a full-blooded Negro, and his mother a white woman, he was born in West Hartford, Conn., July 18, 1753. The name he bore throughout his life is said to be neither that of his father nor mother. When he was five months old he was "bound out" to a farmer, David Rose, and was thus made a bond servant until he was 21. Farmer Rose lived at Granville and brought up the boy to read to his master and mistress after the day's work was done—chapters from the Bible, occasional newspapers, sermons, and similar reading matter of the sort available to pious citizens in those times.

Soon after he attained his freedom, Revolutionary events claimed the interest of Lemuel Haynes. In October, 1775, he went with a company of volunteers to the relief of Fort Ticonderoga. Soon after he returned from Ticonderoga, Haynes began to preach, or to "exhort" as the preaching of unordained ministers was called. He began to study for the ministry under Rev. Daniel Farrand of Canaan, Conn. On Nov. 20, 1780, he was licensed to preach, and on Nov. 9, 1785, he was formally ordained minister of the Congregational Church.

Becomes Vermont Pastor

Because of his color the congregation at Torrington, Conn., where he had preached for two years refused to have him as regular minister although he had an enviable reputation for pulpit eloquence. Persons in the new State of Vermont, which was not yet a state of the Union but a rather anomalous sort of republic, however, were less prejudiced, and so Haynes was sent into Vermont as a missionary preacher. He preached in this way at most of the settlements in Vermont—Bennington, Dorset, Clarendon, Brandon, Pawlet, Tinmouth, Rutland, and Hartland, among others.

This missionary occupation, in the course of which he rode many thousands of miles on horseback over lonely mountain roads, he followed until 1788 when he was invited to become the pastor of a church at West Rutland, Vt. For almost 30 years he remained there, pastor of a parish wholly comprised of white people.

During this time Lemuel Haynes was one of the recognized leaders of the state and was much in demand as a preacher upon special occasions all over Vermont. His eloquence as a preacher is continually noted in diaries of the time, and he was respected as a theological disputant. His printed sermons had considerable vogue even in London and went through many editions. Middlebury College conferred upon him the honorary degree of master of arts, the customary honor accorded great preachers and theologians of that time.

Later Years Were Tragic

The later years in his life were tragic. He was dismissed from his pastorate at West Rutland in 1817 when he was nearly 65 and after he had occupied the pulpit there for nearly 30 years. For nearly four years thereafter he was pastor at Manchester, Vt. In 1822 he moved to Granville, N. Y., where he died in 1833.

The portrait of Lemuel Haynes in the mural follows a portrait of the Negro preacher which was painted during his life and an engraved copy of which was printed in the "Memoirs" of Haynes published in 1837.

The Julius Rosenwald Fellowships

The fellowships awarded annually to Southerners by the Julius Rosenwald Fund constitute an increasingly important factor in the encouragement of advanced study in various fields.

The third series of fellowships for white Southerners has just been announced, and included on the list are representatives of a wide variety of vocations. The substantial awards will make it possible for the recipients to devote all their full energies for a year to the work of their choice.

It is interesting to note that the current series includes a number of individuals who intend to study in South America, indicating that the foundation believes the South can profit by closer collaboration and understanding with our neighbors. Chess Abernathy, Jr., editor of The Cobb County Times, Marietta, Ga.; Albert Edwin Carter, Sunday editor of The Chattanooga Times, and T. Lynn Smith, professor at Louisiana State University, will conduct various studies in Central and South America.

Two Alabamians are included on the list. Claude Shannon, young artist of Montgomery who has attracted attention with his portrayals of Negro life and who was awarded a fellowship by the fund last year, will receive another for the coming year. Shelby Southard, a graduate of Birmingham-Southern College and at present connected with the WPA writers' project in Birmingham, will devote a year to creative writing.

Paula Snelling and Lillian Smith, of The North Georgia Review, were awarded a joint fellowship to be devoted to a study of Southern literature. About four years ago these young women undertook to publish a small four-page literary quarterly which they named Pseudopodia. They have continude this sprightly journal, and the fellowship they are to receive is a fitting recognition of their efforts.

Others included on the list are: John N. Lyle, Atlanta, Ga., a study of British banking; Marcus Bartlett, of radio station WSB, Atlanta, study of radio in education; Melvin E. Thompson, of the Georgia Department of Education; Prof. Walter E. Sewell, of Georgia Tech, and Prof. R. E. Yates, of Hendrix College, Conway, Ark., studies in educational reorganization; the Rev. Wiley C. Newman, Indianola, Miss., sociology; Puryear Mims, Nashville, Tenn., sculpture; Prof. R. C. Cotner, of Stetson University, DeLand, Fla., research for a history of Florida industry; E. P. Dryer, assistant state director of federal writers' project in Louisiana, studies in American literature; J. E. Fleming, of the University of Georgia, sociology; A. B. Hill, of Vanderbilt University, economics; R. M. Hodges, editor of The Daily Times-News, Burlington, N. C., creative writing; May Justus Tracy, Tracy City, Tenn., Southern mountain folklore; J. W. Kendrick, of the University of North Carolina, economics and sociology; Dorothy H. Tisdale, of the University of North Carolina, a study of Southern youth; Dan R. Vining, University of Arkansas, economics, and John D. Black, University of Arkansas, zoology.

The above list illustrates the range of activities covered by the awards. The purpose for which the Rosenwald Fund has made the fellowships available is the encouragement of advanced study in the social and natural sciences and also the encouragement of literature and the arts. Through these awards, and through a similar series to Negroes which has been offered for a number of years, the fund is helping to make the South a better place in which to live.—Birmingham News.

EDUCATION- 1939
SCHOLARSHIP AND OTHER DISTINCTIONS

SPINGARN AWARD

PRAISES SINGER FOR ENJOYABLE, USEFUL TALENT

By WILLIAM FORSYTHE
(Staff Correspondent)

RICHMOND, Va., July 6.—Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt wife of the President of the United States, presented the famous Spingarn Medal award to Marian Anderson in Richmond's spacious Mosque as five thousand persons inside the building almost an equal number outside witnessed the ceremony that marked the closing of the most successful meeting of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People in its thirty-year history.

Mrs. Roosevelt said, 'Preservation of Democracy depends on educational reform, and these rudiments have been lacking for some of our people. All the education possible is necessary for the development of good citizens upon which our nation depends."

Upon presenting the award to Miss Anderson, she said, "For the perfection of her art and because she brought to the nation not only enjoyment but much usefulness."

Not only was Mrs. Roosevelt's speech broadcast over both the CBS and NBC but a public address system carried the message to thousands who lined the streets outside of the immense auditorium.

MRS. LAMPKIN PRESIDES

Mrs. Daisy Lampkin of Pittsburgh, Pa., presided over this most impressive assembly, and Walter White, executive secretary of the N. A. A. C. P., delivered a stirring address outlining the aims and objectives of the campaign being waged by the organization.

The opening address of the afternoon was made by the Hon. James H. Price, governor of the state of Virginia.

Approximately 1,000 delegates, representing 30 states, were here for the epochal conference.

From the keynote speech of Judge William Hastie and the welcoming address of Mayor J. Fulmer Bright of Richmond, to the closing session when Miss Anderson received her award, the entire program was epoch-making.

SOLOMON PRESENT

Celebrated Negro leaders from many parts of the nation took part in the meetings and panel discussions. Notable among them were Samuel B. Solomon, the colorful leader of the people who defied Miami, Florida's Klan outlaws and voted in the primaries of that city, and Charles Houston, brilliant legal light of the N. A. A. C. P. There were Dr. Louis T. Wright of New York City, one of the leading physicians of the country, Judge William H. Hastie of Washington, D. C., former district judge of the Puerto Rican Republic; Dr. William Lloyd Imes of New York City and William Townsend of Chicago, government officials. Nathan Straus of the U. S. Housing Authority and S. H. Dykstra of the Department of Labor were speakers during the early sessions.

Philadelphia was selected as the site of the 1940 meeting after very close balloting. Houston, Texas ran a close second, with Los Angeles third.

PRESIDENT, OTHERS SEND GREETINGS

President Roosevelt sent his greetings to the conference on the opening day. Messages of goodwill and greeting were received from Professor Albert Einstein, Governor Lehman of New York, William Green, head of the A. F. L., Attorney General Frank Murphy, Prosecuting Attorney Thomas E. Dewey of New York and Mayor LaGuardia.

The resolutions adopted by the conference were important because of their wide scope. The resolution concerning the Wagner Labor Relations Act elicited an unprecedented interchange of comment.

The final enactment was the adoption of a resolution advocating a "little Wagner Act" which would contain non-discriminatory clauses. This proposal was offered by Attorney Thurgood Marshall of New York City.

RESOLUTIONS COVER MANY ILLS

Other resolutions adopted by the conference were: elimination of discrimination in low cost housing projects, dispelling of discriminatory practices in obtaining loans through the U. S. Housing Authority, inclusion of all agricultural and domestic workers under social security, opposition to cuts in WPA and NYA funds. Additional resolutions were: opposition to any entangling foreign alliances, urging Negroes to display full voting strength at all times, particularly in the South, adoption of non-partisan policy in politics, and endorsement of the anti-lynching bill.

The conference also voted to urge President Roosevelt to appoint more Negroes to responsible government positions and demanded equality in the Army and Navy.

The delegates approved a determined fight against restricted covenants, complete freedom for the remainder of the Scottsboro boys, enfranchisement for the District of Columbia and removal of the discrimination practiced in public places, equal educational opportunities for all and a continuance of the Gaines Case procedure.

EQUALITY IN MEDICAL PRACTICE

They want equal medical agencies, a ban on Civil Service discrimination and unstinted support for the awarding of the Congressional Medal of Honor to Matt Henson, the famous Arctic explorer.

Walter White, executive secretary of the N. A. A. C. P. was honored at a birthday luncheon in honor of his 21 years of valuable service to the organization. Dr. J. M. Tinsley of the Richmond branch of the N. A. A. C. P. was the recipient of the Merit Medal. Life membership "five hundred dollar" medals were presented to Duke Ellington, Alpha Kappa Alpha sorority, Mrs. Lillian A. Alexander of New York, Marshall Field and Dr. John L. Reeves.

Youth sessions were an important part of the conference. Youth night was held last Friday at the Fifth street Baptist church. Gloster Current of Detroit presided over the Youth Night mass meetings.

The history making meeting marked the third time the Association has had a conference below the Mason-Dixon line. The first meeting in the South was held in Atlanta, Georgia in 1920. The second was in Oklahoma City in 1934.

GOVERNOR AIDS

Southern hospitality was very evident, and everyone from the governor of the state to the man in the street offered his unstinted cooperation in making this one of the greatest conferences in the history of the organization. All this was testimony to the greatness of the body which claims the respect of leaders of national and international repute.

Joel E. Spingarn

JOEL E. SPINGARN was a man of exceptional and varied attainments, so that his death constitutes a multiple loss. In his passing America is deprived of a great humanitarian, belles-lettres lose a rare critic and the Negro loses a wise and true friend. To the general public Mr. Spingarn was known chiefly as the donor of the Spingarn Medal given annually to an American Negro for distinguished and useful achievement, but establishment of this award was only one of many generous activities.

A resident of the North, the man was known throughout the South by virtue of his good deeds. The success of his work to encourage creative effort among Negroes has been attested by such men as Dr. John Hope, the late president of Atlanta University, and Dr. George Washington Carver, noted scientist of Tuskegee Institute. Dr. Hope served as a member of the Spingarn Medal committee, while the scientist received the Spingarn award in 1923.

Mr. Spingarn, son of a New York merchant, first achieved distinction as a literary critic. His first published work, "A History of Literary Criticism in the Renaissance," was translated into Italian and carried an introduction by the philosopher, Benedetto Croce. He edited collections of critical essays, published two volumes of poems, contributed to various dictionaries and reviews, and wrote authoritative works on horticulture and landscape gardening. For a number of years he lent distinction to the faculty of Columbia University, serving as head of the department of comparative literature until he severed relations with the school as the result of an academic quarrel in which he raised the issue of free speech.

At the outbreak of the World War Mr. Spingarn enrolled in an officers' training camp and later saw service overseas. He was a delegate to the convention that founded the American Legion, and was the first commander of the Legion post at Amenia, N. Y. His entire life was a fight for the higher things of human existence, and his death will be widely mourned.

THE SPINGARN MEDAL AWARD

IN LAST WEEK'S EDITION of this paper appeared a news item announcing that nominations are now open for the Spingarn Gold Medal Award for 1938. The award committee meets at the headquarters of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, 69 Fifth avenue, New York City, the latter part of the month.

For some time past there has been general criticism of the fact that this award has gone so often to officers and friends of the N. A. A. C. P. This has been due we believe largely to the lack of interest on the part of independent organizations and individuals and the comparatively few nominations sent into the committee.

The medal is awarded annually by Joel E. Spingarn, president of the N. A. A. C. P. 'to the man or woman of African descent and American citizenship, who shall have made the highest achievement during the preceding year or years in any honorable field of endeavor."

Send in your nomination to the committee supported by records. Your nominee may be the one selected for the year. Such men as Federal Judge Hastie for his work in the Virgin Islands, Congressman Arthur W. Mitchell for his fight against railroad jim crow, Editor Robert L. Vann for his political independence and Joe Louis or Henry Armstrong for achievements in the athletic world during 1938 are some of the names that come to mind.

24th Spingarn Medal Goes To Philly Singer

Miss Marian Anderson Honored For Musical Contributions

NEW YORK, N. Y.—Marian Anderson, world famous contralto, has been named to receive the Spingarn Medal for 1938 awarded annually by J. E. Spingarn, president of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, "for the highest or noblest achievement by an American Negro during the preceding year or years."

The formal statement of the committee declared:

"Marian Anderson has been chosen for her special achievement in the field of music. Equally with that achievement, which has won her world-wide fame as one of the greatest singers of our time, is her magnificent dignity as a human being. Her unassuming manner, which has not been changed by her phenomenal success, has added to the esteem not only of Marian Anderson as an individual but of the race to which she belongs."

Miss Anderson, who is the twenty-fourth recipient of the gold medal award since it was institutied in 1914 by Mr. Spingarn, will receive it formally on July 2 during the thirtieth annual conference of the N. A. A. C. P., which will be held in Richmond, Va.

Accepting the award in a telegram from Grand Forks, North Dakota where she appeared in a concert, Miss Anderson said:

"I deeply appreciate the significance of the act of the Spingarn medal committee in selecting me as medalist. It is my plan to remain in America this summer and I would be honored to come to Richmond July 2 for the presentation."

1938 MEDALIST

The National Association for the Advancement of Colored People announced this week the selection of Marian Anderson—one of the world's greatest singers,—as the winner of the 1938 Spingarn Medal, awarded annually to a member of the Race "for the highest and noblest achievement during the preceding year or years".

Comment that the selection is excellent is needless. Miss Anderson is the twenty-fourth recipient of the gold medal award since it was instituted in 1911. There is of course universal commendation of the awarding committee's choice.

Of the twenty-four Spingarn medalists there are two other women besides Miss Anderson. They are Mrs Mary B. Talbert and Mrs. Mary McLeod Bethune. Because of the narrower fields in which women occupy themselves the ratio of women winners of the award is notable and especially encouraging. The emergence of women in the authorship of novels, writers such as Zara Neal Thurston, Mercedes Gilbert and others will likely furnish candidates to be considered for the award.

MRS. ROOSEVELT TO PRESENT SPINGARN MEDAL TO CONTRALTO

NEW YORK, May 4—It was formally announced here today that Mrs. Roosevelt will present the 24th Spingarn medal to Marian Anderson at the closing session of the 30th annual conference of the N.A.A.C.P. on July 2 at Richmond, Va. The ceremonies will be held in the famous Mosque, largest and most beautiful of Richmond's auditoriums. It is probable that one or more of the radio chains will broadcast the presentation.

Publication of a rumor that Mrs. Roosevelt would make the presentation has inunduated the N. A. A. C. P. with requests for tickets of admission. Although the ceremony is more than two months away, individuals and groups from as far north as Boston and as far south as Atlanta have already signified their intention of going to Richmond for the occasion.

Mrs. Roosevelt's Speech On Marian Anderson Will Be Broadcast Over Two Radio Networks

Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt's speech in which she will make the presentation of the Spingarn gold medal award to Marian Anderson at the thirtieth annual convention of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People in Richmond, Va., July 2, will be broadcast over both the National Broadcasting system's blue network and the Columbia chain.

This was the announcement made here Saturday by officials of the Association. The National Broadcasting Company will devote half an hour to the broadcast, from 5 to 5:30 p. m., Eastern daylight time it was said. The Columbia chain was believed to have settled upon a half-hour broadcast also.

The medal, which the noted singer will receive at the hands of the First Lady, is awarded annually by J. E. Spingarn, president of the N. A. A. C. P., to the American of African descent, who has accomplished most during the previous year.

A caravan of more than twelve cars, loaded with delegates from the Oklahoma branches of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, will descend on the Association's convention which will be held in Richmond, Va., June 27-July 2, officials of the organization disclosed.

Rev. Settle Is Candidate For Spingarn Medal

COLUMBUS, O., Sept. 21 (ANP)—Rev. Glenn T. Settle of Cleveland, founder and director of the radio program, "Wings Over Jordan," was boosted as a candidate for the 1939 Spingarn medal in a letter sent to Oswald Garrison Villard of New York, chairman of the award committee, by the Frontier club of this city. A. P. Bentley is president, and J. S. Hines Jr., secretary of the local group.

In supporting Rev. Settle's nomination, the local club points out: " 'Wings over Jordan' is one of the three most popular radio features in the nation today, and is broadcast by short wave to Europe and South America. A faithful and sympathetic interpretation of Negro life enters many homes each week. Eminent Negro leaders, skillfully interpreted Negro music and many sound facts are presented weekly to millions of listeners. There is abundant evidence to show that this program is educating millions, is softening racial prejudices, and has gained unprecedented respect and tolerance for Negro Americans in all quarters."

Mrs. Roosevelt Gives Medal To Singer Denied D.A.R. Hall

RICHMOND, VA., July 2.—(AP)—Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt presented the Spingarn medal today to Marian Anderson, negro contralto, and told the singer "your achievement far transcends any race or creed."

The medal is given annually by Joel E. Spingarn, president of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, to the American negro who "shall have made the highest achievement during the preceding year or years in any honorable field of human endeavor."

Mrs. Roosevelt told a crowd of 5,000 persons in persenting the medal at the annual conference of the N. A. A. C. P. that Marian Anderson "had the courage to meet many difficulties" and that "her modesty and her great gift are well known." The negro singer appeared on a musical program for King George and Queen Elizabeth at the White House during the Washington visit of the British rulers.

In accepting the award the singer said she realized the "significance it carries" and declared she felt it "a signal honor" to have received it "from the hands of our first lady, who is not only a first lady in name, but in every deed."

The ceremony recalled the incident of last Spring when the Daughters of the American Revolution denied Marian Anderson the use of their Constitution Hall in Washington for a concert April 9, and Mrs. Roosevelt's subsequent resignation from the D. A. R.

Shortly after the incident the President's wife, although refusing to name the group, said she was resigning from "an organization" because she could not actively fight an action by it which she disapproved.

Frederick Hand, Constitution Hall manager, said the hall had been booked almost a year before by the National Symphony Orchestra for the afternoon of April 9. Sponsors of the Anderson concert sought the hall for that night. Hand said that when the hall was booked for one event it was not given to another organization on the same date.

In a brief address preceding the medal presentation the first lady asserted that "people cannot grow up good citizens unless we provide good environment for all the people.

"In the end, the price we pay for people not fit to be citizens," she declared, "is far greater than the sacrafice we must make to provide decent enviroment."

First Lady Pays Tribute To Marian Anderson In Richmond Talk

RICHMOND, Va.—(AP)— Paying tribute to Marian Anderson's "Modesty and Great Gift," Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt yesterday presented the Negro contralto the Spingarn medal of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

The singer "had the courage to meet many difficulties" and her "modesty and her great gift are well known," the first lady said in presenting the award, given annually by Joel E. Spingarn, president of the N. A. A. C. P., to the American Negro who "shall have made the highest achievement during the preceding year or years in any honorable field of human endeavor."

Miss Anderson said she felt it "a signal honor" to have received the medal "from the hands of our first lady, who is not only a first lady in name, but in every deed." Some 5,000 persons witnessed the ceremony, which took place at a mass meeting concluding the N. A. A. C. P.'s weeklong conference.

Mrs. Roosevelt told Miss Anderson, "your achievement far transcends any race or creed. My thanks and good wishes to you, Miss Anderson."

The president's wife made no mention of her resignation last Spring from the Daughters of the American Revolution after that organization denied Miss Anderson the use of Constitution Hall in Washington for a concert, April 9.

Mrs. Roosevelt and Miss Anderson Make History

President's Wife Pays High Tribute To Singer In Presenting Her With Medal at Meeting In Virginia Capital

By P. BERNARD YOUNG, Jr.

RICHMOND, Va.—Two great and gracious women, one white and one black, met here Sunday afternoon in the greatest auditorium of the capital of the old Confederacy and made history.

One was Mrs. Franklin Delano Roosevelt and the other was Miss Marian Anderson. The occasion was the formal presentation to the celebrated contralto of the Spingarn Medal and the climax meeting of the 30th annual conference of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

Inside the massive hall was jammed to its capacity of 5,000 and outside an equally huge throng alternately listened and cheered as the proceedings came to them over loudspeakers.

FIRST LADY'S TRIBUTE

The magnificent Mrs. Roosevelt, her voice ringing with sincerity, spoke simply: "I am happy to have the opportunity to present this medal to Miss Anderson. Her marvelous voice is a gift, but she proved herself worthy of that great gift. She has rare courage, great dignity, and fine modesty."

Miss Anderson, speaking with a voice that was as thrilling in its delicate modulations and nuaces of emphasis as is her singing voice, responded in kind: "It is a signal honor to receive this medal from the hands of our First Lady, who is not only a First Lady in name but in every noble deed."

EVENT BROADCAST

The audience, augmented by perhaps millions who listened in over coast-to-coast networks of the two major radio chains, thundered its ovation in acknowledgement of the liberality and democracy of Mrs. Roosevelt and the strikingly modest acceptance by Miss Anderson of this latest token of her greatness.

The air was pregnant with drama and one could tell that the tremendous meaning of that brief hour was felt by the massed thousands present.

Movie cameras whirred as floodlights were trained on the principals of the occasion and the hundreds of notables occupying platform seats, photographers' bulbs flashed as literally hundreds of still pictures for newspapers were being made, and at the press table newsmen of both races scribbled avidly each word said and noted each incident.

GOVERNOR PRESENT

The audience included Governor and Mrs. James H. Price and his staff, the rich and the poor, the fortunate and the forgotten—all there because two great women, beloved and respected, were there.

The thousands outside were not satisfied with the necessarily brief appearance of Mrs. Roosevelt and Miss Anderson on a balcony following the program, and beseiged Mrs. Roosevelt, Miss Anderson, and her attorney, Tax Commissioner Hubert T. Delany of New York City, when they left by the stage door.

BESIEGED BY CROWD

When Miss Anderson, delayed by autograph seekers on the stage, got outside Mrs. Roosevelt had been driven away and apparently most of the policemen either had left with her or gone to unsnarl traffic.

The three or four still at the stage door were almost helpless and it was at least ten minutes before Miss Anderson and Commissioner Delany could go the short distance from the door to her car. Minutes after she finally got into her sedan, it was still surrounded fifty deep on all sides and unable to move away.

Mrs. Roosevelt Says Singer's Achievement Transcends Any Race

Kansas City Call

RICHMOND, Va.—(ANP)—Highlighted by a message of greeting at the opening session from President Roosevelt and the award on the closing day of the Spingarn medal to famed Contralto Marian Anderson by the gracious First Lady of the Land, the thirtieth annual convention of the N. A. A. C. P. ended its six-day session here Sunday, July 2, before 5,000 persons at the great Moxque auditorium, showplace of Richmond.

Five Thousand Watch

Mrs. Roosevelt presented the Spingarn medal to Miss Anderson at the final session of the convention Sunday afternoon.

Standing upon the stage of the famous Richmond Mosque with 5,000 spectators looking on in rapt attention, while 4,000 or 5,000 gathered in Monroe park outside listened through loud speakers and countless thousands heard the program over the radios; these two women, one white and the other dark, presented a focal point in race relations for the moment.

In the background of every auditor's consciousness was the recent ban on Miss Anderson's singing in Constitution hall in Washington owned by the Daughters of the American Revolution; an action which led to the resignation of Mrs. Roosevelt from the body.

On Sunday, in a southern city and with the world looking on the "first lady" gave America a true lesson in real democracy as she appeared publicly to do honor to this black woman.

"Glad to Present Award"

"I am glad to have been chosen to present this award," Mrs. Roosevelt told Miss Anderson. "Your achievement transcends race or color. A marvelous voice is peraps not personal achievement, because it is a gift, but you have been worthy of it, have worked to improve it, and have surrounded it with great dignity and modesty. This award is given in recognition of your perfection of that art. You have brought to the country as a whole not only much enjoyment but great beauty."

The "first lady" told the audience that Miss Anderson "had the courage to meet many difficulties" and that "her modesty and her great gift are well known."

Miss Anderson accepted the award, and as she turned toward Mrs. Roosevelt said, "I consider it a great honor to accept or rather to receive the Spingarn medal. I appreciate the significance of it, and feel it a special honor to receive it from the hands of one who has contributed so much that is worthwhile to achievement in this country."

Call

Congratulating the N.A.A.C.P. upon its accomplishment during its convention, of which this was one of the closing sessions, and praising the choir, Miss Anderson asked the entire congregation to join her in singing the spiritual, "We Are Climbing Jacob's Ladder." It was not the voice of the great diva which swelled out upon the air, but the lusty voice of a bronzed American, filled with unchecked emotions and justifiable pride which poured forth from thousands of microphones.

"Every round goes higher and higher," she sang. "Soldier of the Cross."

7-7-39

The presentation of the medal by Mrs. Roosevelt was more significant because of the D. A. R. controversy last spring when the singer was barred from Constitution hall by the Daughters of the American Revolution. Nation-wide protest followed and the incident was climaxed by an out-of-door concert on Easter Sunday.

Still another feature, but not on the convention program, was the excitement Wednesday night at conference headquarters, Fifth Street Baptist church, over the Louis-Galento fight in New York.

Without general knowledge, someone installed a radio and loud speaker in the church auditorium, and suddenly as a panel discussion was taking place and delegates were properly absorbed in the interesting topic—the fight was tuned in and soon cries for "Joe Louis" were heard on every side.

A few who probably thought the broadcast ill-timed went outside, but most of the big audience seemed delighted and remained as the ringside description of the short battle came over the air.

Some said that those who left the hall kept an anxious ear cocked at partly-opened doors, completely lost their indifference when Galento floored Louis in the hectic third round. All was forgiven when Joe was announced the winner by a TKO, and the prankster who installed the radio was given an unofficial vote of thanks.

Ample accomodations for the more than 600 delegates attending the big conference had been arranged by the committee in charge and all business details of the meetings were handled with ease and facility. The programs of the various sessions were smooth-running and not boresome, and speeches by celebrities and nationally-known N.A.A.C.P. officials were for the most part restricted to 30 minutes. Fifth Street church, commodious and inviting, has all facilities for large conventions and numerous small rooms for conferences and discussions.

500 Delegates Attend

At one session there was serious discussion of whether or not commissions should be paid to workers in membership campaigns. The opinions expressed, endorsed prizes and honor awards, frowned on cash prizes, many declaring: "This noble work should be done without expectation of personal reward."

S. H. Dykstra of the U. S. Department of Labor made an interesting talk at the Wednesday morning session, telling frankly of the Negro workers' handicaps in private and government work. He told one of Dean Pickens' stories: How American whites are more disturbed at seeing a Negro in a dining room "eating his own soup," than they are about the Negro coming from the kitchen "with his thumb in their soup."

The panel discussion on "Economic Security" by Attorneys Charles Houston, James Tyson and others, was interesting. Atty. Tyson argued strongly that the only security for the Negro must be under federal management of projects and of security administration. His idea seemed to impress the delegates.

Leaders Speak

Of the others on the regular program, Eugene Davidson, of Washington, D. C., active head of the New Negro alliance, which is trying to enforce these laws, made a convincing speech.

Dean William Pickens, N.A.A.C.P. director of branches, presided at the Friday morning business session which considered at length the many problems attendant on the establishment of local branches throughout the country.

Climax of the conference came on Sunday at the Mosque when with Mrs. Daisy E. Lampkin of Pittsburgh, presiding, Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt presented the Spingarn award to Marian Anderson. A featured speaker on this occasion was Walter White, nationally famous executive secretary of the N.A.A.C.P.

MARIAN ANDERSON, internationally known artist, third woman to win the NAACP medal for greatest achievement.

MARIAN ANDERSON SPINGARN MEDALIST

NEW YORK, Jan. 23—Marian Anderson, world famous contralto, has been named to receive the Spingarn Medal for 1938 awarded annually by J. E. Spingarn president of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

The formal statement of the committee declared:

"Marian Anderson has been chosen for her special achievement in the field of music. Equally with that achievement which has won her world-wide fame as one of the greatest singers of our time, is her magnificent dignity as a human being. Her unassuming manner, which has not been changed by her phenomenal success, has added to the esteem not only of Marian Anderson as an individual but of the race to which she belongs."

Miss Anderson, who is the twenty-fourth recipient of the gold medal award since it was instituted in 1914 by Mr. Spingarn, will receive it formally on July 2 during the thirtieth annual conference of the N.A.A.C.P. which will be held in Richmond, Va.

SPINGARN AWARD

Accepting the award in a telegram from Grand Forks, North Dakota, where she appeared in a concert, Miss Anderson said:

"I deeply appreciate the significance of the act of the Spingarn medal committee in selecting me as medalist. It is my plan to remain in America this summer and I would be honored to come to Richmond July 2 for the presentation."

Other recipients of the annual Spingarn Award in chronological order since 1915 include E. E. Just, Col. Charles Young, Harry T. Burleigh, William Stanley Braithwaite, Archibald H. Grimke, William E. B. DuBois, Charles S. Gilpin, Mary B. Talbert, Dr. George W. Carver, Roland Hayes, James Weldon Johnson, Carter G. Woodson, Anthony Overton, Charles W. Chestnutt, Mordecai W. Johnson, Henry A. Hunt, Richard B. Harrison, Robert R. Moton, Max Yergan, William T. B. Williams, Mary McLeod Bethune, John Hope, and Walter White.

MARIAN ANDERSON

The Spingarn Medal Award Committee has wrought well in giving the Spingarn Medal for 1938 to Marian Anderson, the world-famous contralto. This selection will go far to make up for some of the less happy selections in recent years for which there seemed little reason.

It would be trite to say that Miss Anderson deserves the award when her triumphs and achievements are common knowledge wherever people read or patronize the arts. There would have been great difficulty in selecting a more appropriate Spingarn Medalist.

It is to be hoped, however, that in the future the Committee will make more varied selections. Artists and educators aplenty have received the gold medal, but so far the Committee has found no physician, dentist, publisher or clergyman, only two scientists and only one business man whose achievements were considered high or noble.

This seems very strange to those who have kept abreast of Negro progress since the awards began in 1915.

MEDAL WINNER: The highest praises of the music critics have already been lavished upon Marian Anderson, and the public has endorsed the verdict by crowding even the standing room at her concerts. Last week the deep-voiced contralto, who usually sings Negro spirituals as encores after a repertoire of Bach, Schubert and other classics, was awarded one of the highest honors of her race. It was the Spingarn Medal for 1938, given by President J. E. Spingarn of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, for "the highest or noblest achievement by an American Negro."

Miss Anderson was born in Philadelphia, and there she used to sing in the Junior Choir of the neighborhood church. The unusual quality and range of her voice attracted attention; she became soloist with the Philadelphia Philharmonic Symphony Society and later, after winning a competition against 300 other singers, with the New York Philharmonic. A triumphant tour of Europe followed, bringing the ultimate in praise from Arturo Toscanini: "A voice like hers occurs once in a hundred years."

Spingarn Medal for 1938 Is Awarded to Negro Contralto

The Spingarn Medal for 1938 has been awarded to Miss Marian Anderson, contralto, according to an announcement yesterday. The medal, the annual gift of J. E. Spingarn, president of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People is given for "the highest or noblest achievement by an American Negro during the preceding year or years."

"Marian Anderson has been chosen for her special achievement in the field of music," the announcement said. "Equally with that achievement, which has won her world-wide fame as one of the greatest singers of our time, is her magnificent dignity as a human being."

The medal will be presented July 2 at the association's convention at Richmond, Va.

Marian Anderson To Get Spingarn Medal This Year

Marian Anderson, world famous Negro contralto, has been awarded the Spingarn Medal which will be presented to her in Richmond, Va., on July 2, the last day of the one week's conference of the National Association for the Advancement of the Colored People. Miss Anderson will be the 24th recipient for this medal which is awarded each year for the most outstanding achievement. She is one of the supreme masters of music and although her achievement extends beyond her own race it seemed fitting on this occasion to give the public an opportunity to envisage other contributions made by her race. So, during the week of the conference beginning the 27th of June an exhibition of 150 Negro composers will be displayed. They will range from the 18th century to the present time.

The earliest work shown will be that of a Chevelier Saint Gorges. a native of Guadaloupe, who was famous in the second half of the 18th century in France both as a violinist and the greatest swordsman of his day. On display will be an opera of Antonio Carlos Gomez, a Brazilian, whose operas have been played at La Scala in Milan and the Metropolitan Opera House in New York. Included also is a work of Joseph White, a Cuban musician, who was a concert master at the court of Empress Eugenie.

Other exhibits will be works of such recent composers as Samuel Coleridge-Taylor, Harry T. Burleigh, William L. Dawson, R. Nathaniel Dett, Carl Diton, Harry Lawrence Freeman, J. Rosemond Johnson, Edward H. Margetson, Florence Bond Price, William Grant Still, Clarence Cameron White; a number of composers whose works are a common American heritage such as James Bland's "Carry Me Back to Old Virginnny," Samuel Lucas' "Grandfather's Clock," and other similar works. The jazz, rag and blues, all Negro creations, will be represented by such composers as W. C. Handy, Ford Dabney, Duke Ellington, Cab Calloway and others

This is the 30th annual convention of the association and will be widely attended by leaders of both races. About 1,000 delegates from local branches, youth councils and college chapters are expected to be in attendance. The program has many headline speakers, experts in various fields including employment, health, housing, political action, legal defense work, education and branch administration problems.

The First Lady Presents a Medal

Four weeks ago hostess to Great Britain's King and Queen, Mrs. Roosevelt turned up in Richmond Sunday to present the Spingarn medal to Marian Anderson, famed Negro contralto. The occasion for the presentation was the thirtieth annual conference of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People which has just concluded its sessions at the Richmond Mosque.

The medal is awarded annually to the American Negro who "shall have made the highest achievement during the preceding year or years in any honorable field of human endeavor." It went this year to one whose achievement in an honorable field of human endeavor, as Mrs. Roosevelt observed, "far transcends any race or creed," and to one who, as an incident of that achievement, became, earlier this year, the innocent center of a deplorable controversy.

The Constitution Hall incident need not at this time be reviewed, but it is in point to observe how Time and Justice have once more rectified the balance in favor of the artist spurned. From great bronze doors slammed in her face, Marian Anderson stepped to the knees of the dead Lincoln and sang in the open air to a hushed multitude. Perhaps because of the affront, as much as because of her great gift of song, she was invited to contribute to the evening of American music that the White House arranged for the royal visitors from Great Britain. Undoubtedly because of the affront, Mrs. Roosevelt agreed to come to Richmond to present her with the Spingarn medal.

The actual presentation was simple—not the slightest allusion on either side to the late unpleasantness, no speech-making. Just a gracious tribute to a fine artist and a modest few words of gratitude for the honor received. But the simplicity of the episode belied its high drama. It was another chapter, and a finely significant one, in the long story of human error and redress, of human weakness and strength—in this particular installment, the story of a great artist and her "courage to meet many difficulties," and of a courageous, indomitable First Lady of the Land who would not allow the arbitrary aggravation of those difficulties to pass without rebuke.

Medal Presented By Mrs. Roosevelt

Negro Singer Praised at Richmond Meeting for Achievements

RICHMOND, Va., July 2—(AP)—Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt presented the Spingarn medal today to Marion Anderson, negro contralto, and told the singer "your achievement far transcends any race or creed." The medal is given annually by Joel E. Spingarn, president of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, to the American negro who "shall have made the highest achievement during the preceding year or years in any honorable field of human endeavor."

Mrs. Roosevelt told a crowd of 5,000 persons in presenting the medal at the annual conference of the N.A.A.C.P that Miss Anderson "had the courage to meet many difficulties" and that "her modesty and her great gift are well known." The negro singer appeared on a musical program for King George and Queen Elizabeth at the White House during the Washington visit of the British rulers.

In accepting the award the singer said she realized the "significance it carries" and declared she felt it "a signal honor" to have received it "from the hands of our first lady, who is not only a first lady in name, but in every deed."

The ceremony recalled the incident of last spring when the Daughters of the American Revolution denied Miss Anderson the use of their Constitution hall in Washington for a concert April 9, and Mrs. Roosevelt's subsequent resignation from the D.A.R.

Shortly after the incident the president's wife, although refusing to name the group, said she was resigning from "an organization" because she could not actively fight an action by it which she disapproved.

Frederick Hand, Constitution hall manager, said the hall had been booked almost a year before by the national symphony orchestra for the afternoon of April 9. Sponsors of the Anderson concert sought the hall for that night. Hand said that when the hall was booked for one event it was not given to another organization on the same date.

STAMP TO HONOR BOOKER T. WASHINGTON

To Be Honored By Government

THE POST OFFICE Department has anonunced that it will issue 35 postage stamps honoring famous Americans including Booker T. Washington, above, founder of Tuskegee Institute.

It will mark the first time a colored person has been so honored, officials said.

Stamp To Honor Booker T.

Farley Praises R. R. Wright, Sr. Stamp Sponsor

PHILADELPHIA—Major R. R. Wright, president of the Citizens and Southern Bank and Trust Company of Philadelphia, last week was commended by Postmaster General James A. Farley and Third Assistant Postmaster General Ramsey S. Black for his interest as one of the sponsors for the issuance of the Booker T. Washington postage stamp.

Major Wright

Dr. Washington is the first member of his race to be honored by the government by placing his picture in a series of stamps honoring famous Americans.

Following a telegram from Major Wright thanking him for selecting Dr. Washington, Mr. Farley wrote Major Wright on July 20 as follows:

"I want you to know how much I appreciate your telegram of today with reference to my authorization of the issuance of a Booker T. Washington postage stamp.

"From the time this series of Famous American postage stamps was first under consideration, I felt that Booker T. Washington should by all means be included and it is my belief that, by thus honoring him, we will bring to the attention of everyone in the country, in a most significant way, one of the eminent educators in the history of this country and one who has reflected outstanding credit upon the colored race."

BLACK WRITES

Mr. Black, who has charge of the issuance of the stamps wrote Major Wright as follows:

"I, too, am glad that your efforts to secure a stamp for your race have been crowned with success. My deputy, Mr. North, has told me of your interest over a period of years and I have also seen your correspondence on the subject.

"You have every reason to feel jubilant and I regret that it was not possible for me to be in Philadelphia, to take part in your celebration last night."

Postmaster-General Farley Proud To Issue Stamp In Honor Of "Booker T"

Cabinet Member Sends Word To Dr. Henry Allen Boyd Praising Maj. R. R. Wright For Sponsoring National Tribute To Renowned Educator

There will be a Booker T. Washington postal stamp issued by the United States Postal Authorities in the near future. The information reached Nashville this week in a special communication sent to Henry Allen Boyd, vice president of the National Negro Bankers Association, Secretary of the National Negro Press Association, Secretary of the Sunday School Congress and the Publishing Board. The communication came directly from Philadelphia and reports the successful work of Major R. R. Wright, who was one of the sponsors of the stamp and of the committee headed by Rev. W. C. Willaims as chairman. Postmaster General Farley's communication to the committee under date of July 20th said, "I want you to know how much I appreciate your telegram of today with reference to my authorization of the issuance of a Booker T. Washington postage stamp. From the time this series of Famous American postage stamps was first under consideration, I felt that Booker T. Washington should by all means be included and it is my belief that, by thus honoring him, we will bring to the attention of everyone in the country, in a most significant way, one of the eminent educators in the history of this country and one who has reflected outstanding credit upon the colored race."

Many have been the favorable comments since the information got out that there would be a Booker T. Washington postal stamp and every indication here in this city points to the fact that ther first sale will be, just to the the race members alone, more than ten million, a tremendous income and revenue for the Postal Department and yet practically every one of the first issue will be used, said the Rev. Mr. Boyd, as souvenirs and keepsakes to hand down to unborn generations.

Washington First of Race With Picture On Stamp

WASHINGTON, D. C.—(ANP)—The first Negro to be honored by the United States government by having his picture on a postage stamp will be Booker T. Washington, regarded by many as the greatest educator the race has produced.

In a national survey, the name of Dr. Washington was one of the ranking participants, and accordingly Postmaster General Farley has designated Dr. Washington as one whose picture will go on a new issue of stamps.

William Bray, secretary to Mr. Farley, could not say definitely just what denomination stamp would bear the Washington likeness, but in all probability it will be one of the smaller denominations.

That this long deferred recognition of the distinguished talents of Dr. Washington is a justification of his educational theories is the belief of many and proves that his influence has been felt through the years and by hundreds of thousands of persons.

Upon his return from Europe, Postmaster General Farley will pass upon the designs submitted to this postage stamp and issue orders for the printing.

A similar movement to obtain recognition and honor for some outstanding Negro was begun several years ago, but there was nothing more than an idea impressed upon the minds of the postal authorities.

Upon his return from Europe, Postmaster General Farley will pass upon the designs submitted to this postage stamp and issue orders for the printing.

Education Specialist Stresses Preference of Character Building to Training Intellect

PINE BLUFF, Ark.—Dr. A. W. Caliver, [illegible] representative of Negro Education in the Bureau of Education, Washington, D. C., who before his appointment under President Hoover's administration was Dean of Fisk University, addressed the Faculty and Student Body of Arkansas State College at the regular Vesper Service Hour taking for his subject "Old Challenges for a New Day."

Dr. Caliver pointed out that "old demands must be re-interpreted and trails -- a re-directing of funds from various philanthropic foundations---all are presenting a challenge to youth to be ready to fill their places." The speaker urged the Student relative to the acquisition of "knowledge' and "skill"---a sense of precision and accurateness needed to cope with an age that thinks minutely.

"We need youthful leaders with imagination," said Dr. Caliver. "Numberless resources exist in our immediate environment sufficiently to enrich our lives both materially and spiritually---Imagination is needed to explore the possibilities of these commonplace things about us. It rests with youth today to construct---to build---to dream---Get hold of the people with whom you mingle and let your influence be for their betterment. One can not be a talking leader and pull the people upward---one must be a "doing" leader. One must become "mature" intellectually and socially and be a possessor of character. Discover those values that will serve as ballasts and be a good follower."

In concluding the speaker charged the Student Body to "Remember as pursuing studies here that these old virtues need revitalizing to be able to meet the demands of the job which looms ahead."

FARM LIFE CALLED BEST FOR NEGROES

Special to THE CONSTITUTION.

MAYFIELD, Ga., July 26.—The second session of the Georgia State College summer school at Log Cabin Community Center has ended one week of operation. Over 100 teachers have been enrolled, which represents an increase over previous years.

Counties represented are Appling, Bibb, Brooks, Bullock, Butts, Chatham, Coffee, Colquit, Cook, Coweta, Decatur, Echols, Emmanuel, Floyd, Fulton, Glynn, Greene, Hancock, Lanier, Lowden, Marion, Murray, Muscogee, McDuffie, Newton, Pearl, Pike, Randolph, Richmond, Screven, Stewart, Taliaferro, Walker, Ware, Warren, Washington, Wilcox.

President B. F. Hubert spoke to a group of student-teachers, community citizens and faculty members at the first regular vesper service. He stated that farm life, correctly and intelligently planned, is the best way by which independence can be gained by the masses of negroes in Georgia.

Activities started will tie the community with the school, and related educational theories to actual community problems. A rural demonstration school under the direction of the department of education has been established.

Summer students will observe how a one-teacher school can be efectively operated, using the resources of the immediate environment to teach health, worthy home membership, citizenship, problems of earning a living and the effective use of leisure time.

The department of rural education, home economics, art and music are co-operating as a unit to organize the members of this community in a "Rural Institute," to make rural life more attractive.

The Log Cabin Community is a unique experiment. The Georgia State College Summer school, located in this setting, plans to utilize the resources and experiences of this community to carry out its objectives.

L.S.U. Will Hold White and Colored Summer Schools

University, La., June 20.—Louisiana will hold seventeen white and four colored Folk Schools during the 1939 summer season, announces Miss Mary Mims, community organizer, Louisiana State university agricultural extension division, and organizer of the schools. The first Folk School will be held June 29-30 at Leesville, Vernon parish, and the concluding one will be in Washington parish on August 4-5 at Franklinton.

Louisiana inaugurated the Folk Schools some eleven years ago when Miss Mims returned from a study of community work in Denmark and established a community school in Rayville in 1938. Since that time many parishes have held folk schools under the guidance of their farm and home demonstration agents and other individuals in allied fields.

"The purpose of the folk school, says Miss Mims, is to awaken hearts and minds of individuals to the desire of becoming intelligent participants in building their community, their parish, their state and their nation. Through these schools we can acquaint the people with the opportunities offered them by the services of workers connected with the Farm Bureau, Extension, AAA, Farm Security Administration, Library Service and other such agencies that have for their purpose the betterment of rural life.

When folk schools were first begun the workers in charge of them outlined and planned the programs. They decided on the subjects which they thought the people should be interested in. There has been a reversal in form throughout the decade of the existence of folk schools in Louisiana. Now the people back in the parishes suggests the subjects to be taught. Miss Mims says it is very gratifying the way the people have shown the initiative and interest to assist with drawing up program plans.

The schedule of schools follows: Leesville, Vernon parish, June 29-30; Jonesboro, Jackson parish, July 5, 6, 7; Winnfield, Winn parish, July 6-7; Shreveport, Caddo parish, July 6-7; (1 white; 3 colored); Coushatta, Red River parish, July 12-13; Oak Grove, West Carroll parish, July 12-13; Monticello, East Carroll parish, July 13-14; Many, Sabine parish, July 13-14; Colfax, Grant parish, July 13-14, (1 white and 1 colored); Benton, Bossier parish, July 18-19-20; Ruston, Lincoln parish, July 20-21; Columbia, Caldwell parish, July 20-21; Jena, LaSalle parish, August 2-3; Minden, Webster parish, August 3-4; Natchitoches, Natchitoches parish, August 3-4; Franklinton, Washington parish, August 4.

NEGRO SUMMER SCHOOL HERE SHOWS INCREASE

Hattiesburg School Discontinued—Dormitories At Rust Filled—Others Coming

It is the policy of the State Department of Education to discontinue Negro summer schools where the attendance steadily diminishes. Last year 1938 the summer school at Hattiesburg continued to fall off in attendance and as a consequence has been discontinued for 1939. On the other hand Holly Springs which had an enrollment of 400 in 1937 had an enrollment of 500 in 1938. Not only is the summer school for Negroes continued at Holly Springs but the increased enrollment at the first session which has increased 50 per cent over last year indicates an enrollment this year of more than 600. Already the dormitories at Rust College are full and many private families are called in to help take care of the incoming teachers.

The applications for the second session are coming in so rapidly that it will require the full capacities of dormitories of both Rust College and M. I. College to care for them. The leadership conference at the M. I. College closes July 24th after which the spacious dormitories of M. I. will be available.

Dean J. R. Reynolds of Rust College and Prof. T. H. Jones of M. I. College associate director are making a strenuous canvass to arouse teachers who have never been to summer school before to be sure to attend the first state summer school under the new plan of certification to acquaint themselves with the many advantages under this new law.

The merchants and business men of Holly Springs are responding heartily to the advertising campaign to awaken the teachers in the nearby counties to the necessity of preparing themselves to be better teachers to meet the more stringt requirements of the new order.

Caliver To Make Studies In Texas

Defender
10-28-39

HOUSTON, Texas, Oct. 27—Dr. Ambrose Caliver, senior specialist in the department of education at Washington is to make two distinctive studies pertaining to members of the Race in Texas.

One study will deal with the state department of education as it relates to members of the Race and the other will be a survey of higher education in the state with a view toward exploring the possibilities of co-operation with the various institutions.

25 To 30 Jeanes Supervisors In Each of Southern States

IN EACH of the Southern states there are from twenty to thirty-five Jeanes supervisors whose functions are such that they are practically assistant county superintendents of education in charge of Negro schools. These highly trained women exercise a high degree of authority in selecting teachers and in curricula making. All of the afore-mentioned workers have care for carrying on their work, for which they receive upkeep wholly or in part and their status gives them both prestige and influence in their county and state.

Passing from the official group to the opportunities which are open as private operators many examples are convincing that hard, conscientious work with an objective has its reward. Of the 654,000 Negro farm operators in the cotton states, 122,000 are owners of 10,533,682 acres of land valued at $207,932,597. These farms vary in size from two or three acres to as much as 4,000. Most of the owners made small down cash payments or else began as tenants or renters.

What these men have done, others can and are doing. Some years ago, a farmer in Texas started with less than $100.00 and when he died three years ago he left his daughter, who is a Wiley graduate, to manage the 4,000-acre farm and she, with the aid of her mother, is doing an excellent job.

Contrast this with an offer which was made to a couple of graduates in agriculture to become managers of a large farm on a basis which assured them a larger share of the returns. They said they "didn't care to leave the city." There are many opportunities for strong, well-trained college men to organize farmers into marketing cooperatives as well as to become managers on a share basis with work stock, implements, etc., provided.

Through the AAA, the government is helping the Southern farmer to increase income and yield through three types of payments and that alone gives an edge to the farmer over that which was available six years ago. Aside from the fact that there is great need for finding new employment outlets another reason of equal importance is expressed in the recent report of National Emergency Council to President Roosevelt on economic conditions in the South. The report says:

"As long as the agricultural worker cannot gain assurance of a continuing existence on the farm, he remains a threat to the job, the wages, and the working conditions of the industrial worker." The urgent need to help the farmer towards that "assurance" is trained leadership and many of our colleges and universities are properly equipped to help supply that need.

The annual conference of Teachers of Vocational Agriculture was held last weekend at Virginia State College, Petersburg in the midst of the annual three weeks' short course. The National Organization of New Farmers of America will hold its fifth annual convention at Bordentown, N. J. August 5-9. Members of the Virginia Branch of the N.E.A. are sending a poultry judging and demonstrating team to the Seventh World's Poultry Congress in Cleveland, August 3-5.

THE PASSING of the blacksmith shop in many farm communities has made it necessary for farmers themselves to do much of the repair and maintenance work on their machinery. Many of them have sought practical instruction from their county agent or other workers in the Federal and State extension service. Some communities have held machinery repair schools.

Farmers in 30,000 communities last year sought assistance along this line and in the field of agricultural engineering. County agents report the subjects of most importance to farmers are those of machinery repair, irrigation, terracing, and farm building.

Almost 80,000 farmers reported that they followed Extension Service recommendations in constructing new buildings, while 85,000 were assisted by county agents and engineers in planning repairs and remodeling.

County extension agents gave information or assistance on installation of 8,800 sewage systems, 15,000 water systems, and 101,300 lighting systems, principally in farm homes. Work of this type is a part of the broad extension program to improve rural health and living conditions.

H. L. Trigg Is Heard at Forum

DURHAM, N.C. — "We must adjust ourselves to the economic order in this country," H. L. Trigg, supervisor of colored high schools in North Carolina, told a group of North Carolina employees and officials at the weekly forum last week.

Speaking on the subject, "The Negro and Economic Survival," Mr. Trigg said:

H. L. TRIGG

Outside Economic Equation

"The Negro is hardly in the economic order of this country. There is no large scale planning in the economic system for him," he declared. In his only reference to education, the speaker said: "Education must articulate with a life of activity, if it is to be effective."

Painting a picture of the economic condition of colored citizens, Mr. Trigg said:

"If the Negro is to be secure he must be able to support and control. These are the first two principles in the economic life of any group of people. He pointed out that the ownership and control of business and industrial enterprises, which will create more jobs for the unemployed thousands, is the only solution to the problems we face."

Booker Washington Addition Named For Negro Supervisor

The new PWA-city school financed gymnasium under construction at Booker Washington school was named the "C. A. Johnson school center" by the school board at its February meeting yesterday afternoon at the schools administration building, 1311 Marion street.

"At the urgent request of the students at the Booker Washington high school, the board named the building," A. C. Flora, city schools superintendent, said today.

The building will be used as a general activities center for the negro schools of the city, its principal use other than for sports being as an auditorium. Collapsable seats will be arranged to convert the building into an auditorium for school exercises plays, and other purposes. Only Carver among the negro schools now has an auditorium.

C. A. Johnson, after whom the gymnasium has been named, is supervisor of the negro schools in the city, a post he has held for several years.

It was intended to leave the gymnasium unnamed, as a part of the Booker Washington high school plant, but the petition of the students at the school to honor their supervisor decided the board to name the building.

The County Superintendent of Education J. C. Holler was present and commended the schools on the progress being made in this county.

The visiting delegates were introduced by Alice Anderson and by S. C. Perry of the local schools, who gave reports on the physical and the educational set-up of schools throughout the state.

Negro Rights Upheld At Teachers' Conclave

By JOHN LOVELL, Jr.

BUFFALO, N. Y., —(ANP)— The principle of the Gaines case fight, the struggle to destroy differentials in teachers' salaries throughout the states based on race, the whole body of discrimination which resulted in the Marian Anderson incident, and the unremitting push toward an anti-lynching bill were all enthusiastically endorsed by the American Federation of Teachers in their annual convention at the Hotel Buffalo here, Aug. 21 to 25. Thirty-three thousand American teachers of trade union and liberal persuasion comprise the federation. Professor George S. Counts, noted educator of Columbia University Teachers college, was named national president for 1939-40.

Doxey A. Wilkerson, professor at Howard university, was re-elected national vice president-at-large by an overwhelming majority over Miss Layle Lane of New York. The convention greatly applauded Professor Wilkerson's plea for federal aid, especially for Negroes. Following its slogan, "Education for Democracy—Democracy in Education," it agreed with him that a breakdown in opportunities for Negro education meant a complete breakdown in American democracy. It also endorsed the plan submitted by Miss Goldie Ervin of Philadelphia for more insenitive work among administrators, parents and children to the end of cooperative thinking and cooperative living. Miss Ervin reported to the convention the steps taken by her local, containing a majority of white teachers, in successfully forestalling an attempt by reactionary groups to unseat Allen Freelon as art supervisor in Philadelphia schools purely because of his race.

White southerners were free in their emphasis upon the need for building up the Negro communities to an equality with all others, if any program of democratic education is to succeed. George Googe, representative of William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor, said that thousands of Negroes were being organized into closed shop unions by the A. F. of L., and that Negroes were more and more assuming positions of leadership in the federation.

Mrs. Nancy Smith of Chattanooga, Tenn., spoke of the shameful neglect of Negro education all over the South, and made recommendation for specific improvements.

Concerning the fight against lynching, Mrs. Mary Foley Grossman of Philadelphia, national legislative representative, said in her annual report:

Just before congress adjourned, a group of hard-working progressive people, including representatives of the A. F. T., climaxed a long drive by getting the 218th signature on a discharge petition to bring the Gavagan anti-lynching bill to the floor of the house of representatives .. The fact that lynchings are again increasing, and mob spirit of a fascistic tone everywhere rising, will not deter a reactionary bloc from attempting to bury this bill. Filibusters will once more develop, especially in the senate. We recommend that members of the A. F. T. urge their congressmen to support the bill to the last nitch, and to vote cloture if necessary, to remove from America the stigma of protecting the most barbaric of modern crimes."

The following Negro delegates attended the convention: from Washington, Miss Portia Bullock, Mrs. Mary Mason Jones, John Lovell, Jr., Mrs. Maude G. Stratton, Miss Ida Taylor, Doxey A. Wilkerson; from New York: Mrs. Louise Johnson, Miss Layle Lane; from Chicago: Mrs. Lydia Sayre Lewis, McKineley Lewis; from Philadelphia: Miss Goldie Ervin, Martin Fields; from Cincinnati: Silas Rhodes; from Nashville: Mark H. Watkins.

PROMISE FIGHT IN GAINES CASE, LYNCHING BILL

Outline Federation Stand On National Issues At Buffalo Session

BUFFALO, N. Y., Sept. 1— The principle of the Gaines case fight; the struggle to destroy differentials in teachers' salaries throughout the states, based on race; the whole body of discrimination which resulted in the Marian Anderson incident, and the unremitting push toward an anti-lynching bill were all enthusiastically endorsed by the American Federation of Teachers in their annual convention at the Hotel Buffalo here, August 21 to 25.

Thirty-three thousand American teachers of trade unions and liberal persuasion comprise the federation. Prof. George S. Counts, noted educator of Columbia University Teachers college, was named national president for 1939-1940.

Doxey A. Wilkerson, professor at Howard university, was re-elected national vice president-at-large by an overwhelming majority over Miss Layle Lane of New York. The convention greatly applauded Professor Wilkerson's plea for federal aid for members of the Race.

Discuss Education

Following its slogan, "Education for Democracy—Democracy for Education," it agreed with him that a breakdown in opportunities for the education of Race members meant a complete breakdown in American democracy. It also endorsed the plan submitted by Miss Goldie Ervin of Philadelphia for more intensive work among administrators, parents and children to the end of cooperative thinking and cooperative living. Miss Ervin reported to the convention the steps taken by her local, containing a majority of white teachers, in successfully forestalling an attempt by reactionary groups to unseat Allen Freelon as art supervisor in Philadelphia schools purely because of his race.

White Southerners were free in their emphasis upon the need for building up the Race communities to an equality with all others, if any program of democratic education is to succeed. F. of L., and that members of the Race were more and more assuming positions of leadership in the federation. Mrs. Nancy Smith of Chattanooga, Tenn., spoke of the shameful neglect of education of members of the Race all over the South, and made recommendation for specific improvements.

Fight Lynching

Concerning the fight against lynching, Mrs. Mary Foley Grossman of Philadelphia, national legislative representative, said in her annual report:

"Just before Congress adjourned, a group of hard-working progressive people, including representatives o fthe A.F.T., climaxed a long drive by getting the 218 signatures on a discharge petition to bring the Gavagan Anti-Lynching bill to the floor of the House of Representatives.

"The fact that lynchings are again increasing, and mob spirit of a fascistic tone everywhere rising, will not deter a reactionary bloc from attempting to bury this bill. Filibusters will once more develop, especially in the Senate.

"We recommend that members of the A.F.T. urge their Congressmen to support the bill to the last ditch, and to vote cloture, if necessary, to remove from America the stigma of protecting the most barbaric of modern crimes."

Teachers' Group Plans Economies

Measures Adopted to Meet Income Slump

Teachers' Group Plans Economies

By MERYL TONEE

ATLANTIC CITY—An economy program, special plans to increase its membership and retention of its ten cents per member affiliation with the NAACP featured the legislative procedure of the annual session of the American Teachers' Association, which closed here Friday.

Chief among the economy measures was the adoption of a recommendation presented in President Carrington L. Davis's annual report, that the financial hookup with the National Educational Outlook, teacher journal, be suspended.

Cuts $1259 from Budget

During the past fiscal year, the association subsidized the magazine to the amount of $1259. The body voted to continue paying 10 per cent of its membership dues to the NAACP. President Davis had suggested that, in lieu of this, each member join the national or some local organization.

The association also voted against a suggestion that the annual dues of $1.50 be reduced to $1, for individual memberships, and 50 cents for club memberships.

Receipts Drop

In his annual report as secretary, Howard W. Long called attention to a drop of $219.91 in membership dues under the previous fiscal year. Total receipts for the current year were $3,227.08.

With an expenditure of $3,086.14, according to the treasurer's report, the association had a balance of $485.46 in the bank on July 25.

Unpaid obligations to date, however, showed a deficit of about $1100, it was reported, and the body voted to seek a $1500 loan with which to liquidate all obligations.

Maryland Leads

The report also showed that of the six States to make the largest contributions in membership fees, Maryland led with a total of $772. The District of Columbia came next with $630.50. West Virginia contributed $474; Alabama $336.50; Kentucky, $123; North Carolina, $79.50; Ohio, $54.50, and Florida, $50.50.

Other States which contributed more than $25 were: South Carolina, $39; Oklahoma, $37.50; Arkansas, $29.50; and Delaware, $28.50.

Officers

The president is Carrington L. Davis, principal of the Dunbar High School in Baltimore; vice-president, Miss Mary L. Williams, Charleston, W.Va.; executive secretary, H. Councill Trenholm, president of Alabama State Teachers' College.

T. Montgomery Gregory of Atlantic City, and Dr. F. D. Patterson were elected members of the executive committee.

A special committee, appointed by President Davis, to study the condition of the association consists of the following:

Dr. Garnet C. Wilkinson, chairman, District of Columbia; Dr. Howard H. Long, D.C.; H. Councill Trenholm, Alabama; Miss Mary L. Williams, West Virginia; George B. Murphy, Maryland; and Mrs. Willa Carter Burch, D.C.

The two persons appointed as consultants are J. H. B. Evans, West Virginia, and Dr. Ambrose J. Caliver, D.C.

Dr. J. F. Drake, president of Alabama State A. and M. Institute, was elected chairman of the college division, after Dr. John W. Davis, president of West Virginia State, resigned.

Federation Of Teachers Endorses Gaines Decision

BUFFALO, N. Y., Sept. 8—The Gaines case, the Marian Anderson affair, and the anti-lynching bill were all favorably voted upon at the American Federation of Teachers' annual convention held here at the Buffalo hotel last week.

The delegates unanimously endorsed the Gaines fight for the right to attend state-supported schools, the fight against discrimination in Washington's public buildings as brought out by the Easter Sunday concert of Marian Anderson on the steps of the Lincoln Memorial, and the passage of an anti-lynching bill.

A total of 33,000 teachers of both races comprise the federation. Prof. George S. Counts, noted educator of Columbia University Teachers' college was elected president.

Prof. Doxey Wilkerson, of Howard university, was reelected national vice president-at-large by an overwhelming majority over Miss Layle Lane of New York City.

The convention vigorously applauded Dr. Wilkerson's plea for federal aid to education, especially for Race students. The delegates agreed with him that a breakdown in opportunities for Race education meant a breakdown of American democracy.

Race Organized

White southern delegates emphasized the need for building up the Race communities to an equality with all others, if any program of democratic education is to succeed.

George Googe, representative of the A. F. of L., told the delegates that thousands of Race workers were being ogranized into closed shop unions by the A. F. of L. and that more of them were assuming positions of leadership in the organization.

Attention was given to the several approaches already made by the special subcommittee of the core committee in securing more extended presentation of the issues of Negro education in the programs dealing with education in this country.

Authorization was given for the revival of The Bulletin as the official organ of the association with four quarterly issues this year. Plans for the program of the 1940 session at Pine Bluff were outlined for further consideration at a second meeting of the executive committee to be held late in January.

TEACHERS GROUP SHIFTS LOCALE

Capital Gets Headquarters Of Negro Association

MONTGOMERY, Ala.—Alabama, in the Deep South, where the bulk of the Negro children and Negro school teachers are, again became headquarters for the American Teachers Association when the secretarial files and records were transferred this week from Charleston, W. Va., to Montgomery, where President H. Councill Trenholm, of Alabama State Teachers College, will handle the work of the executive secretaryship for the association this year.

The American Teachers Association was started in 1904 by President J. R. E. Lee, of Florida A. & M. College, who then was academic director at Tuskegee Institute. For most of the period up to 1929, secretarial headquarters were at Tuskegee Institute, where C. J. Calloway served several years as active secretary.

Ten years ago, in 1929, at Jackson, Miss., William W. Sanders, of Charleston, W. Va., took over the work and has continued his service over a decade. At his request in Atlantic City in July, he was relieved of the responsibilities of the office and President Trenholm agreed to serve as his successor.

AMERICAN TEACHERS ASS'N TO HOLD '40 MEET IN PINE BLUFF

WASHINGTON, D. C., Dec. 2[illegible] —The selection of Pine Bluff, Arkansas, as the place and July 23-26 as the date for the 1940 session of the American Teachers association was one of the items of business dispatched by the executive committee of that association in its meeting held on Dec. 9 at the Franklin School building at the call of President Carrington L. Davis, principal of the Dunbar high school of Baltimore.

The decision to go west of the Mississippi river for the first time since 1926 when the association (then known as the National Association of Teachers in Colored Schools) met at Hot Springs National Park, was taken on the basis of the strong invitation extended by President John B. Watson of Arkansas A. M. & N. college, by President T. W. Coggs of the Arkansas State Teachers' association and by State Jeanes Supervisor A. N. P. Strong who is also a member of the board of trustees of the American Teachers' association.

This invitation was strongly supported by messages from T. H. Alford, state commissioner of education; from Ed McCuistion state supervisor of colored schools from Executive Secretary Willia A. Lawson of the Arkansas Educational Association, from Dr. John Eve of Hot Springs National Park; from President I. T. Gilliam of the Little Rock Principals Study Club; from the presidents of the Arkansas Congress of Colored Parents and Teachers and of the Little Rock County Teachers' association and from several other school and lay groups. The relatively new attractive campus of the Arkansas State A. M. & N. college will be the scene of the meetings with a possible program at one of the adjoining cities.

The executive committee heard a rather extended and encouraging report from its executive secretary—President H. Councill Trenholm of Alabama State Teachers' college—on the activities and service of the association during the past three month. First Assistant Superintendent Garnet C. Wilkinson of the District of Columbia made extended report on the work of the Core Committee of the National Educational association which had been set up as the customary committee of cooperation with the American Teachers association. A Core Committee of five members from the American Teachers association was named by President Carrington L. Davis to function for the rest of this association year.

Report was made on the American Education Week Radio program presented on November 9 over the Blue Network of the National Broadcasting company. Attention was given to the several approaches already made by the special subcommittee of the Core Committee in the direction of securing more extended presentation of the issues of Negro education in the programs dealing with education in this country. Authorization was given for the revival of THE BULLETIN as the official organ of the association with four quarterly issues this year as a result of the cooperation of several colleges. Proposal for a study of association techniques and for the initiation of a program of closer articulation of the several state and national organizations of Negro teachers were considered. Plans for the program of the 1940 session at Pine Bluff were outlined for further consideration at a second meeting of the executive committee scheduled to be held late in January.

In attendance at the meeting were President Carrington L. Davis of Baltimore, Executive Secretary H. Councill Trenholm of Montgomery, Treasurer Howard H. Long of Washington, Dr. Frederick D. Patterson of Tuskegee, Mrs. Willa Carter Burch and Dr. Garnet C. Wilkinson of Washington, President Cato C. Anderson of Maryland Association of Teachers and Mr. George B. Murphy of Baltimore.

Entire Official Family Of ASTA Swept Back Into Office At Meet

Atlanta World 4-1-39

MONTGOMERY, Ala. —(SNS)— Except for an overlong battle over a hotly debated section of the proposed modernized constitution which threatened to prolong the meeting indeterminably, the Saturday business session of the end-up meeting of the ASTA was mild

There was no contests over the office of president with the election coming around four o'clock in the afternoon following the spirited arguments defending an attacking the "delegate assembly" plan which would distribute representation over the state on the basis of one voting member for every 10 or fraction of paid members. The plan is devised to remove the heavy voting advantage available to resident cities of the ASTA.

By an acclamation vote empowering the secretary to cast an unanimous vote, the incumbent staff of the association was reelected to office. The office of vice-president was vacated when the reelected Miss Zelia V. Stephens, Jeanes supervisor of Shelby county stepped up to the presidency when W. M. Menchan relinquished the position to accept an out-of-state job, was filled by Felix L. Paul, of Birmingham on an acclamated vote, as he ran unopposed.

Other officers reelected are:

Bert A. Hudson, program secretary, Birmingham; E. J. O'Neal, treasurer, Waugh; Cleve L. Abbott, recreational secretary, Tuskegee; H. Councill Trenholm, statistical secretary, Montgomery; W. H. Payne, financial secretary, Tuskegee; Robert C. Hatch, recording secretary, Gadsden; Wilbur H. Hollins, chaplain, Birmingham; C. W. Carnes, auditor, Birmingham; B. F. Baker, auditor, Mobile; Miss M. E. Morris, auditor, Birmingham

Braced up by the whole solid sentiment of the Alabama teachers, the campaign for salary equalization, the NAACP, chairman; Dr. F. D. Thompson, pastor of the Sixteenth Street Baptist Church; James E. Kelly, Grand Secretary of the Elks; Damon Lee, Jr., manager of the Lee Coal Company (Homewood); S. J. Bennett, manager of the North Carolina Mutual Life Insurance Co.; Mrs. Dovie Smith Brooks, social worker; Dr. J. W. Dowdell, president of the Bessemer Civic League.

This committee is to serve as the "public relations group" for the education commission which is composed of the following outstanding Alabama educators:

Dr. J. W. Nicholson, chairman, Talladega; Dr. I. A. Derbigny, Tuskegee; Miss Rebecca Davis, Mr. P. D. Jackson, Birmingham; Mr. E. J. Oliver; Atty. A. D. Shores, Birmingham; Dr. J. H Taylor, Birmingham.

It is understood that the groundwork for the campaign will be laid in Birmingham which is considered most favorable of any of the other spots in Alabama for beginning the "legal" campaign for "equal pay for equal work."

The unused portion of the money (nearly $600) that was appropriated "to study and formulate a procedure for the campaign" for salary justice was voted to be transferred to the bonded treasurer.

The vote commission was voted to continue, although it is likely to be reorganized and spurred to do more work as the ally of the Education Commission.

The hang-up fireworks on the proposal for delegated assembly came because it was claimed that it would deprive the members of their right to vote. It was defended on the ground "it will remove the present unfair advantage which those have who reside in the particular locality in which the association happens to meet."

The idea failed to carry with it a plan, although its theory is that each "local association" will be allotted a number of delegates based upon the number of paid membership." That is, for every ten paid membership an accredited delegate can be elected with "voting"....restricted to the members of the delegate assembly but the privilege of speaking may be extended to any member of the association."

On a direct vote this particular section was adopted by a vote of 91 to 25 in the face of the vigorous charges made that it would endanger the association by discouraging teachers to buy membership where they were not guaranteed a right of "voice" by vote.

A division of opposition led by Dr. I. A. Derbigny of Tuskegee, arguing for "more time to study" in the end found support in the division of opposition led by Dr. J. W. Nicholson of Talladega, who would rewrite this controversial section to give every member a "right to vote"...the two combined their strength as they picked up other help and voted to postpone further consideration of the argument during the 1939 session. The vote carried 101 to 1 and thus the debate ended In the preface of Dr. Nicholson, who made the motion, contended that consideration of the constitution could not be finished in time to dispose of the other business to come before the body, as the numbers were constantly thinning out.

The constitution committee is as follows: H. Councill Trenholm, chairman, Montgomery; Miss Mary W. Weeks, Mobile; Prof. Carol W. Hayes, Birmingham; Miss Emma O. Wyatt, Birmingham. Mr. Barnett F. Smith, Montgomery.

Oldtimers who had attended as many of more than 25 ASTA annual sessions declared that the Saturday meeting was the best they had ever witnessed despite its tiring length. One observation was made to manifest interest in the constitution when there was a mad grabbing for additional memographed copies which were brought to the meeting

Negro Parents And Teachers Here For Annual Convention

The 25th annual session of the Alabama branch National Congress of Colored Parents and Teachers convened at the local State Teachers College yesterday morning at 9:30 o'clock with an executive board meeting presided over by Mrs. Mary Foster McDavid, president.

Following this session of the executive board, the delegates assembled for the first general meeting of the Congress' "Silver Jubilee Session."

The keynote address was delivered by J. S. Lambert, State director of negro education and special guest speaker. Director Lambert pointed out the close relationship between education, truth, life and religion.

Reports by delegates indicated that the more than 900 State organizations had completed a most successful and attractive program of activities in cooperation with the State and national organization.

Funds Raised

Typical of the more outstanding reports was that of Montgomery County given by Supervisor Thelma Smiley Morris, who reported that the 47 P.-T. A. units with 560 members in Montgomery County in the past year raised $1,700 out of which 75 acres of land for building schools, one piano and playground equipment for 75 per cent of the county schools were purchased. In addition, $50 was donated for the Virginia-Randolph fund. The association sponsors year-round gardens as a nucleus for carrying out the State P.-T. A. health program.

At the afternoon general session Dr. Rosa Walston, academic adviser of women students, Alabama Polytechnic Institute, Auburn, and chairman of the relationship committee of the Alabama Congress of Parents and Teachers and of this organization, was presented in an address. Dr. Walston stressed needs and methods for developing the following qualities in the lives and character of Alabama youth: (a) respect; (b) ability to enjoy little things; (c) objectivity; (d) sensitivity; (e) friendship.

At the evening session welcome greetings for local clubs and organizations were extended to the delegates. The State Teachers College and Tuskegee Institute music department rendered musical selections. The guest speaker for this session was Miss Shellie Northcutt, special Jeanes teacher, Washington, D. C.

Of particular note is the fact that the Alabama branch of Colored Parents and Teachers have maintained the first rate ranking in the national organization by virtue of its membership of 10,015 members, the largest for any State. President McDavid said the membership goal for the year 1938-39 was 15,000.

The housing bureau for the Alabama State Teachers Association has been busy for several days in the placement of applicants for rooms and predicts unprecedented attendance at the association's 57th annual session which convenes at 10 a.m. Tullibody auditorium.

Parent-Teacher Associations Strong In Ala.

By EMORY O. JACKSON

MONTGOMERY, Ala.—(SNS)—Alabama is blessed by having the office of the president of the National Congress of Parents and Teachers at Montgomery and Birmingham is blessed by having the office of the Alabama Congress of Parents and Teachers on the Magic City.

Mrs. Mary Foster McDavid, state supervisor of Jeanes teachers and former president of the State P-TA is national P-TA head while Mrs. Odessa McKinney, Jeanes supervisor in Jefferon county, is president of the State P-TA. She was elected last year primarily upon the outstanding record she made in Birmingham as county organizer of P-TA's. Jefferson county stood a hundred per cent in units and turned in more money than any other single county. They stood on top almost everywhere there were any listings.

Standing among the proudest achievements of the State P-TA is the large membership built over the past seven years which stretches over 15,000.

During the current year the Alabama P-TA units are placing emphasis upon the theme of the child. They have a well planned program gauged to this end.

A remarkable special program undertaken by the white State P-TA is that of sponsoring "Citizenship Day" all over Alabama December 14. This program has for its objective turning the youth coming into their twenty-ones into voters, or real citizens.

Athough it is general knowledge that many of the colored P-TA programs are but swallow-ups of those of the white group, the leadership of the colored P-TA has reached the decision not to tag along on the citizenship program because they see greater need of building the "morale" of the school.

Not until the question of the P-TA sponsoring a similar "citizenship" progam to that of the white P-TA was put to the leadership of the colored group did anyone hear anything about building the "morale" of the school. And furthermore, stress is supposed to be placed upon the "child." The white group seeks to follow the child into votehood while the colored group apparently takes sight of the child to pursue an ambiguous program of "morale."

It is next to impossible to believe that such a decision could have been made by the P-TA head in face of so many persuasive factors. First is the fact that the Negro element is all but cut from the enjoyment of suffrage rights over the state and therefore needs new mechanism working for his release from the bondage of disfranchisement.

A second big factor is that the president of the State P-TA is from a climate charged with the spirit of Negro suffrage. In all the school systems in Birmingham there have been going on both open and underground campaigns to get teachers registered to vote. One of the major planks in the program of the Alabama State Teachers Association, of which the State P-TA head was once vice-president, is that of winning the unrestricted rights of teachers as state citizens to regiter and vote freely.

A third factor is that the past summer the Birmingham NAACP worked out a formula which was fairly successful in increasing the number o Negro voters in Birmingham. Their emphasis was upon young people who were not weighted down by poll tax arrearage.

It resolves itsef into a mystery as to why the P-TA head put aside this bright idea of a "citizenship" day program giving Negro youth over the whole state of Alabama encouragement in the direction of manhood suffrage. The idea has the indorsement of Gov. Dixon and other progresive leaders

TEACHERS OF ALABAMA GATHER FOR SESSIONS

MONTGOMERY, Ala., March 22—(AP)—The classroom was pictured as the "battlefield of democracy" Wednesday night, as thousands of school teachers from throughout the state gathered here for the convening Thursday of the annual convention of the Alabama Education Association.

The extra-session Legislature recessed Wednesday, to make available their hotel accommodations for the 5,000 expected for the convention.

First general session speakers Thursday will be Gov. Dixon; E. A. McBride, of Talladega, A. E. A. president, and Dr. A. H. Collins, state superintendent of education. Their addresses will swing the convention immediately into contemplation of the operating problems of Alabama schools.

In a convention-eve address on Wednesday night, before more than 200 school administrators, Dr. Newton Edwards, professor of education, University of Chicago, asserted, "The schools and colleges of this country are the symbols of our faith that we may solve the problems of human living through trained intelligence and not through the barbarism of brute force." The Chicago speaker added:

Battle for Democracy Cited

"It is no figure of speach to say that the battlefield of democracy is in the classrooms of the nation. It is here that we must forge the weapons that will insure victory. These weapons of democracy will be trained intelligence, social understanding, a will to act, and a morality that will not yield to expediency."

The general convention session will met at 2 p.m. Thursday.

Four subordinate departments held preliminary meetins Wednesday. They were the department of secondary school principles; the conference of attendance workers; the elementary school supervisors, and the school administrators.

Throughout Friday 26 departments of the association will hold meetings in downtown Montgomery, at which distinguished educators within and without Alabama will lead discussions of special problems.

Dr. Edwards, a specialist on social conditions as they effect education, also will address a general session of the association Thursday night, with his subpect "Population Changes and Educational adjustment in the South."

Speaking on the same program with him Thursday, Commander Edward Ellsberg, U. S. N., retired, will discuss "Neutrality—Can America Maintain It?"

In his address Wednesday night, Dr. Edwards told the school administrators:

"It begins to appear that the alternatives of political drift are, on the one hand, social initiative and invention, and on the other, a return to centralized and arbitrary power. And it is not to be assumed that the forms of political organization have been exhausted, that the choice lies between Fascism, Communism, and laissez faire democracy. The democratic state can survive in the modern world, but if it does so, it will be forced to cultivate the spirit of political experiment, invention, and contrivance. Nor is the need for experiment and invention any less in the area of economics than in the area of politics. In the whole area of social relations, whether of government economy or ethics, we are forced with the necessity of adaptation and adjustment.

Rural Load Heavy

"The educational load rests relatively light on the urban population of Alabama and it grows progressively heavier as the size of the community grows smaller.

"It is the farmers of Alabama 65 per cent of whom are tenants or croppers, who are supplying the population reserves of the state. In the rural areas where the birth rates are high and the educational load disproportionatly heavy, income is the least and the plane of living the lowest. And I suspect, although I do not have the data to show it. That in these areas educational opportunity is most restricted and cultural resources the most limitde.

"It is not to be inferred, however, that the people of Alabama are indifferent to their educational responsibility. As a matter of fact, in terms of their ability to support education, they put forth greater effort than the national average. The people in this state face the difficult problem of improving economic conditions, and in very large measure this means doing something to improve the economic status of rural communities. Alabama is essentially a rural state, and like other rural states it suffers from the drawing off of income produced in it to the great centers of industrial concentration.

Contributions Cited

"Rural America makes substantial economic contributions to these areas of industrial concentration. It constitutes what may be considered a vast colonial hinterland to the great industrial cities. It supplies them with raw materials to be fabricated, it rears and sends forth a constant stream of young adults to keep the ranks of labor filled, and it consumes a large part of the output of industry. When industrial development takes place in this rural hinterland, it is likely to be financed by outside capital and a large part of the profits, if any, are drawn off to the communities in which the capital is owned. If we are to introduce balance and equity into our economy, if those who really earn the national income are to share more equitably in its distribution, we shall have to rely in large measure on the wise leadership and the co-operative action of the people living in those states which are chiefly rural in their population."

California Teachers to Hear Dr. Heningburg

DURHAM, N. C.—When Dr. Alphonse Heningburg, assistant to the president of North Carolina College, Durham, addresses the California Teachers' Association in Sacramento on November 20, it will be the first time that such an honor has been extended a member of the race.

Dr. Heningburg will deliver the dinner address to elementary and secondary school principals on "The South at the Cross-roads." This message will point out the social and economic problems facing the South with reference to problems relating to the race.

DR. A. HENINGBURG

TWO MORE ADDRESSES

On November 22, Dr. Heningburg will address the entire association on "The Negro in the New Order." This discourse is designed to point out the extent of the youth's contribution to the arts and sciences of the country.

The association meets in two sections. Sacramento is entertaining the northern division and Watsonville, Cal., is host to the central division.

Dr. Heningburg will address the central division on "Can the American Negro Survive?" In this address, the speaker will point out some of the facts to which the race must heed if it is to find its place in the contry's economic life.

COLORED TEACHERS MEET

The first annual meeting of the New Year of the Cook County Colored teachers was held January second at the County Line School, L. L. Lawrence, principal.

Truly the day was grand. Out among the quiet of the pines, away from the noise and bustle of the city, the teachers had time to breathe freely of God's pure air. They had time to relax and appreciate nature. The good patrons of County Line entertained the meeting in grand style. Their hospitalty and naive sincerity were keenly felt.

During the morning session a profitable discussion of "The New Meaning of the Curriculum" was held. A report of the booklet, "The Natural Resources of Georgia" was made.

Saturday January the seventh will be the occasion of a county wide P.-T. A. meeting. The meeting will take place at the Cook County Training School at 3 p. m. All patrons are cordially urged to be present.

Plans were begun for the "First Annual School and Community Day" which will be March 10, 1939.

A new week in a new year has just begun. We are very proud to make known that a new teacher has been added to the faculty at the Cook County Training School, Frances B. Starnes. She is a graduate of Spelman College with the A. B. degree and a graduate of Atlanta U. with the A. M. degree in Education. We have new hopes, new aspirations, new anticipations. May God help us to carry out our plans successfully. May we join in with Him who has said:

"I must work the works of Him that hath sent me,
While it is yet day;
For the night cometh, when no man can work."

COLORED PARENTS, TEACHERS MEETING

INTERESTING TOPICS DISCUSSED AT STATE SESSION HERE

The Georgia Congress of Colored Parents-Teachers resumed its conference sessions at Second Baptist Church, President and Houston streets, today after a fine opening session last night at which the principal address was delivered by B. F. Hubert, president of the Georgia State College. Approximately 75 out-of-town delegates sat in the meeting at the morning session today, besides delegations of parents and teachers from the Chatham county colored schools. Several of the local principals were also in attendance.

An hour was given today, following devotions, to reports by delegates of various parents- teachers units over the state, principally from the larger cities. Some of the best of these were made by delegates from Athens, Macon, Atlanta, Waycross, Columbus, Savannah, Brunswick, Albany, Americus and Augusta. These reports developed that a variety of valuable services were being rendered by the local units in their respective communities and that their scope of work and aid was enlarging and becoming more effective.

President H. M. Reese of Albany, long one of the foremost teachers in Georgia, is presiding. Exhibits at the sessions include half a dozen impressive posters showing how the work of the parents-teachers bodies may be stimulated and built up and providing various plans for promoting and making more effective the various phases of association work. Laura N. Parks, president of the Chatham County Council of Parents-Teachers, announced the details of local arrangements for the delegates and visitors.

Outstanding feature of the morning program was an address by Miss Nina Pape, local school administrator, who came to represent the Georgia Board of the State Association of Parents-Teachers. Miss Pape delivered a comprehensive and inspiring review of the original and development of the parents-teachers movement in this state beginning in 1907, bringing it up to its present high state of efficiency in promoting and aiding the welfare of the common schools. She brought forth applause when she stated that the first parents-teachers meeting was held in Savannah. It later was announced that the first parents-teachers meeting was held in the East Broad Street School.

Addresses at the morning session were also made by S. S. Ison of Waycross, R. W. Gadsden of Savannah; J. W. Hubert of Cuyler, Rev. C. W. Carter, local minister, C. W. DuVaul of Athens, secretary Bessie Capel of the State Teachers Association and others.

The afternoon session, held at the same place, was given largely to reports of officers and committee, before the principal subject of the session was reached. Negro health and the opportunities offered parents-teachers' for promoting better health and sanitation in school communities came up for wide discussion. The forum was opened by Prof. W. R. Chivers of Morehouse College, Atlanta, also a state official of the NYA. Talks, experiences and suggestions were also made by Revs. E. O. S. Cleveland, and H. M. Parker of the local ministry, C. W. DuVaul, energetic young educator from Athens, who has made a fine record in the state since graduating from Georgia State College a few years ago, also actively participated in the discussion on health and what the Parent-Teacher Associations may do to help the schools in this field.

At tomorrow's session, President R. E. Clement of Atlanta University, is slated to make the principal address. State Home Demonstrator, Camilla Weems, with headquarters at Georgia State College, will give an extensive survey of work being done throughout the state by federal and state agencies to advance the standard of living conditions in negro homes, particularly in rural communities. The motto of the colored association is "The body may only do well, if it is kept well", taken from an address by the late Booker T. Washington.

The session will adjourn tomorrow afternoon with the annual election of officers.

10 Teachers' Commandments Listed By W. Va. Educator

JACKSON, Miss.—(SNS)—At the state assembly held here last Friday of the Mississippi Association of Teachers in Colored Schools, five thousand strong, I. J. K. Wells State Supervisor of Negro Schools of West Virginia, one of the chief speakers of the association, called upon the teaching profession to help Negro youth create new worlds.

Wells declared that we live in two worlds: A world within ourselves and a world without. He stated that success or survival for any individual or group depends upon how each of these words is created or changed to effect each of these interacting universes of spheres.

The West Virginia's philosophy held that the Negro must be active in shaping opinion and changing the world,—not merely being passive, waiting for things to be done for him,—but whether active or passive, he creates his own world and influences the world without. He pointed out, in inviting teachers to help create new worlds, that we must "train our people to be prepared for the possibility of sterner conditions which most probably will be the lot of us, the minority". He further pointed out that neither "Africa, nor any part of the earth is sacro sanct as our fatherland; instead our country and our world is what and where we make it".

At the conclusion of the address the speaker sought to hand to each school represented, a list of "The Teachers Ten Commandments to Create New World". He declared that there will be some difference of opinion as to the value and each teacher is free to write his own truth of the commandments; that His commandments follows:

THE TEACHERS TEN COMMANDMENTS TO CREATE NEW WORLDS

1. THE CAMMANDMENT OF RELIGION

Thou shalt teach youth not only reverence for God, but also faith in himself that he is endowed with physical, mental and moral capacity limited only by time and eternity.

2. THE COMMANDMENT OF PEDAGOGY

Remember thou these fundamentals and keep them holy: Thou must learn the child before trying to teach the child; what to teach him takes precedence over how to do it.

3. THE COMMANDMENT OF VALUES

Thou shalt emphasize the big three of high ideals, good habits and good attitudes as of equal importance with the three r's.

4. THE COMMANDMENT OF APPLICATION

Teach thy pupils that abundance of work is a key to success; that education was not intended to free them from hard work but to enable them to realize better results from hard work done; that success comes not from what one knows but from what one does.

5. THE COMMANDMENT OF EFFICIENCY

Teach ye all creatures that man buys not race nor color nor hires excuses, but craves and rewards efficiency everywhere in time and space.

6. THE COMMANDMENT OF CHARACTER

Impress upon youth that even among the lowest criminals character is their highest virtue.

7. THE COMMANDMENT OF TRUTH

Inculcate thou in youth, hunger for truth; demand them to get exact knowledge; inform them that facts are inexorable throughout the universe.

8. THE COMMANDMENT OF SURVIVAL

Thou shalt condition youth to expect that anything may happen to him through man or nature; that personal and group survival is depndent upon the discovering developing and applying of certain techniques; that among these are reasoning, adjustibility, universal love, health, good manners, the conquest of fear and the habit to support organized effort.

9. THE COMMANDMENT OF PATRIOTISM

Thou shalt impress upon youth that his country's form of government appears to be the best on earth today; teach him that present hindrances and imperfections are episodes on the stage of time; that it is his solemn duty to strengthen, defend and promote it.

10. THE COMMANDMENT OF IMPROVEMENT

Thou shalt continually drill and indoctrinate youth until he is imbued with the spirit of improvement; train him to know that there is nothing poor except the mind. Thou shalt teach him that it is his personal obligation to seek to improve human beings, human stock and the sum total of human culture.

SURVEY INDICTS SCHOOL TEACHERS FOR LACK OF ABILITY

Courier 11-25-39
Pittsburgh, Pa.

ST. LOUIS, Nov. 22. (Special)—A scorching indictment of the Negro teacher by the patrons of the Negro schools, was set forth by Dr. Sherman D. Scruggs in an address at the closing session of the 54th annual session of the Missouri Association of Negro Teachers last Friday night.

Lincoln's President Scruggs explained that his remarks, which were read from a series of cards, were based upon a survey made by Lincoln University in an effort to find out best how it could serve the Negroes of the State in the training of teachers.

He pointed out that the data submitted came from the white county superintendents, and were based upon expressions obtained by them from the patrons of the Negro schools in their communities.

The speaker also said that he believed that the putting of a new program into practice "starting when you get back home Monday morning," would prove more beneficial than any platitudes he might bestow upon them.

STRONG INDICTMENTS LISTED IN COMPLAINTS

Listed among the complaints made by Negro patrons of Negro teachers were the following:

"Negro teachers are too lazy" . . . "don't have enough education, can't solve even eighth-grade problems" . . . "show definite lack of interest in pupils" . . . "have an attitude of superiority toward parents and children, are high-hatters and snobbish" . . . "don't get to school on time and don't stay the full time out" . . . "come to school late because there is no one there to check on them" . . . "don't take proper care of equipment provided . . . "Take too big a part in neighborhood and community gossip" . . . "don't mind their own business, have a definite lack of sense of responsibility to community" . . . "lack of fine moral sense" . . . "too little love for children" . . . "show partiality and favoritism" . . . "lack of dependability" . . . "fail to meet financial obligations promptly or not at all" (Dr. Scruggs adding that, in one community, six of the seven duns submitted to the board named Negro teachers, asserting that if teachers themselves are not responsible they can't teach responsibility to their pupils) . . . "hold unpopular views on race question" . . . "lady teachers constantly fall in love" . . . "training too often unfits teachers for service to race" . . . "too many seek to be political leaders with selfish interests" . . . "some teachers are high-hat and stuck-up, and besides, don't know how to teach anyhow."

Teachers Blasted

Missouri parents are reported to have low-rated colored teachers in a recent survey. These colored parents say colored teachers . . .

"Are too lazy."

Don't have enough education."

"Can't solve even eighth-grade problems."

"Show definite lack of interest in pupils."

"Have an attitude of superiority toward parents and children."

"Are high-hatters and snobbish."

"Don't get to school on time."

"Don't stay the full time out."

"Come to school late because there is no one there to check on them."

"Don't take proper care of equipment provided."

"Take too big a part in neighborhood and community gossip."

"Don't mind their own business."

"Lack a fine moral sense."

"Fail to meet financial obligations promptly or not at all."

"Hold unpopular views on race questions."

"(Ladies) Fall in love constantly."

SHOULD TEACH STUDENTS TO STAY IN THEIR PLACES

President Scruggs took exception to the report of one superintendent who expressed the opinion that Negro teachers taught too much academic work and not enough vocational studies, and that Negro teachers should teach Negroes to stay in their "places."

Solutions to the complaints, as presented by the white superintendents, were outlined by Dr. Scruggs, who quoted one such official as stating that the Negro teacher must be energetic, faithful and ready to serve his people at all times.

'DOES SHOE FIT?" IF IT DOES, THEN PUT IT ON

Among the many comments by the superintendents, themselves, concerning Negro teachers, President Scruggs disclosed with admonitions to make changes if the shoe fit, were:

"Failure to prepare selves for teaching, the profession of teaching being used as a means to an end" . . . "teachers should not be bossed by Negro ministers" . . . "should keep up with modern trends" . . . "should have practical views of daily problems" . . . "should stress current events" . . . "should develop a confidence in the race" . . . "should not seek security rather than face difficulties in the solution of problems facing the race."

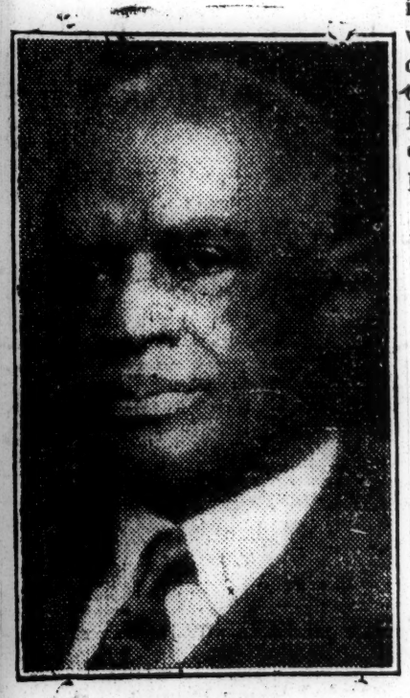
Responsibilities Of Teachers Stressed at Opening Negro Teachers Meet



Dr. Shepard

"We of the Negro race, denied certain outlets for improvement, must have faith in our teachers," said Robert P. Daniel, president of Shaw university in Raleign, Thursday night in the opening session of the 58th annual meeting of the North Carolina Negro Teachers Association which is being held at the Dillard High School in Goldsboro.

President Daniel was speaking before a group of about 1,000 Negro teachers in the auditorium of the high school. His address was in response to the welcome given the visitors by Mayor J. H. Hill, Colonel John D. Langston, C. E. Thompson and C. I. Bland.

Dr. James E. Shephard, president of the North Carolina College for Negroes in Durham, presided at the meeting and introduced the speakers. In introducing Mayor Hill he said that it was fitting that the Negro teachers be welcomed by the head official of the city because the Negro was a definite part of the city and that each race was dependent on the other.

Mayor Hill said that he had the honor of extending a cordial welcome to the city. He told the teachers that no group meant more to the community. The mayor praised Prof. H. V. Brown, principal of the Dillard school, by saying, "I look upon Professor Brown as one of my best workers for keeping your people in order."

Col. Langston, who spoke on behalf of the Wayne county board of education and the Goldsboro city schools in the absence of J. W. Wilson and Ray Armstrong, lauded the teachers for their fine work. He said that in the hands of the teachers rested he future citizenship of the boys and girls.

"Nowhere has there been such a fine spirit of undertsanding and friendship between the races as in Goldsboro. While there may be occasional discord, the majority of the intelligent white citizenship stand behind you and will fight for your interests," said Col. Langston.

President Daniel said that he was glad of the reassurances offered by the welcoming speakers.

Negro Teachers To End Meeting

Addresses Today, Tonight Bring Big Convention to Close In City

The best-attended convention of the Palmetto State Teachers' association will close tonight with a general session at the Township auditorium at which Dr. J. E. Shepherd, president of North Carolina State College for negroes in Durham, N. C., will be the principal speaker.

Group meetings were conducted during the day on the general theme of the entire convention: "The Teachers' Opportunity for Vocational Guidance." Among the groups carrying on discussions today were the primary teachers, mathematics group, home economics group, natural science group, WPA teachers, elementary teachers, rural teachers, trade group, vocational agriculture group, library group and the history teachers.

The group meetings were the best attended in the history of the association, according to J. P. Burgess of State college, Orangeburg, executive secretary of the association for 11 years and a member since 1907.

The house of delegates was to consider a proposal for a full-time secretary at its sessions today, but no action was expected. Executive Secretary Burgess has recommended the creation of this position as "a necessity." "There are problems that claim the attention of the secretary of this teachers' association 52 weeks in the year," he said.

Burgess offered his resignation as executive secretary Wednesday night, but the house of delegates refused to accept the action. Burgess said that he felt that he had served long enough. Since 1928 when he first became executive secretary of the association, membership has increased from 1,200 to more than 5,450 with substantial representation in all 46 of the state's counties.

Burgess had not announced today whether he would insist on resigning. Election of officers is biennial, and new officers will not be elected until 1940. Election of the executive secretary was transferred yesterday from the house of delegates to executive board. This was the major change in the new constitution adopted at yesterday's meeting.

A further increase in membership is expected when the association's enrolment is checked again after the convention here this week. Teachers were still coming into Columbia today to attend the final session, and the campuses of Benedict college and Allen university were crowded.

At the Auditorium

Two general sessions were held yesterday in the Township auditorium. The annual address was delivered by the president of the association, G. A. Anderson of Fountain Inn. The principal address in the afternoon was delivered by E. W. Rushton, president of the South Carolina Education association.

Mr. Rushton compared the education in this country with that in countries with dictatorships. He pointed out that democracy not only teaches reading and writing but trains the children for good citizenship.

At the session last night, James H. Hope, state superintendent of education, spoke for federal aid for education without federal control. He commended the negro teachers on their professional attitude in attending summer schools last year.

C. I. Chipley, city superintendent of education at Fountain Inn, told the teachers at last night's session that he believed that every child should have an equal opportunity for education. C. Y. Reamer, as the representative of the chamber of commerce, invited the asociation to meet in Columbia next year.

Other speakers scheduled for the meeting in the auditorium tonight at 8 o'clock are J. B. Felton, state agent for negro schools, and W. A. Schiffley assistant state agent for negro schools. Their remarks will precede the address of President Shepherd who will be introduced by Prof. J. E. Blanton, vice president of the association.

Music, which has been furnished by bands and choral groups from various institutions in the state will be furnished tonight by the North Charleston school, Allen University and Benedict college.

STATE CUP WON BY NEGRO P.-T. A. HERE

Trophy Will Be Displayed At Meetings Of Each Association In County

The Negro Parent-Teacher association of Durham county won the state cup awarded for membership in the organization last year and it was recently decided by the group to display the cup at the meetings of each association of the local county organization.

The organization is to take up a project designed to increase the average daily attendance of the children at the Negro schools. This project, recently approved by the county group, is to offer a $36 library to the school showing the largest increase in attendance.

The group also approved the offering of a loving cup to the school having the greatest number of parents present at the P.-T. A. meetings, per teacher. The cup, it was approved, would become the permanent property of any school in the county winning it three consecutive years.

Reports on the operation of a service chest were also made at the meeting. The gathering-in for the service chest in early fall brought 156 garments for children of school age, and $21.90 for the purchase of shoes in addition to $30 donated by the welfare department.

The service chest was put into use to help students who did not have sufficient clothes to attend school or for those who could not get them until their fathers had sold their crops. Each family making use of this fund is required to replace it at its earliest possible convenience.

Negro Teachers Told South Repeats Mistakes

Dr. W. E. B. DuBois, head of the department of sociology at Atlanta University, expressed the view Friday afternoon before about 1,500 Negro school teachers attending the 58th annual conference of the North Carolina Negro Teachers Association, that what he called the unnatural school situation in the South must eventually give way to a single democratic system.

The Negro sociologist said that two separate school systems were not only an unnecessary waste, but they were also contrary to the principles of democracy. He stressed that it would take many years for the realization of a single system.

Dr. DuBois was speaking before the second general session of the conference in the Dillard high school.

The concluding Saturday sessions were devoted to business matters, the election of new officers and the selection of the place for next year's meeting.

Other speakers at the Friday afternoon session were Miss Flora B. Thurston, professor of home economics at Cornell University in Ithaca, N. Y., and Dean Ruth G. Rush of the North Carolina College for Negroes. Dr. James E. Shephard, president of the association, presided.

Housing Report

Miss Thurston was vigorously applauded when she said that Cornell University welcomed the Negro students.

Dean Rush presented a statistical report on the housing of Negro teachers in which she showed the cost of housing and general conditions for the teachers in North Carolina schools.

Dr. DuBois deplored the forces of reaction that he said were rampant in the South. "Southerners," he said, "still have the idea that the man who is rich and who has capital has a right to own, control and direct the state."

The Altanta sociologist said that the people of the South have what he called " a perfect reaction" to democracy. He said that it was not in Europe that democracy was being destroyed, but it has "met its most fatal blows" in the United States.

Charges Mistakes Repeated

"The idea of democracy has been almost entirely given up in the South," said Dr. DuBois. Both white and black, he said, have forgotten that in a democracy the governed must also have a right to take part in the government. The speaker said that "deference to what they call the 'race problem' has caused the neglect of education for both the Negro and the white child. He said that the South had shown a certain determination to repeat all the mistakes of history.

At the third general session held Friday evening at 8 o'clock, the principal addresses were made to the teachers by Dr. Ambrose H. Suhrie of New York University and John W. Davis, president of West Virginia State college.

Dr. Suhrie spoke on his idea of good teaching and good schools. He said that teachers should be good pastors to their flocks because the school was beginning to have more influence on young people than the home in many instances.

He defined a good school as 'a place where young people of any age come together to educate themselves and each other with the help of inspiring teachers."

All Seek Same Goal

Dr. Davis spoke on the implications of the convention theme, 'The Cultural Obligations of the Schools to the Community." He said that behind the distress he saw in the faces of the people there was a burning desire to be able to write hope across the sky.

He called the interest of the Negro and the poor white in the South identical and said that they were being taught to hate each other while they should be seeking the same goals.

"There cannot be significant educational progress in America until both white and black in the South have been lifted to a high educational level," said Dr. Davis.

The Dillard high school glee club entertained the audience with spirituals at intervals during both sessions. During the afternoon session a Negro choir from Fremont sang several numbers.

Woods Flays Bond Issue In Separate Schools of State In Administrative Session

Tulsa Principal Cites Reason for Defeat of Recent School Levy in Tulsa Last Fall

Says Race Issue Plays Important Part

In a meeting of the Administration Department of the Oklahoma Association of Negro Teachers in session here Friday morning, February 10, Prof. E. W. Woods of Tulsa, announced to an audience gathered to hear discussions on "Bond Issues and the Separate Schools": "It is impossible to vote bonds for separate schools. I based my statement on the fact that in Tulsa last fall, our school levy was lost by a vote of 2-1.

"There were two reasons," continued Woods," that we lost the recent levy which would have given us much needed high schools in Tulsa. First I was busy and could not work on the arrangements for the levy to be voted on, so I appeared before the local Negro Chamber of Commerce and asked them to appoint a committee. This they did, but unfortunately all members of that committee were Democrats and this caused a split in our voters which are about half and half of each party. While the Republicans did not vote against the levy, neither did they vote for it."

The second reason Prof. Woods gave was that a certain organization which comprised the majority of wealth in Tulsa voted that they would support the measure as a body, yet individually, voted against it. For had the levy been supported by them, their taxes would habe been increased.

The Booker Washington High School principal continued by saying, "The Skelly firm in particular would have had to pay $42,000 had the levy passed, and you know the white man is not going to assume tax burdens on themselves for a minority group.

"Not only this," stated Prof. Woods, "but the racial issue plays an important part. The evening before the levy was to be voted on in Tulsa, circulars were distributed saying, 'Vote against the Negro school levy as it will increase your taxes!' This was placed under the door of every home in south town n Tulsa.

J. W. Sanford Seeks Million Dollar Building Program At Langston University

Says North Central Association Ready to Consider Accrediting Langston University

Asks Support of Teachers

In a program which reflected the ideal university, "Langston University Night" was celebrated in the second general session of the Oklahoma Association of Negro Teachers Thursday evening at 8 o'clock at the new Municipal Auditorium, at which time President J. W. Sanford address an audiance of 2,500 persons.

The Langston University band directed by Prof. Alonzo Lewis, opened the program with "The Barber of Seville", by G. Rossini.

When introduced by Mr. T. P. Scott, president of the O. A. N. T., President Sanford was greeted with thunderous applause and spoke briefly on "Education at the Crossroads, or Our State University for Negro Youth".

In his advocacy of a building program for Langston whereby the school may be accredited the president said, "I have asked for $1,900,000.00 for Langston University," which statement was loudly cheered by the spectators. "When told by officials that some did not want me as president of the institution, my blood boiled as I replied, 'I did not come to talk about my being president of Langston. I came to ask you for an appropriation that would further educational advantages of black boys and girls in the state of Oklahoma.

He stated: "For the first time in the history of the school the North Central Association is ready to send an adjudging committee to the school. I am afraid the school is not yet ready to be accredited, as more buildings are needed. We want added facilities at the institution so as to be up to standards required by the association when the committee arrives."

Lauds Hugo Black

Touching briefly upon the recent decision handed down by the United States Supreme Court in the Lloyd Gaines case he stated: "Many times the race question has. gone to the supreme court and it has been whitewashed and sent back to us, but this time Hugo Black of Alabama, a man from the sunny South, stood up and said what equal educational opportunities would have to be maintained within those states."

The speaker also pointed out that Representative Creekmore Wallace of Oklahoma County is author of a bill which will add further educational opportunities at the state school.

Asks Aid of Teachers

"To the teachers of Oklahoma, I appeal to you to send messages to various senators and represenatives asking them for appropriations for a building program or the school. It is up to us to ee that the boys and girls of our tate are given their share of eduational opportunities. If we do ot, our bones shall not rest in eace, even in death."

The Langston A Capella Choir, irected by Herbert F. Mells, gave selections which included "Finale", "Meister Singer", Wagner; "Go Down Moses", arranged by H. F. Mells, and Debussey's "Reverie", a complete piano score arranged for

Mrs. J. E. Taylor of Langston sang "The Grey Wolf", by Burchorus. The choir was recently heard over radio station WKY. leigh.

Representative Wallace's speech was followed by an address by a representatibes from the governor, Raymond Bronk, who stated that the governor was unable to speak to the teachers as planned as he was called out of the city.

In his discourse, Mr. Bronk stated: "Education hasn't a greater friend in Oklahoma than Governor Phillips. In making recommendations, the governor doesn't say white schools or seperate schools, he fights for schools at large for Oklahoma.

"A great responsibility rests on the teacher," continued Mr. Bronk. "Since the parents do not have as much time with the child at the teacher, it is up to the tea her to help make a worthy citizen of him by teaching him the principles of a true democracy and instill with- him a love for Americanism.

PALMETTO TEACHERS WELCOME

The annual convention of the Palmetto State Teachers' association, an organization of prime distinction and of teachers in Negro schools, will be held in Columbia again this year. The convention dates are March 9 and 10

Mrs. Henry Monteith, Mrs. Hannibal Howard and Mr. Eichelberger, officials of the Richland County association, have their plans well underway for the housing of the delegates.

Columbia citizens are always willing and ready to make the stay of delegates to the state convention pleasant. The administrations of the two colleges will join the local committee in providing for the comfort of the teachers while they sojourn in Columbia.

Information from the office of the executive secretary gives the information that more than 5,000 teachers have joined or renewed their memberships in the association. We may expect at least 3,000 of these teachers to come to Columbia for the convention.

The Palmetto Leader extends welcome to the teachers, and hope they will have a helpful meeting and that their visit to the city will be one of pleasure and information.

Dr. W. T. B. Williams Principal Speaker For Annual Session

Program For Friday Night Includes "Stunts" By Many Talented Teachers; Saturday Last Day

With all signs indicating that this is to be one of the largest attended as well as one of the most beneficial meetings in the history of the organization, the Middle Tennessee Teachers' Association began its annual sessions here on Thursday evening of this week.

The sessions are being held in the auditorium of Pearl High School with all of the class rooms of the beautiful building made available for the different sectional meetings that are to be held on Friday afternoon.

The Thursday evening session was largely attended, the audience being made up not only of teachers from Nashville and other cities and towns of Middle Tennessee, but of many local citizens interested in education.

The principal features of the Thursday evening session were the annual address of President Sidney Harris of Shelbyville and the nomination of officers for the ensuing year. The president's address was ably delivered and well received by his audience. Vocal solos by Miss Sophronia Mayberry, a teacher of Watkins School and Dr. I. L. Moore, local dentist and a piano solo by Miss Hudson were highly entertaining.

The program for the Friday morning session was to be featured by a health demonstration by primary grades under the direction of Dr. J. W. Maxwell, physician of Nashville Public Schools and was expected to be enlightening to teachers generally. The Hon. W. A. Bass, popular superintendent of Nashville Public Schools was on program to speak at this session and was counted upon to bring a forceful message.

This Friday afternoon the teachers will hold their sectional meetings and give particular attention to the problems affecting the particular divisions of school work in which they are engaged.

It has been stated that many high school pupils do not have the opportuity to attend school because of the lack of room.

In a survey made this year there are 109 children who finished seventh grade, and who were not enrolled in high school. The same survey shows that with normal promotion the potential high school enrolment is six hundred and seventy.

4 Aspects of Gaines' Case Decision Heard By Third District Teachers

Democracy Defined As Having Respect For Others by Columbia University Psychologist

(Staff Correspondence)

RICHMOND, Va—The teachers of the third district of the Virginia State Teachers' Association in their seventh annual meeting here last week heard authoritative discussions on the recent Gaines Case decision of the Supreme Court, classroom democracy, and the teacher in professional organizations.

Dr. Rayford W. Long in speaking of the implications of the Gaines' decision, urged all groups to take all cases which they have to the Supreme Court now, while the court is in a liberal frame of mind. Dr. Logan severely criticised Justice McReynolds on his dissenting opinion.

In tracing the history of the momentous decisions, Dr. Logan said that in former years the court apparently rendered a decision in favor of the Negro every other time. Of late, he said, the Court has been more liberal and has rendered favorable decisions in each instance. Justice Hugo Black was praised for his liberalism.

Dr. Logan said that in the Gaines case decision, it clearly instructs the states that they cannot shift the burden of offering out of state tuition.

HAS FOUR ASPECTS

"The decision of the Supreme Court has four aspects; they are: legal, educational, socio-economic, and segregation," the speaker declared. "On the question of segregation, we have got to decide whether we want the principle of integration or segregation. I am in favor of segregation, but it must be segregation all the way equal opportunities, facilities and salary. By this kind of segregation we assure ourselves the opening up of new jobs. On the other hand if we take principal of integration, we make no jobs for ourselves or for our children."

Dr. Logan admitted that should the states establish separate graduate schools for Negroes, that in all probability they would be inferior, but he reminded the teachers that so were the present schools when they were first founded. He said, "We may never have graduate schools if we wait for students and professors."

He remarked that there was not a decent university in the South because the southerners have been too busy trying to suppress the Negro.

DEFINITION OF DEMOCRACY

He said that segregation has given us our churches, schools, press and insurance companies, all of which employ thousands of persons yearly.

Dr. Goodwin B. Watson, noted psychologist of Columbia Univ., gave an enlightening discussion on "Psychological Foundations for Classroom Democracy." He defined Democracy as having respect for others; having a sense of common goals; an awareness of individual differences; and each individual having a voice in the things that affect him.

Dr. Watson said that if we hope to solve our present evils within our democratic system, the foundation must be laid in the schools. He outlined a workable plan by which the teachers could effectively put those principals in use, and cautioned the teachers to be leaders, and not autocrats.

WELCOME ADDRESS

"We need to know about group thinking, and we should carry our educational activities into the community and become a part of them," asserted Dr. Watson. He advised the teachers not to bury their professional ideals, but to stand up and fight for them.

Forbes H. Norris, assistant superintendent of schools in Richmond, advised the teachers to become members of their professional organizations. He said that there was an interchange of ideas in these organizations.

The meeting was held in Coburn Chapel of Union University, and Mrs. Kate G. Henderson presided. Welcome addresses were made by Dr. William J. Clark, president of Union; and Thomas H. Henderson, president Virginia State Teachers Association.

The afternoon was devoted to a tour of the Maggie L. Walker High School, and a motion picture, Dynamic Learning," was shown by Dr. William H. Kilpatrick.

Units represented at the meeting were; counties, Charles City, Chesterfield, Goochland, Hanover, Henrico, James City, King and Queen, King William, and New Kent. The cities of Richmond and Williamsburg were also represented.

Wythe County Colored Teachers Association Meets

The closing meeting for the year of the Wythe County Teachers' Association (colored) was held at the Wytheville Training School, Saturday, April 16. The morning program took the form of Demonstrations of Teachers Procedure, interspersed with music from groups from the Austinville School, Miss Ora Redd, teacher, and from the Ivanhoe School, where Misses Eula Farrar and Elsie Claytor are teachers.

The first demonstration was a puppet show rendered by the pupils under Miss Grace McCollum of the Wytheville Training School; the second demonstration consisted of a unit of work entitled: "Convincing the Visiting Farmer; the third demonstration showed the value and was directed by Miss Elsie Claytor of the primary grades of the Ivanhoe School; the third demonstration showed the value of industrial arts in the public schools. In this setting the pupils were actually at work sewing, embroidering, mat-making, and using burlap and corn shucks to advantage. This demonstration was given by the pupils of Murphysville School, Miss Jananie Sheffey, teacher. Following the demonstrations, Miss Bertha Brockenbrough, supervisor of Wythe County Schools, made appropriate comments on the work of the schools.

The parents of the pupils in the several schools represented served a luncheon at the noon hour. After the lunch, Mr. C. M. Honesty principal of the Wytheville Training school, made remarks on development of a teaching unit. This was followed by a solo by Mrs. Mabel Page of the Wytheville Training School. The principal address of the day was made by Mr. G. A. Richardson, assistant state supervisor of Negro Education. Mr. Richardson emphasized the advantage of consolidation in high schools. He was introduced by Mr. A. M. Walker of Christiansburg Institute. Mrs. Boyd of the Speedwell School rendered an instrumental solo. Superintendent John H. Crowgey made timely remarks at the end of the program.

Mrs. H. J. Walker, president of the association, was master of ceremonies.

Negro Seeks Injunction In Salary Fight

Petition in U. S. Court Charges 14th Amendment Violated

Filed by Alston

School Board Chairman Foreman Has No Comment on Teacher's Action

Charging discrimination on the basis of color in violation of the Fourteenth Amendment to the Federal Constitution, the Negro school teachers of Norfolk yesterday appealed to Federal District Court for an injunction restraining the School Board from paying them salaries less than those paid white teachers for commensurate service.

The petition was brought by Melvin O. Alston, teacher in the Booker T. Washington High School since 1935, and the Norfolk Teachers' Association, of which Alston is president, against the School Board of the City of Norfolk and Supt. of Schools C. W. Mason. Attorneys for the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People are handling the case for the petitioners.

In the absence of Judge Luther B. Way, who is holding court in Richmond, no date has been set for a hearing on the petition, which asks for a declaratory judgment of the petitioners' rights as well as the injunction. The judge is expected to return to his office here Monday.

No Comment From Foreman

A. H. Foreman, chairman of the School Board, on whom a copy of the petition was served late yesterday afternoon, had no comment to make immediately. He said, however, that City Attorney Alfred Anderson and his staff probably would be asked to defend the suit.

The filing of the suit follows the action of the School Board last week in refusing a written request from Alston for pay for Negro teachers equal to that paid white teachers in equivalent positions.

The present suit is somewhat different from that of Aline Elizabeth Black, a former Booker T. Washington High School teacher, whose petition for a writ of mandamus seeking the same objectives was denied by Judge Allan R. Hanckel in Circuit Court, May 31. Her suit sought to compel the School Board to pay salaries equal to those paid white teachers, while Alston's suit seeks to restrain the board from paying the Negro teachers less. No appeal was taken from Judge Hanckel's judgment because the plaintiff lost her status when the School Board failed to renew her contract for the current term.

The School Board successfully defended the Black case on the ground that, although there was a difference in the pay for Negro and white teachers, there was no statutory schedule of difference. The board claimed, further, that all salaries were fixed on a contractual basis with the individual teacher.

The petition filed yesterday asks a "speedy hearing," but at the convenience of the court, because the 1940 budget estimates of the City Manager have been presented to the City Council and are to be acted upon by December 1. This budget, the petitioners allege, makes provision for a continuance of the schedules of pay against which they protest.

Differences Cited

Alston, the petition states, is a graduate of the Virginia State College for Negroes and holds a collegiate professional certificate, the highest obtainable. Against his salary of $921 per year, based on his fifth year of service, the petition states that the minimum salary for a male high school white teacher is $1,200.

The suit was brought in Federal Court, the petition continues, because Alston and other Negro teachers have been denied higher salaries solely because of their race and color, which they claim to be a violation of the Fourteenth Amendment to the Federal Constitution.

The question of jurisdiction is expected to be raised immediately by the defense on the claim that it is a case for a State court rather than a Federal court. No diversity of citizenship is involved, that is, the petitioners and respondents are not citizens of different states; and State courts are confronted daily with qustions involving the Federal Constitution. City Attorney Anderson said, however, that he would not be in position to say what the defense will be until he has seen the pleadings.

Alston, it is claimed further, is a property owner jointly with other members of his family, but "no discrimination is made in the rate of taxes he is required to pay into said public school fund on account of his race or color."

In addition to the declaratory judgment and injunction restraining the School Board from paying Negro teachers less than white teachers, the petition also asks for an injunction prohibiting the distri-

Here Is How Alabama Pays Her Teachers

The average annual salary of the white teacher in Alabama schools is practically the same as it was 10 years ago, the official figures of the State Department of Education reveal.

In fact, the average salary decreased from $839 in 1928 to $830 in 1938. The national average salary for white and colored teachers was $1,364 in 1928; 1938 figures are lacking.

The average rural white teacher's salary is $747 compared with $1,155 in the city.

The average rural elementary white teacher draws $604 compared with $1,285 in the city.

If principals and vocational teachers are excluded, lower salaries prevail:

Rural—Elementary, $598; high, $[illegible]; total, $702.

City—Elementary, $1,038; high $1,240; total, $1,113.

State—Elementary, $681; high, $997; total, $785.

The above figures when reduced to average monthly salaries on a 12 months basis give the elementary teacher $50 a month in rural schools and $87 in city schools, with a State average of $57. The State average for elementary and high school teachers on a monthly basis is $65.

Negro teacher average annual salaries increased from $354 in 1928 to $396 in 1938. Negro rural elementary teachers receive $360 compared to $590 for high school teachers. The average city elementary negro teacher receives $577 compared to $703 for the high school negro teacher.

ACTION IN ALABAMA

The Alabama State Teachers' Association has voted $600 to help fight for the equalization of teachers' salaries in that state.

Alabama colored teachers thus join those of Maryland and Virginia in giving concrete evidence that they mean business.

Similar campaigns are being planned in Tennessee, Florida and Louisiana, although nothing definite has been heard from the colored teachers of North Carolina which has the largest number and where there is the same discrimination against Negroes as elsewhere in Southern school systems.

We commend the colored teachers of Alabama, Virginia and Maryland, and the N. A. A. C. P. legal lights for the fight they are making.

Colored people are gradually learning that if they are to make headway in their fight for equal rights, they must intelligently plan their campaigns and go down in their pockets to finance them.

The day when we could go to other groups for money to finance our fights for equality is over, and from now on we shall have to fill our war chests ourselves.

It is heartening that what is considered our most conservative professional group should take such a commanding lead in helping to batter down the barriers of discrimination.

There is high hope for any group whose best educated members are sufficiently concerned about discrimination to dig deeply into their pockets to supply the pecuniary sinews of warfare against it.

If colored teachers in a deep Southern state like Alabama are intelligent and courageous enough to finance such a campaign, there seems to be little reason to justify inactivity elsewhere in Dixie.

Ala. Teachers Pay To Launch Salary Fight

$600 Cash Contribution Paid To Campaign "War Chest"

MONTGOMERY, Ala.—Backing up their unanimous approval with an initial cash contribution of $600 to a campaign war chest, the Alabama State Teachers Association in session here Saturday, March 25, voted full support for a fight to equalize the salaries of Negro and white teachers in the state.

The fight, which will be conducted by a committee of citizens, together with the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, represents the third state in which the NAACP has fully launched its drive to abolish the discriminatory salary schedule faced by Negro teachers in states where segregated schools obtain. Preparations are under way for conducting similar campaigns in Tennessee, Florida and Louisiana.

Thurgood Marshall, assistant legal counsel for the Association, addressed the teachers on the technique of conducting the drive. Marshall will develop the legal phases of the compaign.

Setting forth the disparity between the salaries paid Negro and white teachers in Alabama, the report said in part:

"A white person with a Bachelor's degree has a salary range with a five-dollar yearly increase from one to nine years of $90 to $150. A Negro with identical training and experience enjoys a salary range with a two-and-a-half-dollar yearly increase from one to nine years of $64 to $100. This is as of September, 1937.

Average Teacher Is 27, Works In Country, Earns $499 A Year

This is the first of three articles about white county teachers in Alabama based on studies of 13 counties made by graduate students in education at Auburn.

By KIRTLEY BROWN

AUBURN, ALA., Jan. 21.—(Special)—Alabama's average county school teacher is a young woman 27 years of age who teaches elementary grades in an open-country consolidated school of 7 or more teachers. She has invested $1,548 in her preparation to teach, including three years in college. Her teaching experience amounts to six years, with three in her present position, where she receives $499 in annual salary, and $136 in donations by relatives, income from other sources than teaching, and in borrowing money. Her total yearly income is $635.

This factual picture of Alabama's county teachers is gained from studies made by graduate students in education at Auburn in which confidential information was obtained from county teachers in 15 representative Alabama counties.

The studies showed further the typical or average teacher of this type in Alabama has no dependents. When school is not in session, she lives with her parents. While teaching, she boards in a home where she keeps her own room, helps prepare meals, and shares her sleeping room. She has the use of a living room, but is without bathroom or running water. There is no phonograph or piano in the home where she boards, but she has the use of a radio. She has access to the newspaper and to magazines, and has the use of electricity for reading and study.

She spends 63 per cent of her salary, or $314, for such essentials of board, room, clothing; 16 per cent, or $80, for professional improvement and social betterment, the major portion of which goes for education; 6 per cent, or $30, for occasional and business reasons, such as gifts to charity, civic improvement, interest, taxes, upkeep, etc.; 7 per cent, or $35, to pay off accumulated debts; and 8 per cent, or $40, is put aside as current savings. The total value of her possessions amounts to $136. She has no net assets, but has a net debt of $28.

These facts were supplied by 526 of the 1,950 teachers in the following county systems: Marion, Winston, Lamar, Greene, Hale, Bibb, Barbour, Dale, Geneva, Covington, Butler, Crenshaw, Coffee, Chambers and Lee.

A total of 335,000 white boys and girls (75 per cent of the State's school population) attend county schools.

Average Rural Teacher Paid Smaller Salary Than Waiters

This is the second of three articles about white county teachers in Alabama based on studies of 15 counties made by graduate students in education at Auburn.

By KIRTLEY BROWN

AUBURN, ALA., Jan. 28.—(Special)—The average daily salary paid Alabama's rural school teachers is $1.37 or less than $42 per month, a figure which is considerably less than that received by many classes of skilled or clerical workers and even waiters and waitresses.

This is one of the conclusions to be found in studies conducted by graduate students in education at the Alabama Polytechnic Institute who collected data on 526 of the 1,950 rural teachers in 15 representative counties in all sections of the State.

Based on 1936-37 figures one-fourth of these teachers received annual salaries of $414 or less per year; one-half received $499 or less; while only one-fourth received salaries of $675 or more per year.

During the same year, 1935-36, the average yearly wage for all skilled workers in the United States was $1,436, or three times that of the Alabama rural teacher, according to the "Statistical Abstract." The average salary of office and clerical workers was $1,255, or more than two and one-half times as much. Waiters and waitresses averaged $946, or nearly twice the amount of the county teachers in this State.

"Alabama teachers are paid on a salary schedule set up during the depression years of 1934-35 and present appropriations are not adequate to meet that schedule," said Dr. Paul Irvine, Auburn professor of education. "It has been necessary to employ more teachers as the enrollment in the schools has increased, such additions being at the expense of the teachers serving. In many counties the lengthening of the term to seven months has been at the expense of the teachers in the system.

"Such conditions account for the restlessness in the teaching staff of the State, causing a continual flow of untrained teachers into Alabama's rural classrooms as the better-prepared teachers leave for city systems or go into other occupations which offer greater financial security."

Training and Experience

On the average, three years of college work was found to be the training of the teachers in the 15 typical counties, according to the Auburn study.

College graduates constituted 35 per cent of the teachers studied. Only five per cent had one year of college training or less, while over 50 per cent of the teachers had completed three years or more of college training.

The study also showed that 48 per cent of the teachers had less than six years of experience, and 30 per cent had less than four years of experience. "Since educational authorities recognize that a teacher does not reach the maximum of efficiency until the sixth year of experience, the State is sustaining a loss in the elimination of a large proportion of its experienced teachers," said Dr. Irvine. "Annual salary for the average county school teacher is shown to be $499, or less than $42 per month for the year. It is doubtful if qualified teachers will be attracted to our school by the promise of such a low salary," he explained.

Of the teachers studied, 30 per cent were in their present position for the first year, 63 per cent had served in that position three years or less, and 78 per cent had served in that position less than six years. "A great deal of teacher efficiency is wasted by this frequent moving of teachers, as well as by the continual loss of trained teachers to other fields which promise more financial security," said Dr. Irvine.

Nine hundred and five vacancies, or one out of every 14 teaching positions in the State, were filled with new and inexperienced teachers during 1935-36, the year covered by this study. Dr. Irvine believes that the efficiency of Alabama's county schools depends upon the retention of good teachers through years of continuous service.

REPORT SHOWS SCHOOL NEEDS

Citizens' Advisory Council Outlines Findings; More Funds First Necessary

The printed report of the Citizens' Advisory Educational Council, embracing a complete study of public school needs, has been mailed to all members of the Legislature, Parent-Teacher Assns. and other interested bodies, according to Col. Harry E. Ayres, Anniston, chairman of the publicity committee of the council.

In a statement regarding the report of the council, Colonel Ayres says:

"The Legislature sitting during the term of Gov. Frank M. Dixon should quickly realize that one of the foremost problems with which they will have to deal will be the raising of sufficient revenue adequately to support the cause of education in the state.

Teachers' Pay Too Low

"The $1,700,000 which Governor Dixon estimates he can save through more economical administration will not be adequate to give Alabama a school system comparable to the average in the Southern states, in the opinion of the advisory council which believes a minimum of $4,000,000 in new revenue will be necessary to finance efficiently an eight-month term throughout the next four years.

"But no single administration at Montgomery can do for the schools of this state what needs to be done. The entire school system must be removed from the field of political manipulation. Teachers must be paid more than $663 in rural schools or $1114 in the cities, including Birmingham, these figures being the average for white teachers in the state at present, Negro teachers getting less than half the white averages. Teachers must be given assurance of tenure, paid on time and their old-age retirement provided for.

On Filling Posts

"Guarantee these things," Colonel Ayres says, "and we can demand a higher standard of our teachers and not get those whose personalities are the most colorless, as the Carnegie Foundation represents the case to be in our schools today.

"Alabama ranks at the bottom in the Southeastern states in the restoration of teachers' salaries to the pre-depression level, and even the receipt of $1,700,000 from savings which Governor Dixon expects will not be sufficient to make salary increases if an eight-month term is inaugurated.

"It is believed that if the people have the facts as compiled by disinterested persons they will be willing to finance their schools, and with that belief in mind the report of the council is distributed," the statement concludes.

Here is How Alabama Pays Her Teachers

The average annual salary of the white teacher in Alabama schools is practically the same as it was 10 years ago, the official figures of the State Department of Education reveal.

In fact, the average salary decreased from $839 in 1928 to $830 in 1938.

The national average salary for white and colored teachers was $1,364 in 1928; 1938 figures are lacking.

The average rural white teacher's salary is $747 compared with $1,155 in the city.

The average rural elementary white teacher draws $604 compared with $1,285 in the city.

If principals and vocational teachers are excluded, lower salaries prevail:

Rural—Elementary, $598; high, $924; total, $702.

City—Elementary, $1,038; high $1,240; total, $1,113.

State—Elementary, $681; high, $997; total, $785.

The above figures when reduced to average monthly salaries on a 12 months basis give the elementary teacher $50 a month in rural schools and $87 in city schools, with a State average of $57. The State average for elementary and high school teachers on a monthly basis is $65.

Negro teacher average annual salaries increased from $354 in 1928 to $396 in 1938. Negro rural elementary teachers receive $360 compared to $590 for high school teachers. The average city elementary negro teacher receives $577 compared to $703 for the high school negro teacher.

ALA. TEACHERS PAY $600 IN SALARY FIGHT

MONTGOMERY, Ala.—April 4—Backing up their unanimous approval with an initial cash contribution of $600 to a campaign war chest, the Alabama State Teachers' Association in session here voted full support for a fight to equalize the salaries of Colored and white teachers in the state.

The fight, which will be conducted by a committee of prominent citizens together with the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, represents the third state in which the NAACP has fully launched its drive to abolish the discriminatory salary schedule faced by colored teachers in states where segregated schools obtain. Preparations are under way for conducting similar campaigns in Tennessee, Florida, and Louisiana.

Thurgood Marshall, assistant legal counsel for the Association, addressed the teachers on the technique of conducting the drive. Mr. Marshall will develop the legal phase of the campaign.

Members of the citizens' committee include: Dr. E. W. Taggart, a national board member of the NAACP; the Rev. F. D. Thompson, pastor of Birmingham's 16th Street Baptist Church; James E. Kelly, grand secretary of the Elks; Damon Lee, Jr., S. J. Bennet, Mrs. Dovie S. Brooks, and Dr. J. W. Dowdell, president of the Bessemer Civic League.

No Discrimination In Negro Teacher Pay, Court Rules

TALLAHASSEE, July 25.—(A.P.)—County school boards won supreme court approval today of laws by which they fix different salary scales for white and negro teachers in the public schools.

John Gilbert, a negro, sought unsuccessfully to compel an increase in his salary by the Brevard county board of public instruction. He charged that the basic salary of $50 a month for negro teachers and $100 a month for white teachers resulted from "discrimination" against the negroes.

The supreme court said there was no requirement in the constitution about salaries paid to school teachers and that the salary scales rested solely with the county school boards.

It said there was no question presented in the Gilbert case that would show any violation of federal and state constitutions which provide equal protection for persons regardless of color and race.

Floridans Not Discouraged By Adverse Decision of State Supreme Court.

JACKSONVILLE, Fla., Aug. 24—Negro teachers are not discouraged by the decision recently handed down by the Florida Supreme Court, which denied their petition for equal salaries. Inquiries, letters and expressions of good cheer are coming into the office of headquarters almost daily. These expressions serve to show officials of the association just how the matter of salary equalization has taken hold on the thinking of the general rank and file of Negro citizens in Florida.

Several business men have either written or made long distance calls to pledge their support for a continued fight for salary equalization. Teachers throughout the state seem more determined than ever that the fight shall be carried on.

A very interesting side light on the whole situation has been the attitude of the State Superintendent and the State Agent for Negro schools. The former has assumed apparently an attitude of "hands off" and ignoring the whole thing. Such an attitude could not be assumed by the latter. Because the title of his office indicates that he is the "agent" FOR Negro schools, many have felt that he would advocate EQUAL EDUCATIONAL OPPORTUNITIES for the folk for whom he is serving as "agent." Almost two years ago he was asked his stand on this matter of equal salaries. He dodged the issue by saying that it would make too lengthy a letter and that he would postpone the answer until he saw the inquirer in person. He has never answered. He was scheduled to talk at the last meeting of the Florida State Teachers' Association on "What the State Agent for Negro Schools Has Done to Equalize Salaries;" again he dodged the issue by saying that he did not know until he saw the program on the day of the meeting that he was on for that particular subject.

But amid indifference on the one hand and downright opposition on the other teachers are coming to realize that he who would be free must himself strike the first blow, and so they are rapidly joining in with the movement seeking equality of pay.

GEORGIA TEACHERS
FIGHT FOR MORE PAY

Atlanta,-Feb.2 (ANP)
The Strategy Committee representing the Fulton County teachers in their fight for better salaries, discussed ways of seeking more petitions from other local civil groups at its meeting Tuesday night. Teacher petitions reveal the fact that Negro teachers receive from $50 to $60 per month and that Fulton Co., principals are paid a minimum of $85 per month to be increased to $125 per month over a five-year period. Contending that Fulton County is adding little, if any, to State funds for Colored teacher salaries,the local teachers are asking a $100 minimum monthly wage for Fulton County school principals to be increased to $200 over a five-year period. The movement began last summer when 84 members of the Negro teacher group signed petitions asking the Board of Education for increased wages.

Colored Kentucky Teachers Request Same Pay As Whites

Petition, Signed By More Than 200 Teachers, Presented To Louisville Board of Education.

LOUISVILLE, Feb. 16—(UNP)—Last Friday evening a group of Louisville citizens, representing the N.A.A.C.P., the Urban League and the city association of teachers, took steps to bring about a revision of the wage differential of teachers.

Both a petition, signed by more than 200 public school teachers, and a formal request for the salary revision was presented to the board of education here. As matters now stand colored teachers receive a lower salary for their services as teachers for no apparent reason other than that their skins are darker than those of the other teachers who receive more money.

Members of the committee who met with the board of education to present its request and reasons for such were:

Rev. W. P. Offutt, G. W. Jackson, Lyman T. Johnson, Rufus Stout, Miss Helen Anthony, J. A. Thomas, C. W. Anderson, Dr. J. W. Walls, Dr. P. O. Sweeney and Dr. J. A. C. Lattimore.

Pay of Louisville Teachers Raised To That of Whites

15% Salary Differential Erased By Board of Education Following Long Effort To Have Situation Corrected

LOUISVILLE, Ky.—(ANP)—Climaxing a fight of several years waged by teachers, colored leaders and the local press, the flag of victory was waved last Thursday night when the board of education adopted a resolution calling for raising salaries of colored teachers in Louisville to a par of white teachers in the local school system. The resolution was adopted unanimously with Board President N. P. Bloom and all other members present.

At the recent session of the Kentucky Negro Education Association, a resolution was adopted authorizing expenditure of $500 of association money in the fight to eliminate the 15 per cent salary differential between white and colored teachers.

The ruling, however, will not become effective until 1940, because of necessary adjustments. Concerning these, the resolution stated:

"It is the opinion of the board that inequalities in the salary schedule that have appeared since its adoption should be corrected when and as it is possible. Since the school year of 1939-40 marks the fifth year of operation of the schedule—which year is required to adjust basic inequalities applying both to white and colored teachers—it will require another considerable increase in the allocation of funds by the city for 1939-40 in order to meet these increases."

URGE JUSTICE IN WAGES FOR N.O. TEACHERS

Score Inflexibility Of The Revenue System And Demand Probe

NEW ORLEANS, La., Dec. 15—Charging that the revenue system of the New Orleans public schools is inflexible, that the major defect is impotency of the school board to determine its own income and that more money from the state should be sought, a bulletin was issued by a special "Citizens' Committee."

The bulletin outlays a general study of the New Orleans school system declaring "that regardless of the amount of money the community wishes to devote to the schools, and teachers' salaries, the present schedule itself might well be given further study to determine its justice as between compensations paid the various types of teachers."

Included in recommendations for the variation in teachers' salaries expressedly emphasized, the quality, training and experience of teachers, refraining from those that may imply race, as is the practice.

The final recommendation in this regard was that the salary variation should be decided upon the "economic standards the community wishes its teachers to maintain."

"According to the present practice, it is evident that the New Orleans school board adheres to the belief that Race teachers should maintain a standard of living far below that of white teachers."

The local Branch of the N.A.A.C.P., to which J. E. Wilkins was recently elected as president, and the Negro Educational Alliance, headed by Dr. P. P. Creuzot are mapping plans to revive the equalization of teachers' salary fight instituted by the League for Civil Rights and Justice.

Wallace Marine, president of the league, also a board member of the N.A.A.C.P. is leading in these efforts.

"It is a foregone conclusion that in view of the recent Maryland decision, and like trends in other border states, a more favorable course of action is expected, and results will probably be attained under more favorable reactions," Mr. Marine said.

NAALP Wins First Round In Maryland Teacher Salary Case

BALTIMORE, Md.—In a three-cornered fight waged here in the United States District Court, Thursday, October 26, growing out of the case of Walter Mills, Camp Parole, Md., school teacher who is seeking to force the county school board to pay him a salary equal to that of a white teacher doing the same work, the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, whose attorneys are representing Mills, came out on top.

At the hearing Thursday, both the local and the state boards of education were fighting to be absolved from connection with the case. In addition the county board took the position that if it was involved then the state board was involved too. The county board expressed its position by issuing a third-party complaint. The hearing was held to give the state opportunty to argue its motion to dismiss this complaint.

Arguing that the question of the state board of education and the other state officers was decided in the former case heard last March before Judge Chesnut, who ruled that the case should have been brought against the county board of education, the Attorney General for Maryland asked for a dismissal of the third-party complaint. The court ruled against him.

The Court also ruled against the county board's attorney who attempted to argue for dismissal of the N. A. A. C. P.'s original complaint. The N. A. A. C. P. attorneys argued that no such motion could be brought up without notice to them.

The Court ruled that the state officers and other defendants should all stay in the action until the final hearing.

The Court's decision means that when the case comes up for trial November 9, both the Maryland State board of education and the Anne Arundel County Board of Education, against whom Mills is bringing the current action, will be defendants.

RACIAL FACTOR IN PAY TO EDUCATOR CLAIMED IN COURT

Constitutional Issue Before Federal Jurist In Baltimore

BALTIMORE (AP)—A Negro school principal's claim he received less pay than white teachers in comparable jobs because of "racial discrimination," left in Federal court today a constitutional issue which may affect thousands of Negro teachers throughout the nation.

Argued before a U. S. judge for the first time, it raises the question whether separate wage scales for white and Negro teachers, with Negroes paid less than whites, violates the 14th amendment to the constitution.

Walter Mills, Negro principal of Anne Arundel county, Md., argued racial factors resulted in the county school board paying him $1,058 annually while Slater Bryant, Jr., white school principal with a comparable job, received $1,800.

Mills' counsel claimed both men had the same qualifications and duties.

George Fox, county school superintendent, asserted no Negro teacher in the county received as much salary as a white teacher in a similar job.

"Can you sit there and tell me that the racial factor did not enter into this state of affairs," Judge W. Calvin Chestnut demanded.

Fox replied that the salary of discrepancies were based on different teaching abilities of whites and Negroes.

Noah A. Hillman, counsel for the defendant county board, told the court equal salaries, if paid, would force a seven-cent boost in the county's tax rate.

Legal sources here said they expected the case to be appealed to the Supreme Court regardless of lower court decisions. An ultimate verdict for Mills would mean salary revisions in virtually every state, particularly in the South, they predicted.

NAACP WINS MD. TEACHER'S SALARY FIGHT

$45,000 Pay Hike Follows Victory

Chicago, Ill.

BALTIMORE, Md., Nov. 24—The Negro teachers in Anne Arundel county, Md., must be paid the same salaries as white teachers doing the same work, it was ru'ed here November 22 by Judge W. Calvin Chesnut of the United States district court. Judge Chesnut signed an injunction restraining the Anne Arundel county board of education from paying lower salaries to colored teachers than to whites.

The decision represented a victory for Walter Mills, 31, principal of a five-teacher school at Camp Parole, Md., plaintiff in the case, who sought to have the county board of education rstrained from paying him a salary less than white principals of the same experience and doing the same work, solely on the ground of color. Mills' salary is $1,050 per year, while white principals doing similar work receive $1,800 per year.

Salary Increases $45,000

The decision means that Negro teachers in Anne Arundel county will receive approximately $45,000 more in their pay envelopes than they have heretofore. The total amount of the differential wage still existing in Maryland counties is more than $400,000.

Mills' defense which was waged by Thurgood Marshall, William H. Hastie, Leon Ransom, and W. A. C. Hughes, Jr., attorneys for the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, represented a victory for the Maryland Teachers Association, which has backed the fight together with the N. A. A. C. P. and other organizations.

In issuing the injunction Judge Chesnut said:

Judge Explains Decision

"As a result of consideration of this case I have reached the conclusion that the plaintiff is entitled to an injunction against the County Board of Education from discrimination in the fixing of his salary to the extent that it is based so'ey on race or color."

At the same time the court dismissed the cross-complaints against the State Board of Education and others and separatly against the County Commissioners of Anne Arundel County.

Maryland School Principal Demands Pay Equal To White

BALTIMORE, Nov. 28 (ANP)—The U. S. District Court here has been called upon to decide whether the wage differential paid white and colored school principals is a constitutional issue. Walter Mills, colored principal of Ann Arundel County, Md., says it is.

Mills' counsel appearing before Judge W. Calvin Chestnut, declared that the separate wage scales, with Negroes paid less than whites violate the 14th Amendment to the U. S. Constitution. Mills contends that racial factors are responsible for the County School Board paying him $1,058 annually, while Slater Bryant, Jr., white school principal with a comparable job, gets $1,800.

After Mills' counsel told the Court that both men possess similar qualifications and duties, George Fox, County School superintendent said no colored teacher in the county got as much salary as a white teacher in a similar job.

Judge Chestnut then asked Fox: "Can you sit there and tell me that the racial factor did not enter into this state of affairs?" Fox replied that the salary differential was based on the different teaching abilities of whites and Negroes.

Noah A. Hillman, counsel for the County Board told the Court that if equal salaries were paid the principals and teachers, it would force a seven per-centt increase in the country's tax rate. Decision in the case is expected within a few days.

NAACP Wins Victory In Maryland County Which May Affect Whole Unequal Pay System in South

BALTIMORE, Md., Nov. 26.—The Negro teachers in Anne Arundel County, Md., must be paid the same salaries as white teachers doing the same work, it was ruled here by Judge W. Calvin Chestnut of the United States district court. Judge Chestnut signed an injunction restraining the Anne Arundel County Board of Education from paying lower salaries to Negro teachers than to whites.

The decision represented a victory for the Negro people in the fight for equal educational facilities, Walter Mills, 31, principal of a five-teacher school at Camp Parole, Md., plaintiff in the case, sought to have the county board of education restrained from paying him a salary less than white principals of the same experience and doing the same work, solely on the ground of color. Mills' salary is $1,050 per year, while white principals doing similar work received $1,800 per year.

In issuing the injunction, Judge Chestnut said:

"As a result of consideration of this case I have reached the conclusion that the plaintiff is entitled to an injunction against the County Board of Education from discrimination in the fixing of his salary to the extent that it is based solely on race or color."

At the same time the court dismissed the cross-complaints against the State Board of Education and others and separately against the County Commissioners of Anne Arundel County.

In his decision Judge Chesnut made it clear that he was in no way passing upon the right of the county board of education to set a salary scale for individual teachers, but merely passing upon the right of an education board to discriminate solely on the basis of race, in the payment of such salaries."

SETS EXAMPLE

At least one member of the school board, George T. Cromwell, expressed himself as being opposed to the salary discrimination.

Cromwell was quoted by a Baltimore paper as saying:

"Salary differences ought to be eliminated and will inevitably be eliminated. The practice of paying white teachers more than colored persons for doing the same type of work is absurd. It shows a lack of progress. I believe that each teacher should be paid whatever his services are worth regardless of his color. Meanwhile, I am doing all in my power to abolish these pay differences with a minimum of strain on the county's finances."

Whether the Anne Arundel County Board of Education would appeal the court's decision, was not disclosed.

In a telegram sent to the Virginia State Teachers Association Thursday, Nov. 23, Walter White executive secretary of the N. A. A. C. P., said: "What has been done in Maryland is an example of what can be done in every southern and border state where these inequalities exist."

Judge Chesnut's opinion is expected to affect not only the State of Maryland, but to have an important bearing upon the whole system of racial salary differentials now in force throughout the southern states having separate schools.

Orders Equal Pay For Teachers In Maryland County

12-2-39

BALTIMORE, Md. — The Negro teachers in Anne Arundel County, Md., must be paid the same salaries as white teachers doing the same work it was ruled here November 22 by Judge W. Calvin Chestnut of the United States District Court. Judge Chestnut signed an injunction restraining the Anne Arundel county board of education from paying lower salaries to colored teachers than to whites.

Mills' salary is $1,050 per year, while white principals doing similar work receive $1,800 per year.

WHAT IS GAINED

The decision means that Negro teachers in Anne Arundel County will receive approximately $45,000 more in their pay envelopes than they have heretofore. The total amount of the differential wage still existing in Maryland counties is more than $400,000.

Mills' defense which was waged by Thurgood Marshall, William H. Hastie, Leon Ransom, and W. A. C. Hughes, Jr., attorneys for the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, represented a victory for the Maryland Teachers Association, which has backed the fight together with the NAACP and other organizations.

COURT'S RULING

In issuing the injunction Judge Chestnut said:

"As a result of consideration of this case I have reached the conclusion that the plaintiff is entitled to an injunction against the County Board of Education from discrimination in the fixing of his salary to the extent that it is based solely on race or color."

At the same time the court dismissed the cross-complaints against the State Board of Education and others and separately against the County Commissioners of Anne Arundel County.

In his decision Judge Chestnut made it clear that he was in no way passing upon the right of the county board of education to set a salary scale for individual teachers, but merely passing upon the right of an education board to discriminate solely on the basis of race, in the payment of such salaries. The decision continued in part:

Journal & Guide

"The Court is not determining what particular amounts of salaries must be paid in Anne Arundel County either to white or colored teachers individually, nor is the board in any way to be prohibited by the injunction in this case from exercising its judgment as to the respective amounts to be paid to individual teachers based on their individual qualifications, capacities and abilities. It is only enjoined from discrimination in salaries on account of race or color."

PREVIOUS GAINS

The NAACP has already won more than $100,000 in salary increases for Negro teachers in nine Maryland counties, all of whose education boards equalized Negro and white teachers salary scales in settlements obtained without court action.

At least one member of the school board, George T. Cromwell, expressed himself as being opposed to the salary discrimination.

Cromwell was quoted by a Baltimore paper as saying:

"Salary differences ought to be eliminated and will inevitably be eliminated. The practice of paying white teachers more than colored persons for doing the same type of work is absurd. It shows a lack of progress. I believe that each teacher should be paid whatever his services are worth regardless of his color. Meanwhile, I am doing all in my power to abolish these pay differences with a minimum of strain on the county's finances."

APPEAL UNCERTAIN

Whether the Anne Arundel County board of education would appeal the court's decision, was not disclosed. George Fox, county superintendent, who was defendant in the case, was quoted as saying after he learned of the decision:

"The question of expense for further litigation will be influential in the board's decision." The board meets on December 6.

In a telegram sent to the Virginia State Teachers Association Thursday, November 23, Walter White, executive secretary of the NAACP said: "What has been done in Maryland, is an example of what can be done in every southern and border state where these inequalities exist."

VITAL OPINION

The decision of Judge Chestnut was hailed by the NAACP as a victory of far-reaching significance in that it provides a standard of measurement for public employment and directs that salary scales may not be based upon race and color.

Judge Chestnut's opinion is expected to affect not only the state of Maryland, but to have an important bearing upon the whole system of racial salary differentials now in force throughout the southern states having separate schools.

FUNDS NEEDED

At the same time, the NAACP officers warn that there is grave danger that the association will have to curtail its activities for equalization because of lack of funds.

"The public must know," said Walter White, NAACP secretary, "that these legal campaigns are costly. The association has been assisted by the state teacher's associations in the states where legal action is being undertaken, but in order to secure the widest benefit of these decisions, the association must have the financial and moral support of the public at large.

"What is being done in Maryland can be done in other states if we secure the money to carry on."

Mills is represented by Leon A. Ranson, professor of law at the Howard University law school; William H. Hastie, dean of the Howard law school; W. A. C. Hughes, Jr., of Baltimore; and Thurgood Marshall, special counsel for the N. A. A. C. P.

Half Million In Salaries Depends On Maryland Case

Courier 11-25-39 Pittsburgh

Court Reserves Decision in Three-Day Trial of Suit Brought by School Principal to Obtain Same Salary as Whites Doing Same Work.

BALTIMORE, Md., Nov. 22.—Nearly a half million dollars in salaries to colored teachers in Maryland depends upon a decision which Judge W. Calvin Chestnut is to make in connection with the suit prosecuted by Walter Mills, Anne Arundel county colored school principal, who is demanding the same pay as white principals.

Mills is represented by attorneys of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

Testimony in the case required three days. Judge Chestnut reserved decision.

If the decision is favorable colored teachers in Anne Arundel county will receive pay increases amouting to $45,000 a year. Teachers throughout the state will be benefited to the extent of more than $400,000.

The association has obtained equal salaries in nine Maryland counties through agreements with the counties.

This is the first suit in which an attack has been made on the entire system.

CONGRATULATIONS, MR. MILLS

Walter Mills, a young colored principal of a high school in Anne Arundel County, Maryland, is the recipient of many congratulations for having won a law suit in which the United States District Court said that Negro teachers in Anne Arundel County were entitled to the same salary as that of white teachers where their qualifications, experience, etc., were the same.

Argus: St. Louis, Mo. 12-1-39

To you, Mr. Mills, we wish to add our congratulations; not only to you but to the State Association of Negro Teachers in Maryland which furnished the principal money to prosecute this suit through the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People. As a result of this suit the colored teachers in Anne Arundel County will enjoy an increase in salary which will amount to nearly fifty thousand dollars a year. This is a pretty good sum to come into the hands of these teachers just for the taking. This amount, it will be remembered, did not come to these teachers because they merely asked for what was due them. Things of that sort do not come to any individual or group just for the mere asking. Precedent had to be broken, customs and traditions had to be set aside—all of which met with the most stubborn opposition on the part of the city, county and state boards of education. Therefore, one can see more clearly why it was necessary for Mills and his associates to take their case to the United States District Court. As a further benefit which will come to the Negro teachers in the state of Maryland, it is expected that nearly one-half million dollars in increased salaries will come to them during the next twelve months. Isn't that worth fighting for? We should think so.

In making this brief comment with reference to this increased salary gain for the colored teachers in Maryland, we think about the Negro teachers in the state of Missouri who are still "wide asleep" on their rights to have their salaries equalized with those of the white teachers who are doing similar work and who have similar qualifications. It is rather sad commentary to mention the inaction on the part of the Missouri State Association of Negro Teachers during its recent meeting here when it failed to take any definite steps to have the salaries of the Negro teachers in the state equalized with those of whites. According to a report of Professor L. S. Curtis, statistician, the average salaries of the Negro teachers in the state of Missouri is sixty-two to seventy-five per cent of that paid to white teachers. If the salaries of these Negro teachers were equalized with those of whites, it would amount to more than a half million dollar increase annually. The officials of the Missouri State Teachers Association know that this condition exists, but they have done nothing definite that will bring about a change—why? We wonder if these leaders think that the members of their race are not entitled to the salaries which are justly due them, or if the leaders feel that their jobs would be in jeopardy if they put up the money to have these salaries equalized. Surely somebody is "wide asleep" on the job. Surely there need be an awakening among our most intelligent leadership. Let not these leaders think their future is secure as long as city, county and state school officials can discriminate against the less fortunate of our race with impunity.

Remember, it is just as easy to equalize the Negro and white teachers' salaries in Missouri as it was to equalize their salaries in Maryland — if we will only think, think, think.

TEACHER SALARY SYSTEM SHAKEN

Federal Court's Opinion May Affect Whole Pay System in South.

Courier

BALTIMORE, Md., Nov. 30.—The Negro teachers in Anne Arundel county, Md., must be paid the same salaries as white teachers doing the same work, it was ruled here November 22 by Judge W. Calvin Chesnut, of the United States District Court. Judge Chesnut signed an injunction restraining the Anne Arundel County Board of Education from paying lower salaries to colored teachers than to whites.

The decision represented a victory for Walter Mills, 31, principal of a five-teacher school at Camp Parole, Md., plaintiff in the case, who sought to have the County Board of Education restrained from paying him a salary less than white principals of the same experience and doing the same work, solely on the ground of color. Mills' salary is $1,050 per year, while white principals doing similar work receive $1,800 per year.

The decision means that Negro teachers in Anne Arundel County will receive approximately $45,000 more in their pay envelopes than they have heretofore. The total amount of the differential wage still existing in Maryland counties is more than $400,000.

Mills' defense which was waged by Thurgood Marshall, William H. Hastie, Leon Ransom and W. A. C. Hughes, Jr., attorneys for the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, represented a victory for the Maryland Teachers' Association, which has backed the fight together with the N.A.A.C.P. and other organizations.

COURT'S OPINION

In issuing the injunction Judge Chesnut said:

"As a result of consideration of this case I have reached the conclusion that the plaintiff is entitled to an injunction against the County Board of Education from discrimination in the fixing of his salary to the extent that it is based solely on race or color."

At the same time the court dismissed the cross-complaints against the State Board of Education and others and separately against the County Commissioners of Anne Arundel County.

In his decision, Judge Chesnut made it clear that he was in no way passing upon the right of the County Board of Education to set a salary scale for individual teachers, but merely passing upon the right of an education board to discriminate solely on the basis of race, in the payment of such salaries. The decision continued in part:

"The court is not determining what particular amounts of salaries must be paid in Anne Arundel County either to white or colored teachers individually, nor is the board in any way to be prohibited by the injunction in this case from exercising its judgment as to the respective amounts to be paid to individual teachers based on their individual qualifications, capacities and abilities. It is only enjoined from discrimination in salaries on account of race or color."

The N.A.A.C.P. has already won more than $100,000 in salary increases for Negro teachers in nine Maryland counties, all of whose education boards equalized Negro and white teacher salary scales in settlements obtained without court action.

At least one member of the school board, George T. Cromwell, expressed himself as being opposed to the salary discrimination.

BOARD MEMBER SPEAKS

Cromwell was quoted by a Baltimore paper as saying:

"Salary differences ought to be eliminated and will inevitably be eliminated. The practice of paying white teachers more than colored persons for doing the same type of work is absurd. It shows a lack of progress. I believe that each teacher should be paid whatever his services are worth regardless of his color. Meanwhile, I am doing all in my power to abolish these pay differences with a minimum of strain on the county's finances."

Whether the Anne Arundel County Board of Education would appeal the court's decision, was not disclosed. George Fox, county superintendent, who was defendant in the case, was quoted as saying, after he learned of the decision:

"The question of expense for further litigation will be influential in the board's decision."

In a telegram sent to the Virginia State Teachers' Association Thursday, November 23, Walter White, executive secretary of the N.A.A.C.P., said: "What has been done in Maryland is an example of what can be done in every Southern and border State where these inequalities exist."

The decision of Judge Chesnut was hailed by the N.A.A.C.P. as a victory of far-reaching significance in that it provides a standard of measurement for public employment, and directs that salary scales may not be based upon race and color. Judge Chesnut's opinion is expected to affect not only the State of Maryland, but to have an important bearing upon the whole system of racial salary differentials now in force throughout the Southern States having separate schools.

EDUCATION- 1939
TEACHERS' SALARIES

IF SUCCESSFUL, MARYLAND ACTION MAY UPSET SYSTEM OF DIFFERENTIAL WAGES

Question Has Never Been Passed On; Teacher Seeks Injunction to Restrain Board From Letting Color Decide Pay

BALTIMORE. — Maryland, on November 18, became the testing ground in a legal battle which eventually may outlaw on constitutional grounds the whole system whereby Negro teachers in the public schools of the southern and border states are paid lower salaries than whites of the same grade.

Walter Mills, a Negro teacher-principal in Anne Arundel county is seeking an injunction in the federal district court before Judge W Calvin Chesnut to restrain the board of education of Anne Arundel county and George Fox, county superintendent of schools, "from making any distinction solely on the grounds of race or color in the fixing of salaries paid white and colored teachers and principals in the public schools of Anne Arundel county."

The third party defendants in the action are the state board of education, the state comptroller, the state treasurer and the county board of commissioners. These defendants were joined at the request to the court of the Anne Arundel county board of education on May 8, 1939. A motion to dismiss was filed by the state officials and was argued October 26 before Judge Chesnut who ruled that they should remain parties to the action pending the final hearing.

Seeks Federal Jurisdiction

The jurisdiction of the federal court is sought under the so-called Civil Rights statutes, title 8, sections 41 and 43 of which provide:

"All persons within the jurisdiction of the United States shall have the same right in every state and territory to make and enforce contracts, to sue, be parties, give evidence, and to the full and equal benefit of all laws and proceedings for the security of persons and property as is enjoyed by white citizens, and shall be subject to like punishment, pains, penalties, taxes licenses, and exactions of every kind, and to no other.

"Every person who, under color of any statute, ordinance, regulation, custom, or usage, of any state or territory, subjects or causes to be subjected, any citizen of the United States or other person within the jurisdiction thereof to the deprivation of any rights, privileges or immunities secured by the Constitution and laws, shall be liable to the party injured in an action at law, suit in equity, or other proper proceeding for redress."

Differential Is $500,000

It is estimated that the total difference in the salaries paid Negro and white teachers throughout the state is approximately one-half million dollars annually. The plaintiffs in the present action and in previous actions on the same point maintain that this differential is instituted solely on the basis of race and color which they aver is unconstitutional.

Since 1908 the State of Maryland has maintained salary schedules by statutes which provide for higher minimum salaries for white teachers and principals than for Negro teachers and principals with the same qualifications and experience. Maryland is the only state with such a discriminatory salary schedule in the statutes.

Since 1808 the Negro teachers and principals of Maryland and interested citizens have been petitioning the legislature to repeal these statutes and pass ones providing for equal salaries. These efforts have been unsuccessful.

In 1936 attorneys for the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People were requested by the Negro teachers and principals to take the necessary legal action to remove the discrimination. The first case was a petition for a writ of mandamus filed in the Circuit court of Montgomery county the latter part of 1936 on behalf of William Gibbs, a Negro teacher-principal, to require the board of education of Montgomery county to equalize salaries.

Equal in Nine Counties

A check of the records of the board of education of Montgomery county and the scales of salaries revealed that white high school teachers received an annual salary of $1,571, as compared to $859 for colored teachers, or a difference of $712; that white elementary teachers received an annual salary of $1,362 as compared to $631 for colored elementary teachers, or a difference of $731. It was found, also, that the schedule of salaries in the county for white janitors provided $960 a year, which was $338 a year more than the average salary of a Negro elementary teacher and $101 more than the average salary of a Negro high school teacher.

The defendants filed a demurrer which was argued before the full bench in Montgomery county. The demurrer was overruled and the defendants required to answer. The case was settled by an agreement with the county board to equalize salaries.

The second effort at equalization was made in Calvert county in November, 1937 and here, as in Montgomery county, the legal case was settled out of court through an agreement by the board of education to equalize salaries. At the present time, salaries have been equalized in nine out of 23 counties in the state.

Further actions were withheld pending the last meeting of the legislature where it was hoped salaries would be equalized. Instead the legislature increased the salary scale for white teachers, but refused to touch the Negro salaries, thereby increasing the differential.

First Court Hearing

Thereupon action for an injunction was filed in the District court of the United States for the District of Maryland by Walter Mills the present plaintiff, for an injunction to restrain the state board of education from distributing the "Equalization Fund" of Maryland on the basis of the discriminatory salary schedules in the Maryland code. Motion to dismiss was filed by the state officials. After argument, Judge Chesnut rendered an opinion on March 1, 1939, that the complaint should be dismissed unless the county board of education was made a party.

The opinion of Judge Chesnut marked the first court opinion on the point of discrimination in teachers' salaries. The present case marks the first trial on the merits of this point and the decision will be the first decision on the merits of the point. The purpose of th eplaintiff is to have the salary schedule in the statutes declared unconstitutional and to secure an injunction.

The groups backing the fight for equalization of salaries point out that the differential of a half million dollars in Maryland alone is a serious economic handicap to not only the Negro teachers, but to Negro citizens generally. It is pointed out that the equalization of salaries in Montgomery county alone brought an addition of some 30 thousand dollars annually into the pay envelopes of Negro teachers and that a subsequent survey disclosed that this money went into the purchase and improvement of homes, the education of children, and the improvement of the teachers themselves through advanced training.

Court Ponders Md. Teachers' Dual Pay Scale

Anne Arundel Board Is Defendant in Principal's Suit

By the Associated Press

Baltimore, Nov. 16 .—A colored principal's claim he received less pay than white teachers in comparable jobs because of "racial discrimination," left in Federal Court today a constitutional issue which may affect thousands of colored teachers throughout the Nation.

Argued before a United States judge for the first time, it raises the question whether separate wage scales for white and colored teachers, with colored paid less than whites, violates the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution.

Walter Mills, colored principal of Anne Arundel County, Md., argued racial factors resulted in the county school board paying him $1,058 annually while Slater Bryant, jr., white school principal, with a comparable job, received $1,800.

Mills' counsel claimed both men had the same qualifications and duties.

George Fox, county school superintendent, asserted that the salary discrepancies were based on different teaching abilities of whites and Negroes.

Noah A. Hillman, counsel for the defendent county board, told the court equal salaries, if paid, would force a 7-cent boost in the county's tax rate.

Legal sources here said they expected the case to be appealed to the Supreme Court regardless of the lower court decisions. An ultimate verdict for Mills would mean salary revisions in virtually every State, particularly in the South, they predicted.

"The public must know," said Walter White, NAACP secretary, "that these legal campaigns are costly. The association has been assisted by the state teachers' associations in the states where legal benefit of these decisions, the association must have the financial and moral support of the public at large."

Hoey's Statement Refuted By Commission's Report

Staff Correspondence

RALEIGH, N. C.—That differences in salaries of colored and white teachers is explained by differences in certificate requirements, as asserted by Governor Hoey last week, is at variance with the report and recommendations of the commission authorized by the General Assembly in March, 1937, to study public schools and colleges for colored North Carolinians.

On page 31 of the printed report of the commission, made public a few weeks ago, it is stated

THE REQUIREMENTS SAME

"Requirements for the issuance of teachers' certificates of all types ARE THE SAME for colored as for other teachers. They must meet the minimum requirements on all levels in the same way other teachers do. There is no relaxation of regulation in any pected in view of the recent decision of the United States Supreme Court granting Lloyd Gaines the right to attend the University of Missouri law school.

The New York woman's application is the first of a number of such cases that are expected in view of the recent decision of the Supreme Court.

SOLUTION SEEN

One solution of the problem in North Carolina, was advocated in Governor Hoey's message to the legislature, when he recommended the graduate courses be provided at North Carolina College for Negroes and A. and T. College.

The state constitution decrees separate educational institutions for thetwo races.

One official of the university said, "One or two Negroes who have sought admission to the university's law and pharmacy schools in the past have, after proving qualified for such courses, been sent to institutions in other states, their tuition being paid by this state." The state, however, had never made formal arrangement for the payment oftuition for out-of-state study.

Members of the faculty were of the opinion that should the applicant resort to legal action, the university administration would submit the case to the board of trustees, who in turn might submit it to the legislature.

EQUALIZATION OF SALARIES

On the equalization of teachers salaries the governor said that an adjustment is being made, but i would take some time to work out an equitable and just basis on the preparation of training.

He said: "The teachers in the public school for Negroes do not receive as high salary as the teachers in the white schools, but that is explainable in a measure by the fact the requirements for certificates are not as rigid and do not demand the same standard of learning."

RECOMMENDS SALARY INCREASE

He also recommended that teachers be given an increase of salary for each year for 10 years instead of the present eight. This extra two years would give teachers in the higher bracket an increase in salary equal to that of the pre-depression days.

Governor Hoey also stated that a 12th grade should be provided. North Carolina is one of the six states that does not have the 12th grade in its public school set-up.

Negro Pay Is Highest, Report Shows

Winston-Salem ranked second among cities similar in size in North Carolina during the 1936-37 school term in the average salary paid white school teachers in both elementary and high schools.

The report, released by the State Department of Public Instruction, listed Winston-Salem as first in the average paid Negro elementary school teachers and third in the average paid Negro high school teachers.

In the county group, Forsyth ranked ninth in the average paid elementary white teachers and 22nd in the average paid white high school teachers.

Negro teachers average in the county elementary schools ranged second among all othes counties reporting.

Amount Paid

In Winston-Salem the total paid white teachers during the 1936-37 term amounted to $204,521.12 in the elementary schools and $106,736.43 in the high schools. Negro teachers in the city during that term were paid $103,941.70 in the elementary schools and $32,663.94 in the high schools.

In the county the amount paid elementary white teachers during the 1936-37 term, according to the state figures, was $158,046.98 and $49,875.93 in high schools. Negro teachers in the county received during the term $21,411.22 in the elementary schools.

Winston-Salem's average paid to elementary teachers totaled $1,162 and high school teachers $1,199. Negro teachers averaged $888 in elementary schools and $838 in high schools.

In Forsyth county, the white elementary teachers averaged $810; high school teachers, $818; Negro elementary, $595.

Other Counties

Average paid teachers in other counties in this area, white elementary, white high school, Negro elementary and Negro high school, in the order named, include (where only three groups figures given this means county does not have Negro high school):

Davidson, $784 — $776 — $590; Davie, $756—$811—$532—$1,200; Rockingham, $782 — $796 — $531; Stokes, $729—$771—$554—$670; Surry, $751—$803—$496; Wilkes, $717—$821—$422—$583, and Yadkin, $732—$777—$477.

N. Carolina Teachers May Take Pay Fight To Court

DURHAM, N.C., June 22—(ANP)—Dean J. T. Taylor, of North Carolina College for Negroes, stated last week that Negro teachers in the State may go to court to remove the wage differential between them and white teachers if the State School Commission takes no action.

NC Negro Teachers Want Same Pay as White Instructors

Raleigh, N. C., June 14—(AP)—The possibility of court action to eliminate the differential between the pay of white and Negro teachers was hinted today by Dean J. T. Taylor of the North Carolina college for Negroes in Durham.

Appearing before a teacher salary committee of the state school commission, Taylor said there were "certain Negroes" who thought the courts offered the best avenue for the race to follow.

He emphasized that he and the State Negro Education association delegation which he headed did not care for this course, but added:

"We are in a very ticklish at this time . . . give us some tangible result that we can take back to our people. If we go back to them with nothing—and this is no threat—if something is not done, we are likely to have in this state the same thing they have in Virginia and some other states, and we don't want that here."

Taylor said Negro teachers now receive about 30 per cent. less than white teachers. At another point it was brought out that the top pay for white teachers is $123.75 a month during the school term and that of Negroes is $96.25.

N. C. Teachers to Get More Pay After Protest

RALEIGH, N. C. (ANP)—After Dean J. T. Taylor of N. C. State college, Durham, told the state school commission that court action might result unless the wide differential between salaries of colored and white teachers was reduced, the salary committee of the commission stated Negro teachers would get a large portion of the $275,000 available for teacher salary increases in the state.

Negro leaders asked that most of the $275,000 appropriation be used for correcting the 30 per cent differential between teachers of the two races. It is expected that $250,000 of the funds will be used for this purpose.

COURT ACTION IS THREATENED

Raleigh, June 15.—The possibility of court action to eliminate the differential between the pay of white and negro teachers was hinted today by Dean J. T. Taylor, of the North Carolina College for Negroes in Durham.

Appearing before a teacher salary committee of the state school commission, Taylor said there were "certain negroes" who thought the courts offered the best avenue for the race to follow.

The salary committee held a formal public hearing for expressions of opinions on what should be done with the $250,000 to $290,000 which the 1939 general assembly made available for teacher pay increases. The committee went into executive session this afternoon, and it was said that it probably would be able to make its recommendations at the next meeting of the commission, July 13.

WORTHY OF THEIR HIRE.

The North Carolina State Teachers Association for Negroes which has just presented its cause before the state school commission undoubtedly has a just claim on part of the $250,000 set aside by the legislature for salary increases. That it is asking the lion's share, so to speak, seems to have brought into the light a past discrimination against the negro, witness the assertion by Dean J. T. Taylor, of the North Carolina College for Negroes, that white teachers now get an average of about 30 per cent more than the negro teachers.

In reference to this apparent differential between the compensation to the two races, attention is challenged by one remark of Miss Agnes McDonald, of Greensboro, who was presenting the case for her own organization of class room teachers. It is a question of certificates, not race, she said. And therein we think is contained the crux of the whole matter.

It is not the transcending question whether a white teacher is being paid more than a negro teacher, or vice versa. It is important as to whether an instructor with a given amount of training and experience is being treated unfairly as compared with another having the same qualifications. It is to be trusted that the commission will adjudicate these claims, distribute increases, with this basis in mind. Certainly neither one side nor the other has any business drawing a color line where it concerns pay for work of the same standard.

Negroes Seeking Most Of $250,000 Salary Increase

Raleigh.—The possibility of court action to eliminate the differential between the pay of white and negro teachers was hinted yesterday by Dean J. T. Taylor of the North Carolina Colege for Negroes in Durham.

Appearing before a teacher salary committee of the state school commission, Taylor said there were "certain negroes" who thought the courts offered the best avenue for the race to follow.

The committee went into executive session this afternoon, and it was said that it probably would be able to make its recommendations at the next meeting of the commission, July 13.

The committee will meet again June 27, when Lloyd Griffin, executive secretary of the commissin, will present figures showing the number of teachers allotted for next school year. Griffin said the committee would study "all angles" of the problem before making its recommendations to the commission.

Taylor asked that "most" of the $250,000 be used for negroes, and slices of the fund also were asked by three other groups—classroom teachers, county superintendents, and principals of small elementary schools.

QUESTION OF MERIT, NOT OF RACE.

The North Carolina State Teachers Association for Negroes has just presented its case before the state school commission, asking for the bulk of the $225,000 set aside by the legislature for salary increases.

Dean J. T. Taylor, of the North Carolina College for Negroes, says white teachers now get an average of about 30 per cent. more than the Negro teachers and says certain members of his race have considered court action as a means of correcting the difference.

In reference to this apparent differential between the compensation to the two races, attention is challenged by one remark of Miss Agnes McDonald, of Greensboro, who was presenting the case for her own organization of classroom teachers. It is a question of certificates, not race, she said.

And therein we think is contained the curx of the whole matter.

"It is not the transcending question a white teacher is being paid more than a Negro teacher or vice versa," as The Greensboro News says. Tar Heel 'A' Grade Teachers, Negroes Are To Profit Most RALEIGH, July 18.—(AP)—The salary committee of the state school commission has virtually agreed, it was learned today, to recommend that "A" grade teachers with five to eight years of experience and all negro teachers get the biggest part of $269,000 available for salary increases.

The differential between pay of white and negro teachers will be closed slightly, members said. Something like $115,000 to $125,000 will likely be made to apply to pay for negroes.

Teachers with the "A" certificates who have worked five years will be rewarded, but the majority of the committee expressed opposition informally to a ninth increment.

The big hitch now holding up a report by the committee to the full school commission is the matter of bringing pay of county and city superintendents closer together.

Members said it was doubtful if their work would be finished today.

FOR The State

PRESS reports have it that there is a pay differential of about 30 per cent in the salaries of Negro and white school teachers in this State and approximately $1,500,000 would be needed yearly to wipe it out on the present salary scale.

Negro educators are asking that the differential be reduced "as was recommended by State study commission of 1934 and 1937."

Dean J. T. Taylor of the North Carolina College for Negroes at Durham has appeared before the State School Commission and asked that the wage differential be reduced. He stated that acertain group of teachers "feel that they should go to court," adding "we are in a very, very ticklish position at this time."

The question of interracial relations was injected into his plea before the commission and Taylor said: "We think that white teachers have a stake in intarracial cooperation. We would not like to see 30 years of interracial co operation destroyed by a group which cou d not see what a resort to the pressure of court action would do."

Disregarding the tareaten break in harmonious living of the two races and remembering that white teachers are asking increases in pay, also, we think the differential should be reduced on the merit of work being done by the Negro teachers. Their task is more difficult than that of white teachers as the majority of Negro pupils do not come from homes with educated parents to assist the educators in raising the standaed of living for Negroes in this State.

North Carolina, along with that group of white teachers, has a stake in interracial cooperation and a duty to perform in educating the Negroes within its boundaries. Every white citizen is affected directly by the ignorance which is responsible for most of the crime and disease produced by the cou. dition.

The wage differential between Negro and white teachers could well be reduced in the best interests of the State.—Dunn Dispatch

N. C. TEACHERS GET SMALL WAGE INCREASE

RALEIGH, C., Sept. 7—(ANP)—The state board of education last week voted a pay raise of $18 a year for the state's most experienced white teachers, and $32 a month raise for the most experienced Negro teachers. For the colored teachers, the board approved a schedule adopted by the state school commission.

There are approximately 6,000 Negro teachers in the state, and under this appropriation they will receive a total of about $117,000. This will be distributed among all Negro teachers with "A' certificates, to lower somewhat the current differential of between 25 and 30 per cent between the salaries of colored and white teachers.

Under the increase, top salary of a colored teacher with an "A" certificate and eight years or more experience, will be $100 a month. A white teacher in the same classification ("A" rating, eight or more years' experience), will receive a monthly salary of $126.

Grand Jury May Investigate Salary Increases of Teachers In City's Separate Schools

School May Lose North Central Rating Because of Excess Teachers At Wheatley School

Funny Schedules Rushed Thru in Sept.

Is the hand of Ed Spivey still directing the affairs of the separate schools in Oklahoma? Salary records in the office of the Board of Education point in that direction.

Efforts will be made by citizens to have an Oklahoma County grand jury study the reason and the background behind the sudden raise in salaries last September, immediately following the indictment of several school board members.

$400 Raises

Although teachers in the city schools are by rules set up by the board of education subject to an annual raise in salary of $50 per year, a study of the salary list in the separate school of Oklahoma City shows that last September some of the teachers' salaries were strangely hiked from three to four hundred dollars.

Frank Wilson

The Black Dispatch is this week publishing on page three of this edition, a complete list of the salaries paid in 1938 and in 1939. It will perhaps shock many to know that the attendance officer, Frank Wilson, the man whom the Black Dispatch charged with putting in most of his time playing amusement games on East Second street, draws the fabulous salary of $2,500.00, a stipend larger than any one of five city principals. Wilson, whose education is extremely limited, draws a salary larger than J. D. Jones, principal of Dunbar school; Edna Hobbs, principal of Orchard Park school; William Johnson, principal of the Sandtown school; W. G. Sneed, principal of the Inman Page school; and J. S. Thomas, Choctaw school.

Whites Draw Less For Same Work

Four of Wilson's assistants draw monthly check of $130.00; but ranger still is the fact that the ttendance officer in the white chools, holding the same position s Wilson, draws a yearly salary f $1800. His white assistants raw only $105 per month. Just hat type of work Wilson is dog which causes him to revolutionize a fixed policy in the South, drawing $700 more than a white man doing identical work, is the mystery of all who have made this discovery.

May Lose School's Rating

Inconceivable also is the unusual rule established by the Oklahoma City school board in jamming sixteen teachers into Wheatley junior high school, where the attendance is only 280, which means that the teacher-pupil ratio has been reduced to 1-17. Danger is expressed by competent authorities that the school system may lose its North Central rating because the system now has fully 0 more teachers than required. he North Central would void the klahoma City rating because of o many teacher just as quickly s because of too few faculty embers.

Teacher-Pupil Ratio at Page

Just what strange, weird rea- would cause the Oklahoma ity school board to jam all of ese extra teachers into Wheaty school, while over in the Inan Page school the teacher-pupil tio is about perfect, and where teachers serve 915 pupils? The man Page school has a teacherpil ratio of 1-30 plus.

Board Minutes Exposed

The whole crazy set-up in salries and other inequalities was effected last September 26 immediately following the ousting of Ed Spivey, and when Supt. Reiff came before the newly elected members of the board with a prepared list, as published on page three. In fact the minutes of the board, as of September 26, read as follows:

"Superintendent Reiff submitted the following list of teachers and principals for the separate schools indicating salaries for 1937-38 and salaries that would have been in effect on schedule had it been possible to allow increases for the present year, the new teachers to be paid on salary listed under salaries for 1938-39."

Glass Voted For Raises

The minutes further say:

"It was moved by Mr. Knight nd seconded by Mr. Cluck, that he salaries for instructional employees for the separate schools, s presented by Superintendent Reiff be approved on the same basis as for the majority schools. Upon roll call the motion carried unanimously."

Those present when this roll call was taken were: Ross Lillard, president; J. G. Sterley, clerk; C. C. Cluck, Dr. L. E. Glass, C. A. Kimsey, Robin Knight, J. Ben McKinsey, Mark Rorem. (Absent) Day Fezler.

Spivey Supporters Predicted Raises

Rumor has it that many Negroes who supported Ed Spivey for county commissioner, after he was indicted on bribery charges, openly predicted salary increases, and there have been a number of persons who came to the office of the Black Dispatch this week stating that they heard the actual amount of increases to be made, before the November meeting when the new salary schedule was put into effect. It is known that despite the indictment of Spivey the Negro voters in the 2nd ward went almost solidly for Spivey, and the question now is who did have influence with the board to create such a crazy quilt of salary increases as exposed?

Campaign Managers Benefit

It is worthy of note that one of the attendance officers, whose husband managed the campaign of Ed Spivey for county commissioner, received one of the big salary increases, and that another attendance officer, who spent several months on leave campaigning for Spivey, returned to the pay roll with a $300 increase. Do these bloated salaries mean that the influence of Ed Spivey still hovers around the Oklahoma City schools and that despite his conviction on bribery charges, he is still controlling a large number of the Negro teachers?

Class Room Teachers Favorites

In making the salary increases all thought of scholastic attainment, years of teaching experience or supervisory position held, was thrown to the wind. As the record now stands, seventeen class room, grade teachers draw higher salaries than the principal and four supervisors.

Bloats Don't Make Sense

Here is a fair example of inequalities exposed. Rhoda Irving, holding a Masters' degree from Iowa State, gets $1150 in the commerce department, while Leroy Tease, who has been in the system for two years, and who holds a Bachelor's degree, receives $1200. Think of the head of the department, Mrs. Irving, securing less salary than Tease, who holds a subordinate position. Does that make sense?

In studying the list on page three it should be kept in mind that cadets, whose salaries are hiked from $500 to $1000, come within the rule provided by the school board. It is customary to start the beginners with $500 and following one year's teaching experience, increase same to $1000. We do not want any of our readers to assume that we are criticizing the increase in cadet salary, except that of Lavane Faine, who did receive $200 more as a cadet than is provided in the regulation.

A Chinese Puzzle

Another unseemly and strange salary classification develops in the payment of Henrietta Beasley, librarian over all of the separate school libraries, with an A. B. from Wiley and an M. S. in Library Science at Hampton institute, receiving $1200 while Mrs. Leah Johns, librarian at Dunbar, with no previous experience in this field, receives $1500. It would take a Chinese philosopher to explain the reason why Mrs. Jones receives $300 more than Mrs. Beasley.

What About This?

And then there were cadets who went on with total disregard of the probationary $500 salary. Here are some of the startling raises which the Black Dispatch cannot account for: Nattie P. Davis raised from $1395 to $1800; Lamonia McFarland raised from $1515 to $1800.

A few more of the queer and remarkable advances in salaries that should be noted follow: Dr. J. D. Nelson, $400; Dr. S. R. Youngblood, $300; Paul Evans, $300; J. Henry Ferguson, $300; Frank Wilson, $250; Vincent Levison, $250; Harry Harbison, $250; George Waterford, $200; Sydney Sanders, $200; Eloise Alexander, $200; Alfa Hutchinson, $200; H. V. Gear, $200; W. G. Sneed, $200; A. M. Salone, $200; Aner Littlepage, $200; W. E. Simms, $200; M. H. Moreland, $200; Paul McCree, $200; H. Hendricks, $200; Ladye Bowen, $150; Haywood Jackson, $150; Leah Jones, $160.

Doctors Do Not Get Limit

We understand that the salaries paid Drs. Nelson and Youngblood are not up to the level of the salaries paid white physicians and that they should be receiving more money if paid the same salary as whites in Oklahoma City who are rendering the same type of service.

Degrees Don't Count

There are so many other unexplainable inequalities in this salary schedule that the Black Dispatch is unable to comprehend it. For instance, why does Mrs. Aner Littlepage, who teaches the fifth grade in the Page school, draw a salary of $160 per month, while Mrs. Lucille McMahon, head of the division of languages in Douglass high school, and in charge of the research work for the schools, receive $148.50 per month. Mrs. Littlepage is a Langston graduate while Mrs. McMahon holds a Master's degree from Iowa State. Mrs. McMahon has spent twenty years in the Oklahoma City school system.

Why should Francis Waters, classroom teacher, receive $155 per month while Bert Watkins, head of the social science department, receive $125 per month? Waters holds an A. B. from Langston university while Watkins holds a Master's from the University of Illinois. Do heads of departments in the white schools secure less salaries than classroom teachers? Does preparation of teachers, position they hold, and length of service count for anything?

Teachers Pledge Salaries In Fight For Equal Rights

BROKEN BOW, Okla.—In a downpour of rain, the tail end of the cyclonic conditions that visited East Texas and Arkansas Saturday night, Dr. Frederick Morrow, coordinator of branches of the N. A. A. C. P., New York, arrived in the city at 8 o'clock for a speaking engagement.

Prof. E. A. Gaither presided at the meeting and President John Given gave a seat on the platform. Musical numbers were supplied by students from the city schools. Dr. H. W. Williamston, regional director of branches of the Southeastern area, was present and made a short talk.

"Negro teachers in Maryland, Virginia and many of the Southern states are pledging portions of their salaries in the fight for educational equality," declared Mr. Morrow during the course of his talk, and he told how in one state the teachers joined in giving the the teacher who filed the suit a scholarship so that she could continue her studies while the case was in litigation.

"It is this type of organization which is going to take us places," said Mr. Morrow, "and the National Association is depending upon Broken Bow to join in the struggle."

Printing the Teachers' Salary Schedule

As was to be expected violent reaction developed into the Negro section of the city immediately following publication last week of the salary schedules in the separate schools and the obvious unfair and strange inequalities shown.

Before the issuance of the edition, rumor had forecast same, and it was freely prophesied that the Black Dispatch would publish a statement which would protect several teachers and expose others.

But when the Black Dispatch was released to the newsboys, with the full and complete salary schedules for 1937-1938 and 1938-1939, it was immediately seen that we had spared no one. The salary schedule was printed on page three, but on page one we proceeded to digest, analyze and tear to pieces this crazy quilt of inequalities, so that everyone could see what we were talking about.

One teacher at Douglass High School, who is alleged to have denounced the publication of the list, before it reached the street, has since sent her husband to the Black Dispatch office to say that the publication should make further comparisons, in order that it would be exposed her seniority is not being recognized. While this is a left-handed o. k., it at the same time shows that the Black Dispatch rendered a service to this teacher, which she did not at first recognize.

This teacher fails, however, to recognize the fact that after all, it is not a question of individualism in which the Black Dispatch is interested. We hope she secures her seniority rights, but after all, the urge we have is to fix it so that merit counts for all, and not just for a few, over in the separate school setup. We want preparation, tenure and position to count, and if this is done justice will triumph.

We want to stop the shameful practice of allowing a collarless, untutored Negro strutting about in our schools to intimidate, terrorize and in many instances dispossess worthy teachers of their jobs. Whoever heard of a school system where the janitor had more authority than the principal? Well, that's the situation in our separate school system and we are out to break it up.

The utter helplessness of the teachers was exposed this week when a citizens' slate was printed and a slip sent around for prominent citizens to sign. There were men who had sat for two weeks through all of the meetings held, and who had avowed their purpose to stand behind the majority selection in the community, but when the time came to sign their names on the dotted line, and let the world see, on election morning, where they stood, at least one-third backed up.

We can't clean up the school system that sort of way. Leadership must be unfettered and free. In another instance, a man who poses as the head of a political organization came out and endorsed the citizens' slate. But when the time came to hold a rally, he took sick. A little later he was called from down at the city hall and told to lay off.

So far as the Black Dispatch is concerned we do not care who it hurts or where the trail leads, we are going to do our utmost to find out whether there is any truth in the rumors running rampant everywhere. Every adult person knows that before the recent trials and convictions of school board officials, the price paid for school jobs was openly discussed in cafes, pool halls and everywhere. Just recently this writer was approached by a fine woman we have known for many years. This woman wanted her girl to have employment. She has been told that if she would borrow $100.00 from a certain loan shark and pay the $100.00 to another man, her daughter would be given a position. We came in the picture, because the wily parties to this deal wanted to tie this writer's hands by asking that she obtain a recommendation from Roscoe Dunjee. The woman who came to this writer will never know this was a clever arrangement to collect $100.00 bribe and still have a string on the Black Dispatch. Would it not look like we knew something about the deal if we recommended this young lady, and it later developed that she had paid $100.00 for a job?

Rumor has it that some of these go-betweens, with power in the Negro schools have been taking unfair advantage of the virtue of applicants for jobs. By some method not known to this writer, application for a position at the school board offices was immediately relayed by some grapevine route to these bribe-takers and they were immediately hounded for cash. It is hard to get any of these young people to talk for publication, but if half the torture and demoralization perpetrated upon Oklahoma City's young Negro womanhood is true, before they could reach a teaching position in our city schools, the citizenry ought to do the same thing for our schools as Christ did when he found the money changers in the temple.

A few folk, beneficiaries of the nefarous system in vogue, have rushed about town telling folk that in publishing the salary list the Black Dispatch showed itself opposed to high salaries for Negro teachers and other school employees. The Black Dispatch says here and now that we are for a salary level for Negro teachers comparable with teachers of any other group, and there is not an honest citizen in Oklahoma City who believes otherwise. The thing we are opposed to is lack of recognition of worthy teachers while paying an unheard of salary to an attendance officer and to favorites. Two worthy teachers over at Douglass could be getting $300.00 raises, which might bring them up to their seniority status, if the attendance officer were brought back to the level of the white attendance officer. Throughout the entire strange, unseemly maze of inequalities one could ramble to bring about some recognition of merit. The truth is, and the serious matter for consideration of the citizens is the cause motivating these bumps in the salary schedule which nobody seems able to explain.

Then too, there are those who argue that the Black Dispatch had no right to print the salary list. Such persons forget that public schools are tax-supported institutions and that the humblest taxpayer has a right to exam-ne, publish and discuss the amount of money paid all pubic servants from the governor down to the dog-catcher.

Taxpayers have a right to know who is employed in the ublic schools, how much they receive for their work, and whether they are competent employees. They have a ight to demand the dismissal, if they so desire, of any-ne on the public payroll. Next week we shall print the alary list of the white schools so that Negro teachers can ind out for themselves whether they are getting salaries n level with white teachers. We wonder whether we will ve any angry phone calls about the publication of the hite list?

Such argument does not impress or deter the Black Dispatch. We are out to help clean up the schools, and in oing this job we ought have the support of every honest, pright citizen.

Survey Shows Chester Gives Higher Rate

Pittsburgh Sun-Telegraph 7-13-39

Due To A Slower Turnover Among Colored Teachers

TENURE IS BOON

Douglass Junior High Curriculum Lauded In Report

Philadelphia Inquirer

CHESTER, PA. — Negro teachers as a whole receive higher salaries than white teachers, according to a report by Dr. Arthur J. Jones, of the University of Pennsylvania, who is conducting a survey of secondary schools.

The Negro teachers' high salaries, however, are due to the fact that there is a slower turnover among colored teachers, thus boosting salaries on a basis of tenure and experiences, Dr. Jones' report stated.

The separate school system maintained by Chester is the outgrowth of the physical development of the city.

Through primary and junior high schools, white and colored children attend separate schools, but at the ninth and eleventh grades the system merges. Douglass Junior High School, with a Negro principal, faculty and student body, is one of the two junior branches in the city.

"Flexible" Curriculum

In his report, Dr. Jones states that at the Douglass Junior High School the curriculum has been found flexible, and that school spirit has been developed to an unusual degree.

William K. Valentine, principal of Douglass Junior High, is accredited with being greatly responsible for the successful manner in which the school program is being carried out.

One handicap of the school, however, was found to be the disadvantage of the students having to be prepared to enter the third year of a four-year school, interrupting the continuity of the student's individual development.

"This limited the possibility for working out a program suited to the needs of students such as might be developed if the Douglass School was a junior unit including seven and eight, or a six-year school, grades seven to twelve", Dr. Jones report' pointed out.

Colored Teachers Held Meeting Here

The first teachers' meeting of the new year was held January 31 at the Colleton Training School. This meeting may be equaled in the future, but not excelled.

The devotional period, which was very proper and fitting, was conducted by the Simmons-Johnsville teachers. The program for field day on March 31 was mapped out by the teachers.

A number of ministers were welcomed to our meeting. Our attendance teacher, Mrs. Murray, along with our Jeanes supervisor, presided over a special meeting with the ministers of the various communities. The sole purpose of this meeting with the ministers was to have them serve the Macedonian daily attendance call from the schools in the pulpits. The Ancient Greeks taught that ignorance was sin, and knowledge was virtue. So when the schools are blotting out ignorance, they are blotting out sin.

We trust that this meeting with the ministers may be as seed sown in good soil that will bring forth a rich harvest.

The ministers who represented the various communities are as follows: The Rev. Garvin, Ritter; the Rev. Robinson, Ritter and Walterboro; the Rev. Mitchell, Ruffin; the Rev. Davis, Jacksonboro; the Rev. Taylor, Walterboro; the Rev. Stephens, local minister, Ruffin; the Rev. Sanders, Round; the Rev. Stallings, Walterboro; the Rev. Divine, Clover Hill and Mt. Pleasant; the Rev. Miller, Walterboro; the Rev. Gillison, Green Pond; the Rev. Chisolm, Jonesville; the Rev. Thomas, presiding elder, representing five counties, and the Rev. Gillison, Pine Grove.

Last but not least, was the presentation of Dean Green of State College, Ph, D., from Orangeburg by Prof. Richardson, president of the teachers association. Dean Green is a native of Colleton county. He was born near Ruffin. I doubt seriously if we could have secured another who was more capable of enriching our understanding with his experience and knowledge.

He brought us a very timely message, "New Deal for Virtues and Ideals." He urged the teachers to do their bit in helping the pupils to acquire three necessities, namely health, self-respect and opportunity. Our hearts burned as he spoke to us from the rostrum. Then finally the teachers demonstrated that they represented a Christian county, were from Christian homes, and had Christian parents by donating $5.13 to the call from far-away China.

Negro Exhibits

The Palmetto State Teachers' association added to its well organized program the "History Group" which had for its theme, "Teaching Negro History as It Relates to American Citizenship." The outstanding work of this group consisted of several exhibits on Negro life. Among them were a miniature stage draped in purple velvet curtains on which stood a statuette of Marian Anderson beside a toy piano, a complete history of State college told through 35 large pictures and a corner stone and pieces of handicraft work beside the picture of Booker T. Washington, showing him as the "Father of Industrial Education." Other exhibits included 50 periodicals, 35 juvenile books and 50 pictures, all dealing with Negro life.

The schools contributing exhibits were: Sterling, Greenville; Jackson, Camden; Simms, Union; Bell Street, Clinton, Gray Court; Ridge Spring; Estill; Yemassee; Brockington, Timmonsville; Howard, Georgetown; Robert Smalls, Beaufort; Beaufort County Training, Burton, Morris college; State college; Sanders, Laurens; Anderson county, Anderson.

It is estimated that 1,100 persons visited the "History Group" during Thursday and Friday. Among the 700 names placed on the guest book are the personal autographs of J. B. Felton, Miss Mattie E. Thomas, W. A. Schiffley and Mrs. W. L. Ruff of the state department of education in Columbia.

When asked why she spends most of her small salary and most of her time popularizing the study of Negro history, Hilda V. Grayson, the director, says, "South Carolina and America need an increasing number of good citizens. These citizens, whether black or white, can contribute much to that true democracy for which America stands. But most Negro boys and girls must ask this question in their hearts: 'Is there a black man like dad or a brown skin woman like mom who has done anything for our country? I want to grow up and be a good citizen for my country, but I don't know of any Negro boy or girl who became a good citizen, so I wonder sometimes if we Negroes can be good citizens for our country.'"

Then she continues, "Well, I want the state to give these kids a chance to know of Sojourner Truth, Federick Douglass, James W. Johnson, Augusta Savage, Carter Woodson, Mary McLeod Bethune, Clayton Powell, Richard B. Harrison, C. C. Spaulding and a thousand others. Unfortunately, however, these names are found only on the missing pages of American history."

When questioned as to how and why this should be done, she replies, "Just let us place books about Negro life in our schools. Give our Negro youth, in fact all youth, a chance to know the true facts of history that compose the story of each group in society. And in return we shall hand back to South Carolina a host of brown-skin children of whom she may feel proud."

The director has in her scrapbook, also displayed at the association, letters of compliments from Supt. James Hope, Carter Woodson, Mary McLeod Bethune, C. C. Spaulding, J. B. Felton and several principals, teachers and well wishers encouraging her for her work in promoting the study of Negro life.

The work of the history group was said by many visitors to be the most outstanding feature of the entire association and a credit to the Negro race.

CALVIN'S DIGEST

HOW TEACHERS LOSE MONEY

How the race is being kept down economically is revealed in a graphic description of how colored teachers in Tennessee lose $625,000 per year in the annual address of President George M. Clem of the East Tennessee Association of Teachers in Colored Schools, at Knoxville, recently. Not only do colored teachers lose this amount, but this same amount goes directly to white teachers, illegally, which makes this white teaching group richer at the expense of the colored group. President Clem shows that each month a colored teacher is paid $31.27 the colored teacher should get, by law, goes to a white teacher. To quote the president:

"In my study of the salary situation in Tennessee, I found some very surprising facts.....The average salary for all white teachers during the year 1934-35 was $118.28. The average salary for all Negro teachers during the same year was $97.88. There was a difference in salary of $38.40. The average salary for all white teachers during the year 1937-38 was $116.75. The average salary for all Negro teachers during the same year was $85.39. The difference was $31.27.

"In the four-year period there was a gain of only $7.13 toward the equalization of salaries. At that rate of gain, it would require 17 years to have equalized salaries in Tennessee. There are around 2,500 Negro teachers in the State of Tennesse. Each of that 2,500 is losing $31.27 each month or $250.16 for an eight-month term. All Negro teachers are losing each year an aggregate sum of approximately $625,000, over one-half million dollars. That amount of money represents a lot of buying power for any group of people. It will buy many homes, many cars; it will make living conditions much better for thousands of people. That amount of money is worth fighting for; it is a worthy goal for this or any association to strive for."

And may we add, more power to leaders like President Clem.

INSURANCE BOYCOTT

We wish to congratulate the officials of the National Negro Insurance Association for their decision to boycott the Rock Island railroad in traveling to Los Angeles next July for their 19th annual convention, because of the treatment of Congressman Arthur W. Mitchell of Illinois, who was humiliated by this railroad on a trip through Arkansas. The Congressman recently lost his case against the road before the Interstate Commerce Commission, but ha snot given up the fight, and confidently expects to win in the courts.

Secretary C. L. Townes of the Association has informed all members of the decision of the Executive committee to use any other transportation facilities on the California trip except the Rock Island or any of its affiliated lines. It is our hope that the membership will obey this request to the letter.

The Negro group is finding, particularly in the North, that the economic boycott is becoming an increasingly more potent weapon by which justice and fair play may be won in the economic realm. Once we are able to establish the unit rule in opposing our enemies, we will find that our friends will miraculously multiply in what was once regarded as enemy country.

TOWARD EQUAL SALARIES

The action taken by Nashville's City Council on Tuesday night of this week in moving in the direction of equalizing the salaries of teachers in the public schools deserves the highest commendation.

All lovers of justice and fair play must commend the courage and persistence of Councilman Harry Hite who has sponsored the equal pay for teachers in the city's legislative body. It would be hard to find among city officials anywhere one more conscientious in the performance of his duties than Mr. Hite. It has taken moral courage such as is unusual in men in political offices to be the advocate of equal pay for teachers where tradition and custom have maintained that colored teachers should not expect or receive salaries equal to those paid white teachers doing the same type of work. But in Mr. Hite we have a public official who fully merits that test.

Other members of the council, who though they have been less conspicuous than Mr. Hite in battling for justice for colored school children and colored teachers, are due full praise for following his leadership in these matters.

While Tuesday night's action of the city council deserves praise, it is to be remembered that the equalization of teachers salaries has not taken place as yet and there is no assurance that the plan will be carried out at an early date. The teachers who are to be affected and other citizens must show the proper interest in this matter and co-operate fully with the enlightened public officials who are trying to give us better schools, better teachers and salaries commensurate with the services these teachers perform.

New Schedule Introduced In Legislature

Earmarking Of

Portion of City's Taxes For Schools Sought.

President Stanton E. Smith of the Chattanooga and Hamilton County Teachers' Federation announced Saturday a tentative agreement has been reached that may lead to a culmination of the long fight over the teachers' salary question here.

The proposed compromise salary schedule for teachers, principals and librarians has been introduced in the General Assembly, together with a companion measure to "earmark" a portion of City taxes for school purposes, he said.

"The measures are an outgrowth of ten days of cooperation between City Attorney Joe Anderson and the Teachers' Federation," Smith said. "If successfully consummated, it will result in withdrawal of the teachers' lawsuit to enforce provisions of the 1935 teachers' salary law, under which teachers and principals now have claims to approximately $1,500,000 in back salaries."

The new schedule was approved by an overwhelming vote Thursday at a meeting of city teachers in white and Negro schools Saturday morning, and the federation at a meeting last Tuesday.

"If the new schedule and 'earmarking' bills are approved by the City Commission and then passed by the State Legislature, they will settle an old and troublesome issue," said Smith.

Anderson said Saturday that the agreement "offers a basis for settlement of the long-pending litigation against the City."

Outstanding facts and provisions of the new schedule are:

1. The schedule eventually will provide average salaries for principals and teachers of about $150 a month (nine months' school term).

2. The schedule will be put in operation over a period of four years, beginning next school year.

3. No salary, which may now be above the proposed schedule, will be reduced.

Anderson said that the agreement would involve an increase of about 3 cents in the 25-cent City tax levy that goes to schools.

Classification of schools shall be based on annual average daily attendance for the previous year.

For the purpose of determining the classification of schools, average daily attendance in high schools and junior high schools shall be multiplied by 6.5.

For senior high schools the salary of principals shall be increased 5 per cent.

Principals of schools of class 1, multiply salary as teacher by 1.7.

Principals of schools of class 2, multiply salary as teacher by 1.54.

Principals of schools of class 3, multiply salary as teacher by 1.4.

Principals of schools of class 4, multiply salary as teacher by 1.27.

Principals of schools of class 5, multiply salary as teacher by 1.25.

Supervisors, multiply salary as teacher by 1.25.

The City Commission may by ordinance provide additional compensation for teachers performing special additional duties.

GOVERNOR TO AID TEACHER SALARY FIGHT

By S. S. MORRIS

NASHVILLE, Apr. 13—(ANP) Addressing 1,500 educators, teachers and visitors here attending the 17th annual session, Tennessee Negro Education Association at Tennessee A. and I. college, Governor Prentice Cooper as principal speaker at the morning session on Friday, pledged his aid in securing salary increases for teachers throughout the state.

Gov. Cooper also stated there would be no cut in A and I's appropriation and told the teachers to urge their students think of themselves as citizens of Tennessee and America. The chief executive of the state was introduced by A and I President, William J. Hale.

Commissioner B. O. Dugan, another featured speaker introduced by Dean George W. Gore, Jr., assured the big audience that he would do all in his power to promote the best interests of the state's colored teachers. Other speakers who appeared on Thursday night's opening session included Nannie H. Burroughs, Washington, D. C., president National Training School for Girls, and the association's president, T. D. Upshaw, Jr., of East Chattanooga.

A special musical program was presented during the meeting, called one of the most successful in the organization's history.

Teachers Win Out In Pay Fight

Knoxville Board Finally Agrees To Salary Plea

By O. B. TAYLOR

KNOXVILLE, Tenn. — (ANP)—The Knoxville City Teachers league, led by its president. Dewery Roberts, instructor of mathematics at the Beardsley Junior high school, has fought a hot persistent battle with the members of the school board during the last three years, for salary equalization where preparation and type of work done compared with that of teachers among the majority race.

Negro teachers regardless of preparation or work done have received 10 per cent less than the white teachers.

At the regular meeting of the school board Tuesday night, Dewey Roberts was again on hand with his age-old fight and contention, pointing out the injustice heaped upon the Negro teachers on grounds of color and color alone.

At last the board recants. The motion that placed the board on record for equal pay was made by the Rev. B. B. Lavander and was adopted unanimously. This action boosted the 1940 school budget by $14,700.

For the first time in the history of Knoxville, Negro teachers, where their preparation is equal to that of the whites, will receive the identically same salary. The new wage scale is effective as of December 1. This far-reaching decision of the school board may have repercussions in other cities of the State and perhaps the South as a whole.

GEORGIA TEACHERS FIGHT FOR MORE PAY

ATLANTA, Feb. 2 (ANP)—The Strategy Committee, representing the Fulton County teachers in their fight for better salaries, discussed ways of seeking more petitions from other local civic groups at its meeting Tuesday night.

Teacher petitions reveal the fact that Negro teachers receive from $50 to $60 per month and that Fulton county principals are paid a minimum of $85 per month to be increased to $125 per month over a five-year period. Contending that Fulton County is adding little, if any, to state funds for colored teachers' salaries the local teachers are asking a $100 minimum monthly wage for Fulton county school principals to be increased to $200 over a five-year period.

The movement began last summer when 84 members of the Negro teacher group signed petitions asking the Board of Education for increased wages.

VIRGINIA

New Salary Case Filed

Afro-American 10-7-39
Baltimore, Md.

NEW YORK—The NAACP last week filed its second salary-equalization suit in Virginia and pushed its campaign for admittance of colored graduate students to the University of Tennessee.

In Norfolk, Melvin O. Alston became the spearhead in the renewal of the equalization fight in which Miss Aline Black sacrificed her position on the faculty of Booker T. Washington High School.

Suit in his behalf was filed with the Norfolk school board on September 27. Mr. Alston, also of the Booker T. Washington faculty, is a bona fide citizen of Norfolk and a taxpayer.

Miss Black Paid for Year

Dr. J. M. Tinsley of Richmond, chairman of the Joint Committee to Equalize Teachers' Salaries in Virginia, who announced the filing of the new suit, revealed that his organization had paid the amount of her year's salary to Miss Black, whose dismissal was directly attributed to her participation in the campaign.

Mr. Alston is a graduate of Virginia State College and is working on a master's degree at Columbia University. He has taught in the Norfolk system for five years and his salary is still below the minimum paid white high school teachers.

Others Waiting

In the event his petition is dropped, through any technicality, one of several other teachers whose names are already on the waiting list will take up the fight through the association, legal representatives announced.

At Knoxville, Tenn., a final attempt to register six qualified students in graduate departments at the State university was made on September 26, when they appeared before Dean Smith, in company with their attorney, Carl Cowan.

Shun Compromise

The applicants included Homer L. Saunders, Clinton M. Marsh, Walter S. Hardy and Ezra Totton, all seeking graduate work in the arts and sciences, and P. L. Smith and Joseph M. Michael, both law school applicants.

Told by Dean Smith that they could not register because the board of trustees had not acted upon their previously filed written applications, the group made known their determination to refuse any compromise and take their fight to the courts.

President's Offer Refused

In reply to an appeal made the previous week by President Hoskins, of the university, that the NAACP instruct the students to withdraw their applications and accept out-of-State scholarships pending action on the part of the Tennessee Legislature to set up separate facilities within the State, Thurgood Marshall, special counsel for the association, made public the following telegram which was sent to Mr. Cowan:

"National Association for the Advancement of Colored People will not accept appeal to prevent admitting qualified colored persons to University of Tennessee.

"Scholarships for out-of-State work outlawed by U.S. Supreme Court in Gaines decision and not acceptable. Proceed with filing of cases of qualified men who refuse scholarships and have been refused admission to University of Tennessee."

Mandamus to Follow

Dr. Leon A. Ransom, member of the association's national legal committee said, "We are preparing to file a petition for mandamus to force the school to open its doors." He, Mr. Cowan and Alexander Looby have charge of the case.

Following is a partial account, by Mr. Cowan, of the group's encounter with Dean Smith, who selected Homer L. Saunders to question concerning his reasons for wishing to attend the University of Tennessee:

Frowns on Scholarships

"Saunders replied that he was a citizen of the State of Tennessee; that he wanted to do more work in physical and health education; that Tennessee A. and I. College could not provide him the work, and the University of Tennessee could.

"Dean Smith then asked him whether he would be willing to go to some other school comparable to U.T., within or without the State, if the university would pay the difference in cost. Saunders replied that since he was a citizen of Tennessee, he would not be willing to go out of the State.

"Further questioning by Dean Smith as to Saunders's willingness to attend some other school within the State, provided equal facilities were provided and any difference in expense paid by the State, followed.

Jim Crow Law Cited

"I then interrupted and said that the men were not there to be cross-examined and give their depositions, but were there to register and naturally were willing to give any information bearing directly on their applications.

"Dean Smith replied that we had cross-examined the university officials, last Wednesday. I told him I begged to differ, but what the applicants and I really wanted to know was whether he was going to issue a permit to register.

"He then replied that he could not permit the boys to register because of the State law against it.

"I told him that there was a difference in opinion as to whether the State law would be superseded by the Federal Constitution and that I did not propose to argue the case today."

Norfolk School Board Files Reply to Negro Teacher's Suit

NORFOLK, (AP)—The Norfolk School Board yesterday filed a four-point answer to a suit brought in Federal District Court by Melvin O. Alston, Negro teacher in Booker T. Washington High School, who seeks for himself and other Negroes a pay schedule equal to that now being paid white teachers.

Signed by City Attorney Alfred Anderson, the answer asserts that Alston "has no vested rights to any position to teach in the public schools and a claim in the premises is not within the provisions of the Constitution and the Acts of Congress alleged," and that "under the laws of the State of Virginia the said school board is authorized and empowered to employ teachers and fix their compensation, and such being the case they have the right to employ them for such salary as said board is willing to pay and the teacher to accept."

Denies Federal Jurisdiction

The answer also denies the jurisdiction of Federal District Court, on the ground that the matter in controversy does not exceed $3,000, that no constitutional rights of the plaintiff have been violated, and that Alston and other Negroes in his situation have "full and complete remedy at law if they have any remedy at all."

The school board also will rely on its existing contract with Alston, as indicated by a statement in the answer that "by reason of the contract in writing dated June 12, 1939, between the plaintiff and school board, covering his services as a teacher in said public schools, he is estopped from proceeding in this cause and has waived any rights, if any he has, in the premises."

The answer also cites the case of Aline Elizabeth Black, another Negro teacher in the public schools, who brought a writ of mandamus against the school board in the City Circuit Court several months ago seeking parity payment. This writ was denied on June 1, and the plaintiff failed to appeal the case, an omission that the school board holds had made the decree final, thereby fully and completely adjudicating the matter and things set forth and contained in this (Alston's) complaint."

Without Legal Status

Regarding the position of the Norfolk Teachers' Association, the answer declares that the organization is unincorporated "and as such is not within the constitutional provision referred to in the bill of complaint."

If the case is brought to trial, it is understood that a court of three judges will be required to heart it, since a constitutional question is involved.

Alston claimed that the difference in the pay of Negro and white teachers was a violation of the Fourteenth Amendment to the United States Constitution, in that it makes a discrimination because of race and color.

City Loses $110,000 By School Board Deal

ATTENTION Norfolk Chamber of Commerce! ! !

A statistician went to work on the figures relative to Norfolk teachers' salary differential, supplied by the Journal and Guide in its Home Edition last week, and achieved astonishing results.

This little foray into the realm of statistical endeavor revealed some information that might be interesting to several groups of both races in Norfolk and should prove most interesting to the merchants of our fair city, first, last, and always the final depository for any and all salary pay checks.

Journal and Guide
7-1-39 Norfolk, Va.

There were approximately 232 colored teachers in the Norfolk public school system when the schools opened their doors last September 8. Forty of these were high school teachers and 192 taught in the grades.

The average differential in the salaries of Negro and white high school teachers is $599 each year, the Guide investigation shows. The average differential in the salaries paid elementary school teachers of the two races is $449 annually.

A little multiplication shows that the total differential for the forty high school teachers amounts to $23,960 and the differential for the 192 elementary teachers comes to $86,208.

Simple addition does the rest and our statistician arrives at the astounding total of $110,168 as the approximate sum of money that the Negro school teachers lose as a result of the unfair and inequitable teachers' salary scale imposed on them by the Norfolk City School Board. Add to that the relatively inconsequential sum of $4.01, which the school board deducted from the salary of Miss Aline Black, salary test case petitioner, for the day she spent in court seeking before the bar of justice, rights deliberately denied her, by the agency of the city government charged with the administration of school board matters under the laws of Virginia and city ordinances.

That brings the total to $110,172.01. Such a figure should interest the merchants. All the money the Norfolk teachers make is spent with local businessmen and $110,000 (the figure may vary a few dollars either up or down) is not to be taken lightly.

But the teachers and the merchants are not the only people affected by discrimination in the matter of salaries. The professional suffers also. Teachers cannot afford to get their teeth fixed or to have their bodies examined as often as they should and doctors and dentists are deprived of their rightful share of the $110,000 which the school board is holding back. In like manner the insurance business loses.

Almost all teachers belong to some church and the ministers find that teachers cannot afford to pay their dues. To Norfolk's Negro churches and their ministers belongs a part of the $110,000.

The theatres and other recreational facilities are entitled to a portion of the $110,000.

The greatest disadvantage, however, is worked on the community itself. An underpaid school teacher loses interest in her work, often cheats the pupil of a little of the help to which he is entitled during his day with the teacher.

VIRGINIA

A Negro teacher must attempt to maintain a standard of living commensurate with that of the white teacher on much less salary and must often sacrifice on things that are essential to his or her physical, mental, moral, and spiritual well-being, with subsequent losses in his or her efficiency in the class-room.

An underpaid and half starved teacher cannot find either the time, the energy, or the funds with which to participate in the cultural activities of the community or to assume the leadership in extra-curricular training for the youth and adults with whom they come into contact in and out of the classroom.

Consequently the community is lacking in the type of intelligent and trained leadership to which it is entitled and the result is juvenile delinquency, crime, immorality, and a disastrous dearth of progressive, cultural influences.

And so it seems that nearly everybody loses when unfair salary differentials are forced upon a people already circumscribed by other discriminations based purely on color. The butcher, the baker and the candlestick maker and all persons, black and white, who deal with the Negro school teacher directly or indirectly, in business, professional, social or cultural relationships are annually losing $110,000, more or less.

That's an awful lot of money.

Let the 'School Board Reconsider

If the Norfolk School Board will take counsel of its contemplative self and of its special responsibility for good interracial relations in this community, it will, we think, see the wisdom of repairing the injury done these relations by the withholding of a re-employment contract from the Booker T. Washington High School teacher who figures in the celebrated parity-pay test case now pending in the courts.

Knowing the members of the School Board as public-spirited individuals who are above the temptation of petty reprisal, the Virginian-Pilot does not believe that they would have, of their own accord, sought to punish any teacher in the Norfolk schools, white or colored, for seeking a peaceable, judicial determination of a disputed legal right. It appears that they were misled into this utterly lamentable act by advice or pressure from State school authorities in Richmond who seem to have been attracted by the idea of Norfolk's running interference for them in a pay-parity controversy that is assuming State and even South-wide proportions.

The unhappy result of this use of Norfolk as a State catspaw is evident from Sunday's protest meeting at St. John's A. M. E. Church. Never in the city's modern history have Norfolk Negroes staged so formidable a demonstration against what they regard as an unjust act by the white authorities. This kind of thing does untold damage to the city's interracial relations. It is a serious setback for years of fruitful labors in interracial adjustment, some of the most important of these labors having been performed by the School Board itself. Worse, from the school viewpoint, it tends to embitter the spirit of the whole colored teaching personnel.

Sunday's colored massmeeting, while employing a few sharp and resentful words in criticizing the treatment accorded the Booker T. Washington teacher, avoided provocative or abusive polemics. Its restraint made it all the more significant as a sincere and moving exercise of the constitutional right of free asembly and petition.

The Virginian-Pilot hopes that the School Board will put an end to a group resentment that can do the city no good but which can do it a great deal of harm, by retiring from the business of pulling the State Education Board's chestnuts out of the fire, and returning to the business of dealing justly and magnanimously with a strictly local involvement. It is simply not square dealing to destroy a teacher's professional career in the local schools because she has permitted herself to become the instrument of a test case in a judicial issue that has assumed for the colored people the character of an appeal for elementary human justice. One may dispute the legality of the cause, but one may not decently assume the position that those who ask the courts to decide the question, forfeit their right to reappointment to public jobs in which their work has been above criticism.

The School Board, as the trustees of our public educational system, is under a special obligation to defend the historic, American right of peaceable petition. In essence, the pay-parity appeal to the courts is just that. It can best defend that right by avoiding all color of reprisal for the exercise of it. It can do that best, by reinstating the Booker T. Washington teacher in the job she has held for the past twelve years. That is what we hope the School Board will do. The whole city would respect it for a retreat which would really be an advance. Nobody ever retreats when doing the right thing.

Negro Teacher Loses Position As Well as Suit

Aline Elizabeth Black's Contract Not Renewed by School Board

Aline Elizabeth Black, Negro teacher in the Booker T. Washington High School, who on May 31 lost her efforts to have a local court compel the city school board to pay Negro teachers the same salaries paid to white teachers with the same qualifications, will not teach in the Norfolk schools next year.

The school board has not renewed the teacher's contract for next year, the first time in 12 years it has failed to do so. This became known yesterday, but no comment was forthcoming from the board.

A. H. Foreman, chairman of the board, was out of the city yesterday, but C. W. Mason, superintendent of schools and a joint defendant with the school board in the Negro teacher's court action, said the board had not sent her a new contract for next year, and that there would be no comment by the board.

The teacher's court action was brought early in March in the form of a petition for a writ of mandamus to compel the school board and Mr. Mason to set up a salary schedule under which white and Negro teachers with the same educational qualifications would be paid the same salaries.

Backed by Association

She had the backing of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People and the Virginia State Teachers Association, composed of about 4,500 Negro school men and women in Virginia, it was announced at the time the suit was brought.

There were many allegations in the petition for a writ of mandamus, but they boiled down to the contention that the school board here was paying Negro teachers less money than whites with the same qualifications, that this was done for the sole reason that they were Negroes, and that this was in violation of the Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

The case was heard on a demurrer by the school board and Mr. Mason before Judge Allan R. Hanckel in the Circuit Court on May 31. City Attorney Alfred Anderson and his assistant, Jonathan W. Old, Jr., contended in the demurrer and in their arguments that Virginia law gives the school board the discretionary power to hire and fire teachers and pay them whatever the board decides they should be paid, and that each teacher's salary was a matter fixed by contract with the school board. They argued that no constitutional right was involved in the case.

They also claimed the teacher had waived any right she might have had (this was denied) when she signed a contract to teach in the schools at a lower salary than was paid to white teachers.

DEMANDS SHE DROP SUIT FOR EQUAL WAGES

Norfolk School Chiefs Turn Deaf Ears To Commission Plea

NORFOLK, Va., July 21—When Miss Aline E. Black, auspended teacher, decides to drop her suit against the board of education seeking salaries for herself and her colleagues equal to that of the white teachers, consideration will be given petitions for her reinstatement, according to A. H. Foreman, chairman of the Norfolk school board.

This was the Board's answer last week to a plea made by the Norfolk Commission on Inter-racial Cooperation that the board reconsider its action in not renewing Miss Black's contract. The dismissed teacher is now pursuing graduate study at New York university looking toward a Ph.D. degree.

Attorneys representing the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People and the Virginia State Teachers Association, sponsors of the equal salary suit, are making preparations for an appeal to the Virginia supreme court following the action of Judge Allan R. Hanckel of the Circuit court is sustaining a school board demurrer to Miss Black's petition for a writ of mandamus.

Send Letter

In a letter sent to Judge Herbert G. Cochran, of the Juvenile and Domestic Relations court, and chairman of the local interracial commission, Chairman Foreman on Friday charged that a "general misunderstanding has arisen as a result of the suit filed by the teacher."

"A situation which is entirely legal in its aspects has been permitted to assume the proportions of an inter-racial matter, whereas the same situation would have prevailed regardless of the race of the plaintiff," Mr. Foreman wrote.

"When the suit in question has been finally decided, and Miss Black ceases to occupy the status of a plaintiff, the board feels that then, and not before then, the question of her employment will be in order for consideration," the school board chairman's letter pointed out.

Test Rights

In a statement on Friday explaining the manner in which the matter was presented to the school board, Judge Cochran said:

"We approached the School Board in the same conciliatory spirit in which our letter was written, explaining that the matter was not primarily a racial problem but basically and fundamentally the right of any citizen to test his rights in the courts of law, set up for that very purpose?"

Virginia Judge Dismisses Suit Of Negro Teacher For Equal Pay

NORFOLK, Va. — Following a three and one-half-hour hearing in the Circuit Court here June 1, Presiding Judge Allan R. Hanckel, denied a petition filed by Miss Aline E. Black, local high school teacher, which sought to compel the Norfolk school board to pay Miss Black and all other Negro teachers in Norfolk, the same salary as white teachers with similar qualifications and doing the same type of work.

Judge Hanckel sustained a demurrer filed to Miss Black's petition for a writ of mandamus by City Attorney Alfred Anderson and his assistant, W. Old, Jr., and ordered the case dismissed.

In sustaining the demurrer which means simply that while the City of Norfolk admits everything in Miss Black's petition Miss Black's attorney's; Thurgood Marshall, assistant special counsel for the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People; Leon A. Ransom, of the association's national legal committee and J. Thomas Hewin, Jr., of Richmond, Va., had completed their appeal for filing before the Virginia State Court of Appeals for a writ of error.

The City of Norfolk's attorney, in his argument for dismissal of the case, set forth the following main points:

The petition was insufficient in law; Miss Black was employed on a private contract basis and the defendants could either hire her or not and pay her whatever they wanted to; Miss Black could not complain if she accepted such a contract; the courts could not control by mandamus action a discretionary power that could be exercised by the Norfolk school board alone; Miss Black waived all constitutional rights when she accepted the contract.

The N. A. A. C. P. attorneys, denying that the petition was insufficient in law, argued that the high school teacher's contract was not an issue in the case. They pointed out that the issue was the establishment of a salary basis for teachers in Norfolk that did not discriminate against Negro teachers.

Attorneys for the N. A. A. C. P. cited the salary schedule, which was filed with the petition. This schedule provides that white female high school teachers shall receive a minimum of $970 and a maximum of $1,900 a year, while a separate salary schedule for Negro high school teachers provides a minimum for female teachers of $699 and a maximum of $1,105.

Miss Black's petition alleged that the Norfolk School board was enforcing discriminatory salary schedule, actually paying Negro teachers less than white teachers with identical qualification and experience and doing the same type of work, solely on the basis of color.

The N. A. A. C. P. attorneys argued that "there is no discretion to violate the United States Constitution," that the Board, although it had power to fix salaries, had no power to pay Negro teachers less than whites simply because of color. They argued further that when color was made the basis of discrimination the Board violated the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution. They cited numerous cases intended to show that Miss Black could not waive her Constitutional rights.

Most of their argument was based on the fourteenth Amendment as it applied to requiring equal treatment for all citizens in the distribution of public funds for schools.

Commenting on Judge Hanckel's decision, officials of the N. A. A. C. P. said:

"We are not surprised to receive a reversal in the lower courts of Virginia in this case, just we were not surprised to receive a reversal in the lower courts of Missouri in the University of Missouri case.

"We want an opportunity to get a decision from the United States Supreme Court because we believe that the high court's decision will affect the question of equalized salaries, in all states, not only as it applies to white and colored teachers, but as it applies to white and colored workers in every field of public employment."

The Penalty For Seeking Bread

EVERYONE interested in the efforts of Virginia's Negro teachers to improve their economic status had hoped that the reference of the matter to judicial determination would be allowed to proceed without untoward incident.

Their hopes were blasted last week when it was announced that the Norfolk school board had declined to renew Miss Aline Black's contract to teach for another year. Miss Black had permitted herself to be used as complainant in a suit filed in Norfolk Circuit Court to test the constitutionality of the present statutes which enable the school boards in their separate jurisdictions to set up one standard of pay for white teachers and another for colored teachers.

The Norfolk school board acted within its legal rights in refusing to reemploy Miss Black, but it went out on very thin moral grounds. It pronounced the dictum that no teacher shall seek, by judicial review, to redress his or her salary or other grievances, except under penalty of dismissal from the system.

In laying down that principle it repudiated the Bill of Rights. It denied the teacher, who had been a faithful servant for 12 years, the right to pursue lawful means to obtain lawful rights, or to submit what she deemed to be her lawful rights to judicial review.

In that action the board served notice upon all other teachers, white as well as colored, that the taking of legal steps to redress their grievances will be met by economic reprisal.

That arbitrary and autocratic action was advised and sustained by the highest governmental authorities in the state. In their action in the Black case the local school board had the approval of the State Board of Education, the state's legal department, and in large part the public opinion which sustains these important agencies of government.

That this is a serious situation goes without saying. That its consequences will fall upon white as well as black citizens follows just as truly as night follows day. The belief of the present ruling class in Virginia that it can go on indefinitely depriving Negroes of elementary human rights without at the same time visiting this affliction upon its white citizens has already been shattered by the rise of certain social, economic, and political conditions in the state, which reflect an unwholesome and unhealthy atmosphere in the whole body of citizenship.

The same revolutionary public sentiment that finally brought about the enactment of the Wagner Labor Relations Act will in time unloosen the economic chains which bind the Negro teacher and the white teacher, the Negro worker and the white worker in Virginia.

In one week the state has been placed in the untenable position of witnessing its Governor Price telling the graduating class at the University of Virginia what a deplorable thing it is that many teachers labor for less wages than common laborers receive, and the school board of one of the state's political sub-divisions dropping from the system one of these teachers because she sought, by dignified, lawful procedure, to escape this plight.

Negro Pri

Norfolk Judge Cites State Law On Discretion

NORFOLK, (AP)—Negro principals and teachers were denied a writ of mandamus yesterday to compel the Norfolk City School Board to pay Negro educators salaries equal to those of white instructors of the same qualifications.

Judge A. R. Hanckel of Circuit Court dismissed the action on a demurrer filed by the city. He stated the Virginia law gives the school board certain discretionary powers in applying and fixing the salaries of teachers, and the court could not substitute any discretionary powers of its own in the case.

Sees Suit Lacking Legal Basis

The city's demurrer assumed the truth of the plaintiff's claims, but contended that there was no legal basis for the suit going to trial. The petition was asked by Aline Elizabeth Black, a teacher at the Booker T. Washington High School, who brought the suit on behalf of herself and all others similarly situated.

Her attorneys, Thurgood Marshall, Baltimore Negro, who is assistant special counsel for the N. A. A. C. P. of 69 Fifth Avenue, New York, and Leon A. Ransom, Washington Negro, immediately noted an appeal to the Virginia State Supreme Court of Appeals from Judge Hanckel's decision.

May Go Yet Higher

It was announced at the time the petition was lodged in the clerk's office of the circuit court on March 2 that it would be taken to the Supreme Court of the United States, if necessary, in order to try to win for Negro principals and teachers here a salary schedule equal to that of white principals and teachers.

City Attorney Alfred Anderson and one of his assistants, Jonathan W. Old Jr., filed the demurrer yesterday, setting up 10 reasons for arguing that the demurrer should be sustained and the case dismissed, but Judge Hanckel's decision was based on only one of these. In his brief oral opinion from the bench, Judge Hanckel said, in part:

"Apart from the question of the petitioner's legal rights and legal obligations under the contract made by the petitioner, and apart from the estoppel or waiver of constitutional rights, I am of the opinion that the petition undertook to question the discretion of the school board (in fixing salaries) and my opinion is that the discretion of the school board is complete and they have a right to make any reasonable classification and that this petition is an attempt to control that discretion by mandamus. . ."

He also remarked that court had no right to substitute its discretion for that of the school board in fixing salaries for its employees.

Rights Viewed Violated

The petition contended that Negro principals and teachers with equal qualifications are receiving less pay than white principals and teachers because of race and color, a violation, they claimed, of the United States Constitution.

The suit had the support of the Virginia State Teachers Association, a Negro organization, and the Virginia Conference of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

School Children Vigorously Protest Dismissal of Salary Suit Petitioner

HUNDREDS OF Norfolk school children paraded uptown streets last Sunday just before the mass meeting to protest the school board's dismissal of Miss Aline Black, teachers' salary test case petitioner, got underway at St. John's A. M. E. Church. These children carried signs decrying the school board's action.

The parade formed at Dunbar School, went out Chapel Street to Rugby, down Rugby to Church, and down Church to Bute where they turned and went into St. John's Church. This picture was taken as they marched down Church Street, led by a local Boy Scout drum and bugle corps. When the children, ranging in size from tiny, first grade tots on up, reached the church they took seats in the choir stand.

Some of the slogans on the placards the children carried were as follows: "Dictators—Hitler, Mussolini, and the School Board;" "Qualify to Vote—The School Board Must Go;" "School Teachers Must Have the Right to Petition;" "We Want Miss Black Back;" "Fight For Right;" "Norfolk School Board Un-American."

"The Right of Petitition Must Not Be Denied American Citizens;" "The School Board's Method of Dealing with Colored Teachers is Un-American;" "Our School Board has Vetoed the Bill of Rights;" "We Want Our Teachers Equally Prepared and Equally Paid."

Magnanimity Takes A Vacation

From Virginian-Pilot

THE School Board's failure to re-employ Aline Elizabeth Black, the Negro high school teacher who has been made the instrumentality of a salary-equalization test case, is an act of reprisal in which it can take no pride. In effect she has been fired not because of a deterioration in her work, but because she allowed herself to become the agency of a court test to ascertain the parity-pay rights of Negro teachers under the Federal constitution.

The rights in question, as the decision of the Norfolk Circuit Court suggests, are doubtful. At any rate they are debatable. What is not debatable is the right of any public employee, white or black, to go into court and ask for a judicial determination of his rights, and to do so without being punished for that act as if it were an educational or departmental misdemeanor.

If, at the end of the present case, the Supreme Court of the United States should uphold the contention of the petitioner (and no one can be sure that it will not) the School Board will be in the delectable position of having fired a teacher for an effort to obtain her constitutional rights. The School Board may think it is equitable—this business of depriving a public employee of her bread because she invoked judicial process to obtain support for something to which the Board was opposed—but we don't.

The City Manager and Director of Public Safety, confronted, five years ago, with a court action brought by members of the City Fire Department in an effort to validate their right to form an A. F. of L. union, viewed this form of lese majeste more magnanimously. The petitioners of 1934 lost out in the courts (just as the teacher has now lost out in the court of first instance) but the firemen in whose names the suit was brought were not dropped from their jobs — were not separated from their bread.

The logic of the School Board's act is that the courts are closed to any governmental employee who thinks rightly or wrongly, that he is being denied his lawful rights—that if he looks to the courts he must look for a job. Let those admire such a proposition who can. We think it is lamentable.

Second Salary Case Up In Va. For Hearing

NORFOLK, Va.— (SNS) —Continuing its fight to compel boards of education in southern and border states to recognize the right of Negro teachers in the public schools to be paid salaries equal to wages paid white teachers doing the same work, the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People filed a petition in the United States District Court here Thursday, November 2, on behalf of Melvin O. Alston, a Negro teacher in the Booker T. Washington High School here.

Alston is seeking to force the local board of education to pay him a salary equal to that of a white teacher doing the sme work. He is represented by Thurgood Marshall, special counsel for the N. A. A. C. P.

As a taxpayer and a teacher Alston's suit is being brought under Section 41 and 43, of the United States Code. The former section refers to the right of all persons within the jurisdiction of the United States to "make and enforce contracts to sue....and to receive full and equal benefit of all laws.. .' "as is enjoyed by white citizens." The latter section refers to the liability of all persons who attempt to deprive others of "rights and privileges....secured by the Constitution and laws" of the United States.

This is the second teacher salary case brought by the N. A. A. C. P. against the local board of education here.

School Board Condemned By Negroes

Mass Meeting Asks Renewal of Contract for Aline Black

Petition Signed

Dozen White Persons at Gathering; Rev. G. E. Hopkins Speaker

Approximately 1,200 Negroes at a protest mass meeting yesterday afternoon at St. John's A. M. E. Church signed a petition asking the Norfolk City School Board to reappoint Aline E. Black, Negro teacher in Booker T. Washington High School, whose contract was not renewed after she brought suit to obtain the same pay as white teachers.

(The suit was lost in Circuit Court May 31 before Judge Allan R. Hanckel and is now awaiting appeal to a higher court.)

Ten or a dozen white persons attended the meeting. The Rev. Garland Evans Hopkins, pastor of LeKies Memorial Methodist Church, expressed sympathy with the purpose of the petition, as did W. D. Keene, Jr., executive secretary of the Norfolk Interracial Commission, who spoke, however, he said, as an individual and not representing the commission. (The executive committee of the commission will meet Wednesday, it was announced.)

Text of Petition

The petition said:

"Gentlemen — We, the undersigned citizens of the City of Norfolk, have signed our names below in emphatic protest against the action and attitude of the responsible school authorities of the city in denying to Miss Aline E. Black, for twelve years a teacher in the Norfolk school system, a contract to again teach next year, and in deducting $4.01 from her check for the day she was in court as plaintiff in her legal action seeking to have established equal salaries for teachers having the same work, qualifications, and experience.

"We hold the above-mentioned action of the board to be utterly shameless, a blot upon the City of Norfolk, and a discreditable penalty imposed upon a teacher who properly and legally sought redress in a matter of vital importance to herself, others similarly affected, and to the racial group with which she is identified.

"In simple justice, this teacher should be reappointed. Her record as a student, her long and satisfactory service as a teacher, and her consistent efforts to even better qualify herself for the training of the city's youth, through advanced study—all make a continued refusal to reappoint her, indefensible."

Hopkins Speaks

Mr. Hopkins warned the Negro audience "To be kindly affectioned toward those who seem so gravely to have misunderstood your problem. Remember there are at least two sides to each question. In their minds these members of the school board, some of whom I know personally and admire, think they are doing the right thing. Be generous, even to a fault, in your thoughts and actions."

He asked the Negroes to pray as did Chirst, "Forgive us our tresposses as we forgave those who trespass against us."

Walter E. White, of New York, executive secretary of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, asked the Negroes to follow "the tenets and spirit of the Christ who became enraged at the profanation of the temple and who took whips and drove the moneychangers out."

"If you fight and win the battle for equal salaries in the teaching profession it will act like a pebble dropped in a pond. The waves will spread until it inevitably affects pay in every other field of endeavor.

Prepared to Fight

"The N. A. A. C. P. is prepared to fight to the last ditch to erase every form of discrimination in the United States," he said.

Noting the predominance of Negroes on relief rolls, he said, "Denied educational equalities, the Negro is unable to compete in a competitive world and if he doesn't make a stand now he will fall further behind in the race of life."

White urged every Negro in Norfolk to register and vote for a city council that would choose a new school board, "if the school board continues to perpetrate outrageous injustices." In this he was joined by P. B. Young, Sr., editor of the Norfolk Journal and Guide; Thurgood Marshall, Baltimore attorney assisting Aline Black's suit, and the Rev. W. L. Hamilton, pastor of Shiloh Baptist Church.

Refers to Outsiders

"There have been complaints that we Norfolk Negroes have brought in outsiders to stir up trouble," Young said, "but the man who is in jail must get somebody on the outside to get him out."

"Thousands of promising young white men and women in the South are fleeing every year to the North and West in search of intellectual, spiritual and economic opportunity and to escape the same plight visited upon us," he said.

Young termed the situation as "a battle between Democracy and Autocracy" and defended the basis rights guaranteed by the Constitution.

Marshall, Baltimore attorney for the N. A. A. C. P., in urging the Negro population to register and vote together said "We've got to remember we must fight as well as pray."

"War-Chest" Behind It

"That's what they do in civilized countries," Marshall said, referring to Maryland which grants tenure to a teacher who has served three years. He declared that there was a "war-chest" to carry on the suit for equal salary and to provide for the Norfolk teacher bringing the suit.

Mr. Hopkins said he doubted if he represented the opinion of a majority of the white people of Norfolk.

"I can state," he added, "that what I shall say does represent the mind of a large and thinking portion of our population—a portion which is increasing in direct proportion to the increase of a knowledge of the principles of Jesus and to the raising of the general educational level of our white people."

"The issues involved are those of free speech and of academic freedom. These are fundamental to the continued existence of a democracy," he said.

Jerry O. Gilliam, president of the local branch of the N. A. A. C. P., presided and several Negro religious, civic and social organizations participated in the meeting. Preceding the meeting a large number of Negro children, led by a Negro Boy Scout Drum and Bugle Corps, marched from the Dunbar School into the church, carrying banners. Some of these banners read: "Dictators—Hitler, Mussolini, Norfolk School Board." "Qualify to Vote. Schoolboard Must Go." "We Want Miss Black Back." "The Right of Petition Ought Not To Be Denied American Citizens." "Our School Board Has Vetoed the Bill of Rights." "We Want Our Teachers Equally Prepared and Paid." "The School Board's Method of Dealing With Colored Teachers is Un-American."

The teacher's court action was brought early in March in the form of a writ of mandamus to compel the school board to set up a salary schedule under which white and Negro teachers with equal qualifications would have equal pay.

Judge Hanckel ruled that each teacher's salary was a matter fixed by contract with the school board. He wrote: "My opinion is that the discretion of the school board is complete and that it has the right to make any reasonable classifications, and that this petition is an attempt to control that discretion by mandamus . . ."

The Interracial Future

Editor of The Times-Dispatch:

Sir,—This letter is written concerning an editorial appearing in your paper on July 17, 1939.

The matter stands thus: If the State of Virginia has not sufficient funds to pay equal salaries for equal jobs how is it possible for the said State to maintain separate institutions for Negro and white education in the higher graduate work?

Do not let our fellow whites become alarmed that eventually the undergraduate Negro will seek schooling alongside the undergraduate white. That is a matter needless of any thought or consideration since it is a system already set up, established and accepted.

The State will build or add new buildings and accommodations for this separate education, thereby upholding a tradition of segregation. The State will uphold this tradition even if it does add expense to the State treasury. The instructors of the Negro State school receive little more than half of the amount received by instructors at the white State school.

It isn't a matter of "We want to attend the University of Virginia," for you know the number of Negro students may not be half or one-third the amount of white students.

It's a matter of seeing whether Virginia's aristocracy shall always remain in the picturesque fashion of "Marse Charley" and not in the fashion of aristocracy of mind and thought.

Thus when this issue is brought to light we are alarmed merely at the thought of trying to dodge a fact. It is the principle of the thing at which we look. We are wondering how long the ugly veil is to hang over our faces. Each time you squabble over "separate this and separate that," and keep your necks in hot water that we may not even see the steam, you pull the veil more tightly.

We hate this. We are tired of talking about it and tired of submitting to it.

Teacher's Dismissal One of Ugliest Facts In Recent Va. History

Says Teachers Harder Worked And Poorer Paid

(Staff Correspondence)

RICHMOND, Va.—"One of the ugliest facts in the life of Virginia within recent months has been the dismissal" of Miss Aline Black because she is the plaintiff in a suit filed to bring an equalization of of teachers' salaries in Norfolk.

That is the view expressed here this week by Dr. Gordon B. Hancock, pastor of Moore Street Baptist Church, and professor of sociolgoy at Virginia Union University.

The widely known churchman, educator, and writer made known his views in a letter addressed to the Richmond Times Leader this week, and released for publication to the Journal and Guide.

A NEW SLANT

An interesting comment of Dr. Hancock was that equalization of pay would still leave the Negro teachers under a burden as compared to the lot of white teachers, since the former do a "much heavier and more complicated work."

Her dismissal "compromises the fair name of Virginia," Dr. Hancock avers.

The full text of his letter follows:

MUST FACE FACTS

"We are not going to get very far in advancing the cause of better race relations until we are willing to face facts—even ugly facts—as they pertain to the social and economic life about us. One of the ugliest facts in the life of Virginia within recent months has been the dsmissal of a young colored woman from the school system of Norfolk because she tried by legal means to secure equal salary for equal work.

"It is wrong to assume that if she received equal salary it would be for equal work for the work of the Negro teacher and preacher and professional is much heavier and more complicated because of the restricted living opportunities by which the Negro must live and have his being. Not only is the work of the Negro teacher more difficult but the average load is heavier.

It is no wonder then that there is general dissatisfaction with the differential that exists in Virginia and greater would be the pity if the Negro teachers were indifferent to this situation. That this young woman had to go to law in her attempt to correct matters was bad enough; but when she was discharged for exercising her legal rights, the fair name of Virginia was compromised.

Not Norfolk and its school board and Miss Black alone are involved but the fair name of a great state is in jeopardy. What is more there is no argument that a better class Virginian would care to make in defense of what has transpired. There are some arguments to be sure that may be made against giving equal salary and there are some who will gladly make them; but I know the temper of Virginia too well to even imagine that a big Virginian would crucify his pride in an argument against simple justice.

MUST ASSERT OURSELVES

"The time is at hand when better Virginians must assert themselves and see that justice in this matter is done. Not only should this young woman be reinstated but without further litigation Virginia should grant equal pay for more work. Proud Virginians will be slow to admit that Virginia Negroes are less deserving than those of Kentucky where the equal salary has been granted. If our claims of fine race relations are any more than a sounding brass or a tinkling cymbal then let us face the facts and go forward together."

Moreover from time to time much is said and written about the crime waves among Negroes, and about the Negro's higher rates of syphilis and tuberculosis. Within recent weeks the great amount of illegitimacy among my people has been much discussed from platform and press. But to a student of these matters these things are not surprising for such things always accompany the restricted life.

NEED MORAL COURAGE

The same kind of public spirit that would deny to a Negro equal pay for equal work is the spirit that makes possible and probable the greater crime and illegitimacy so widely published. Every argument against simple justice for the Negro is an argument for the perpetuation of this unwholesome situation.

There may be some states and some peoples who would see the economic slavery of the Negro perpetuated, but it is difficult to believe that such sentiment prevails in proud Virginia. It s my firm belief that the situation in Norfolk belies the spirit of better Virginia. Some moral courage on the part of a few broad-minded Virginians would save an ugly situation. Justice is knocking at the door of proud Virginia, and eventually the door will be opened, why not now?"

The Price Is Cheap

The Norfolk, Va., school board has declined to reinstate Miss Aline Black, in whose name the NAACP has filed suit in Virginia courts to equalize teachers' salaries.

Dismissal of Miss Black was to be expected. Maryland school authorities also dismissed a teacher who filed a similar suit, seeking thereby to intimidate and harass other teachers who might seek their legal rights in the courts.

In Maryland, teachers' salaries have already been equalized in some counties. In Maryland and Virginia all counties will soon be compelled by law to equalize teachers' pay checks.

This will mean $2,000,000 a year more in the pockets of school teachers.

This is a prize that is worth the sacrifice which results from the loss of one or two teachers' jobs.

At the same time those who stand to gain increased pay by reason of Miss Black's sacrifice must not be slow in coming to her rescue.

There are enough funds in the treasury of the Virginia Teachers' Association to pay Miss Black her regular salary next year and even longer until she can get another job.

Miss Aline Black Is Given Year's Salary

NORFOLK, Va.—(SNS)—Undeterred by the recent action of the local school board which dismissed Miss Aline Black, a teacher in the Booker T. Washington High School in order to stop the N. A. A. C. P.'s court fight to equalize the salaries of white and colored teachers here, the association moved in on the board again, when Melvin O. Alston, a regular teacher in the same high school, filed a petition with the board Thursday, September 27, asking that his and other Negro teachers' salaries be equalized with whites.

With the filing of the petition, Dr. J. M. Tinsley, of Richmond, Va., chairman of the joint committee to Equalize Teachers' Salaries in Virginia, announced that the committee has paid to Miss Black, the sum of her salary for the current year.

"Miss Black has lost her job because of her efforts to secure the equal protection of the laws," he said, "another teacher has filed a similar petition. Others will come forward. This campaign will be continued until justice is secured."

Colored Teachers Ask Wage Equality

Norfolk, Va., Oct. 2 (AP).—A second effort of Norfolk colored teachers to obtain pay equal to that of white instructors has been made here with the presentation of a petition to the Norfolk School Board by Melvin O. Alston, a teacher at the Booker T. Washington High School.

A recent attempt to obtain pay equalization by Aline Elizabeth Black ended when she droppel her suit against the board.

In his petition, Alston stated he was acting on behalf of himself and other colored teachers and principals in Norfolk.

Race Had Nothing To do With Black Case, Say Trustees

School Board Rejects Plea of Inter-Racial Commission

Await Suit Result

First Statement on Action in Denying Contract to Negro Teacher

The School Board has rejected the plea of the Norfolk Commission on Inter-racial Co-operation for the reinstatement of Aline Elizabeth Black, Negro high school teacher, whose contract was not renewed after her suit for pay equal to that paid white teachers, it was announced yesterday by Judge Herbert G. Cochran, president of the interracial commission.

A delegation led by Judge Cochran appeared before the School Board at a special meeting Thursday afternoon to press for a reconsideration of a contract for the teacher. The School Board's reply, received yesterday by Judge Cochran, was as follows:

"Dear Judge Cochran:

"The School Board of the City of Norfolk, Virginia, has considered carefully the petition filed by certain citizens of Norfolk asking for the reinstatement of Miss Aline Black as teacher in the public schools of the city, and the arguments advanced in a conference with a deputation of your commission.

General Misunderstanding

"In the matter of her suit against the School Board of the City of Norfolk a general misunderstanding has arisen. A situation which is entirely legal in its aspects has been permitted to assume the proportions of an inter-racial matter, whereas the same situation would have prevailed regardless of the race of the plaintiff. When the suit in question has been finally decided and Miss Black ceases to occupy the status of plaintiff, the board feels that then, and not before then, the question of her employment will be in order for consideration.

"Under the existing circumstances and for the best interests of the entire school system of the city, the board at this time is unable to grant the request for reinstatement.

"Yours very truly,
"A. H. FOREMAN,
"Chairman, School Board."

The request for a hearing by the School Board was made by the inter-racial commission in a letter dated June 30, Judge Cochran revealed. This letter, signed by Judge Cochran, read:

"At the request of the Norfolk Inter-racial Commission, as its president, I am writing you as chairman of the Norfolk School Board (Mr. Foreman), to request a conference between the School Board and a deputation of the commission to discuss the matter of the failure of the teacher, in whose name proceedings were recently instituted here to obtain equalization of pay for teachers, to receive a contract to teach in the Norfolk schools for the coming year, and the situation which has arisen in the community as a result.

Explains Purpose

"The purpose and method of the commission are uniformly to endeavor to accommodate and adjust matters or situations which arise in such manner as to prevent or allay conflict and misunderstanding.

"It is in this attitude and with this purpose that the conference between the School Board and representatives of the commission is requested.

"Doubtless the sooner such a conference may be had the better. Any time that may be designated for the conference will be acceptable to the representatives of the commission."

Members of the commission which called on the School Board with Judge Cochran were Eugene L. Diggs, Mrs. N. M. Osborne, Herbert Gerst and the Rev. B. W. Harris. They had been appointed by the commission's executive committee with power to act for it, Judge Cochran said. In a statement yesterday explaining the manner in which the School Board was approached at the Thursday conference, Judge Cochran stated:

"We approached the School Board in the same conciliatory spirit in which our letter was written, explaining that the matter was not primarily a racial problem but basically and fundamentally the right of any citizen to test his rights in the courts of law, set up for that very purpose.

Object of Reprisal

"We made it very clear that it was specifically that and nothing else, the failure of the teacher to receive a contract for the coming year because she had brought suit in her name to test her rights and others similarly situated. By that action she was made the object of reprisal, simply because she resorted to the courts which are tribunals established for citizens to test their rights.

"This community has been fortunate in its racial relationships. Hostility has been absent; but this action has had a tendency to disturb a hitherto satisfactory and harmonious situation. We said we felt the question involved was fundamentally one of civil rights and that its placing of inter-racial relationships at stake was our reason for coming to them. We specifically requested the board to reconsider and treat this teacher as others by offering her a contract. She has been in the school system 12 years, is well qualified and has a good record.

"We said that the action of the School Board seemed contrary to its former attitude and record, for the School Board heretofore rightly had enjoyed the reputation of dealing fairly with colored schools and colored teachers.

"Their action, we said, was contrary to the position and attitude the city took some years ago when the firemen went to the courts to test their right to form a union. The local court and the State Supreme Court of Appeals held against them. The city took no reprisal or retaliatory measures against the men of the fire depart-

QUESTIONABLE REPRISAL

The Norfolk City School Board has made a bad mistake in refusing to re-employ the Booker T. Washington High School teacher who permitted her name to be used in the test case brought by Norfolk colored school teachers in an effort to enforce equal pay for equal work of other teachers employed in Norfolk city schools.

True, it is the Norfolk court has dismissed the action that was brought in this test case—on the ground that the School Board cannot under the law be denied the right of determining qualification and employment of its servants—and until higher court says different it has been shown that the complainant made mistake in bringing the suit she did, or permitted others to bring the same in her name, but this would not seem to justify her release punitively after twelve years of satisfactory service in the Norfolk schools.

The Norfolk Board may have felt it had dealt generously with its colored school teachers, just as it probably has, when all things are taken into consideration and the compensation received by colored teachers elsewhere is considered, but its disciplinary method adopted in the case at issue was in form that was almost by necessity to rebound, and it has done so.

As the Virginian-Pilot this morning said, the logic of the Norfolk Board's act is that the courts are closed to any governmental employee who thinks rightly or wrongly that he is being denied his lawful rights and that if he should even undertake to obtain what he may regard as his rights he must look for another job.

There may be those who think the School Board was within its moral right not to re-employ the teacher who brought the recent court action, or any other teacher who might bring a legal action of similar nature, but certainly the Norfolk Board, from the viewpoint of diplomacy, has gotten itself into trouble. Its action, too, smacks of the kind of reprisal that never sets well.

If the National Labor Relations Board held jurisdiction the School Board's action of elimination of the services of the "offending" school teacher would likely find reversal. The last of the matter has probably not been heard.

Ask Teacher's Reinstatement

NORFOLK, June 26.—(AP)—Approximately 1,200 Norfolk Negroes have signed a petition asking the Norfolk city school board to reappoint Aline E. Black, Negro teacher in Booker T. Washington high school, whose contract was not renewed after she brought suit to obtain the same pay as white teachers.

The suit was lost in circuit court May 31 and is now awaiting appeal to a higher court.

The action followed a mass meeting here yesterday afternoon, addressed by Walter E. White, executive secretary of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored people.

Second Salary Case Taken To U. S. Court

Asserting that equal protection of the laws is being denied him and all other teachers similarly situated, solely because of race and color and in violation of the Constitution and statutes of the United States, Melvin O. Alston last week filed suit in the Unied States District Court against the Norfolk School Board and its superintendent, C. W. Mason, to compel the board to equalize the salaries of teachers equally qualified and performing essentially similar duties. The Norfolk Teachers Association is a joint plaintiff with Mr. Alston.

The suit prays the court to:

Make a declaratory decree adjudging the rights and legal relations of the parties to the suit;

To enter a judgment or decree that the present salary schedule is a denial of the equal protection of the laws guaranteed by the Fourteenth Amendment of the Constitution, and is therefore unconstitutional and void;

To decree that the present distribution of the public school fund is unconstitutional and void;

And further asks for permanent injunctions restraining the board from continuing salary differentials based on race or color;

And from paying Mr. Alston or the Norfolk Teachers' Association, joint plaintiff, or any other colored teacher or principal employed by the board a less salary than it pays any white teacher or principal employed by it, with equal qualifications, certification, experience, and filling an equivalent position in the public schools of the city of Norfolk.

JURISDICTION INVOKED

Federal jurisdiction is invoked in the suit, similar to one previously brought unsuccessfully in Norfolk Circuit Court, under the federal judicial code, section 24 (1) [28 U. S. C., section 41 (1)], and the suit is described as one in equity which arises under the Constitution and/or laws of the United States.

Federal jurisdiction is also invoked by Mr. Alston's counsel under two federal statutes and the Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution. Under one statute federal jurisdiction is held to exist because the matter in controversy exceeds the sum of $3,000.

Jurisdiction is held to exist also under another federal statute providing for a suit in equity to redress the deprivation under color of law, statute, regulation, custom, and usuage of a state of rights, privileges, and immunities secured by the Constitution, and of rights secured by federal laws providing for equal rights of citizens.

DUAL PLAINTIFFS

The suit is brought by Mr. Alston in his own behalf as a teacher and as a taxpayer, and also on behalf of other persons, citizens, and residents—namely, teachers and principals here—similarly situated and affected.

The Norfolk Teachers' Association, jointly a plaintiff, is described in the suit as "voluntary unincorporated association composed of Negro teachers and principals of public schools here, organized for the mutual improvement and protection of its members in their profession."

ABLE LEGAL STAFF

The complaint is signed by the following attorneys: Thurgood Marshall, special counsel for the N. A. A. C. P.; William H. Hastie, dean of the Howard University law school and formerly judge of the Federal Court in the Virgin Islands; Leon A. Ransom, Howard law professor; J. Thomas Hewin, Jr., and Oliver W. Hall, both of Richmond.

They are retained by the Joint Committee for the Equalization of Teachers Salaries, formed by the Virginia NAACP branches and the Virginia State Teachers Association.

COMPLAINT SUMMARIZED

In summary, the complaint as drafted sets forth that over a long period of years the school authorities here have "consistently pursued and maintained and are now pursuing and maintaining the policy, custom, and usage of paying Negro teachers and principals . . . less salary than white teachers and principals with equal qualifications, certificates, and experiences, exercising the same duties and performing the same services as Negro teachers and principals."

It is further alleged that this discrimination "is being practiced against the plaintiffs and all other Negro teachers and principals in Norfolk, and is based solely upon their race and color."

In this, the complaint adds, the plaintiffs and other principals and teachers "are being denied the equal protection of the laws."

TEACHER FIVE YEARS

Mr. Alston has been employed as a regular teacher by the board since September, 1935, and is in his fifth year of experience as a regular teacher at Booker T. Washington High School, the complaint sets forth.

He is a graduate of Virginia State College, holds a collegiate professional certificate, the highest issued by the state of Virginia, and "has satisfied the same requirements as those exacted of all other teachers, white as well as Negro, and exercises the same duties and performs services substantially equivalent to those performed by others, white as well as Negro, yet all white male teachers in Norfolk who hold the said certificate with equal and less experience receive salaries much larger than the salary paid the plaintiff."

SALARY INEQUALITIES

Mr. Alston gets $921 a year, the complaint asserts, while the white teachers referred to get $1,200 as a minimum salary.

"The practical application of the board's present salary schedule," the complaint adds, "is and will be to pay Negro teachers and principals less compensation from public funds solely on account of their race or color."

The complaint, 12 pages in length, details the various alleged discriminations in compensation, and charges the defendants with violations of the equal protections of the laws and the due process clauses of the Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution and sections 41 and 41 of Title 8 of the United States Code.

TAXPAYER PHASES

The complaint asserts: "To the extent that the defendants, in enforcing the said discriminatory system are acting under color of statute, regulation, custom, or usage, said statute (etc.) is void and unconstitutional, and to the extent that defendants may be acting without benefit of statute, (etc.), their acts are nevertheless acts of the state, similarly void and unconstitutional."

The allegation is given emphasis by pointing out that all of the funds in question are public, tax-derived funds; that Mr. Alston is an owner of property and a taxpayer contributing to the school funds; and that he is taxed equally with all other citizens and property owners—no discrimination made in the rate of taxes he is required to pay into the school fund on account of his race and color.

"Under the Constitution of Virginia said public school fund is to be administered for the equal benefit of all the people of the state," the complaint states.

But "by virtue of the discriminatory salary schedule the plaintiff is denied an equal and proportionate participation in the benefit derived from that portion of his taxes devoted to the public school fund and the payment of teachers' salaries therefrom" for reasons of race and color, "and sustains special and particular damage from the discrimination practiced against him in the distribution of the fund which his taxes helped to create."

INJUNCTIONS NEEDED

The complaint sets forth that injunctions are necessary remedies because the next fiscal year's budget is already drawn up and submitted to City Council and without injunctions "the defendants will continue to distribute the public school fund on the illegal and unconstitutional basis" already described "to the irreparable injury that both she and the present plaintiffs first petitioned the board for relief, but without success.

PREVIOUS DELAY

Therefore, it is asserted, "plaintiffs and others similarly situated and affected on whose behalf this suit is brought are suffering irreparable injury . . . (and) have no plain adequate or complete remedy to redress the wrongs and illegal acts herein complained of other than this suit for a declaration of rights and an injunction."

A sharp reminder of the delay attendant upon the Circuit Court suit of Miss Black for a writ of mandamus is put into the Federal Court complaint, when the plaintiffs state that "any other remedy to which they could be remitted would be attended by such uncertainties and delays as to deny substantial relief, would involve multiplicity of suits, cause further irreparable injury and occasion damage, vexation, and inconvenience not only to the plainitff and those similarly situated, but to defendants as governmental agencies."

SPEEDY TRIAL ASKED

In the previous court suit, before an appeal could be perfected Miss Black's contract was not renewed—in effect, she was discharged as a teacher—and the planned appeal to the State Supreme Court was withdrawn because of the legal technicalities resulting from her loss of status as a teacher. Postponements were objected to by her counsel when they were requested by counsel for the board, but without success.

Holding that "there is between the parties an actual controversy," the complaint prays the court "that upon filing of this complaint, as may appear proper and convenient to the court, the court advance this cause on the docket and order a speedy hearing of this action according to law."

Federal legal procedure has been modified recently to speed up cases filed in United States courts. The defendants in the present suit are required to file an answer within 20 days, and immediately thereafter date for trial of the case will be set.

Teachers Ask Tenure, Minimum Salary Retirement Law. Free Books

Journal and Guide
11-18-39

RICHMOND, Va. — The legislative committee of the Virginia State Teachers Association, composed of more than 4,000 colored teachers, has submitted a list of suggestions "for the improvement of Virginia public schools with special reference to Negro schools, to the Commission to Study the Virginia Public School System.

The legislative committee is composed of Thomas H. Henderson, Richmond; William M. Cooper, Hampton; Winston Douglas, Norfolk; Luther P. Jackson, Petersburg, and L. F. Palmer, Newport News.

The recommendations deal with tenure, minimum salary, discrimination in pay, retirement law, free text-books, specific training, compulsory education, per capita expenditure of school funds, and financing of improvements.

The full text of the statement follows: Norfolk, Va.

TENURE

We believe that in the interest of greater stability and efficiency in our schools, Virginia teachers should be given tenure. We suggest that after a probationary period of two years all teachers who prove satisfactory be employed on a permanent basis.

MINIMUM SALARY

The Negro teachers of Virginia are unanimous in their opposition to the proposed average annual salary for teachers. We propose instead a minimum annual salary of $720 and that a scale based on this minimum be established in each school division as a prerequisite to state aid.

DISCRIMINATION

We are in favor of an amendment to section 678 B, 1938 Acts of the General Assembly, making it obligatory for local boards of education to include in their regulations governing salary scales a clause which shall read: "There shall be no discrimination in teachers' salaries on account of sex, creed, race or color."

We insist that the only proper bases on which salary scales should be established are the training and experience of the teachers.

The Negro teachers of Virginia heartily indorse the efforts of the Virginia Education Association and the State Board of Education to establish in Virginia an actuarially sound teacher-retirement law, and to provide free text books for all the children in the public schools of the state.

It is our well-considered opinion that the efficiency of our schools would be materially increased if all teachers were required to have specific training for the work in which they are engaged.

COMPULSORY EDUCATION LAW

A strong compulsory education law should be enacted to apply to all children between the ages of 6 and 16 regardless of their scholastic attainment.

We hold that as a matter of administrative policy, the per capita expenditure of public funds for public education should be based on the needs of the whole group, and for each minority group it should be prescribed by law that the expenditure shall not be less than the ratio the said group bears to the total population of the administrative unit.

FINANCING IMPROVEMENTS

In answer to questions as to how the money for improving our schools could be raised, we must leave that to the economists, but we express the sentiment of the 4,053 members of the Virginia State Teachers Association when we say that we are willing and anxious to bear our share.

Teachers Will Have Their Day in Court

WE can understand the disinclination of states, as well as individuals, to have their affairs submitted to judicial review. Laws that are made in the legislatures are often changed or nullified by the courts.

Journal and Guide

States as well as individuals (or corporate bodies) are not always sure that the laws under which they perform certain functions will stand judicial review without having to undergo change or nullification. Thus it is frequently difficult for individuals or groups who feel that they are oppressed by certain laws to bring their causes into court. They have to overcome much resistence in order to do so.

11-25-39

Virginia colored teachers who are determined to test the legality of laws under which they are discriminated against in the matter of salaries are having quite a time getting their case into court.

Norfolk, Va.

In their test case number one, instituted in Norfolk, the state court ruled that their procedure was wrong, after school board sumbitted that the laws under which the board "discriminated" in the employment of teachers were not subject to attack by mandamus. To be sure that the complaining teacher would not return with an amended or an unassailable approach the teacher was deprived of status as complainant, under the laws which she sought to have the state court review.

Test case number two was filed in Federal district court, with a new complainant, whose tenure was certain for at least one school year, unless the board disposed of said complainant "for cause" as it has a right to do under his one year contract. But it would avail the school board nothing to do this. The lawyers for the complainant sewed up this gap in their second approach.

So, school board submits a number of other reasons why plaintiff should not be heard, among them: (1) Federal district court has no jurisdiction; (2) board hires teachers by contract and action by court would impair this contract; (3) operation of public schools is a state function and granting of plaintiff of relief asked would be interference with state in such function; (4) Norfolk teachers association is an unincorporated body and as such is not entitled to be party to the proceedings.

The court will pass upon the merits of these contentions. The complaining school teachers, of course, through their attorneys will present their legal answers to all of them. The chances are good that all of the objections to giving the teachers their day in court were anticipated by their counsel in the preparation of their case. They have met them before in other cases.

The interesting thing is that the school board does not want the teachers to get into court with their cause. That is just about the most significant and hopeful thing in the whole matter.

Plan to Appeal Teachers' Salary Suit Reversal

Journal and Guide 6-10-39 Norfolk, Va.

School Board Favored By Circuit Court

Brilliant Pleas of Petitioner's Counsel Fail

The Norfolk City School Board on Wednesday won the first round in its efforts to block a move by the Virginia Conference Branch of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People and the Virginia State Teachers Association, to equalize the salaries of white and colored teachers in the city school system.

In sustaining a demurrer filed by the School Board to a petition for a writ of mandamus to compel the board to pay colored teachers salaries equal to those of white teachers filed by Miss Aline E. Black, instructor in the Washington High School, Judge Allan R. Hanckel held, in effect, that mandamus was not the proper action and ordered the complaint dismissed.

An appeal will be made to the Virginia Supreme Court of Appeals by Thurgood Marshall, special assistant counsel for the NAACP, and Leon A. Ransome, of the Howard University Law school, attorneys who argued the case.

The school board was represented by City Attorney Alfred N. Anderson, and Assistant City Attorney Jonathan W. Old, Present also was C. W. Mason, superintendent of schools who was named a party to the suit, and other members of the School Board including A. H. Foreman; Superintendent James H. Hurst of the Norfolk County schools and Dr. Sidney B. Hall, state superintendent of public instruction.

CASE MAY GO TO U. S. SUPREME COURT

In sustaining the School Board's demurrer, Judge Hanckel expressed the belief that the case would eventually be taken to the United States Supreme Court. The petition for a writ of mandamus was filed in the office of the clerk of the Circuit Court on March 2.

Although attorneys for the school board set forth ten reasons in their arguments for sustaining the demurrer, Judge Hanckel's decision was based upon only one of these. The court held that the matter of fixing teachers' salaries rests upon the discretion of the School Board, and that the petition was an attempt to control that discretion by mandamus action which he said was not the proper remedy under the circumstances.

Judge Hanckel also remarked that the court has no right to substitute its discretion for that of the School Board in the matter of fixing salaries of its employees.

OPINION OF JUDGE

"Apart from the question of the petitioner's legal rights and obligations under the contract," made by the petitioner Judge Hanckel said in his oral opinion, "and apart from the waiver of constitutional rights, I am of the opinion that the petitioner undertook to question the discretion of the School Board in fixing salaries. My opinion is that the discretion of the School Board in this matter is complete and they have a right to make any reasonable classifications and that this petition is an attempt to control that discretion by mandamus."

The court also referred to the argument by both Mr. Anderson and Mr. Old that Miss Black had voluntarily signed a contract with the School Board to teach for a period of ten months at a saalry of $105.61 per month, and held that, in his opinion, this contract had not been violated in any way.

NO VIOLATION OF RIGHTS

Judge Hanckel ruled further that if Miss Black's constitutional rights had been violated as argued by attorneys for the NAACP, and which was denied by the city's attorneys, the petitioner had waived any right to action by the court when she voluntarily entered into a contract with the School Board to teach for a salary lower than that paid white teachers.

Attorneys for the School Board based their arguments principally upon two main points; 1. that mandamus was not the proper procedure to "undo something which had already been done," and 2. that no constitutional rights of the petitioner had been violated

An objection to Superintendent Mason's answer to the original petition being used in any way in the argument to the demurrer was made by Attorney Marshall, early in the proceedings and was sustained by Judge Hanckel. Mr. Marshall asked for a clarification of the School Board's stand in the matter.

OTHER OPINIONS CITED

The recent Supreme Court decision in the University of Missouri case, the opinion in the Lane case in Oklahoma delivered last week, and the Walter Mills case in Maryland, were cited by Miss Black's attorneys to bolster up their contentions that the petitioner's constitutional rights had been violated in the salary schedule adopted by the School Board and under which the petitioner is paid.

In referring to the Lane case at one stage Mr. Marshall characterized the school board's salary schedule as "sophisticated and simple-minded mode of discrimination," the words used by Associate Justice Frankfurter in delivering the opinion in the Lane case.

Mr. Marshall argued that the school board was attempting to set up an unreasonable claim, that the petitioner obviously could not become an employee of the school board without signing a contract, and that once the contract was signed, she could not raise the question nor challenge the salary schedule which paid her less than white teachers.

The attorney pointed out that the majority of the cases cited by the Board's attorneys were criminal cases and argued that the board's demurrer admitted that the salary schedule is based solely on the basis of color of the petitioner.

In citing the recent decision in the Gaines case which makes it mandatory upon the states to furnish equal educational facilities for all citizens regardless of color, Mr. Marshall pointed out that there is nothing in the United States Constitution which forces the states to furnish educational facilities for members of either race.

These provisions, he argued are found in state constitutions. But when the states take steps to do this then the 14th amendment to the Constitution steps in and becomes applicable," he told the court. The Constitution applies by saying that 'whenever you supply educational facilities you must supply them equally as to the races.' "

"SCHOOLS ARE EQUAL"

The attorney said he granted the defense contention that the law did not require the school board to hire Negro teachers, but that it likewise did not require it to employ white teachers. "But the School Board would not dare say that the Negro schools in the City of Norfolk are not equal to the white schools, for the Constitution of Virginia and the United States makes it mandatory for the board to maintain schools equal for all persons, regardless of race," he declared.

Because the Norfolk City School Board is an administrative part of the state and functions as such, it comes under the provisions of the 14th amendment, the attorney argued "We submit that the entire discretion of the School Board of the City of Norfolk goes no further than the 14th Amendment allows it to go, and that amendment allows no discrimination on account of race, color or creed," he said.

The demurrer itself was attacked by Attorney Ransome as being "wholly in error and improperly filed.' He argued that the petitioner had a right as a private citizen to seek relief for herself as well as "others similarly situated."

ASKS FOR ANOTHER CONTRACT

Mr. Ransome admitted the right of the school board to hire whom they please and to fix the rate of compensation, but added that the "Fourteenth amendment to the Constitution says that these rights must be administered without favor or discrimination."

"The petitioner is not seeking to enforce any contract with the school board," he declared, "and if we assume that she were, that would not prevent her from seeking legal remedy." Mr. Ransome revealed also that Miss Black has already applied for another contract with the school board and added that 'we have every reason to believe it will be granted."

In his reply to the arguments of the NAACP counsel Assistant City Attorney Old pointed out that the public school system in Virginia is entirely different from that of most states. In Virginia, he said, there is no tenure of office and no Civil Service status. The school board, he contended, had a perfect right to say whom they shall employ, and how much such employees shall be paid.

The old principle that a man has a right to sell his labor for what he can get for it, and that an employer has an inherent right to pay as little or as much as he chooses for labor, he maintained, was applicable in the Black case.

The school board, he argued further, is charged with the responsibility of maintaining and operating the city public schools, and of giving all persons equal educational opportunities, but it is not the legal function of that body to create teaching jobs and to pay any specified salaries to teachers.

The employment of teachers and the salaries the teachers are paid, are matters of discretion of the board under the Virginia law, he contended.

"TAKE IT OR LEAVE IT"

Mr. Old maintained that the petitioner was making an attempt to change her contract, and that there was no question of a violation of the 14th Amendment involved. "The school board," he told the court, "has done nothing in any way to infringe upon the rights of the petitioner.

"The only thing the board says is that, 'we will employ you and we'll pay you so much and no more; you can take it or leave it.' The school board has not sought to infringe upon the petitioner's right to pursue her chosen profession anywhere in the City of Norfolk, nor was any coercion used in signing her contract," the assistant city attorney said.

The courtroom was crowded with some of Norfolk's leading colored citizens throughout the proceedings. Miss Black was also an interested spectator.

Virginia School Board Dismisses Teacher Fighting For Equal Pay

NORFOLK, Va. — Miss Aline Black, a local high school teacher whose court case is the spearhead of the legal battle now going on in this state to equalize the salaries of Negro and white teachers, is out of a job.

Miss Black was notified through her principal June 14 that the school board had refused to issue her a contract for another year. It was also revealed that Miss Black had had $4.01 deducted from her June pay check for her appearance in court June 1st.

Immediately Thurgood Marshall, assistant special counsel for the Association, came to Norfolk, from New York to confer with city attorney Alfred Anderson. Anderson and his assistant, W. Old Jr., represented the school board in Miss Black's mandamus action which was argued before Judge Allan R. Hanckel in the circuit court of Norfolk, June 1.

Judge Hanckel denied Miss Black's petition, which sought to compel the school board to pay her and all other Negro teachers in Norfolk the same salary as white teachers with similar qualifications and doing the same work.

Marshall and his associates, Dr. Leon A. Ransom and J. Thomas Ewin, immediately noted an appeal. It was while this appeal was pending that the school board indirectly notified the teacher that she would not be reappointed.

Citizens To Fight

Citizens of Norfolk are determined to fight the case to a finish. A mass meeting will be held here June 25, and plans for picketing the office of the school board have been made by members of the Virginia State Teachers' Association which is financing the legal fight.

It was also announced that the teachers' committee would see to it that Miss Black's salary for next year is paid.

Pledging full support in the fight, N. A. A. C. P. officials issued the following statement from the organization's national headquarters in New York:

"The attitude of the Norfolk, Va., school board in denying Miss Black reappointment and deducting $4.01 from her check for the day she lost, due to the necessity of her appearance in court June 1, is utterly shameless.

"Her brilliant record both in college and during her teaching career makes the board's action stand out in contrast. If members of the board feel that they can intimidate any teacher through such tactics they are in for a rude awakening.

"Instead of lessening the fight, this action on the board's part will only make citizens and teachers alike see the necessity of really putting up a stiff fight until Miss Black's case is won not only for herself, but for every other Negro teacher in Virginia."

No Contract For Teacher Who Filed Pay Suit

When contracts for positions in the Norfolk public school system were sent out Wednesday of last week, none was forwarded to Miss Aline Elizabeth Black, petitioner in the salary equalization suit now being prepared for presentation to the Virginia Supreme Court of Appeals. Judge Allan R. Hanckel of the Norfolk Circuit court on Wednessday, May 31 ruled that the writ of mandamus action Miss Black entered was improper and ordered her suit dismissed.

Miss Leah Haller, secretary of the Norfolk School Board, on last Thursday verified reports that Miss Black would not be employed next year by saying, in a telephone interview, that "Miss Black's contract has not been renewed."

The Journal and Guide was informed by attorneys for Miss Black that $4.01 was deducted from her last month's pay for the day she spent in court during the one-day hearing on her petition.

Attorney Marshall was in town all day Thursday making arrangements for a public mass meeting, which will probably be held Sunday, June 25, under the sponsorship of the local branch of the NAACP.

The mass meeting will be called for the purpose of protesting the action of the school board, which, Mr. Marshall pointed out, "demonstrates the arbitrary manner which the board uses in handling all of the problems involving Negro schools. The dismissal of this teacher for no other reason than the fact that she had sought, by legal means, to adjust a wrong imposed on her by the school board, is a most unfair step."

Mr. Marshall declared that "this is a real challenge to the Negro people of Norfolk. They should protest this outrage by every possible means and should get behind the movement for equalization with their every resource."

The NAACP attorney told the Journal and Guide that other suits would be filed if it became necessary. He pointed out that Miss Black's salary will be taken care of by the joint committee of the Virginia NAACP and the Virginia State Teachers Association, if she loses her teaching position.

The clerk of the Circuit Court here will be asked Monday for a transcript of the record in the teacher's equal salary suit hearing. Miss Black filed a petition for a writ of mandamus against the school board and Superintendent C. W. Mason.

Bigotry Goes To School

From Norfolk Labor Journal

Because a Negro teacher has had the "temerity" to question the School Board's wisdom in the matter of equal wages for Negro teachers the Board has hastened to take reprisal by not rehiring the "troublemaker."

Appealing for wage equality in her name, but actually for all the teachers of her race the courts have ruled that wages are a matter of individual contract left to the discretion of the School Board. It perhaps denotes the liberalism of our local educators that their discretion permits them to pay Negroes less than whites for doing the same job of teaching.

Nonetheless, years of teaching experience, years without blemish so far as can be determined, have been discarded. A Negro teacher has dared to ask for wage equality! Educators were unionists. In ordinary group employment people doing equal work usually get equal wages, and failing this, when they go out on strike to remedy this situation, as occasionally occurs, their losing the strike does not bar them from future employment. In this case, however, the barring of a teacher from a job she has held for years practically means that no work will be available for her anywhere, for what other School Board will hire a "trouble-making" Negro teacher?

It may reasonably be said, therefore, that for going to court to ask wage equality the Norfolk School Board has sentenced one of its employees to starvation, doomed a career, unless made to see the light. Is this anything else than unenlightened bigotry?

CITES GROSS ACTS OF DISCRIMINATION

NORFOLK, Va.--The circuit court of Norfolk was asked this week to prohibit the local Board of Education from continuing in force a teachers' salary schedule which discriminates in favor of white teachers on the ground that the schedule violates the due process and equal protection clauses contained in the fourteenth amendment of the Constitution which guarantees equal protection to all citizens of the United States regardless of race, creed or color.

Petition Filed

The action against the local board of education was contained in a petition filed before the court by J. Thomas Hewin, Jr., Thomas Young, Thurgood Marshall, Leon A. Ransom and Charles H. Houston, attorneys for the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, who acted in behalf of Miss Aline Black, a teacher at the Booker T. Washington High School here.

The petition represents the second stage in the fight by Virginia teachers to gain equality of salary scales with white teachers doing the same work. The case is under the auspices of the Joint Committee for the Equalization of Teachers' Salaries in Virginia.

Get $800 More

According to the petition, colored high school teachers in Norfolk receive a minimum yearly salary of $699 and a maximum of $1,105, while white teachers doing the same work receive a minimum of $970 and a maximum of $1,900 a year.

The filing of the petition represents another stage in the fight for equalization of colored and white teachers' salaries in states where segregated schools exist, that has been carried on by the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People since 1934.

Similar action has been taken by the Association in Maryland (where success has been achieved in several counties), Alabama, Georgia, Florida and Louisiana.

Teachers' Pay By Contracts, Says Foreman

School Board Chairman Denies Civil Rights Involved

The Norfolk School Board has adopted the position that teacher pay is a matter of contract between the individual teacher and the School Board and is not controlled by any regulations affecting civil rights, Chairman A. H. Foreman said yesterday with respect to the suit brought in Circuit Court.

Late last year, Mr. Foreman said, the same four Negro attorneys who yesterday instituted the suit asking the same pay for Negro teachers as is paid white teachers broached the matter to the School Board. Their petition was in the case of Aline Elizabeth Black, teacher at Booker T. Washington High School, who is plaintiff in the court case.

Under date of December 23, 1938, Mr. Foreman wrote the attorneys: "We beg to advise that the School Board of the City of Norfolk has carefully considered the petition presented by you for Aline Elizabeth Black, a teacher in the Booker T. Washington High School, located in the City of Norfolk, Va., relative to the payment of salaries of teachers.

"The School Board is of the opinion that the matter of salaries to be paid to teachers is one of contract between the teacher and the School Board, and is not controlled by any law, rule or regulation affecting civil rights."

The Negro teacher, it was pointed out by her attorneys, is a graduate of Booker T. Washington High School, Norfolk, where she has now taught for 12 years, holds a B. S. degree from Virginia State College, a M. S. degree from the University of Pennsylvania, is doing work for a Ph. D degree at New York University and holds a collegiate professional certificate. Her present salary, it was learned from the School Board, is $1,110.50 per year.

From the School Board office it was learned that the scale of salaries for first-year women teachers is as follows: High school, $713 for colored and $989.50 for white teachers; elementary grades, with degree, $623.50 for colored and $957 for white teachers.

Such a difference in salary scales prevails throughout the State of Virginia, Mr. Foreman said, and for this reason the remainder of the State will watch with interest the proceedings in Norfolk.

White Virginia Professors Write Daily Newspaper Approving Equal Salary Demand of Negro Teachers

NORFOLK, Va. — Establishment of the principle that Negro and white teachers in Virginia with similar training and doing the same work should be paid the same salaries, was described as "nothing more than fair and just", by eight faculty members of the Norfolk division of William and Mary College, the oldest institution of higher learning in the country.

Their viewpoint was expressed in a letter to the edior of the Norfolk Virginian-Pilot, and published in the paper March 7. Publication of the letter followed closely upon the filing of a suit in the Norfolk circuit court by attorneys for the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People March 3, on behalf of Miss Aline E. Black, a teacher at Booker T. Washington high school here, to prohibit the local school board from paying a salary schedule which discriminates in favor of white teachers.

Signers of the letter included: Dr. W. Gerald Akers, professor of modern languages; Dr. Ernest W. Gray, associate professor of English; Geo. E. Gregory, instructor in English; Robert C. McClelland, assistant professor of ancient languages; F. A. McDonald, instructor in philosophy and psychology; Dr. Perry Y. Jackson, Professor of chemistry; A. Lee Smith, assistant professor of mathematics; and Miss Alice R. Burke, registrar and instructor in government. The complete text of the letter follows:

"The thesis of Norfolk's colored teachers, that teachers of both races should be paid equally for similar work and similar qualifications, is, in our opinion, nothing more than just and fair. There seems to us to be no reasonable objection to such a policy.

"The common superstitution that a colored person can live on less money than a white person, when considered intelligently boils down to the simple fact that any person who is paid little must of necessity adopt a lower standard of living then one who is paid more. The major cause of our whole 'race problem' is the widespread practice of economic discrimination on no other basis than that of color. Our white teachers are doubtless underpaid, but this unfortunate fact is no excuse for discrimination.

The suit instituted in the circuit court in behalf of Miss Black was filed by J. Thomas Hewin Jr., Thurgood Marshall, Leon A. Ransom, and Charles H. Houston, attorneys for the N. A. A. C. P. The fight is being supported financially by the Virginia State Teachers' Association.

Supporting the Association's stand in the fight the Richmond Times-Dispatch said in an editorial dated March 4:

"Moreover, haven't the Negro teachers logic on their side? Are we to say that a Negro teacher must undergo all the expense of training herself for a postion in the public schools, must take the necessary courses, meet the same requirement and perhaps do special work at summer school to fit herself, must offer courses similar to those given by white teachers, and then be paid half or two-thirds as much as the white teachers"?

According to the petition in the suit, Negro high school teachers in Norfolk receive a minimum yearly salary of $699 and a maximum of $1,105, while white teachers doing the same work receive a minimum of $970 and a maximum of $1,900 a year.

The N. A. A. C. P. is pushing the fight to equalize the salaries of white and colored teachers in Maryland, Alabama, ~~Georgia~~, Florida and Louis-

SPEAKING UP IN VIRGINIA

Colored Virginia is not alone in demanding equal teachers' salaries.

Eight faculty members of the Norfolk division of William and Mary College, oldest institution of learning in the country, declared last week in a letter to the Norfolk Virginian-Pilot:

"The thesis of Norfolk's colored teachers, that teachers of both races should be paid equally for similar work and similar qualifications, is, in our opinion, nothing more than just and fair. There seems to us to be no reasonable objection to such a policy."

"The white professors ridicule the superstition that colored persons can live on less money than white persons, and charge that the major cause of the race problem is the widespread economic discrimination to which Negroes are subjected.

The Richmond Times-Dispatch has also endorsed the equal salary fight.

It is certainly heartening to find white people of prominence speaking up in this manner, and it indicates a growing understanding among the more enlightened and influential Southern white people of the meaning of democracy.

Under the circumstances it is disappointing to find so many prominent Negro educators in the South failing to speak up with equal courage and certainty on a question that is almost unanimously supported by the rank and file teachers.

Colored Group Loses Suit on Teachers' Pay

School Board Can Fix Own Scale, Judge Rules at Norfolk

Norfolk, Va., May 31.—Judge A. R. Hanckel of Circuit Court today dismissed an action brought by Norfolk's colored principals and school teachers to force equalization of salaries with white principals and teachers. His ruling was made on a demurrer filed by the city.

A writ of mandamus was asked by the colored educators to compel the city' school board to pay them the same salaries paid white principals and teachers with the same qualifications.

Judge Hanckel, in sustaining the demurrer and dismissing the petition, stated the Virginia law gives the school board certain discretion in fixing the salaries of teachers and thereby the court could not substitute any discretionary powers of its own in the case.

The suit had the support of the Virginia State Teachers Association, a colored organization composed of 4,500 members, and the Virginia Conference of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

Negro Teachers Denied Pay Equal To That of Whites

NORFOLK, Va., May 31.—(A.P.)—Negro principals and teachers were denied a writ of mandamus today to compel the Norfolk city school board to pay negro educators salaries equal to those of white instructors of the same qualifications.

Judge Hanckel of circuit court dismissed the action on a demurrer filed by the city. He stated the Virginia law gives the school board certain discretionary powers in applying and fixing the salaries of teachers, and the court could not substitute any discretionary powers of its own in the case.

The petition was asked by Aline Elizabeth Black, a teacher at the Booker T. Washington high school, who brought the suit on behalf of herself and all other similarly situated.

She contended negro principals and teachers with equal qualifications are receiving less pay than white principals and teachers because of race and color, a violation, she claimed, of the United States constitution.

Her attorney noted an appeal to the Virginia state supreme court of appeals from Judge Hanckel's decision.

Equal Salaries Movement Strange But Much Needed

Editor, Journal and Guide: Very often in my travels in this section, I have been quite honored, being a Norfolkian, by the praise both colored and white people have paid Miss Aline Black for her courageous effort to have salaries of teachers equalized in Virginia. I feel doubly honored since I studied under Miss Black, and I feel that it is no more than proper that I should share these honors with all of those for whom this movement is being advanced.

It seems to me that our race is chained to the earth by its fears, and it gropes about in its captivity; yet at times it finds strange harmonies within the circle in which it is confined. Norfolk has often been praised for having given birth to certain harmonies such as, the United Order of Tents, Y. M. C. A. secretaryship for colored men, Sons of Norfolk, and others, all of which are only blocks that should serve to brace the present undertaking.

Likewise, this movement which Miss Black has taken upon her shoulders is a strange but much needed harmony. She has dared to make a move in an age of transition, such a time as many of the world's greatest movements were advanced. She stands as one born between two ages. Her roots are in a dying age, which tortures us all by its fears and superstitions; yet her leaves and branches reach up into the light of the age that is dawning. She is a tribute to the race members of our city. Her stand calls for, not only courage and ability, but for faith and belief.

I hope that this movement will imprint itself upon the minds of the young thinking Negroes, that they might know that in whatever way they turn, they are weighed by chance, but chance favors the prepared mind.

Sacred Profession Ballot Can Correct Unequal Salaries

Editor, Journal and Guide: The teaching profession is sacred because it deals with young people. But however sacred as it is, one should be paid a living wage and not have to work on a charity basis. The laborer is worthy of his hire, but the salaries of teachers are regulated by the state. Those who pay the most taxes get the greatest benefits.

What is being done in Virginia may be remedied or changed and those who pay their taxes and vote are the ones to do so. Virginia has its vices and virtues, but those who are forging ahead in other states are using all of their own means and are not sitting down and complaining. They use their God-given powers and the ballot, the most effective tool for a free people.

It is all right to invite outside sources to help us after we have exhausted all of our means. From time immemorial there has been good will between the real white people of Virginia and its colored citizens. This is not social equality but the spirit which enables both races to live together peaceably. We do not have to fight alone in any just cause, for God is just and is always on the side of right. He gives strength to the faint, and raises up friends for the weak.

Marian Anderson, Joe Louis and the late Dr. Booker T. Washington did not make it with us alone for some of us are the last to see anything worth while in our race until someone else crowns the king. We fail in some efforts because we use the wrong procedure to reach our objectives. What we want is equal salaries for similar certificates.

Before us in Virginia stands the open door. Problems as vital as that of teachers' salaries should not be tampered with by the honor seeker.

Norfolk Refuses Equal Pay; NAACP Set to File Suit

RICHMOND, Va. — The Norfolk school board has turned down the petition of Miss Aline Elizabeth Black to equalize her salary with that of white high school teachers doing the same work.

A. H. Foreman, white chairman of the board, in a letter to NAACP attorneys handling Miss Black's case, stated:

"We beg to advise that the school board of the City of Norfolk has carefully considered the petition presented by you for Aline Elizabeth Black, a teacher in the Booker T. Washington High School, located in the City of Norfolk, Va., relative to the payment of the salaries of teachers.

"The school board is of the opinion that the matter of salaries to be paid to teachers is one of contract between the teacher and the school board and is not controlled by any law, rule or regulation affecting civil rights."

A copy of the letter was also sent Miss Black.

Litigation is expected to be begun within a week in the Corporation Court in Norfolk.

Mr. Marshall said his procedure would be first to examine all minutes of the school board by subpoena, if necessary, and then prepare his case for the courts.

Is Chemistry Teacher

Miss Black is a chemistry teacher in the Booker T. High School and holds a bachelor of science degree from Virginia State College, and M.S. from the University of Pennsylvania.

She is working toward a doctor of philosophy degree at New York University.

She has been in the Norfolk school system for ten years and earns $1045 annually, while white teachers in the high schools, teaching the same subject, receive $2,100 and thereabouts.

The chemistry teacher filed suit against the Norfolk board for equal pay last November.

To File Two More

Two more petitions will be filed by teachers in two Virginia counties by the middle of the month, it was also reported.

The NAACP is preparing the necessary papers to file suit against Virginia counties that do not provide for bus transportation for colored students to and from schools, as whites enjoy.

This move on the part of the organization was brought about by the recent decision of the U.S. Supreme Court in the Gaines case.

Teachers Pay Test Case on Court Docket

Petition for Mandamus for Equal Status Returnable Tomorrow

The recent petition filed in the Circuit Court of the City of Norfolk for a writ of mandamus to compel the Norfolk City School Board and C. W. Mason, superintendent of schools, to pay Negro school principals and teachers the same salaries paid to white principals and teachers with the same educational qualifications, is returnable tomorrow morning.

This does not mean that the case will be heard tomorrow, but it is among others that will be before the court when the docket is called for the new term of court, starting tomorrow, and some definite date will be set for the trial of the case.

The action was brought by one Negro teacher, Aline Elizabeth Black, for more than 12 years an instructor in the Booker T. Washington High School for Negroes, who set forth in the petition that she was suing in behalf of herself and all other Negro principals and teachers who are employed in the city schools under like circumstances.

It is claimed in the petition that the school board maintains basic salary schedules for teachers in the city and that the salaries for Negroes are much lower than those for whites. It is charged that this difference is caused by no other reason than the race and color of the Negroes and that the system is in violation of the Constitution and laws of the State of Virginia and contrary to the Fourteenth Amendment of the Constitution of the United States.

No formal answer yet has been filed by the school board and Mr. Mason, but A. H. Foreman, chairman of the board, issued a statement the day the action was lodged in the clerk's office, saying that the school board had always taken the position that teacher pay was a matter of contract between the board and each individual teacher and was not controlled by any regulation controlling civil rights.

According to the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, which is backing the suit here, similar actions are pending in the courts of several other Southern States, although this is the first such test case of its kind filed in Virginia.

Negro Teachers Ask Same Salary Scale As Whites

File Mandamus Suit Against School Board and Mason

Hearing March 13

National Association for Advancement of Colored People Backs Move

Norfolk's Negro school teachers and principals yesterday filed a petition, through one of their number, asking the Circuit Court of the City of Norfolk to compel the City School Board and C. W. Mason, superintendent of schools, to pay them the same salaries being paid to white teachers with the same qualifications.

Echoes from the suit, for a writ of mandamus, are expected to be heard throughout the nation, as it is said to be the first of its kind ever filed in Virginia, and is supported by the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, whose attorneys filed the suit.

The lone plaintiff in the case is Aline Elizabeth Black, a teacher in the Booker T. Washington High School for Negroes, who has taught in the schools here 12 years, but the suit sets forth that she sues in behalf of herself and all other persons similarly situated, which, in the layman's language, means all Negro school principals and teachers in the city. The action is returnable for a hearing before Judge Allan R. Hanckel on March 13.

The alleged legal basis for the suit is that a basic salary schedule is maintained for white and colored teachers, with the Negroes receiving less pay and that the establishment and enforcement of this basic salary schedule:

Constitution Cited

"Is unlawful and arbitrary and in violation of the Constitution of the laws of the State of Virginia and denies to the petitioner (Aline Elizabeth Black) and others of her race the equal protection of the laws guaranteed by the Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States and is a denial of due process of law guaranteed by the said amendment."

Filing of the suit also brought to light for the first time that the same Negro school teacher filed a petition with the School Board and Mr. Mason last October 27, asking for the establishment and enforcement of a salary schedule providing that all school principals and teachers in the city with the same qualifications, regardless of color, be paid the same salaries without dictinction in race or color, and that this petition was refused.

The Norfolk School Board has adopted the position that teacher pay is a matter of contract between the individual teacher and the School Board and is not controlled by any regulations affecting civil rights, Chairman A. H. Foreman said yesterday in commenting on the suit.

Setting up the claim that unless the court grants her petition for a writ of mandamus to "secure, preserve and enforce the rights of the petitioner. . . she will suffer irreparable injury and will be without redress or remedy," the petitioner asks that such a writ be granted to:

(1) Compel the School Board and Mr. Mason to establish and enforce a schedule equal to all teachers and principals in the city who have the same qualifications; (2) compel these officials then to pay the salaries fixed by such a schedule, and, (3) "to order and require such other and further relief and protection to petitioner and her rights as may be proper and necessary. ."

Suit in Maryland

(P. B. Young, publisher of the Norfolk Journal and Guide, Negro newspaper, said yesterday that the suit was sponsored jointly by the Virginia State Teachers' Associa ion, a Negro organization com sed of 4,500 members, and the rginia Conference of the National ssociation for the Advancement f Colored People.

(He also said that this action is the first such test suit of its kind in Virginia, although others may be instituted later, but that it is not the first of its kind in the South, as a similar action is pending in Maryland.)

All the attorneys of the petitioners' legal staff are attorneys for the N. A. A. C. P. They are headed by Thurgood Marshall, assistant special counsel for the organization of 69 Fifth avenue, New York City. The other lawyers are J. Thomas Hewin, Jr., of Richmond, and Charles H. Houston and Leon A. Ransom, of Washington.

In starting her petition, the plaintiff in the action sets forth her educational qualifications, including a B. S. degree from the Virginia State College, an M. S. degree from the University of Pennsylvania, and work toward a Ph.D degree at New York University. She holds, the petition says, a Collegiate Professional teaching certificate in Virginia, expiring in 1946.

It is alleged in the petition that all Negro principals and teachers here are paid pursuant to a basic salary schedule and that their salaries are less than those paid to white principals and teachers with identical qualifications in all cases and that the basic salary schedule calls for much lower minimum salaries for Negro teachers new in the school system than for white teachers similarly situated and a much higher maximum schedule for new white teachers than for new Negro teachers, but that the Negroes have to meet the same qualifications as the whites.

There are other similar allegations, all of which charge that the differences in various groups are all due solely to race and color.

Schedule of Salaries

All figures quoted in the petition and in a schedule of salaries attached as an exhibit are based on 1938 salaries, and are given here as set forth in the petition, but, for 1939, they were increased by 2 per cent.

In the petitioner's specific instance, she says she now is being paid a basic salary of $1,056.10 annually (this would be subject to a 2 per cent increase, if brought up to date), and that the said basic salary schedule calls for a minimum salary of $970 and a maximum salary of $1,900 for white female teachers.

It is set forth that in 1936-37, the city schools paid white female high school teachers an average of $1,627 per year and Negro high school teachers only $950, on an average, at the same time.

Other details on salary schedules, as set forth in the petition, (still without the 1939 increases of 2 per cent), follow:

(Salaries now being paid teachers new to the system are shown first. Maximum salary being paid, affecting only those in system before increment plan was discontinued are shown second):

Negro

Elementary—Normal certificate $597.50—$960.10; degree, $611—$960.

High school—Women, $699—$1.105.20; men, $784.50—$1.235.

White

Elementary—Normal certificate $850—$1,425; degree, $937.90—$1425.

High school—Women, $970—$1,900; men, $1,200—$2,185.

Colored Teachers Ask Equal Salary

Seek Same Pay Rate As That Of Their White Colleagues

NORFOLK, March 3—(AP)—A suit for a writ of mandamus to compel the City School Board and C. W. Mason, superintendent of schools, to pay colored teachers as much as white instructors will be heard in Circuit Court here on March 13.

Attorneys for the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People filed the petition yesterday in the name of Aline Elizabeth Black, a teacher at the Booker T. Washington High School for Negroes. The petition states, however, that she sues in behalf of herself and others similarly situated.

The discriminatory rate of pay received by the colored teachers, the petition alleges, denies to the petitioner and others of her race the equal protection of the law as provided by the Fourteenth amendment to the Constitution.

P. B. Young, colored newspaper publisher, said the suit was sponsored jointly by the Virginia State Teachers' Association, a colored organization, and the Virginia Conference of the N. A. A. C. P.

The action, he said, was the first test suit of its kind in Virginia although a similar action is pending in the courts of Maryland.

Professors Favor Negro Pay Equality

Eight Members of William and Mary Faculty Here Approve

Outline Viewpoint

Demand of Norfolk Teachers Group Seen by Them as 'Fair and Just'

Eight members of the faculty of the Norfolk Division, College of William and Mary, yesterday went on record favoring pay for Negro teachers equal to that paid white teachers for similar work and similar qualifications.

Their letter to the editor of the Virginian-Pilot, expressing this viewpoint, follows on the heels of a suit instituted in the Circuit Court of Norfolk by which the Negro teachers seek to obtain salaries commensurate with those paid white teachers.

The eight members of the Division faculty signing the letter include Dr. W. Gerald Akers, professor of modern languages; Dr. Ernest W. Gray, associate professor of English; George E. Gregory, instructor in English; Robert C. McClelland, assistant professor of ancient languages; F. A. McDonald, instructor in philosophy and psychology; Dr. Perry Y. Jackson, professor of chemistry; A. Lee Smith, assistant professor of mathematics, and Miss Alice R. Burke, registrar and instructor in government.

"No Reasonable Objection"

Their letter follows:

"The thesis of Norfolk's colored teachers, that teachers of both races should be paid equally for similar work and similar qualifications, is, in our opinion, nothing more than just and fair. There seems to us to be no reasonable objection to such a policy.

"The common superstitution that a colored person can live on less money than a white person, when considered intelligently, boils down to the simple fact that any person who is paid little must of necessity adopt a lower standard of living than one who is paid more. The major cause of our whole 'race problem' is the widespread practice of economic discrimination on no other basis than that of color. Our white teachers are doubtless underpaid, but this unfortunate fact is no excuse for discrimination."

The Circuit Court suit instituted Thursday was brought by the Virginia State Teachers Association, a Negro organization, and the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People in the name of Aline Elizabeth Black, a teacher for 12 years at Booker T. Washington High School.

One-third of Faculty

The suit is a petition for a writ of mandamus to compel the School Board and Superintendent of Schools C. W. Mason to pay Negro teachers salaries equal to those paid white teachers with the same qualifications. It charges racial discrimination in violation of the Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

The eight faculty members signing the letter from the Norfolk Division represent slightly more than one-third of the 22 persons teaching there.

Salary Petition Refused

School Board's Stand Given In Letter To Alston

11-4-39

For the second time within a year the Norfolk school board has refused to consider a petition from a colored teacher in the local public schools asking for equalization of salaries of white and Negro teachers.

The board, in refusing the last petition, which was sent by Melvin O. Alston, 1510 O'Keefe Street, a teacher in the Booker T. Washington High School stated, in a letter to Mr. Alston, that it would be glad to relieve any teachers of their obligations if any of them is "dissatisfied with the salary provisions of the contracts of employment."

The first petition was sent by Miss Aline Black in an effort to gain equalization of equal salaries. Her pettiion was followed by legal action, but the case was later withdrawn.

This is to advise the School Board of Norfolk at a meeting held yesterday carefully considered the petition presented by you on behalf of Melvin O. Alston, a teacher of Booker T. Washington High School of the City of Norfolk relative to the payment of salaries of teachers.

The school laws of Virginia provide that written contracts be made by the school board with all public school teachers before they enter upon their duties. These contracts are made here on form prescribed by the superintendent of public instruction of the State of Virginia, and specify the salary the teacher is to receive.

In June of this year the school board contracted as provided by the school laws for the employment of the petitioner and other teachers necessary as individuals for the operation of the public school of the city for the school year beginning September 1939.

In view of the foregoing, the school board is of the opinion that no changes of any kind different from those set forth in said contract in the salary of any public school teacher should be considered.

However, if the petitioner or any other teacher in the Norfolk public schools is dissatisfed with the salary provision of the contract of employment, the school board upon the request of any such teacher, will be glad to relieve any of them of their obligation thereunder to teach.

TUSKEGEE INSTITUTE, COMMENTS ON

NEW YORK N Y WORLD TELEGR
TUESDAY MAR 28 1939

Tuskegee, Negro College

By ERNIE PYLE

TUSKEGEE, Ala., March 28.—I've always wanted to see Tuskegee Institute. It is, as you know, the most famous school for Negroes in America.

Booker T. Washington founded it in 1881, nearly sixty years ago. It is a privately endowed institution, with no help from the taxpayers. It has become a model in Negro education.

I won't launch into a long description of what the place looks like. It looks, in fact, like any Midwestern State university.

It covers a lot of rolling ground; the campus is beautiful; there must be three dozen handsome brick building scattered around; streets and sidewalks wind about; there are dormitories and a stadium and gymnasium.

Many white visitors—businessmen, students, writers—come to visit Tuskegee. Consequently the institute has facilities for putting up visitors who have a purpose here.

There is not a white person in this whole school, even on the faculty. There are 1,150 students here; 680 boys and 470 girls. The faculty is large—about 250.

The biggest percentage of students is from the South, yet they do come from all over America and from nine foreign countries. The students on the campus are dressed like college students anywhere.

Discipline is more strict than in the ordinary college. There is no smoking on the campus. Boys can smoke in their rooms. Girls can't smoke at all. I saw an ash tray on the desk of only one faculty man.

Drunkenness and rowdyism don't go at all here. No student is allowed to have a car. Attendance at church, twice on Sunday and also on Wednesday evening, is compulsory. So is military drill.

When Booker T. Washington founded this school, no Negro who yearned for knowledge was turned away. The most ignorant, raggedy, barefoot boy could walk in and start learning.

But things have had to change. Today the student must have a certain amount of money for clothes and must have a high school education. As one official said:—

"The bulk are from our middle-class families, if you can say we have a middle class."

The tuition is $75 a year. Every student must work out at least half of his tuition. All must do manual labor in whatever course they are taking. Board and room cost only $20 a month and can be worked out. Practically all of the institute's daily labor is done by students.

The institute offers 41 separate trades. In two years you can get a "diploma"—a certificate of fitness in a trade. Or you can go on another two years and receive a bachelor of science degree. Almost any student is sure of a job at the end of two years in Tuskegee. Of last year's graduating class every single one was placed and working by September 1. There isn't a Tuskegee graduate of last year out of a job today.

Tuskegee has had three presidents. Booker T. Washington, the founder, presided until his death in 1915. Both he and Mrs. Washington are buried on the campus. Dr. Robert R. Moton served for twenty years and retired. He is president-emeritus.

Dr. Frederick D. Patterson has been president since 1935. He is a young man, big like a football player. Ten years ago President Patterson was a veterinary teacher in a small college in Virginia. He got an offer to transfer to Tuskegee.

"I guess you never pictured in your wildest moments that you'd be president of Tuskegee some day, did you?" I asked him.

"I certainly didn't," he said. "Such possibility never entered my head."

Music Devotees Anticipate Tuskegee Choir's Concert

When the Tuskegee Choir comes to Montgomery for a concert on Tuesday, April 4, music-lovers of the city will have opportunity to hear one of the best-known ensembles of its kind in America.

The concert is sponsored by the First Methodist Church.

William L. Dawson, the conductor, is a musician of unquestioned ability. He is thorough in his teaching and conscientious in his efforts to bring out the best in the voices of the students who become members of the institute choir.

Songs of the old South and the new South will be sung and many of the latter are arrangements by Dawson. They have a flavor of poetic richness and warmth and these late arrangements have been enthusiastically received by musical audiences, discriminating in taste, from many sections of the United States.

The Tuskegee Choir is an organization composed of a hundred voices who have been receiving the personal instruction of William L. THE TUSKEGEE CHOIR

After President Roosevelt had listened to a concert last week by the Tuskegee Choir he remarked to Governor Dixon that it was one of the most stirring musical performances he had ever heard. The thousands of Alabamians who have heard the choir will not be surprised to learn of the praise given it by Mr. Roosevelt. Eminent music critics throughout the country have acclaimed the Tuskegee group as one of the finest of its kind ever created.

Last year Montgomerians were so enthusiastic about a performance given here that it was necessary to arrange for a return engagement. Even the second time the choir was here the City Auditorium was filled to capacity.

Tonight the choir makes its first appearance in Montgomery this season, and again it is sponsored by the First Methodist Church. The opportunity to hear these singers will not be missed by any person who knows what finished artists they really are.

TRAVELING

With Ernie Pyle

TUSKEGEE, ALA.: Before coming here, I had a misconception of Tuskegee Institute. I thought it was a school of higher learning; a Harvard of the Negro race.

I couldn't have been more wrong. Booker T. Washington started it as a trade school, and a trade school it still is. It teaches Negroes to work.

I have known little about Booker T. Washington. But his spirit is still around here, and in just a couple of days you "get it."

Booker T. Washington never thought the Negro race should consider itself equal in all things with the white race. He said, "It is important and right that all privileges of the law be ours, but it is vastly important that we be prepared for the exercise of these privileges."

That's where Tuskegee stands today. It doesn't put any phoney high-toned ideas into student's heads. It wants only to prepare them to work diligently and honestly, and enlarge their characters, generation after generation, until they are capable of being a real and natural part of the civilization into which they were thrown so suddenly, unwilling and bewildered.

Tuskegee is succeeding. On our first evening here, I took a walk around the campus before supper. And to my astonishment every student I met, boy or girl, spoke to me.

Later I asked if the students were instructed to do this. They said no, it was just an old Tuskegee custom, and the students pick it up the minute they come. Friendliness and courtesy, they are taught, will help them in life after they leave here.

FOR TWO DAYS I have been hotfooting it around here, and the thing that impressed me most is this: In not one instance has anybody made me aware that he is black and I am white. You almost forget it here.

We went last night to the gymnasium to see the basketball games. The gymnasium was packed. We were the only white people there. Throughout the game I talked (when it was possible to be heard) with the colored girl who sat next to me. We talked as two people would anywhere.

Nobody in that whole gymnasium ever made us conscious, either by staring or by over-attention, that we were whites among blacks. We were doing them no favor by being there, yet we were sincerely welcome.

I TALKED FRANKLY with President Frederick F. Patterson about it. He calls it the "Tuskegee spirit." But whatever you call it, it is something that few Negroes and too-few whites ever acquire. If all the Negroes in America could come to Tuskegee; and if all the white people could go to a similar school that taught the dignity of association that Tuskegee teaches, how much greater harmony there could be between our two races.

And that brings us up to a point that is grave. Tuskegee is in financial trouble. They'll need $50,000 to break even next year. The mere thought of $50,000 scares me to death. But it's just chicken feed to some people. How about it, somebody?

THIS MORNING

By John Temple Graves II

"No man, black or white, from North or South, shall drag me down so low as to make me hate him."

* * * *

Booker Washington's words, engraved on Keck's statue of him at Tuskegee Institute, may have been noted by President Roosevelt when he visited there last Thursday.

MR. GRAVES

As Tuskegee celebrated its Founders Day last week, Mr. Roosevelt and all others who participated might properly have recalled the words, and the fact that this greatest of all Negro educational institutions owes its origin to the common ideal of a Southern white man and a Southern Negro. Not all the money that comes to the Southern Negro from the North nor all the social and political recognition that go to him in the North, are worth as much to him as the affection and co-operation he receives (and must continue to receive) from the decent white people of the South. It was upon this affection and co-operation that Booker Washington based the statesmanship of his people. He would not hate, and he knew that decent white men would not hate.

* * * *

George W. Campbell, a Tuskegee banker, was the white man, and Lewis Adams, a mechanic and ex-slave, the black one, who joined in petitioning authorities at Hampton Institute in May 1881 to start a normal school for Negroes in Alabama and in securing a charter from the State of Alabama. Out of that came the Tuskegee Institute of today.

* * * *

Conversant as he is with the ways of the South, even the President may have been puzzled when he was in Alabama last week if he read the advertisements there of a concert to be given in the Birmingham Municipal Auditorium by Marian Anderson, the Negro singer who was denied Constitution Hall and the Central High School Auditorium in Washington. But at Tuskegee they could have told him that in this same auditorium in this same Deep South city two years ago the Civic Symphony Orchestra featured a "Negro Folk Symphony No. 1" written by Tuskegee's Director of Music Dawson, and that Director Dawson and other members of his race were seated in a box at the performance, and that when the orchestra concluded the playing of his great symphony the whole audience, white and black, stood up and applauded the artist.

* * * *

Whatever the explanation of the refusal of Constitution Hall to Marian Anderson, we, for one, cannot believe it reflects an antipathy for the Negro in the rank and file of the Daughters of the American Revolution or a willingness to deny recognition to genuine artists without regard to race or class. We believe the Daughters must be too mindful of the part played in American history by Negroes for that. We believe they must remember too well the 5,000 Negroes who fought for America in the very Revolution whose name the Daughters bear. We believe they know too well the story of Crispus Attucks, the Negro whose blood was the first spilled for America in that Revolution.

* * * *

Crispus Attucks, according to the Dictionary of American Biography, was the leader of the mob which precipitated the "Boston Massacre." There is a monument to him on Boston Common, unveiled in 1888. "Almost a giant in stature", according to John Adams, he led a band of 50 or 60 men from Dock Square to the present State Street on the evening of March 5, 1770, in protest against British injustices and was killed when the band encountered a group of British troops and shots were exchanged. Some historians have argued that he was an Indian, others that he was of mixed Indian and Negro blood, but in most accounts he is described as a mulatto and is supposed to have been owned by Deacon William Browne, of Framingham, Mass.

Tuskegee Choir Concert Will Be Event Of Note This Evening

William L. Dawson, conductor of the famous Tuskegee Choir, will bring that outstanding musical organization to Montgomery tonight for an engagement at the City Auditorium. Students from all sections of the United States have gone to the well-known Tuskegee Institute not only for the type of education that it offers but also because of the excellent instruction in music that they are able to obtain. Many of these students find it to their advantage to become members of the Institute Choir because of the opportunity offered them to further their musical education under one of the most outstanding musicians of their own race who is a genius in interpreting the deep feeling and fervor of the Negro spirituals, and who at the same time sings the works of the master's with equal feeling and understanding.

The appearance of the Tuskegee Choir in Montgomery is sponsored by the women of the First Methodist Church. Tickets have been placed on sale at McGehee's Drug Store, Montgomery Fair and Dean's Drug Store.

OUR TRIP TO TUSKEGEE AND MONTGOMERY—

Miss Britt's room began planning the trip in January and we worked on these plans until our trip was realized last Friday. We traveled in six cars. Those who drove the cars were Miss Lila Mae Britt, Mrs. R. L. Jimmerson, Mrs. Guy Wilder, Mrs. Glenn Avant, Mr. C. O. Mathews and Tom Head, Jr. We left Friday morning about six o'clock and as soon as we arrived in Montgomery we went through the new Highway Building where we learned many interesting things about the traffic laws of our state. From the Highway Building we went to the State Capitol and from there to the Little White House. We were led through the building by guides. These buildings were very interesting as we have been studying the War Between the States and we added some interesting things to our knowledge of it. A veteran of this war, General Paul Sanguenetti, was at the capitol and gave us much first-hand information of this war since he was under Gen. Robert E. Lee. We saw so many things in Jefferson Davis's home, that it made us feel as if he were still living there. After learving the Little White House we started on our trip to Tuskegee. We stopped at the Log Cabin three miles this side of Tuskegee to eat lunch. Everywhere we went great hospitality was shown us, and these people gave us the use of one of their dining rooms to spread lunch. After lunch we went on to the Tuskegee Institute. Upon arrival we were given a guide to take us where we wanted to go. We visited the following places:—the home off Booker T. Washington, the library, the gymnassium, the dining hall, the chapel, and Dr. Carver's laboratory. We learned many things about the progress of education since this is the largest negro school in the world. We have been studying the products of the Southern States and were greatly impressed by the many useful things that Dr. Carver has made from our own products of the South. These grounds, the buildings and the town of this Institute show the progress and worthwhile education of these people. We returned home that night, feeling we had accomplished much pleasure and learning from our trip.

RECORD CROWD ATTENDS TUSKEGEE GRADUATION

TUSKEGEE INSTITUTE, Ala. June 1 — (ANP)—A record-breaking crowd, said to be the largest since the 50th anniversary celebration, was present last Monday at Tuskegee Institute's 5[illegible]th annual graduation program which was climaxed by the award of [illegible]00 degrees, certificates and diplomas by President Frederick D. Patterson.

Graduation Day highlights: A forceful address by Dr. Howard W. Odum, (white), famed sociologist, author of "The Southern Regions" and professor of sociology at University of North Carolina; a stirring pledge of loyalty by N. R. McCray, representing the reunion class of 1929; a speech "Making Education Real for Rural Communities", by Margaret Young, highest honor student, and induction of the class of 1939 into the General Alumni Association by Capt. A. J. Neely, executive secretary. Among the dignitaries present was Dr. M. O. Bousfield of Chicago, member of the Rosenwald foundation.

A feature of the afternoon program was the presentation of Rev. Philip P. Wright, class of '88, Wetumpa, Ala. On behalf of the six surviving members of his class, Rev. Wright presented a check for $85 to President Patterson as a token of their confidence in his administration.

Tuskegee the Mecca

TUSKEGEE Institute, long a center of cultural activity for Negroes, and the birthplace of ideas and moves that have meant advancement for our group in many lines, is soon to have an infantile paralysis center, where treatment of crippled children may be carried on in an institution built and equipped for that purpose, as a result of a recently announced grant of more than one hundred and sixty thousand dollars. This is good news for the Negroes of the whole country and especially will it prove valuable to Tuskegee. The site of the Veteran's Facility and the probable site for an aviation school for Negroes, with the addition of the Infantile Paralysis Center, the famed Alabama institution will soon be, in fact, the Mecca for the Negro population of the United States, where they may have hope of gaining satisfaction for all of their varied desires.

The outstanding work that has been accomplished at this Alabama institution is alone responsible for its having been chosen as the site for so important an institution a the infantile paralysis center will prove to be; and the recognition that it will thus gain will serve to further magnify the wisdom of the man who founded and laid the ground work of the institute. There has never been any cause to discount the importance of the place that Tuskegee fills in the life of the whole Negro people. With the addition of the center for treatment of infantile paralysis, there will be additional proof of its importance as a dynamic center from which goes forth the power of beneficence and achievement through the work accomplished there by those who are actively engaged in carrying on its many and varied activities.

Needless to say, we are proud of this new recognition that has come to so worthy an institution as is Tuskegee Institute.

Current Opinion

TUSKEGEE DESERVES MORE THAN IT RECEIVES

Another announcement for Tuskegee Institute finds that famous and useful school in a sound and healthy condition, but suffering nevertheless from the same ills that endowed institutions the land over are suffering from.

For a decade the living waters of philanthropists have been failing. The investments of institutions have declined in value along with the investments of individual citizens. Private philanthropists have been in no position to increase their gifts; on the contrary they have had to curtail their donations.

In consequence the revenues of Tuskegee Institute have been drastically reduced. It has been necessary for President F. D. Patterson to meet the situation by drastically curtailing the functions of Tuskegee Institute. The excisions he has made have been painful and unfortunate, but inescapable, and "The Advertiser" knows that his board of trustees has been pleased at his efficiency and courage in meeting the crisis.

It is deplorable that so powerful an agency for the advancement of our common civilization here in the Deep South should be crippled at this turning point in its history by the drying up of its resources. But it is in the public interest, it is in the interest of Tuskegee Institute, for our people, white and black, to understand that Tuskegee Institute is not "rich." It is no longer easy prey for those that regard it as a good thing. It has become at last a public responsibility, even as from the beginning it has been a public benefaction. Since 1881 Tuskegee Institute has contributed richly to the people—the whole people of Alabama—without receiving anything in return except a nominal appropriation from the state and the lip service of white orators and white editorial writers.

If the inherent capacity of Tuskegee Institute to strengthen the bright pillars of civilization in Alabama is to be preserved, "The Advertiser" submits that the white people of Alabama must contribute more of their money to its support than in the past. Endowment funds are no longer equal to the demands upon them at Tuskegee, but the demands of our people, white and black, upon the flowing well-springs at Tuskegee are greater, not less than they were in the lush days of the past.

It is, therefore, the opinion of "The Advertiser" that the legislature of Alabama should now consider its apparent duty to increase, and substantially, its appropriation for the support of Tuskegee Institute. We in Alabama cannot go on forever receiving and not giving!—Montgomery Advertiser.

"In these days of much conflict and many doubts and of reexamination of the concepts of Americanism," he said, "we are reminded again that Booker T. Tuskegee Choir Wins Acclaim At Concert Wednesday Evening

The Tuskegee Choir gave an inspiring and magnificent concert Wednesday evening in the Junior High School auditorium before an audience composed of both races that gave enthusiastic response to every note. Seldom has a Selma audience listened with such close attention and responded with such intent appreciation to a musical program, the absorbed stillness during the rendition of the numbers bursting into rapturous applause at their completion.

The ensemble, recognized as one of the world's great musical organizations, is an organ-like instrument upon which William L. Dawson, the conductor, plays with singing hands that call forth tone and melody in purest form, from pianissimo to fortissimo, in a mounting wave of harmony, the soft notes filling the auditorium with as distinct euphony as the more powerful and richer tones. This was particularly notable in the Sibelius "Alleluia" in which the echo from back-stage reached the farthest rafters of the building with eerie clarity.

The program was composed largely of negro traditional songs which were rendered with racial understanding superimposed by perfect training and musical comprehension. Included were superb translations of the familiar "Couldn't Hear Nobody Pray," "I Want to Be a Christian," "Swing Low Sweet Chariot," closing with the less familiar but equally beautiful appreciated numbers were composappoeciated number were compositions by the conductors, "Ain-a That Good News," "Balm In Gilead"," "Soon-a Will Be Done," and 'Lost In the Night" by Christiansen and "Listen to the Lambs," by Dett, all sung with a flexibility and precision that emphasized the vocal and musical qualities of the perfectly trained choir. The submergence of the individual into the whole is one of the outstanding characteristics of the ensemble in which each voice is but a key of a perfectly tuned instrument played by a master.

The concert was given under the sponsorship of Dr. Edward W Gamble and the equipment committee of the colored community center for funds for furnishing the building recently completed under a W. P. A grant.

'Tuskegee Day' Set By Class

People's Bible Unit Will Honor Towns Near Montgomery

To cement the co-operative spirit between Montgomery and surrounding cities, the non-denominational People's Bible class next Sunday will hold "Tuskegee Day" services here which the principal Sunday school classes of that city will attend.

This inter-city effort will be the first of a series of Sunday morning meetings in the Empire theater honoring neighboring Alabama towns. Leading the large delegation of Tuskegee citizens, will be Judge Dave Randall, one of the Sunday school teachers of that city.

"Dadeville Day" Set

Plans for the "out-of-town" program were inaugurated at the last meeting of the class advisory committee, composed of these members: Harley Williams, chairman, Lamar Williams, Mrs. Eunice K. Williams; Mrs. Harley Williams, Ernest W. Knabe C. Z. Windham, Emmett G. White, Miss Virginia Day, and the class officers acting in ex-officio capacity. Officers are Robert F. Park, president; J. L Ivey, vice-president; Bill Jones secretary and William Knight, treasurer.

On February 26, the People's Bible class will hold "Dadeville Day," when a large number of Dadeville citizens are expected to attend the Sunday morning services. That city's Sunday school group, to be led by Fletcher N. Farrington, has already reserved 40 seats for the occasion. A widely-known church musical organization of Dadeville will participate in the program.

The People's Bible class, successors to the Big Brother's class, meets 9 a. m., every Sunday in the Empire theater.

WATCHING THE BIG PARADE

By RALPH MATTHEWS

WASHINGTON

Murder Looms Again at Tuskegee

The alleged plot to murder Dr. R. R. Moton, president emeritus of Tuskegee Institute, the present incumbent and several other big shots at the Alabama seat of learning, while tragic even in rumor, is not at all surprising to those who have followed the fortunes of this institution during the past decade.

No campus has been rocked with more tragedy and bloodshed than that housing the monument left by the late Dr. Booker T. Washington, and at least half a dozen distinguished citizens to my own knowledge have come to a mysterious end during a short period of time.

This condition is attributed to the fact that the administrators have been less adept at manipulating the bloodless purge technique which has been so effective at Howard University during the same interim.

The political shenanigans have been entirely too obvious and the disappointed and disgruntled victims have had no recourse except to go about the campus blowing out the brains of all and sundry whom they suspected of having a hand in their undoing.

He Brooded

The most recent instance is that of Tracy Brannon, who, after twenty-six years of ardent and perhaps conscientious application to duty as a postmaster, was given the skids. After much brooding, he decided that only the blood of those whom he believed responsible could square up his account with fate. Foiled, he ended his own life.

* * *

Vice Principal Killed, Also

Another Tuskegee official, the vice principal, paid the supreme penalty under almost similiar circumstances a few years back when a restaurant operator suspected him of ruining his business.

For years the lunchroom proprietor enjoyed a fairly lucrative trade and went the even tenor of his ways, but when his business fell off, he believed that the vice-principal was out to ruin him.

The truth was the official had issued an order advising students to stay out of the place while he investigated rumors that intoxicating beverages were being sold on the Q. T. But his order cost him his life and the hapless businessman was shipped off to the asylum where he is still hibernating.

It Could Happen Here

By this same process of reasoning, Dean Banks of Howard University might have been slaughtered had the proprietors of local taverns taken things in their own hands when she forbade co-eds to frequent places where jitterbugs do the boogie-woogie.

But fortunately Washington is not Tuskegee, Ala.

The mystery is not that there are so many murders at Tuskegee, but that there are so few. Here we find a small, compact community which is little more than one big family, with all the hatreds, jealousies and pettiness that go with small town minds and circumscribed opportunities.

Here is a community so small that advancement may mean ousting the man ahead and kicking the man behind.

The Social Cycle

The social life is almost as vicious as the professional life. The wife of a man can be made miserable beyond endurance if the wives of the other men take the notion. This condition is made all the more intolerable by the pressure of the white crackers who surround the fringe of the campus and indulge in the questionable pleasure of being superior.

A township where the educated and cultured consort of an educated and cultured instructor is always at the mercy of a white salesperson with little or no redress in case of insult and humiliation.

So far as I know, friction of this nature has been kept at a minimum, but the ever present threat hangs heavily over the heads of those who dwell there about.

It is little wonder to me then that ever so often someone whom we least suspect of being "tetched" suddenly blows his top and other innocent victims are massacred.

Many Mysteries

Nobody has ever been able to solve the mystery of who ambushed the head nurse of the student hospital and pumped her full of lead while she was en route to a concert.

Neither has any light been thrown on the demise of the boarding house keeper who answered a knock on her door and met a .45 calibre shot head-on which dropped her cold in her tracks.

One reason why nobody has been brought to justice is that down Alabama-way when the victims are all colored the white authorities often sit around until the excitement blows over and the matter is forgotten by all concerned.

Since most of the slayings are attributed to people who have gone off their nut, the remaining administrators could be assured longevity by compulsory examinations of the population conducted by a competent psychiatrist.

Then, all they would have to do would be watch the psychiatrist and each other and probably they'd be safe.

TUSKEGEE

Tuskegee Institute, located at Tuskegee, Ala., is probably better known to the outside world than any other educational institution in America —including white institutions of higher learning. It has 120 buildings, 2,000 acres of land, a faculty of 200, a student body of approximately 2,000 and a yearly budget of half a million dollars.

Tuskegee was founded and developed by the immortal Booker T. Washington, a nameless negro boy, who started the school without a dollar of capital. (Read his "Up from Slavery" for full details.) It is managed and staffed entirely by negroes.

uskegee Has 2000 Students

Voational Education Is Stressed at Institute for Negro Youths.

Q.—Would you please tell something about the school for Negroes at Tuskegee, Ala.?

A.—Founded by the late Booker T. Washington in 1881, the Tuskegee Normal and Industrial Institute is well known as a co-educational school for Negroes. The school emphasizes vocational training. It is situated in Tuskegee, a town of 3,314 (by the 1930 census), where the United States Veterans' Hospital for Negroes also is established.

In 1932 Tuskegee Institute had an enrollment of more than 2,000. Students, who must be at least 16 years of age and "of good physique," must live in the school dormitories. There are more than 125 buildings and the school receives an annual grant of funds from the Alabama Legislature. In 1932 the school had equipment valued at $2,897,584, and an endowment fund of $7,564,86.

The day school is intended for students who are able "to pay all or a greater part of their expenses." Evening classes are for those "unable to pay even the small charges made in the day school."

Night school applicants also must be able to perform adult labor. They are given day employment at the institute and receive work credits for board and lodging. While studies stress the industrial, there are also some cultural courses, and much attention is given to instruction in morals.

875 Took Part In Sports Program

TUSKEGEE INSTITUTE, Ala., July 2.—More than 875 students of Tuskegee Institute participated in some form of athletics during the past school year. Football, basketball, tennis, track, baseball, archery, swimming, badminton and golf were among the sports in which these students took part.

CHANGES SLATED AT NEGRO SCHOOL

Reorganization Program At Tuskegee Institute Are Announced

3-5-39

TUSKEGEE INSTITUTE, Ala.—President F. D. Patterson, who returned Saturday from a conference with the board of trustees, said in an interview recommendations had been drafted for reorganization of the program of instruction to keeping with modern trends in education and consistent with a curtailed income.

The recommendations include elimination of the high school courses leading to the bachelor of science degree in music; a two-year program in the training of secretaries and the school of nurse training. The recommendations also include development of the school of agriculture, the school of home economics, the school of mechanical industries, the school of education and the extension work in rural education.

President Patterson said inasmuch as all these fields are important and needed in a broad program of education, the existing need for the courses eliminated would be met elsewhere. He said county authorities are being asked to operate the high school in which the enrollment at present is largely local, some 64 per cent of the students living in Macon County.

An appropriation, he said, would be sought from the state in order to continue the very valuable nurse training school.

All the announced changes have been made under careful study for five years and have been made because of a continuing reduction in cash income. This reduction has come to a point that at present the income represents a little more than one-half that was expended during the peak year, 1931.

The reorganization is a crystallization of the Tuskegee Institute program in the fields of vocational and technical education to the end that the school founded by Booker T. Washington may continue to render regional and national service.

Scholarships and grants received from several foundations have for the past few years been contributed largely in support of the technical phases of the Tuskegee Program.

TUSKEGEE WILL HEAR MITCHELL

Once the office boy of Booker T. Washington, Arthur W. Mitchell, now a member of the United States Senate, will deliver the Founders Day address at Tuskegee Institute, April 2, the Sunday closest to the birthday of Booker T. Washington, President F. D. Patterson announced Saturday.

Alumni of the institution from all parts of the country will attend the Founders Day celebration this year, President Patterson said.

Through the influence of Senator Mitchell, the Senate broke a precedent and suspended business last April to honor Booker T. Washington.

Wallace (second from left) is pictured just before addressing three thousand farmers and agricultural leaders in Logan Hall at Tuskegee Institute, at the Conference of Negro Agricultural Leaders and Farmers, Armistice Day, November 11, Dr. F. D. Patterson, president of Tuskegee Institute, introduced P. O. Davis, director Extension Service for the State of Alabama, who presented Secretary Wallace.

After the meeting Secretary Wallace reviewed the 800 members of the Cadet Regiment and witnessed the football game between Tuskegee Institute and Knoxville College. Dr. F. D. Patterson, president of Tuskegee Institute, and Dr. George W. Carver, famed scientist, are shown in the picture.

Sec'y Wallace Talks To Farm Unit At Tuskegee

Defender 11-18-39 Chicago, Ill.

TUSKEGEE INSTITUTE, Ala., Nov. 17—Penetrating into the deep South, where the bulk of Race farmers live, Secretary Henry A. Wallace, head of the U. S. Department of Agriculture gave a striking outline of the government's farm programs designed to help the American farmer, in an address here Saturday.

Speaking to a large throng of farmers and agricultural leaders gathered from the states of Alabama, Georgia and Arkansas, Secretary Wallace told his hearers that this country cannot afford to continue conditions which deny privileges and apportunities to millions of Americans. The problem of privileges and opportunities goes beyond one of race, he assured his eager listeners.

He reminded them that as a rule, southern cotton and tobacco growers, whether white or members of the Race, whether tenant or land owner have had a hard time. They have been the victims, he said, of a system which made almost all farming a hazardous and profitless occupation.

A group of college presidents, white and Race state extension leaders and visitors from surrounding states, sat behind the secretary on the platform as Mr. Wallace described some of the methods through which the government had sought to aid the farmers and which had redounded to the benefit of Race tillers of the soil.

The day was a great one for Tuskegee institute, which was celebrating its annual homecoming and Armistice Day. Secretary Wallace touched upon the latter when he reminded his hearers that "Wars abroad make us all realize what a privilege it is to be an American. Whatever our race or creed, we can be thankful that Europe's conflict has not spread to our shores."

President Patterson presided over the exercises which were held in Logan hall. Responses to Secretary Wallace were made by President Benjamin F. Hubert of Georgia State college and Dr. George W. Carver, famed scientist who taught Mr. Wallace botany when the secretary was a lad in Iowa where he was born and where Professor Carver attended school.

The 800 members of the Tuskegee cadet regiment, Lieut. B. O. Davis Jr., United States army, P.M.S. and T., under the immediate command of Cadet Lieut. Col. Nelson S. Brooks, passed in review for the secretary, who later saw Tuskegee's football team win over Knoxville college.

Tuskegeeans of Chicago and vicinity honored the memory of the late Dr. Booker T. Washington, Founder of Tuskegee Institute, at special exercises held Sunday afternoon at Poro College, 4401 South Parkway, under the chairmanship of Amos C. Saunders. The occasion marked the 24th anniversary of the passing of the noted educator who started the famous Alabama school, and the program was sponsored by the Chicago-Tuskegee club. Attorney David H. Bowen was the principal speaker, and paid high tribute to the ideals and teachings of Dr. Washington, admonishing the assemblage to forever sustain the work so nobly carried on by the Founder of Tuskegee during his lifetime.

Dr. Frederick D. Patterson, third President of Tuskegee Institute, addressed a special meeting of the Chicago-Tuskegee Club Monday evening, November 13th, at Poro College, 4415 South Parkway. He made the trip to Chicago especially for the assembly, following which Dr. Patterson left for Detroit, Michigan; Cleveland, Ohio; Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania; Cincinnati, Ohio; and other cities where other groups of Tuskegeeans were addressed. He was accompanied by Alvin J. Neely, Dean of Men at Tuskegee Institute, and Executive Secretary of the Tuskegee General Alumni Association, under whose direction the itinerary is being conducted. Theodore T. (Ted) Greene was in charge of arrangements for the Chicago meeting.

Nominations of officers for the year 1940 will feature the regular monthly meeting of the Chicago-Tuskegee Club, Sunday, November 26th, at 5:30 p. m., at Poro College, 4401 South Parkway. Candidates will campaign for 30 days thereafter and ballots will be cast at the December meeting. The election will be conducted by a commission to be named at the November assembly. Indications are that there will be several major changes in the executive staff of the organization. Present executives are as follows: Colonel John C. Robinson, President; Theodore T. Greene, Vice President; Miss Pearl C. Tate, Recording Secretary; Mrs. Corinne Dunagan, Corresponding Secretary; Miss Elizabeth Clemmons, Financial Secretary; Mrs. Una Van Zandt, Treasurer; Mrs. Corinne Eggleston, Custodian; Amos C. Saunders, Chaplain; Percy R. Hines, historian; Felix Washington, Sargeant-At-Arms; Everett L. Houser, pubic relations chairman; Ruth M. Houser, health chairman; and Daniel J. Faulkner, membership chairman.

APPEAL FOR CHRISTMAS GIFTS

Editor, The Journal: Through a staff of consecrated, experienced workers, Tuskegee Institute conducts a year-round program of necessary and important service to Southern rural families. Their most acute problem is low and uncertain income.

When settlements are made for the fall crops there are always thousands of sharecropper and farm labor families who "didn't come out," and a large majority of this group are Negro farmers. From harvest time until the meager advances are made for spring planting such families face their hardest struggle for existence.

Right in the midst of this period Christmas comes, and without some such service as Tuskegee Institute renders thousands of children in these homes would have nothing to remind them of the holiday season.

For many years devoted friends throughout the country have used this institution as a medium through which they may send gifts to brighten these homes and warm the hearts of the children.

We therefore renew our appeal for donations of clothing, books, toys, candy, pictures, etc. Some friends prefer to send money with which to purchase gifts, and in such instances the donation is spent as directed.

Packages and letters may be addressed to me at Tuskegee Institute, Alabama.

Tuskegee Choir Coming Here To Sing In Red Cross Show

Montgomery Advertiser
11-12-39

When the Tuskegee Choir comes to Montgomery to take part in the big show in the City Auditorium next Monday night, music lovers of central Alabama will have an opportunity to hear one of the best known ensembles of its kind in America.

And in addition to the famous Tuskegee Choir of 75 voices, the entertainment of the free show includes Mrs. Seibels's Little Symphony, dance extravaganza by Eura Beringer's pupils, violin solo by Joe Petranka with Emily Lincoln at the piano, and a genuine Montgomery "Believe It Or Not" presented by Dr. John A. Martin.

Gov. Dixon will officially start Montgomery's Roll Call, other speakers will include Henry C. Meader, Fred A. Duran and Rabbi Eugene Blachschleger. Dr. H. V. Carson, the master of ceremonies, has promised that there will be no collection and no pledges requested . . . and that no speaker will be allowed more than three minutes.

With a large army of volunteer workers all ready for the go signal, and a spirit of optimism predominant among the leaders and permeating the ranks of the entire volunteer corps, this big free entertainment at the City Auditorium will mark the official opening of the annual Roll Call of the Montgomery chapter of the American Red Cross. With such speakers and such entertainment, a capacity house is expected and all are urged to go early as the program will start promptly at 8 o'clock and officers will be on duty to close the doors when every seat is filled.

The entire Tuskegee Choir is making the trip to Montgomery just to carry its part of this celebration program and will return to Tuskegee after the show. Songs of the Old South and the new South will be sung, some of the arrangements by William L. Dawson, conductor. Every time this choir has appeared in Montgomery it has drawn a capacity house.

Coach Abbott's Daughter Breaks Up Game, 27-26

TUSKEGEE INSTITUTE, Ala.—(SNS)—Jessie Abbott's side court shot which she sank as the gun sounded gave the Tuskegee women's varsity basketball team a 27-26 victory over the reputedly strong Florida A. and M. College team in Logan Hall here Saturday night before a capacity crowd of enthusiastic spectators.

The game was the most sizzling girls' performance seen in Logan Hall in a number of years. Both teams displayed a strong offense and defense, a superb passing attack and an accurate eye for the basket. Dorothy Ballard led the scoring for Tuskegee with ten points. Margaret Barnes, brilliant forward, who sank four shots from the field and one from the free-throw zone, accounted for nine points, and Jessie Abbott, who provided the spark for the fine work of the forwards, gathered eight points—three baskets and two perfect charity chances which went through the hoops without touching the rims. Her victory shot, which sent the house into a frenzy, will remain an all-time gem in basketball performance.

The Tuskegee sextette went the route with only one change in the line-up. Hester Brown relieved Mable Smith who, along with Lula Hymes and Ruth Wright, allowed Florida's fine forwards very few open shots.

High scorers for the Florida team were Abbie Carr with eleven points, Leona Johnson with eight, and Bertha James with seven. Bertha James' sensational shooting was of a high calibre. She sank the shot that sent her team ahead with but 30 seconds to play only to see victory denied when Jessie Abbott sank her 25 footer.

Tuskegee Track Aces In Training

TUSKEGEE INSTITUTE, Ala., July 2.—Tuskegee women's track and field team, National A.A.U. champions for 1937 and 1938, are gradually getting back into training for the big meets which will be held this summer and which will be climaxed with the National A.A.U. championships scheduled for Waterbury, Connecticut, in September.

Lula Hymes, national 100 meters and broad jump champion, as well as running anchor on the Tuskegee 400 meters championships relay team, will defend her honors. She won the 100 meters run at the 11th Annual Tuskegee Women's Track and Field Championships in 11.5 seconds which ties the officially recognized world record set by Helen Stephens in 1936 at the Olympic games in Berlin. Lula Hymes holds the meet record in the broad jump with a leap of 18 feet, 4½ inches. This is 4½ inches better than the accepted American mark of 18 feet made by Mable Smith, a teammate, at the final Olympic tryouts held at Providence, Rhode Island, July 4, 1936.

It is also interesting to note, insofar as records are concerned.

Lifting of Veil From Negro Shows Him Man of Ability

The South Breaks Its Shackles
Ninth of Twelve Articles

By Nate R. White
Staff Correspondent of The Christian Science Monitor

TUSKEGEE, Alabama—A bronze statue of Booker T. Washington, the great Negro educator, faces the main driveway of the Tuskegee Institute campus here. It shows the founder of the school lifting a shroud off a strong, muscular man, who is crouched to earth beneath toil looking up as if to see for the first time a light or star he had never seen before. The monument inscription says of Booker T. Washington:

He lifted the veil of ignorance from his people and pointed the way to progress through education and industry.

How high has this veil been lifted in the South? How well have Booker T. Washington's ideals been carried out? What of the Negro of the South today—a minority race in a democratic country in an age characterized for the rapid spread of education, industry, and communication?

If one were to stay on the Tuskegee campus to answer these questions, he could answer well. Tuskegee today under the leadership of its President, Dr. Frederick D. Patterson, is following the ideal of the founder expressed in his words:

"We shall prosper in proportion as we learn to dignify and glorify labor and put brains and skill into the common occupations of life."

"We here at Tuskegee," Dr. Patterson says, "try to teach the student a trade thoroughly. We are debunking the idea to a great extent of teaching the colored boy and girl subjects which do not enable them to meet life. A student in learning a trade should do things over and over again. The trade should become a part of him. He must actually know what he is doing."

Nearly 50 Trades Taught

Nearly 50 trades are taught at Tuskegee. For instance, the school maintains a completely modern printing shop. The instructor in charge reports that the shop cannot supply the demand for operators of typesetting machines. The plant prints all of the material used by the school, including a newspaper, while training the students.

"We try to tie the shop work to production to turn out things useful to the school," Dr. Patterson says. "We do not maintain equipment merely for the student to play around with. We keep production in mind in planning courses. Our program is flexible, and we are fitting it to the demands of the day."

The Institute maintains a farm where agriculture is taught. Another department teaches boys how to become bricklayers—or plumbers—or mechanics, possibly civil engineers. Girls are given courses in domestic service, nursing, clerical work. The teaching field takes many Tuskegee graduates.

In the beautiful Tuskegee Chapel, brilliantly stained glass windows tell of the struggles of the race in terms of its songs, its "spirituals." One gains the impression at Tuskegee that many of these struggles are being overcome.

Unfortunately the Tuskegee campus does not spread all over the entire South. The Institute's influence is great. But just beyond the gates of the campus, the problems begin—the veil has not been lifted, and the immensity of the Negro's problem again is forced upon one.

Shacks, Shacks, Everywhere

Just down the avenue from this beautiful, wooded spot, where young Negro boys and girls live happy, playful, useful days, where they learn what they need to become productive citizens with responsibilities—just down the street toward the Montgomery - Atlanta Highway are found again those shacks which characterize the Negro dwelling place in the South.

Tuskegee has left off so soon and the world—the Negro's world has begun. There are no sanitary facilities with these dwellings, no glass in many of the windows, little grass in the yards, little loveliness, little cleanliness. And as one noses his car out of this center of Negro progress and industry, whether it be north to Birmingham, Ala., or Memphis or Nashville or Knoxville, Tenn., or east to Atlanta or Rome or Savannah, Ga., or Columbia, S. C., or Raleigh, N. C., or Richmond, Va., or west to Jackson, Miss., Shreveport, Baton Rouge, or New Orleans, La., or Little Rock, Ark.—it matters not what direction—he will find the same drab, unpainted homes in which most of the Negroes in America dwell.

However, it may not matter so much about the paint or facilities of the home. It may not matter if the sight is unpleasant. These are material things which are gradually being changed in housing programs and which can be changed more and more. What does matter is the type of American citizen coming out of these homes. What is the Negro of the South thinking? Is he radical? Is he subject to the sway of speakers against the Government, as has sometimes been charged? Is he able to throw off the shackles of his environment to see that star Booker T. Washington discovered when the veil of ignorance was lifted?

Negro Not a Radical

Dean A. A. Taylor of Fisk University in Nashville, a prominent University for Negroes, says, "The Negro from a racial standpoint is neither a revolutionary nor a radical. There is hardly sufficient aggression in the Negro in some southern areas to protect his own life or fight for it. How could there be aggression of a Leftist nature?"

The outgoing Commissioner of Education in Tennessee says:

"The Negro does not want Communism."

And a Negro educator of Louisiana says:

"The Civil War proved the most wonderful compliment ever paid a minority race. The white men and boys went to battle, leaving the white Southern women and girls at home with no defense save their colored slaves. If the Negroes had been revolutionaries, they would have risen up and undermined the South from behind the lines."

This same man says that it is fortunate that the Negro is the one called upon to live in squalor, as "he can do it and be happy and not lose his balance," whereas "a white person seems to go down mentally and morally in conditions of abject poverty."

The Commissioner of Education of one of the largest Southern States tells me:

"The Negroes are great mimickers. They always pattern what they see a white person do. Furthermore, they must always have a kingfish to follow. There is danger in this tendency." He summarized his opinion of the race thus:

"All a Negro wants is plenty to eat, something to wear, a place to sleep, and something to amuse him. We don't fear the Negro, and there is no danger of Communism among them. The only danger is in the kingfish tendency."

A former United States Representative from Arkansas said:

"The Negroes in the South are the happiest people ever, and they make good citizens. However, a Negro is all brawn and muscle and without someone to plan his work and direct his intellect he is lost."

A Mississippi publisher expresses a typical view:

"The Negro must have a white man to tie to. If he doesn't, he is as a ship without a rudder."

These last three statements must be recognized for what they are—Southerners describing the uneducated and untrained man or woman of any race, although they chose to apply them to the Negro. That these typical and limiting views of the Negro are shattered is proved by the examples of Negroes who have seen the star of education and who have broken the shackles of their environment.

Prof. C. L. Barrow, Assistant Director of the Department of Negro Education for Louisiana, tells me:

"It's all bunk for anyone to say that a Negro cannot learn as well as anyone else. He can learn any subject as well as a white person. The differentiation we make in school curriculum is not on the basis of race, but rather on the basis of job opportunities for the members of the race. We are trying to train the Negro for jobs which will be open to him."

Dr. Oliver C. Carmichael, Chancellor of Vanderbilt University, Nashville, says:

"The Negroes are going right ahead. They will walk five miles to school, whereas the poor white class is likely to stay at home, if there isn't a ride. The Negroes want to get an education."

A Negro school principal, a man with more than 1,400 students under his supervision, reports that "When the children are in school, we push them as much as possible. We cram as much training down them as we can in 60 minutes. We are fighting more than a century of problems with precious seconds. The Negro children are hungry and thirsty for knowledge. They are scratching and striving for every bit of information. They are gradually going ahead under extreme handicaps, and they are proving their ability more and more."

Many More Good Schools

There are many good schools in the South besides Tuskegee for Negroes. There are state agricultural and mechanical colleges which are well staffed and handsomely equipped. Then there are the smaller private institutes and colleges. One of these is the Piney Woods School in Mississippi, a Tuskegee on a small scale. And one of the newest liberal arts colleges is Dillard, in the eastern suburbs of New Orleans. Dillard has a beautiful campus, a well-trained faculty, handsome buildings, all white, of the classic Southern style of architecture.

In addition, most of the cities in the South are providing better schools for the Negroes. The difficulty lies with the fact that there is such a long way to go toward making the education practical. Tuskegee emphasizes industrial training. So do a few other schools. But on the whole the South is not training the Negro or its white citizens with adequate vocational courses. The beginnings are sound. There is much more needed if the veil is really to be lifted.

It is generally believed throughout the South that the real happiness for the Negro race must lie close to the soil—not as economic serfs, but as small landowners, small farmers. While there are many Negroes who have succeeded in the professions, the race as a whole in the South is rearing its children to the expectancy of toil. And this is not a gloomy prospect when seen as a Kentucky dirt farmer sees it and told me:

"Out on the hills, herding a flock of sheep, or behind a plow, or driving a cultivator, the Negro farmer is on an equality with all men. He can do something well. He helps his white neighbor at harvest time. His white neighbor helps him. Dignified labor brings an equality all philosophy and all theories fail to do."

Speaker Appeals For Aid To Negroes

Dr. G. Lake Imes, noted Negro educator, entertained a large gathering in the First Presbyterian Church, last night, with an entertaining and educational talk on "The Negro."

The speaker was a teacher of English, the Bible and sociology at Tuskegee Institute, served as secretary of the United States Commisison on Education at Haiti, and saw active duty in the United States Army as a captain of the chaplain reserve.

He pointed out to his audience that ten percent or 13,000,000, of the population of the United States are Negroes. They have had a share in creating the wealth of the United States through slavery and other means, Dr. Imes stated, adding, "They have had more than their share of poverty, crime and illness." Twenty-five percent of the nation's crimes are committed by Negroes, he said.

Dr. Imes suggested five attitudes to benefit the Negro, including, "don't make the black man ashamed of being black," give him a job," "give him his own institutions," 'give him a Christian education," "and teach him how to use the ballot intelligently."

The speaker pointed out how Abraham Lincoln called upon the Negroes to sway the balance of power in the Civil War and how the addition of a half-million Negroes to the Northern armies accomplished what the president had requested. He also traced the part played by the Negro in the World War.

A Lincoln University quartet entertained with six selections.

During his work as a member of the staff of Tuskegee Institute, Dr. Imes was in close association with its founder, Booker T. Washington.

Raising Fund for Young Baritone

Bill Brown, Parsons Negro Singer, Hopes To Enter Tuskegee

Efforts are being made by several organizations and friends of William Brown, 18-year-old Negro baritone, to arrange for a scholarship to send the talented local singer to Tuskegee institute, the famous college for Negroes at Tuskegee, Ala.

Brown has an unusually fine voice and recently has received recognition through radio broadcasts. For several weeks he has given 15-minute programs regularly over the Pittsburg station on Sunday afternoon, and is receiving fan mail daily praising his voice and his ability to interpretate. Critics say his voice is very much like that of Paul Robeson, the famous Negro baritone.

A letter received this week from Albert Turner, registrar of Tuskegee institute, states that the school is making new arrangements to assist Negro students to receive scholarships to the school and will send a pamphlet as soon as the revision is made. He added that he would cooperate in any way possible to assist young Brown in receiving a scholarship.

Efforts are being made to find a sponsor for him for commercial programs on the Pittsburg radio station, and for him to appear on a Major Bowes amateur broadcast. These are only two of plans in progress to assist him in raising money to enter the Alabama college.

Brown is the son of Mr. and Mrs. James Brown, 1026 Broadway and is a senior at Parsons high school. Besides the musical instructors in the schools, he has studied under several instructors of his own race and recently has been studying under Mrs. W. W. Brown, who is very much interested in his future as a singer.

Speakers From Tuskegee

TO THE EDITOR OF THE NEW YORK TIMES:

Although Dr. Frederick Douglass Patterson, president of Tuskegee Institute, may have been the first member of his race to have been the guest of honor at the annual Lincoln Day celebration of the National Republican Club, as reported in THE TIMES of Feb. 14, it will be of interest to call attention to the fact that the late Booker T. —BURNS.

Just one good day in the week end and that was Saturday. As for yesterday 'twas full o' gloom and to spare as from noon on. The typical rainy Sunday. . . . And those who had not read the weather predictions were surprised when, umbrellaless, they left their various churches yesterday morning. . . . But there was one sure sign of spring on Warren street on Saturday, and it certainly was welcome—the first pussy-willows of the season, cut by John Bauman on his place down Livingston way, and offered for sale by the bunch. Seldom does one see the native "Pussies" so early. . . . Those residents of the city and county who contributed used Christmas cards to a big box of them the column was sending to Tuskegee Institute down in Alabama, will be interested in the following letter of acknowledgement which was received a day or so ago from T. D. Patterson, president of Tuskegee Institute: "Thank you very much for the package of used cards which you sent for distribution. These will be distributed where they will bring much cheer." . . . It's not often that one is crowned Queen twice within less than two years, but that's just what has happened to one of Hudson's fair and fair-haired daughters and she is wearing her honors (and crowns) easily. . . . Local churches all report large congregations yesterday—due to the approach of Lent.

EDUCATION- 1939
TUSKEGEE INSTITUTE, COMMENTS ON

President Frederick D. Patterson of Tuskegee Institute has recently visited a number of Tuskegee alumni clubs, answered the question and told what is happening. Says he:

"The philanthropists of an earlier generation have died and in their places have come their sons and daughters. Gone is Peabody, Ogden, Rosenwald and hundreds of other rich whites whose hearts spoke to them of the need of education for the Negro. The hearts of their sons and daughters, for the most part, are silent. Therefore, there are fewer and fewer gifts for Negro education."

President Patterson mentions another factor which has to do with the new times.

"Taxes are heavier now than they were in times past," he explains. "The man with an income of a million dollars a year today will probably have to give the government three-quarters of it. He doesn't have as much left for private philanthropy as he used to have. In come cases, his gifts are taxed. Just or unjust, the present tax system works to the injury of our private schools."

And still another factor which has to do with endowments. They are not yielding the expected returns. What has happened?

"Bond issues which may have paid four or five per cent," explains Dr. Patterson, "are being called in and re-issued at a lower interest rate, two or three per cent. There is nothing the schools can do about this."

The above is easy to see, to understand. The first and second generations of whites who gave to Negro education have died. A new generation of whites which does not wish to give or is unable to give has come.

Tuskegee's president is sure that many of the schools in the South, institutions which have rendered glorious service, are going to be forced to close their doors. Maybe all of them. Maybe Tuskegee and Hampton. Who is there left to keep those doors open?

The third generation of black men and women is here. For whom were the gifts and the sacrifice of the first and second generations of blacks and whites if not for this third generation? Was it not the hope of the first and second generations that succeeding generations would be placed upon their feet and enabled to take care of themselves?

Tuskegee is appealing to its 7,000 graduates and 30,000 former students to see the challenge and to accept the responsibility. We Negroes, from now on, must pay more and more of the cost of our education if we are to get it and if it is to be the kind of education we want and will do us the most good. There is no escaping the responsibility. Either we accept it, or the schools close and we start sliding backward.

There is scarcely any other issue which faces the Negro today that is so vital. Much as the author of this column respects the church, the upkeep of our schools in the kind of a world in which we live is more vital to us. We must give to our schools. Every Negro community in this country should have a local agency whose chief duty would be to raise funds for the promotion of the education of Negroes. One dollar each from half the Negroes in this country each year would yield near seven millions of dollars. In the attainment of such a goal lies the salvation of our schools and, in part, the salvation of the race. Does it mean anything to you? What?

I am writing to congratulate you on your wonderful success and to invite you to be my guest should you visit our country next year."

When Lula Hymes was questioned about the Olympics she said, "I should like very much to make the trip to Finland, and should I be fortunate enough to be selected because of anything that I may do in the field of athletics, I shall be pleased to look up Miss Tarkiainen who has so graciously extended me an invitation to be her guest while abroad. The hospital, to be erected on the institute campus will be similar to the one at Warm Springs, Ga., President Roosevelt's favorite philanthrophy, and the colored institution will be the first of its type in the country.

The laboratory will develop and evaluate the experiments made in the Carver Research Laboratory (under supervision of Tuskegee's famed scientist, Dr. George W. Carver), but the latter will not be directly connected with the new project.

TO USE STUDENT AID

Most of the labor for the new building will be supplied by students of the trades school. Facilities of the hospital will include a modern gymnasium and swimming pool.

President Is Ready For Turkey Carving

Enjoying Thanksgiving Holiday At Warm Springs 'Home'

By DOUGLAS B. CORNELL

WARM SPRINGS, Ga., Nov. 23.—(AP)—President Roosevelt and nearly half the nation celebrated Thanksgiving Thursday—a week ahead of the date on which the calendars say the holiday should fall.

The calendars were printed before Mr. Roosevelt decided that Thanksgiving this year should come a week before the traditional final Thursday in November. Georgia and 24 other states agreed to advance the date.

The main event of the day, a Thanksgiving dinner with turkey and all the fixings, from chestnut stuffing to mince and pumpkin pie, was reserved for the evening.

For the dinner, seats were arranged for 350 in the dining hall of the Warm Springs Foundation. Ten of the patients, chosen by lot, were given places at the table of Mr. and Mrs. Roosevelt, with the choice spot reserved for little Ann Smither, a 6-year-old miss from Frankfort, Ky., who has been at the institution five months.

The after-dinner program included a short informal talk by Mr. Roosevelt, a play with incidental music depicting life at the institution as the patients see it and musical selections by a quartette from Tuskegee Institute Negro school in Alabama.

Mr. Roosevelt, here for a week, had no particular plans for the early part of the day. White House officials said no visitors were expected at the "Little White House" on Pine Mountain, but that the Georgia congressional delegation would call Saturday.

Soon after his arrival here Wednesday, the President took a swim in the Foundation's pool. Later, behind the wheel of his own car, he drove about the grounds and then went over to his farm a short distance away to see what damage had been done by a scarcity of rain.

President Is Ready For Turkey Carving

Enjoying Thanksgiving Holiday At Warm Springs 'Home'

By DOUGLAS B. CORNELL

WARM SPRINGS, Ga., Nov. 23.—(AP)—President Roosevelt and nearly half the nation celebrated Thanksgiving cluded a Thursday—a week ahead of the date on which the calendars Mr. Roosevelt decided say the holiday should fall.

The calendars were printed before Mr. Roosevelt decided Foundation that Thanksgiving this year should come a week before the and musical traditional final Thursday in November. Georgia and 24 tette from Institute Negro school in Alabama.

other states agreed to advance the date.

The main event of the day, a Thanksgiving dinner with turkey and all the fixings, from chestnut stuffing to mince and pumpkin pie, was reserved for the evening.

For the dinner, seats were arranged for 350 in the dining hall of relaxation, had no particular of the Warm Springs Foundation, plans for the early part of the day. Storybook Finishes Win 2 For Tuskegee

TUSKEGEE INSTITUTE, Ala. Playing at top form Tuskegee's Golden Quint won a hard-fought 29-28 basketball game from the Florida A. and M. College team in Logan Hall here Friday night. The victory was achieved when William Robinson, of Gary, Indiana, who had turned in an excellent hard-wood performance, eluded his guard long enough to sink a beautiful shot just before the clock ticked off the final seconds of the brilliant basketball battle. This solo effort by Robinson was a real feature play and sent the jubilant spectators from the gymnasium wild with enthusiasm for the team and with warm praise for Robinson for his capable handling of the ball in a crucial moment of the game.

The Tiger Quintet protected the baskets consistently and forced the Floridians to send the ball on long rides. Allymph was good on the long tosses and his side court shot was an excellent exhibition of ball control. Jones was the high point player for Tuskegee. He found the range five times from the floor and once from the gift zone for a total of eleven points. Dickens produced eight tallies. Robinson, Fuller and Scisco joined in the point producing parade.

The half ended with Tuskegee leading, 14 to 12. Gee knotted the score early in the second frame and a moment later Edmonds put his team ahead with a foul shot. The next time the elusive Eddmonds handled the ball he scored with a perfect shot fifteen feet from the basket. The lead changed constantly with the game in doubt until Robinson's toss in the closing moments of the hectic battle gave the Tigers their sensational triumph.

The second game of the series was played Saturday afternoon and was won by Tuskegee, 34-32. It was a repetition of the Friday evening performance, ending in a two-point victory for Tuskegee just before the gun sounded. The Tuskegee players scattered their scores in the following manner: Jones, 9, Robinson 9, Van Zandt 94, Dickens 3, Fuller 2, Scisco 1, Williams, Shaw and Moore, 2 each. Shaw's side court shot was perhaps the most individual performance in that he put the ball in the basket from a difficult angular position in one of the most exciting moments of the game. Edmonds and Butler were the Florida sharp shooters, each player locating the range for a total of twelve points. The Florida five is an efficient machine even with substitutions.

Tuskegee Institute May Get School For Training Pilots, Air Mechanics, Says Member of Aeronautics Body

WASHINGTON, D. C., Jan. 26 —Robert H. Hinckley, member of the Civil Aeronautics Authority last week replied favorably to Congressman Arthur W. Mitchell who had contacted that body requesting that Tuskegee Institute be designated as one of the schools for training pilots and aircraft mechanics.

Hinckley assured the Congressman that if the experimental pilot training program is broadened in the fall, "Tuskegee Institute will be given every possible consideration for participation along with other colleges and universities in this country".

Has Adequate Facilities

Congressman Mitchell also received communication from President F. D. Patterson, of Tuskegee Institute lauding him on his interest in setting up a training unit in aviation for mechanics and pilots at the institute.

President Patterson stated that Tuskegee Institute has adequate facilities in terms of shop buildings and landing field, and pointed out that the institute is situated just 38 miles from Maxwell Field in Montgomery, the site of federal government's aviation unit.

The establishment of an aviation training unit at Tuskegee Institute in the opinion of observers is a step forward, and will give Negro youth an unlimited opportunity to engage in the field of aeronautics.

Mitchell Urges Tuskegee For A Training Base

WASHINGTON, D. C.—(ANP)— Representative Arthur W. Mitchell Illinois Democrat and only Negro congressman, last week asked Secretary of War Woodring to designate Tuskegee Institute as one of the schools for training pilots and aircraft mechanics.

Secretary Woodring promised consideration of this proposal, according to Congressman Mitchell.

Tuskegee May Get Air School

Congressman Mitchell Finds Congressional Leaders Enthusiastic

WASHINGTON, is about to dawn and that he Congressmen Carl Vinson (Dem. hopes the race will keep a level Ga.), chairman of the Committee on naval affairs and A. J. May (Dem., Ky.) are not only willing that Tuskegee Institute should have a school for training civilian pilots and aircraft mechanics as suggested by him, but are enthusiastic about giving the colored group an opportunity in this field, Congressman A. W. Mitchell (Dem., Ill.) asserted last week.

Following President Roosevelt's recent recommendation that 20,000 air pilots be trained, Mr. Mitchell asked Secretary of War Woodring to designate the institute as one of the training schools.

Mr. Mitchell stated that he had been promised fullest co-operation in every way by President F. D. Patterson of Tuskegee, who also called his attention to the fact that the institution now has adequate facilities in the way of shop buildings and landing fields, and is located only thirty-eight miles from Montgomery where the Government's Maxwell Field is established.

Solon "Highly Elated"

Congressman Mitchell declared that he is highly elated over the reaction of the War Department, the Civil Aeronautics Authority, and the attitude of the chairmen of the military and the naval affairs committees in the House.

Mr. Mitchell said further that it appears to him that a new day head in the march upward.

The Great Battey

Of Tuskegee institute was a man with plenty of self-confidence determination, and imagination. While a very young man he had mastered photography, learned how to express his ideas on a plate of film, was head of the department of photography at Tuskegee, and was for many years until his untimely death, Americas' greatest photographer, and one of the foremost in the world.

No man, white or black, has come forward since his death to take his place. Battey could "handle" a camera. His amazing ability, courage, common sense and philosophy made him a master instructor, his students loved and respected and could turn to with confidence. While he was growing famous as an instructor and artist, he found time to write. And students will find it worthwhile to memorize what this greatest all-round American photographer demanded of his students.

Tuskegee Is Urged As Training School

WASHINGTON, Jan. 10 —Representative Mitchell (D.) Illinois, only negro congressman, had asked Secretary Woodring today to choose Tuskegee institute, negro college at Tuskegee, Alabama, as one of the schools for training pilots and aircraft mechanics.

President Roosevelt has recommended that 20,000 be trained. Mitchell said that on a population basis one-tenth of them should be negroes.

He said Woodring promised consideration of his proposal. Mitchell also discussed the proposal with Chairman Vinson (D.), Georgia, of the house naval affairs committee and Chairman May (D.), Kentucky, of the military affairs committee.

Work Heritage Is Tuskegee's Forward Ideal

State Started School But Washington Made It Continue

Tuskegee Institute was founded by a State grant of $2,000 by the State Legislature in 1881. The trustees of the newly founded institution sought out talent to staff the school and by good fortune selected Booker Taliaferro Washington for the post of principal and professor of Mental and Moral Sciences.

This institution was to be devoted to the education of colored teachers to fill the need arising from the growing consciousness of the necessity for negro education. Booker Washington was not content for the school to remain in the minor role of an obscure school and by dint of application of his genius he soon made it the second most famous school in the United States for negroes. The other school was Hampton, in Virginia.

Ambitious Schoolman

It was Booker Washington's idea that the school should equal, if not surpass, Hampton, for there he had been a professor and had taken charge of the clothing, rooms, and discipline of the Indian students. He held close to himself the model of that institution and worked to make the embryonic Tuskegee like it.

Like it he did make it, but Booker Washington did not stop there. His philosophy of education was developing and soon he formulated the basic philosophy:

"The soil is your nature,' and from it will come your salvation. You are the natural tillers of it and more naturally facile than others. Follow it."

This apparently stern but more true than otherwise, philosophy steered the first years of the emergent Tuskegee under Booker Washington. He surrounded himself with acknowledged negro authorities in the various fields which he deemed important to the development of Tuskegee.

Funds Came Slowly

The path of the original conception of the school was hard. The Alabama Legislature appropriated only $3,000 by 1883 for the maintenance of the school. Supporting an ideal as high as his was impossible on such funds and so Booker Washington took to the road and raised funds from northern philanthropists.

A student of the school who began in the 1900 found that a mere thirty-five cents was enough to begin his scholastic work. The school had a brick plant which made all the new buildings. There was a food raising project which supplied the tables of the students. Numberless other ways did the students of the old Tuskegee find to supplement their cash income so as to pay for living and tutoring at the same time. Some of the old graduates of Tuskegee say regretfully that a new student could not do that today that he would have to have not only sufficient cash funds to pay tuition, but would also have to have some supplement to help with his living expenses.

The first big boost that the school received was in 1903 when the Carnegie Foundation offered an endowment of $600,000, the sole condition of which was that Booker Washington and his family would always be assured support from the income.

Washington's Life

Booker Washington was born in 1858 or 1859 a slave near Hale's Ford, Franklin County, Va. His first work was in the salt mines of Malden, W. Va. He later secured a job in the coal mines in the same vicinity.

His ambition for education led him to form a group of young negro boys to raise funds to hire a tutor. The tutor was secured, a young negro from Ohio.

Soon, through diligent effort, mostly at night, he was prepared for Hampton Institute, from which he graduated in 1875.

He soon found his profession, that of teacher, and when he returned home to Malden, he secured such a position. There he taught for three years, and then went back to school himself. This time it was at Wayland Seminary, Washington. After a year of further education he was called to Hampton as a professor and factotum. He remained there two years until he was called, upon the recommendation of Gen. Samuel C. Armstrong, president of Hampton, to Tuskegee.

Later Development

Booker Washington worked with and at Tuskegee as his field laboratory for the elevation and betterment of his race until his death in 1915, when he was succeeded by Robert R. Moton, who was president until F. D. Patterson took over the position, which he now holds.

One of the outstanding lights in the development of Tuskegee has been Dr. George Washington Carver, scientist and humanitarian, who is still at work in the laboratory of the school he helped make famous. There follows an article by him concerning his work:

Research Is Secret Of Carver's Work

By DR. GEORGE W. CARVER

Early in October, 1896, I arrived at Tuskegee Institute to take charge of its agricultural work.

WHAT I FOUND:

(1) Universally a nonproductive soil.
(2) Practically no vegetable gardens worthy of the name.
(3) Scarcely any fruits except the wild sorts, and 90 per cent of them going to waste.
(4) But little live stock of any kind, not even chickens.
(5) A thoroughly discouraged body of farmers without hope of anything better.
(6) Home ownership was a rarity

MY PROBLEM:

To correct the above major problems demanded nearly or quite all of my time and strength, as there were so many angles of approach.

Group A—HOW WE BEGAN

The building up of wornout soils (nonproductive) constituted our first work. To get the farmers to see the ease and simplicity with which it could be done and put it into practice often required personal visits to the farmer's home, taking his tools very often putting them in repair and giving them an actual demonstration, and like any schoolmaster with experience, we stood by and instructed until they were able to do it. Each farmer was taught to analyze his soil physically with numerous examples of soils ideal for crop production, and soils partially or wholly unfit for crop production, also what to do to build it up with material on his own farm or near by. The museum will contain this group.

Group B—GARDENS

The value of a good garden was illustratively discussed. How to grow and prepare vegetables for the table and their relation to our health and happiness.

Group C—FRUITS

The above was true with reference to fruits, the drying, canning, pickling and preserving, were kept ever before the housewives when seasonable.

Group D—COMMERCIAL OR HOME SEEKERS GROUP

In working up the above information with reference to fruits and vegetables an entirely different phase appeared, a group destined to give correct information to anyone wishing to know what our soils are capable of producing. This group surprises the most skeptical visitor who is not acquainted with our responsive soils under intelligent farming methods as it does rather stagger the imagination when they look at our (so called) worn out soils and the huge vegetables and fruits that come off of them.

Group E—SOILS OF ALABAMA

But few people realize how rich the South is in soil types, and their special value in high crop production when intelligently handled.

Paints and Kalsomines. The value of our clays as interior finishes. Almost innumerable shades of Indian reds, raw and burnt siennas, Vandyke browns, ochres in several shades, lavender and pure white. The various mixtures from these basic colors give exquisite effects which never fail to please the most fastidious taste for charming pastel effects.

Oil Paints. Many of the dark reds, browns, yellows, make very satisfactory colors when freed from grit and ground in linseed oil or any of the various vehicles used in the manufacture of paints. They have fine covering qualities, flow from the brush easily and wear well. Spent crankcase oil from motors can be used with very good effect for farm houses of all kinds. Any strong drying medium mixed with the oil makes it more desirable as a paint as it dries poorly.

Stains. I doubt if there is any material that will make such a variety of colors for furniture and interior and exterior wood work, ranging in shades from the simplest dark mission to the more complex blues, greens, browns, yellows, orange and intermediate shades.

These are real stains and should not be classed with a dye. They have the very unusual quality of increasing in beauty and intensity with age. They sink deep into the week and become practically everlasting. (Specimens nearly 43 years old will be on exhibition. They are unsurpassed in richness).

Any of the ordinary vehicles can be used for mixing the dry pigments, from water, oils, neutral liquids, to the most powerful acids or alkalies, including some attractive colors made by using creosote as the vehicle. The crude creosote makes a very dark, rich set of colors with the various clays used as a pigment, while the refined creosote (which is light in color) gives a much wider range of colors of rich shades, bearing a close resemblance to paint in appearance, lasting qualities, and serves as a superior wood preservative.

China Clays. But few Alabamians fully realize what a wealth of choice ceramic clays we have, ranging from the coarser tile and jug types to the almost unbelievable snow whites for the making of rare and beautiful pottery.

Group F—BUILDING STONES

In this group the superior building and ornamental stones of the South will be shown. In this group a distinct surprise awaits any who are interested.

Group G—MINERALS

We believe a study of this group will give many suggestions to those interested in that type of commercial possibilities.

The above represents briefly and imperfectly a very small cross section of the museum. We hope to have every group so clearly installed that the student, seeking truth, will not fail to find even more than he anticipated. The business man in many capacities will find much that will prove guide posts along his way to success; and it is further hoped that many of just curious sightseers will become enlightened, inspired, and enthused to the point where he will see his fame and fortune in one of these trails, select it and make it an outstanding business success.

We shall be greatly disappointed if this collection is not added to from time to time, and that it does not render the highest service to all the people. Again I shall be even more greatly disappointed if the searchers for truth do not see in this vast collection much of the glory, majesty, and power of the Great Creator.

'Let My People Live' Health Picture at New York Fair

The first motion picture selected for showing at the New York World's Fair in the field of health medicine, and science, was "Let My People Live," the sound film distributed through Minnesota in recent months by the Minnesota Public Health Association. It will be shown in the auditorium of the Medical and Health Building, according to Homer N. Calver, director of Health Exhibits.

Rex Ingram heads the all Negro cast of the picture which depicts up-to-date medical and scientific efforts to combat superstitions and fear surrounding tuberculosis. Many of the scenes were filmed on the campus of the Tuskegee Institute, Alabama, and the Tuskegee choir of 100 voices is heard in several selections.

The film has been shown to school children, parents, teachers at county fairs, to 4-H club groups and at many meetings of organizations and clubs throughout Minnesota. Lumbermen on the Red Lake Indian Reservation were recently added to the more than 50,000 people in the state who have seen the film, when it was given a wide showing in Beltrami County. Its purpose is to emphasize the importance of early diagnosis and proper treatment of tuberculosis.

Motion pictures are being used with increasing effectiveness for purposes of education in the Christmas Seal program, according to Dr. E. A. Meyerding, Executive Secretary of the Minnesota Public Health Association.

TUSKEGEE—Where Murder And Suicide Stalk The Campus

WHAT WILL THE HARVEST BE...

If Crime Continues To Gnaw With Its Ugly Teeth At The Temple Of Learning That Booker T. Washington Built?

Defender 2-7-39
Chicago Ed

By J. WINSTON HARRINGTON

TUSKEGEE INSTITUTE, made famous by the magic touch of Booker T. Washington, greatest educator of his time, has fallen heir to evil omens since death took him to other rewards some twenty-four years ago.

Booker Washington built Tuskegee on a practical foundation, around which he wove a sentiment . . . the famous "Tuskegee Spirit," it was called. His preachments of goodwill, friendship and brotherly love, not only took root and permeated the campus among student body and faculty, but it took wings of the air and became world-wide wherever men sat in council to discuss social betterment of the body politic.

Tuskegee was looked upon, during his day, as a place where "One, Big Happy Family" dwelt.

When "Booker The Physical" passed out of the picture as the guiding genius of affairs there, and "Booker In Marble" became a granite fixture on the campus, the "heart" of the "Tuskegee Spirit" seemed to have also turned to stone . . . the "Get Even Day" dawned . . . the day of revenge developed and scandal, leading to murder and suicide, has thrown a horrid halo and shadow over its classic halls of learning.

What will the harvest be if sterner hands fail to take an interest in affairs there?

Is a purge necessary to restore its once calm and tranquil atmosphere from the now wind-swept odors of injurious gossip, crime and scandal? Is the work, the labor of Booker T. Washington, who now belongs to history, to be defaced and marred, battered and mud-scarred, by men of smaller mental capacities?

Has Tuskegee established a "New Thought" to follow the modern trend of worldly affairs with Booker Washington's ideas, views and opinions on civic, social and religious matters out of the picture?

Why has his picture, which so long hung on the main chapel wall blazing forth from electrical effect, been discarded to the attic?

Why has "The Oaks," his palatial home on the campus, where he wrote his famous lectures, sermons, and thought out the early problems of Tuskegee . . . the place where he died . . . been ransacked from cellar to attic to make a comfortable resting place for students and matrons?

The Booth Murder Case

Frederick Douglass' home at Anacostia is kept as a shrine. Why wasn't Booker Washington's home on Tuskegee's campus preserved as a shrine? Booker lives only in marble at Tuskegee, lifting the veil of ignorance from the eyes of his also turned to stone against its benefactor?

Recent tragic events . . . three murders and a suicide . . . have led many of the friends of that institution to wonder whether the general morale of that heretofore placid and steadfast community has undergone a general breakdown.

When a spirit of selfishness diffuses itself through a community; when men cease to be interested in that community for itself and the good it can do and begin catering to their own ego, petty jeolousies, hate and injustice creep in and these monsters are the antecedents of murder, suicide and other forms of crime. When men permit culprits to wander footloose on school campuses, and call off the law that is probing too deep ,the result of such procedure leads to only one pathway . . . more crime. This was done at Tuskegee . . . the Pinkertons were getting too hot on the trail of a murderer, and before their report was complete, were sent back to Atlanta. The monster grew and struck again.

As the years wore on the record read like this: Murder, Fraud, Murder Again, Then Again, and now Suicide.

Murder first poked its ugly tentacles on the campus of Tuskegee in August 1, 1930, when Miss Mary Booth, sister of Mrs. Robert R. Moton was shot six times from ambush as she walked from the hospital where she was a nurse and neared the Alumni Hut. She lived to tell of the attack, but the crime today remains unsolved. The Pinkerton National Detective agency was called in, and expert operatives were sent from the Atlanta office to probe the affair. As they proceeded in their investigation they naturally had to hook-up certain details regarding the private lives of individuals mentioned in the case.

The Howard Slaying

The trail was getting hotter . . . and suddenly they were called into conference, according to reports, and told to confine their activities to the main factors of the tragedy, and disregard all minor details . . . skeletons had begun to rattle. Finally they were called off and the gunman rested more easily thereafter . . . until he had perfected plans to strike again.

Time passed with the Booth case only a matter of campus gossip. Then murder flared again. This time the gunman walked boldly into the store operated by Mr. and Mrs. Henry Howard, and as Mrs. Howard appeared in the doorway leading to the back, he fired a shot through her forehead, killing her instantly. The cover of night gave him security from detection. This crime was listed on the books as a mystery, and remains unsolved.

The clock ticked on . . the spirit of Booker T. Washington, living only in marble on the campus, had no influence . . . the famous "Tuskegee Spirit" seemed as inanimate as he was.

Hardly had the shock of the two previous murders been absorbed beyond daily gossip when a gun spoke in deadly tones again.

The Atkins Murder

A. T. Atkins, head of the Agricultural department, who was regarded as harsh, uncouth and abrupt at times, was shot to death on the stairway of Chambers building by J. D. Thompson, who conducted a cafe. Thompson, who physicians said suffered from paresis, was captured and is now in an asylum. His cafe when searched was virtually an arsenal. It contained shotguns, revolvers, rifles and many rounds of ammunition.

Ironical as it may see, Atkins had been informed, as were others in charge of the building, that Thompson's cafe resembled an armed camp, but they dismissed the information by stating that he was the best paying tenant in the building. As disease swept away the reasoning power of his brain, he harbored delusions that he was being mistreated and somehow blamed Atkins.

It was Atkins who brought the present principal of the school, Dr. F. D. Patterson, to the campus of Tuskegee, when some years ago he 'cleaned house" in the Agricultural department. Dr. Patterson came from the University of Iowa, and was the first Tuskegee professor to earn a doctor of philosophy degree. He is a son-in-law of the former principal, Dr. Robert Russa Moton.

Now comes the Tracy Branum suicide case that ushers in the New Year at Tuskegee.

The Branum Suicide

For 25 years Tracy Branum, a graduate of the institute, had served faithfully as assistant postmaster at Tuskegee under the late J. B. Washington, foster-brother of the founder. He was scrupulous in his adherence to his duties; he aroused the admiration of the entire community, and had hoped that one day he would be rewarded with the title of "his chief" and he worked for it assiduously, believing all the while, that faithful service has its own reward . . . he had been lectured to on the subject by Dr. Booker Washington several mornings at chapel service in his student days. It was a natural and laudable aspiration.

However, he sought the influence of a friend to present his name "to the proper people, at the proper time." The friend was Richard Harris, alumni representative on the board of Trustees of Tuskegee. Having respect for "his chief" he thought it sacreligious to openly campaign for his position so soon after his body was laid in the ground. He had the old "Tuskegee Spirit" instilled in him by its great founder. He was an original member of the once "Big Happy Family."

But that was not the prevailing thought among others on the campus. Congressman Steagall of Alabama gave evidence of this fact . . . he had never been given Branum's name . . . knew nothing of him until the fatal shot was fired in the hospital.

Harris met with the board. Somehow, someone offered his name for the postmastership of Tuskegee, and before he could speak about Branum, he surprisingly accepted the appointment himself.

The shot heard in the John Andrew's hospital was Branum's endorsement of the appointment. His castle had fallen about him. He was humiliated; his pride was hurt; his status as a man was reduced. In the high places where justice should have been perched, Branum found nothing but deceit and injustice. For both officials and former officials had betrayed the community. They had ignored the "Tuskegee Spirit."

He brooded and then in the fullness of despair; in the throes of lost hope and frustrated ambition he fired a shot through his brain which put him beyond all misery all suffering and all humiliation . . . and they call it suicide.

That "crime" is listed on the police register at Tuskegee as SOLVED.

Today some staunch friends of Tuskegee say that the dominant note permeating the community is one of personal gain, self-interest, and a jockeying for place and position. In this situation the ideals of the founder have become subordinated to selfishness, greed and gain. Men seem to be more interested in the postiion they occupy; in the emphasis placed upon them, than in the character of the work to be done. These sordid features will destroy the usefulness of a Yale or Harvard, let alone Tuskegee.

Tuskegee should purg itself of crime; it should step back into the "footsteps of Booker" and replace his picture on its chapel walls under blazing electric light. Its campus was intended for culture, not warfare.

F. D. PATTERSON

When Booker T. Washington was called from Hampton Institute to take charge of Tuskegee, he brought with him the spirit of a pioneer; service without selfishness. He created the famous "Tuskegee Spirit" which introduced industrial education to the world. The only crime on the campus during his day was the "crime of not learning to work with one's hands." What has happened that now turns such a cultural environment into one of tears and grief?

TUSKEGEE INSTITUTE, COMMENTS ON

Chicago Tuskegee Club

By Percy R. Hines

A summary of the activities of the Chicago-Tuskegee club during the past year shows that the presentation of Dr. Frederick Douglass Patterson, president of Tuskegee Institute, at a gigantic educational mass meeting at Metropolitan Community Center, 4100 South Parkway, was one of its most outstanding features.

The bringing of the famous Tuskegee Institute Varsity Band to Chicago for the Tuskegee-Wilberforce football classic was another highlight of the club's work for 1938. Donations to the N. A. A. C. P., the Y. M. C. A., the Chicago Urban League, the Y. W. C. A., Council of Negro Organizations, and to other movements also marked important actions of the organization during the year just closed. Several students in higher institutions of learning were aided in furthering their educations, while at the same time the club was instrumental in finding employment for a number of persons, according to the records of the organization. Cooperation was extended to many clubs, in social, civic and educational work. These activities were the highlights of the local Tuskegeeans during the year 1938.

Colonel John C. Robinson, 4401 South Parkway, well-known aviator, who was recently elected president of the organization for the New Year, is now planning a program of action for the next twelve months, with the aid of other members of the executive committee. A meeting of the officers will be held on January 11. Chairmen of committees will be appointed, and the year's work outlined. At the regular monthly assembly of the club on Jan. 22 the organization will begin executing its schedule for the year 1939.

Among the Tuskegeeans who have recently become active in the club are the following: Mrs. Eunice Bradford-Hall, Warren F. Henry, Mrs. Ernest B. Frazier, Marion L. Smith, Miss Lillie Belle Jones, Floyd Dungy, Miss Gertrude Webb, Max Yergan Frazier, Miss Silver Traylor, Thomas C. Jackson, Miss Stellar Traylor, and several others.

The new officers of the club will be entertained at an affair to be given sometime this month by the retiring executives. Miss Dora H. Murphy and Everett L. Houser, retiring secretary and president, respectively, are working with the committee on arrangements.

The Chicago-Tuskegee club is now on the last lap of its 29th year's work, having been organized on June 26, 1910.

Negro Congressman Seeks Air Training Depot At Institute

WASHINGTON—(AP)—Representative Mitchell (D., Ill.), only Negro congressman, asked Secretary Woodring today to choose Tuskegee Institute, Negro College at Tuskegee, Ala., as one of the schools for training pilots and aircraft mechanics.

President Roosevelt has recommended that 2000 be trained. Mitchell said that on a population basis one-tenth of them should be Negroes.

He said Woodring promised consideration of his proposal.

CLARENCE R. SHAW

The son of Mr. and Mrs. John B. Shaw of Anadarko, Okla. Clarence is one of the outstanding freshmen of Tuskegee Institute, Alabama. He is en route back to Tuskegee after spending the holidays with his parents. He has the distinction of being a member of the famous Tuskegee band, an honor very few freshmen have achieved the first year, and has traveled with the band to various cities with the football team. He is a member of the Y. M. C. A. and takes R. O. T. C. military training.

We predict for this young man a bright future. He was very active in the religious field before leaving the state holding office in the district and state convention with the R. A. boys. He is a member of the E. E. Just Biological Society of Tuskegee institute. Clarence received his highschool education in Anadarko, with the exception of one year in Chickasha.

PLUGGING WINS

MRS. ALEEN B. COPPER

Philadelphian Lands Tuskegee Berth

Despite the pitfalls that beset the path of most ambitious women who have one eye on a home and the other on a career, Mrs. Aleen B. Copper, of the 2200 block Christian street, has for years taken adversity in stride and stoutly refused to give ground. This attitude paid fruitful dividends recently.

Mrs. Copper has been appointed to a new job at Tuskegee Institute, Alabama, beginning work on January 22nd as assistant to the Dean of Women.

A graduate of Cheyney State Teachers' College, Mrs. Copper has also studied at Temple and the University of Pennsylvania. She has been variously associated with several educational enterprises in this city.

Mrs. Copper also merited unusual consideration during her connection with the Department of Public Assistance as an investigator.

Although the recipient of several "bad breaks" at various intervals throughout her eventful career she has depended upon nothing more than a courageous heart and adamant will to gain the coveted peak of success. Numerous social groups boast of Mrs. Copper's membership.

Wilford Strong Weds Nerissa Audrey Brown

MONTGOMERY, Ala.—(S N S)—Miss Nerissa Aubrey Brown, daughter of Mrs. Eliza Brown, of Montgomery, Alabama, became the bride of Wilford A Strong, of Tuskegee Institute, at a beautiful ceremony taking place Monday evening.

The ceremony was performed by the Rev. Harry V. Richardson, Chaplain of Tuskegee Institute.

Serving as attendants were Mr. Calloway Ross, Mrs. Aponte Brown Menchan and Miss Azalie Brown Borders. Mrs. Menchan and Mrs. Borders were gowned in models of blue and peach lace, respectively. Their colonial bouquets were of rose buds and ferns harmonizing with the color of their gowns. Miss Lolita Brown served as maid of honor, completing the trio of sisters who were members of the bridal party. Miss Brown wore a youthful frock of peach net over taffeta. She carried a lovely bouquet of Talisman roses.

The bride entered with her uncle A. C. Brown, by whom she was given in marriage, and they were met at the altar by the bridegroom and his best man, Mr. Harold J. Malcom, of the Veterans Administration Facility, Tuskegee Alabama.

The bride's wedding gown was of antique ivory satin fashioned along princess lines, with seed pearl trimmings, and a full skirt extended to form a long train. Her veil of illusion was caught by a coronet of orange blossoms and her bouquet was of gardenias showered with valley lilies.

Following the ceremony Mr. and Mrs. Brown, uncle and aunt of the bride, entertained at a reception at their home.

Allied Technical Arts Unit Of 'Skegee In Gala Fiesta

TUSKEGEE INSTITUTE, Ala.—(Special)—Prominent among the holiday festivities in the South-eastern section was the annual celebration of the Allied Technical Arts club of Tuskegee Institute, Alabama, which had its colorful setting at the rustic club quarters, "Blue Heaven", about six miles from the campus proper Thursday evening, beginning at 8 o'clock.

The "Annual Exhaust Fiesta", the name which was given the celebration by its president, A. P. Mack, department head of the school and well-known fraternal leader, was marked by a combined program of intellectual and social activities.

George L. Washington, director of Industries, presided over the meeting. Greetings of the season were extended by Mr. Washington, as he acknowledged the presence of nearly 200 comrades, who are busily engaged at the school in shaping and molding the destinies of the youth.

"A Trip to Jericho" by M. W. Freeman, pointed out that Tuskegee and its inhabitants are re-living the epoch, which gave the Bethlehem Babe. He noted striking resemblances even in the training of the boy and girl of today and with much zest and decided satire pointed a way, whereby one could live again in the good old days of the three elders, who brought gold, frankincense and myrrh.

Harold Webb, prominent also in fraternal affairs, read an editorial which revealed the importance of Allied Technology and convinced the large audience, that made a veritable picture amidst the appropriate decorations, that Industries have their rightful place in life today.

The main address of the evening was delivered by the club president, who held the gathering of intelligentsia, from all parts of the globe, who are represented on the faculty of the school, spellbound as he talked from the subject, "The Contents of the Curriculum-Suggested Changes."

Reviewing the curriculum, he urged each person to so deal with the youth, that he may be thoroughly capable of filling the places he was forced to occupy today. Preparedness was the keynote of his address which was chocked full of interesting material. It was received with gratitude, because of the preparation of sentiment attached thereto.

Mr. Mack, rich with experience having taught under the late educator, Booker T. Washington, in zestful manner, touched upon many vital matters which were received and later discussed with intense interest and great enthusiasm.

"Gab Feast" on tne neatly printed programs which were given the guests, was dedicated to the club members for brief speeches.

Leading the discussion were Dr. Derbighny, Rev. Richardson, Dr. W. Williams, vice president; Messrs. J. Perdue, veteran educator who was recently retired after 51 years of service to Tuskegee Institute; Dr. Dibble, A. L. Holsey, Dr. R. R. Taylor, former director of Industries and the president, Dr. F. D. Patterson.

Acting as toastmaster, during the sumptuous feast, Mr. Mack proved an expert as his introductions brought out some significant example of the character of the person he introduced.

The menu consisted of Christmas punch, roast turkey, cranberries, dressing, hot rolls, celery hearts, June peas, and other dainties, which met the demand of the occasion.

Among Atlantans who were present and spoke on the colorful program were C. C. Hart, J. B Sheppard and Miss S. Grace Bradley.

Negro, Given Chance, Proves Ability

By Nate R. White
Staff Correspondent of The Christian Science Monitor

TUSKEGEE Alabama—A bronze statue of Booker T. Washington, the great Negro educator, faces the main driveway of the Tuskegee Institute campus here. It shows the founder of the school lifting a shroud off a strong, muscular man, who is crouched to earth beneath toil, looking up as if to see for the first time a light or star he had never seen before. The monument inscription says of Booker T. Washington:

He lifted the veil of ignorance from his people and pointed the way to progress through education and industry.

How high has this veil been lifted in the South? How well have Booker T. Washington's ideals been carried out? What of the Negro of the South today—a minority race in a democratic country in an age characterized for the rapid spread of education, industry, and communication?

If one were to stay on the Tuskegee campus to answer these questions, he could answer well. Tuskegee today under the leadership of its President, Dr. Frederick D. Patterson, is following the ideal of the founder expressed in his words:

"We shall prosper in proportion as we learn to dignify and glorify labor and put brains and skill into the common occupations of life."

"We here at Tuskegee," Dr. Patterson says, "try to teach the student a trade thoroughly. We are debunking the idea to a great extent of teaching the colored boy and girl subjects which do not enable them to meet life. A student in learning a trade should do things over and over again. The trade should become a part of him. He must actually know what he is doing."

Nearly 50 Trades Taught

Nearly 50 trades are taught at Tuskegee. For instance, the school maintains a completely modern printing shop. The instructor in charge reports that the shop cannot supply the demand for operators of typesetting machines. The plant prints all of the material used by the school, including a newspaper, while training the students.

"We try to tie the shop work to production to turn out things useful to the school," Dr. Patterson says. "We do not maintain equipment merely for the student to play around with. We keep production in mind in planning courses. Our program is flexible, and we are fitting it to the demands of the day."

The Institute maintains a farm where agriculture is taught. Another department teaches boys how to become bricklayers—or plumbers—or mechanics, possibly civil engineers. Girls are given courses in domestic service, nursing, clerical work. The teaching field takes many Tuskegee graduates.

In the beautiful Tuskegee Chapel, brilliantly stained glass windows tell of the struggles of the race in terms of its songs, its "spirituals." One gains the impression at Tuskegee that many of these struggles are being overcome.

Unfortunately the Tuskegee campus does not spread all over the entire South. The Institute's influence is great. But just beyond the gates of the campus, the problems begin—the veil has not been lifted, and the immensity of the Negro's problem again is forced upon one.

Shacks, Shacks, Everywhere

Just down the avenue from this beautiful, wooded spot, where young Negro boys and girls live happy, playful, useful days, where they learn what they need to become productive citizens, is the Montgomery - Atlanta Highway. Just down the street toward the Montgomery - Atlanta Highway are found again those shacks which characterize the Negro dwelling place in the South.

The South Breaks Its Shackles

Ninth of Twelve Articles

Tuskegee has left off so soon, and the world—the Negro's world has begun. There are no sanitary facilities with these dwellings, no glass in many of the windows, little grass in the yards, little loveliness, little cleanliness. And as one noses his car out of this center of Negro progress and industry, whether it be north to Birmingham, Ala., or Memphis or Nashville or Knoxville, Tenn. or east to Atlanta or Rome or Savannah, Ga., or Columbia, S. C., or Raleigh, N. C., or Richmond, Va., or west to Jackson, Miss., Shreveport, Baton Rouge, or New Orleans, La., or Little Rock, Ark.—it matters not what direction—he will find the same drab, unpainted homes in which most of the Negroes in America dwell. However, it may not matter so much about the paint or facilities of the home. It may not matter if the sight is unpleasant. These are material things which are gradually being changed in housing programs and which can be changed more and more. What does matter is the type of American citizen coming out of these homes. What is the Negro of the South thinking? Is he radical? Is he subject to the sway of speakers against the Government, as has sometimes been charged? Is he able to throw off the shackles of his environment to see that star Booker T. Washington discovered when the veil of ignorance was lifted?

Negro Not a Radical

Dean A. A. Taylor of Fisk University in Nashville, a prominent University for Negroes, says, "The Negro from a racial standpoint is neither a revolutionary nor a radical. There is hardly sufficient aggression in the Negro in some southern areas to protect his own life or fight for it. How could there be aggression of a Leftist nature?"

The outgoing Commissioner of Education in Tennessee says:

"The Negro does not want Communism."

And a Negro educator of Louisiana says:

"The Civil War proved the most wonderful compliment ever paid a minority race. The white men and boys went to battle, leaving the white Southern women and girls at home with no defense save their colored slaves. If the Negroes had been revolutionaries, they would have risen up and undermined the South from behind the lines."

This same man says that it is fortunate that the Negro is the one called upon to live in squalor, as "he can do it and be happy and not lose his balance," whereas "a white person seems to go down mentally and morally in conditions of abject poverty."

The Commissioner of Education of one of the largest Southern States tells me:

"The Negroes are great mimickers. They always pattern what they see a white person do. Furthermore, they must always have a kingfish to follow. There is danger in this tendency." He summarized his opinion of the race thus:

"All a Negro wants is plenty to eat, something to wear, a place to sleep, and something to amuse him. We don't fear the Negro, and there is no danger of Communism among them. The only danger is in the kingfish tendency."

A former United States Representative from Arkansas said:

"The Negroes in the South are the happiest people ever, and they make good citizens. However, a Negro is all brawn and muscle and without someone to plan his work and direct his intellect he is lost."

A Mississippi publisher expresses a typical view:

"The Negro must have a white man to tie to. If he doesn't, he is as a ship without a rudder."

These last three statements must be recognized for what they are—Southerners describing the uneducated and untrained man or woman of any race, although they chose to apply them to the Negro. That these typical and limiting views of the Negro are shattered is proved by the examples of Negroes who have seen the star of education and who have broken the shackles of their environment.

Prof. C. L. Barrow, Assistant Director of the Department of Negro Education for Louisiana, tells me:

"It's all bunk for anyone to say that a Negro cannot learn as well as anyone else. He can learn any subject as well as a white person. The differentiation we make in school curriculum is not on the basis of race, but rather on the basis of job opportunities for the members of the race. We are trying to train the Negro for jobs which will be open to him."

Dr. Oliver C. Carmichael, Chancellor of Vanderbilt University, Nashville, says:

"The Negroes are going right ahead. They will walk five miles to school, whereas the poor white class is likely to stay at home, if there isn't a ride. The Negroes want to get an education."

A Negro school principal, a man with more than 1,400 students under his supervision, reports that "When the children are in school, we push them as much as possible. We cram as much training down them as we can in 60 minutes. We are fighting more than a century of problems with precious seconds. The Negro children are hungry and thirsty for knowledge. They are scratching and striving for every bit of information. They are gradually going ahead under extreme handicaps, and they are proving their ability more and more."

Many More Good Schools

There are many good schools in the South besides Tuskegee for Negroes. There are state agricultural and mechanical colleges which are well staffed and handsomely equipped. Then there are the smaller private institutes and colleges. One of these is the Piney Woods School in Mississippi, a Tuskegee on a small scale. And one of the newest liberal arts colleges is Dillard, in the eastern suburbs of New Orleans. Dillard has a beautiful campus, a well-trained faculty, handsome buildings, all white, of the classic Southern style of architecture.

In addition, most of the cities in the South are providing better schools for the Negroes. The difficulty lies with the fact that there is such a long way to go toward making the education practical. Tuskegee emphasizes industrial training. So do a few other schools. But on the whole the South is not training the Negro or its white citizens with adequate vocational courses. The beginnings are sound. There is much more needed if the veil is really to be lifted.

It is generally believed throughout the South that the real happiness for the Negro race must lie close to the soil—not as economic serfs, but as small landowners, small farmers While there are many Negroes who have succeeded in the professions, the race as a whole in the South is rearing its children to the expectancy of toil. And this is not a gloomy prospect when seen as a Kentucky dirt farmer sees it and told me:

"Out on the hills, herding a flock of sheep, or behind a plow, or driving a cultivator, the Negro farmer is on an equality with all men. He can do something well. He helps his white neighbor at harvest time. His white neighbor helps him. Dignified labor brings an equality all philosophy and all theories fail to do."

The 1939 number of the Tuskegee Institute Bulletin is pictorial, and so better than any that has gone before. There are historical pictures of buildings and groups made in the humble early beginnings of the Institute, accompanied by pictures of the great Institute as it is today. There are good pictures of the founders and early counsellors of the Institute to which Booker T. Washington gave form, substance and spirit. The booklet is not only well printed but is interesting in design and The Advertiser is glad to have a copy for its files.

Tickets For Concert By Tuskegee Choir Going Fast In City

Committee workers who are handling details of the concert which will be given here May 10 by the Tuskegee Choir met Wednesday night and heard the report that tickets are in heavy demand and that several drug-stores where they are being sold had made a second call for replenishments. Approximately eleven hundred tickets, 400 of which will be for colored patrons, will be available for the concert, which is to be held in the auditorium of the Junior High School. Since it is being given as a benefit for the Colored Community House, the auditorium balcony will be reserved for music-lovers of this race wishing to attend.

Distribution of posters about the city were handled Thursday by P. M. Grist, and a motor tour of the surrounding territory also was made by Roy Blalock, general chairman of arrangements, Bill Money, and James Steele, committee workers, for the purpose of publicizing the attraction. Traveling in a sound car furnished by Selma Motor Company, the trio visited Marion, Uniontown, Greensboro, Demopolis, Thomasville and other towns. Mr. Blalock also announced that laundries, pressing clubs and other business places were cooperating in making the concert a success by having their drivers distribute tickets and posters on their rounds.

Committee workers who are lending their time and effort to the civic undertaking, which is sponsored by the Selma Chamber of Commerce, include Clyde Ricks, Lester Yates, H. H. Hall, Bill Money, Jimmy Dance, James Steele and P. M. Grist, who formed an enthusiastic group present Wednesday night to hear plans as they were outlined by Chairman Blalock and the Rev. E. W. Gamble, one of the main factors in the building of a Colored Community House for Selma and the bringing of the famed Tuskegee Choir here to raise funds for equipment for the building.

Tuskegee Choir To Give Concert Here

The Tuskegee Choir, one of the country's famous musical organizations, will fill a concert engagement in Selma on Thursday, May 11 at 8:15 p. m. at the Junior High School, to benefit the fund now being raised to furnish the negro community house now nearing completion.

Announcement that the engagement has been secured and that the Tuskegee singers will come here to lend their talent to the cause of aiding in the outfitting of the negro community house was made Saturday by the sponsor for the project, the Rev. E. W. Gamble, retired Episcopal rector. Dr. Gamble, active in support of the plan to provide negroes of Selma and vicinity with a center for health clinics, for negro farm and demonstration offices and for other helpful purposes, sought and secured the cooperation of the Tuskegee group whose coming is expected to materially aid the fund.

Committees will be organized by Dr. Gamble Monday, to handle details of the concert which many music lovers in this section will take opportunity to hear. In the past few years the Tuskegee singers have been heard often in New York, and have crowded concert halls in Birmingham, Memphis and other southern cities, so that the proceeds here are expected to be considerable.

TUSKEGEE INSTITUTE COMMISSIONS 35 CADET OFFICERS

TUSKEGEE INSTITUTE, ALA., May, 1939—Thirty-five members of the Officers Cadet Corps were awarded their commissions at exercises which were held in the Students Recreational Center Friday evening. Lieut B. O. Davis, Jr., United States Army, P. M. S. & T., who has charge of the military instruction at the Institute, presented the officers for their commissions. He praised their work and thanked them for the very satisfactory service which they had rendered the Institute during the year. Capt. Charles Ecton, U. S. A., retired; Capt. Walter J. Love, and Sergt. John D. Patton, REML (ROTC) assisted Lieut. Davis in the military instruction during the year.

W. A. Clark, director of the School of Education, who presented the commissions to the officers, said: "It is a great pleasure for me to have the honor to present these commissions to the members of the officers cadet corps of Tuskegee Institute in appreciation of the loyal and faithful service which you have rendered the Institute during the Academic Year, 1938-1939. You young men have been honored as perhaps no other group here has been honored in being selected to direct the dormitory activities of the cadets over whom you have preaided and to command the units of the Cadet Regiment. We constantly turn to the cadet officers to assist us in many administrative duties and it would be hard to contemplate Tuskegee Institute without the cadet officer personnel. I commend you and wish for you continued success as you go forth to conquer in other fields. On behalf of President Patterson, who is unable to be present because of his absence from Tuskegee, I present you these commissions, not as a reward, but as an expression of appreciation of your faithfulness in the discharge of the many duties which you have cheerfully performed throughout the year." At the conclusion of Dean Clark's address, the officers rendered the traditional salute.

EDUCATION- 1939
TUSKEGEE INSTITUTE, COMMENTS ON

TOURING with Ernie Pyle

TUSKEGEE, Ala.—Somehow I've always wanted to see Tuskegee Institute. It is, as you know, the most famous school for Negroes in America.

Booker T. Washington founded it in 1881, nearly 60 years ago. It is a privately endowed institution, with no help from the taxpayers. It has become a model in Negro education.

Fortunately for you, I won't launch into a long description of what the place looks like. It looks, in fact, like any Mid-Western state university.

It covers a lot of rolling ground; the campus is beautiful; there must be three-dozen handsome brick buildings scattered around; streets and sidewalks wind about; there is a stadium and gymnasium and dormitories.

The most surprising thing to me about the whole school is that in looks, it is no different from a white college. The few differences are under the surface.

NO DRINKING—AND VERY LITTLE SMOKING

Many white visitors—business men, students, writers—come to visit Tuskegee. Consequently the institute has facilities for putting up visitors who have a purpose here.

We are staying in Dorothy Hall, in a room that would shame many hotels. We eat in a little dining room of our own; served by a colored girl who is working her way through school.

There is not a white person in this whole school, even on the faculty. There are 1150 students here. 680 boys and 470 girls. The faculty is large—about 250. The biggest percentage of students are from the South, yet they do come from all over America, and from nine foreign countries.

The students on the campus are dressed like college students anywhere. You'd be surprised at how nice several hundred colored girls dressed modishly, not garishly, can look.

Discipline is more strict than in the ordinary college. There is no smoking on the campus. Boys can smoke in their rooms. Girls can't smoke at all. I saw an ash tray on the desk of only one faculty man.

Drunkenness and rowdyism don't go at all here. Only a few special students are allowed to live off the campus. All the others are in big dormitories—14 of them—two in a room, under pretty close supervision.

ALL STUDENTS ENGAGE IN MANUAL LABOR

No student is allowed to have a car. Attendance at church, twice on Sunday and also on Wednesday evening, is compulsory. So is military drill.

The boys have to keep their own quarters clean. Everything at Tuskegee is as neat and clean as a pin. Despite the strictness, there is plenty of student social life.

When Booker T. Washington founded this school, no Negro yearning for knowledge was turned away. The most ignorant barefoot boy could walk in and start learning.

But things have had to change. Today the student must have a certain amount of money for clothes, and must have a high school education.

The tuition at Tuskegee is $75 a year. Every student must work out at least half of his tuition. All must do manual labor in whatever course they are taking. Board and room costs only $20 a month, and can be worked out. Practically all of the vast institute's daily labor is done by students.

The institute offers 41 separate trades. You can go two years, and get a "diploma"—a certificate of fitness for a job in that trade.

Or you can go on another two years, and receive a Bachelor of Science degree. Since the institute started, 40,000 students have enrolled, and 6000 have gone clear through.

WHEN THEY FINISH THE JOBS ARE WAITING

Almost any student is sure of a job at the end of two years in Tuskegee. Of last year's graduating class, every single one was placed and working by Sept. 1. There isn't a Tuskegee graduate of last year out of a job today.

In many departments, the school has many more requests for employes than it can fill. Teachers, chefs, nurses, dietiticians—all these can snap up jobs like that.

Tuskegee has had three presidents. Booker T. Washington, the founder, presided until his death in 1915. Both he and his wife are buried on the campus.

Dr. Robert R. Moton served for 20 years, and retired. He is president-emeritus.

Dr. Frederick D. Patterson has been president since 1935. He is a young man, big, like a football player. He is easy to talk with. His office is large, wood-paneled, and there are deep red leather chairs for visitors.

President Patterson 10 years ago was a veterinary teacher in a small college in Virginia. He got an offer to transfer to Tuskegee.

"That was the height of my dreams," he says. "To have my own veterinary department at a school like Tuskegee. I came in a hurry."

"I guess you never pictured in your wildest moments that you'd be president of Tuskegee some day, did you?" I asked him.

"I certainly didn't," he said. "Such possibility never entered my head."

Congressman Mitchell Founder's Day Speaker

TUSKEGEE INSTITUTE, Ala. Mar. (ANP)—Arthur W. Mitchell, once the office boy of Booker T. Washington, and at present a member of the U. S. Congress, has been selected by Tuskegee institute to deliver the annual Founders's Day address April 2, the date of the Sunday falling nearest April 6, the birthday of Booker T. Washington.

TOURING with Ernie Pyle

TUSKEGEE, March 3.—Before coming here, I had a misconception of Tuskegee Institute. I thought it was a school of higher learning; sort of a Harvard of the Negro race.

I couldn't have been more wrong. Booker T. Washington started it as a trade school, and a trade school it still is, and will always be. They teach Negroes to work.

I have known little about the great Booker T. Washington. But his spirit is still around here, and in just a couple of days you "get it." The soundness of his thinking is startling.

Booker T. Washington never had any philosophy that the Negro race should consider itself equal in all things with the white race. He said, "It is important and right that all privileges of the law be ours, but it is vastly important that we be prepared for the exercises of those privileges."

That's where Tuskegee stands today. It doesn't put any phoney high-toned ideas into students' heads. It wants only to prepare them to work, diligently and honestly, and enlarge their characters, generation after generation, until they have come up to a capacity to be a real and natural part of the civilization into which they were thrown so suddenly, unwilling and bewildered.

Tuskegee is succeeding. On our first evening here, I took a walk around the campus before supper. And to my astonishment every student I met, boy or girl, spoke to me.

Later I asked if the students were instructed to do this. They said no, it was just an old Tuskegee custom, and the students pick it up the minute they come. Friendliness and courtesy, they are taught, will help them in life after they leave here.

TUSKEGEE SPIRIT PREVAILS ON CAMPUS

For two days I have been hot-footing it around here from 7 a. m. till late at night. I've visited departments by the score. I've talked with instructors and students and deans till I'm out of breath.

And the thing that impressed me most is this: In not one instance has anybody made me aware that they are black and I am white. You almost forget it here.

We went last night to the gymnasium to see the basket ball game. The gymnasium was packed. We were the only white people there. Throughout the game I talked (when it was possible to be heard) with the Negro girl who sat next to me. We talked as two people would anywhere.

Nobody in that whole gymnasium ever made us conscious either by staring or by over-attention, that we were whites among blacks. We were doing them no favor by being there, yet we were sincerely welcome.

I talked frankly with President Frederick D. Patterson about it. He calls it the "Tuskegee spirit." But whatever you call it, it is a grace of personality that few Negroes and too few whites ever acquire.

As most of us know Negroes in our daily lives, they are either in lowly jobs and "keep their place," as we like to say, or else they are "educated" Negroes with an "I'm-as-good-as-you-are chip" on their shoulder.

Those two attitudes don't exist at Tuskegee. The Negroes here, both faculty and students, treat you exactly as one gentleman treats another. And I do not believe a white man with any sensibilities at all could come here and not assume the Tuskegee spirit himself.

If all the Negroes in America could come to Tuskegee; and if all the white people could go to a similar school that taught the dignity of association that Tuskegee teaches, how much greater harmony there could be between our two races.

TUSKEGEE IS IN FINANCIAL TROUBLE

And that brings us up to a point that is grave. Tuskegee is in financial trouble. The interest from its endowments has dropped off. Donations have fallen. The huge plant of Tuskegee is more than the income can carry.

Last year the great Negro school was $23,000 in the red. And they had to take the heart-breaking step of dipping into their permanent investments to pay expenses. There is alarm and fear throughout Tuskegee.

Curtailment is being ordered. The Nursing School will have to be dropped. This means not only stopping one of Tuskegee's most practical courses, but it means also that many Negro sick people from these parts will have no place to go.

Tuskegee doesn't mind begging. Other schools do. And Tuskegee was started and grew to what it is today through the almost inspired begging of Booker T. Washington.

School officials have cast aside any plans for expansion. All they want is the money to keep running. For Tuskegee to slide back of 60 wonderful years is tragedy.

They'll need $50,000 to break even next year. The mere thought of $50,000 scares me to death. But it's just chicken feed to some people. How about it, somebody?

'Skegee To Drop Several Courses

Daily World 3-9-39

TUSKEGEE INSTITUTE, Ala.—(ANP)—President F. D. Patterson, who returned last week from New York where he conferred with members of the board of trustees, stated in a special interview that as a result of a recent meeting of the Southern Executive committee and the Finance committee of the trustee board of Tuskegee institute, recommendations had been drafted for the spring meeting of the board of April 11 at Tuskegee in which a definite plan is worked out for the reorganization of the program of instruction in keeping with modern trends in education and at the same time consistent with a seriously curtailed income.

The recommendations include elimination of the high school, the courses leading to the Bachelor of Science in Music Education, a two-year program in the school of business for the training of secretaries, the school of nurse-training and the development of the schools of agriculture, home economics, mechanical industries and education with the expansion of work in rural education as a major objective.

SEEK COUNTY AID

President Patterson expressed the hope that since all these fields are important and needed in a broad program of education, the existing need for the offerings eliminated will be met elsewhere. He stated that local county authorities are being asked to operate the high school in which the enrollment at present is largely local; 64 per cent of the students enrolled living in Macon county.

Dr. Patterson stated that since rumors of the possible elimination of the nurse-training school had got abroad, numerous letters had been received from all sections of the country, giving evidence of the national service this training school renders; that its work is outstanding and its continuance is regarded as needed not only because of the general shortage of nurses, but also because of the south-wide medical and surgical clinics operated in connected with the nursing school at Tuskegee.

An appropriation, he said, would be sought for the state in order to continue this very valuable program in nurse training.

FUNDS GETTING LOW

All the changes stated have been under careful study for at least five years and have been made because of a continuing reduction in cash income during the past five years. This reduction has come to a point that at present the income represents a little more than one half that expended during the peak year, 1931.

The reorganization is a crystalization of the Tuskegee program in the fields of vocational and technical education to the end that the school founded by Booker T. Washington may continue to render through the years a regional and a national service.

Scholarship aid and grants received from several foundations have for the past few years been contributed largely in support of the technical phases of the Tuskegee program.

Outstanding developments are planned in connection with the agricultural program to meet growing demand for highly trained personnel in vocational agriculture, in extension service and for those preparing to be teachers in agricultural colleges and to fill positions as agricultural specialists who will be concerned with federal resettlement and agricultural conservation programs.

TO EXPAND HOTEL COURSE

The work in home economics has been enriched and broadened by the addition of the department of commercial dietetics, which, though but three years old, has received the endorsement of the American Hotel association and has been unable to meet the heavy demans for graduates to take jobs in commercially operated food establishments

The trustees, although they regret that Tuskegee has found it necessary to make any curtailment whatever in its broad program of education, realize that many of the things for which the institution has worked and striven for more than a half century are now on the way up toward a splendid fulfilment.

They feel that it is not only sound education, but that it is in the protection of the interests of the work that Tuskegee has determined to continue and promote; that its energies and reasources be conserved for concentration in fewer fields.

TUSKEGEE INSTITUTE, COMMENTS ON

STATE ALLOTMENT TO TUSKEGEE DOUBLED.

On motion of Representative C.D. Norton of the Blackbelt county of Bullock, the Legislative Recess Committee on Finance and Taxation, Wednesday voted to recommend that the present annual state appropriation to Tuskegee Institute, largest higher institution of learning for Negroes in the world, be doubled, beginning with the present year.

For many years, the annual appropriation to the Institute has stood at $5,000, a figure that has caused considerable criticism from both inside and outside of the State from time to time, which has always been countered by the argument that because of endowments from various foundations and other sources in the North and East, the Institute did not need a large State appropriation.

When the Alabama Legislature meets next week, the Recess Committee will include in its recommendations one that the appropriation be increased from $5,000 to $10,000 per year, of $40,000 for each quadrennium. It is understood the recommendation will be unopposed.

Tuskegee Singers Heard at Fair

NEW YORK — (ANP) — As a feature of the Connecticut Day observance at the World's Fair the Tuskegee Institute Male quintet rendered a program of spirituals in the fair's "Temple of Religion."

The program included arrangements by Burleigh and Dawson in addition to the usual spirituals. "Swing Low, Sweet Chariot" was the feature number.

The Tuskegee singers are now making a tour of the East on behalf of the institute. Its members are Otis D. Wright, first tenor, a senior sudent; Charles R. Foxx, second tenor, a senior; Willis Brown, second tenor, sophomore; Richard Montgomery, baritone, graduate. Frank P. Chisholm, field secretary, accompanied the quintet to the fair and made a short talk on the work of Tuskegee.

Tuskegee Instructor Gets Fellowship To Yale Drama School

TUSKEGEE INSTITUTE, Ala. Dr. F. D. Patterson announced today that Mr. Earl Saunders Walker of the Tuskegee Institute faculty has been awarded a fellowship in the Department of Drama at Yale University. At Tuskegee Mr. Walker has introduced the Little Theatre Movement project which is conducted in a building that at one time was used as a dairy — later as the Alumni Hut in which are centered the activities of the Tuskegee Alumni Association.

Upon his return from Yale, Mr. Walker will give his attention to the promotion of a theatre conducted in a barn in Macon County, not far from the Institute. The theatre will provide an opportunity for rural people to write plays of their own life. In the spirit of Booker T. Washington, it will be called "The Bucket Theatre," the name coming from Dr. Washington's statement: "Cast down your bucket where you are."

Mr. Walker's work in connection with the Little Theatre Movement since joining the Institute faculty has been particularly outstanding, as a medium for wholesome entertainment on the campus and in the community. Mr. Walker received his A. B. degree from Talladega College and his M. A. degree from the University of Michigan. His studies in speech and drama have led him to the Hasty Pudding Theatre at Harvard University and to the Lydia Mendelssohn Theatre at the University of Michigan. He is the son of Mrs. J. M. Walker of Birmingham.

'KEGEE BAND DROPS PLANS TO TOUR EUROPE

TUSKEGEE INSTITUTE, Ala., Nov. 30—Twice a war has come between the crack Tuskegee band and a trip abroad. Back in 1918 plans were being made for the Tuskegee Band to tour Europe, but the World War came on and interrupted negotiations. These negotiations were resumed this year and had progressed to a point where it was considered reasonably certain that the Crimson Pipers would have an opportunity to display their wares in the principal cities of Europe, but another war came and negotiations have been suspended indefinitely.

This is the flashy musical organization which will parade the principal streets and play at the football game which will be staged between the Hornets of State Teachers' college and the Golden Tigers of Tuskegee Institute at Cramton Bowl in Montgomery November 30, Thanksgiving Day.

Eight young women who won their places in the band because of their excellent musical ability will march with this unit. They have played with the organization in various cities where the Tuskegee musicians have appeared and have been loudly acclaimed for their fine footwork as well as for their rare musical ability.

Osmond Moore, junior, Ford City, Pa., head cheerleader, assisted by Milam Watson, sophomore, Houston, Texas, and Thomas Dent, junior, Birmingham, Ala., will lead the band on its march through the business section of the city.

During the intermission at Cramton Bowl these music makers will be featured in an exhibition which has been praised by critics from various sections of the country. Gladys Campanella as "Miss Tuskegee" and her aides, Noel Campbell, senior, Tuskegee Institute, and Nailous Allen, Birmingham, will appear with the band at this intermission feature.

Robert Johnson of Jemison, head drum major, will give his usual one-man performance, using two batons, for his very entertaining exhibition.

War or no war the band will positively appear at Cramton Bowl Thanksgiving Day and will play a program of musical numbers for the patrons, Captan L. Drye, band leader, said toda

Chemistry Main Course Of Study

Impressive Staff Heads Department Of Natural Science

TUSKEGEE INSTITUTE, Ala. Nov. 29.—Supporting the applied and professional curricula at Tuskegee, is the training the students receive in the natural sciences, and no branch of these serves the purpose of general and technical education any more vorious and vitally than chemistry.

The chemistry division is housed on the upper floor of Armstrong hall. The teaching staff includes J. T. Williamson, head of the division; Warren E. Stewart, Jr., Dr. Russell W. Brown, and five assistants. Their work has the advisory counsel of J. R. Otis, director of the department of agriculture; Dr. George W. Carver, director of research, and Dr. I. A. Derbigny, dean of administration.

The equipment is of the most modern type and ample material is provided for giving the students as wide an experience as will serve primarily in appreciating and interpreting situations confronting them during their training days and thereafter in the actual performance of their craft.

Practical Training

Tuskegee emphasizes practical training out that type of practical training broadly based on intelligence and scientific understanding. The sciences are functionally the medium by which brain and skill are put into the common occupations of life.

Thus, whether the student is training for the field of agriculture, home economics, commercial dietetics, hotel service, nursing, or teaching of elementary or special science in the public schools, it become sobvious that chemistry which opens up to the student a systematic approach to the understanding of matter and its almost innumerable varieties and transformations, its structure, organization, importance utility, and conservation, is not to be dispensed with as a factor in the preparation for modern living.

Major Objective

President Patterson stresses the fact that courses should be organized and taught with life's values in mind. Cultural appreciation and an enlargening outlook with implications for good citizenship is not taken lightly as a major objective, but at every point possible, attention is directed to applications making for an efficient, intelligent performance of the job implied in the course being pursued.

Accordingly the teachers characteristically make themselves interested in the aspect of training and the point of view of the student on the one hand and the social relationship on the other. For example, in teaching chemistry to the class of commercial dietetics, and home economics students, the relationship of chemistry to soils, plants, animals, fertilizers, etc., is especially emphasized. Students preparing to teach in the public school study science in a way to make it function under the conditions which they work.

As is well known the work and achievements of Dr. Carver is a constant will-spring of inspiration to all, but especially to the chemistry majors. The Carver Chemical Society organized by these students is a tribute to Dr. Carver and affords a means of enthusiastic expression as the members further their knowledge in the field of chemistry.

DIXON GETS TURKEY

MONTGOMERY, Nov. 28.—A 16½ pound gobbler, brought to the Capitol in a cage draped with crimson and gold ribbons, was presented to Gov. Dixon Monday by Tuskegee Institute.

While G. A. A. Johnston, Tuskegee business agent, who brought the bird explained it was intended for the gubernatorial Thanksgiving dinner, Dixon said he would be in Auburn that day but that it "certainly' would have a place on his table later.

The institute makes an annual custom of presenting Alabama's chief executive with a Thanksgiving turkey from its poultry farm.

BIRDS TO RECEIVE MAJOR PORTION OF CALIFORNIA ESTATE

SAN RAFAEL, Cal. Jan. 17 (AP)—The birds Mrs. Regular Albertus loved will receive the major portion of her $256,000 estate but six relatives, who were omitted from provisions of her will, also will share in the fortune.

The will was admitted to probate today by Superior Judge Anthony J. Caminetti after an out of court settlement terminating a contest by the heirs. The details were not disclosed.

Under the settlement the relatives will divide $42,500 in cash, a 169-acre ranch in Texas and the Albertus home and furnishings here.

Under the will, the National Association of Audubon Societies was to receive $206,000; the Tuskegee College of Alabama, $10,000; and Mrs. Albertus' native Grefensee, a hamlet in Switzerland, $40,000 for poor relief.

Mrs. Albertus was the widow of Gustave Albertus, who accumulated a fortune through real estate dealings.

Work Heritage Is Tuskegee's Forward Ideal

State Started School But Washington Made It Continue

Tuskegee Institute was founded by a State grant of $2,000 by the State Legislature in 1881. The trustees of the newly founded institution sought out talent to staff the school and by good fortune selected Booker Taliaferro Washington for the post of principal and professor of Mental and Moral Sciences.

This institution was to be devoted to the education of colored teachers to fill the need arising from the growing consciousness of the necessity for negro education. Booker Washington was not content for the school to remain in the minor role of an obscure school and by dint of application of his genius he soon made it the second most famous school in the United States for negroes. The other school was Hampton, in Virginia.

Ambitious Schoolman

It was Booker Washington's ideal that the school should equal, if not surpass, Hampton, for there he had been a professor and had taken charge of the clothing, rooms, and discipline of the Indian students. He held close to himself the model of that institution and worked to make the embryonic Tuskegee like it.

Like it he did make it, but Booker Washington did not stop there. His philosophy of education was developing and soon he formulated the basic philosophy:

"The soil is your nature, and from it will come your salvation. You are the natural tillers of it and more naturally facile than others. Follow it."

This apparently stern but more true than otherwise, philosophy steered the first years of the emergent Tuskegee under Booker Washington. He surrounded himself with acknowledged negro authorities in the various fields which he deemed important to the development of Tuskegee.

Funds Came Slowly

The path of the original conception of the school was hard. The Alabama Legislature appropriated only $3,000 by 1883 for the maintenance of the school. Supporting an ideal as high as his was impossible on such funds and so Booker Washington took to the road and raised funds from northern philanthropists.

A student of the school who began in the 1900 found that a mere thirty-five cents was enough to begin his scholastic work. The school had a brick plant which made all the new buildings. There was a food raising project which supplied the tables of the students. Numberless other ways did the students of the old Tuskegee find to supplement their cash income so as to pay for living and tutoring at the same time. Some of the old graduates of Tuskegee say regretfully that a new student could not do that today that he would have to have not only sufficient cash funds to pay tuition, but would also have to have some supplement to help with his living expenses.

The first big boost that the school received was in 1903 when the Carnegie Foundation offered an endowment of $600,000, the sole condition of which was that Booker Washington and his family would always be assured support from the income.

Washington's Life

Booker Washington was born in 1858 or 1859 a slave near Hale's Ford, Franklin County, Va. His first work was in the salt mines of Malden, W. Va. He later secured a job in the coal mines in the same vicinity.

His ambition for education led him to form a group of young negro boys to raise funds to hire a tutor. The tutor was secured, a young negro from Ohio.

Soon, through diligent effort, mostly at night, he was prepared for Hampton Institute, from which he graduated in 1875.

He soon found his profession, that of teacher, and when he returned home to Malden, he secured such a position. There he taught for three years, and then went back to school himself. This time it was at Wayland Seminary, Washington. After a year of further education he was called to Hampton as a professor and factotum. He remained there two years until he was called, upon the recommendation of Gen. Samuel C. Armstrong, president of Hampton, to Tuskegee.

Later Development

Booker Washington worked with and at Tuskegee as his field laboratory for the elevation and betterment of his race until his death in 1915, when he was succeeded by Robert R. Moton, who was president until F. D. Patterson took over the position, which he now holds.

One of the outstanding lights in the development of Tuskegee has been Dr. George Washington Carver, scientist and humanitarian, who is still at work in the laboratory of the school he helped make famous. There follows an article by him concerning his work:

Research Is Secret Of Carver's Work

By DR. GEORGE W. CARVER

Early in October, 1896, I arrived at Tuskegee Institute to take charge of its agricultural work.

WHAT I FOUND:

(1) Universally a nonproductive soil.
(2) Practically no vegetable gardens worthy of the name.
(3) Scarcely any fruits except the wild sorts, and 90 per cent of them going to waste.
(4) But little live stock of any kind, not even chickens.
(5) A thoroughly discouraged body of farmers without hope of anything better.
(6) Home ownership was a rarity.

MY PROBLEM:

To correct the above major problems demanded nearly or quite all of my time and strength, as there were so many angles of approach.

Group A—HOW WE BEGAN

The building up of wornout soils (nonproductive) constituted our first work. To get the farmers to see the ease and simplicity with which it could be done and put it into practice often required personal visits to the farmer's home, taking his tools, very often putting them in repair, and giving them an actual demonstration, and like any schoolmaster with experience, we stood by and instructed until they were able to do it. Each farmer was taught to analyze his soil physically with numerous examples of soils ideal for crop production, and soils partially or wholly unfit for crop production, also what to do to build it up with material on his own farm or near by. The museum will contain this group.

Group B—GARDENS

The value of a good garden was illustratively discussed. How to grow and prepare vegetables for the table and their relation to our health and happiness.

Group C—FRUITS

The above was true with reference to fruits, the drying, canning, pickling and preserving, were kept ever before the housewives when seasonable.

Group D—COMMERCIAL OR HOME SEEKERS GROUP

In working up the above information with reference to fruits and vegetables an entirely different phase appeared, a group destined to give correct information to anyone wishing to know what our soils are capable of producing. This group surprises the most skeptical visitor who is not acquainted with our responsive soils under intelligent farming methods as it does rather stagger the imagination when they look at our (so called) worn out soils and the huge vegetables and fruits that come off of them.

Group E—SOILS OF ALABAMA

But few people realize how rich the South is in soil types, and their special value in high crop production when intelligently handled.

Paints and Kalsomines. The value of our clays as interior finishes. Almost innumerable shades of Indian reds, raw and burnt siennas, Vandyke browns, ochres in several shades, lavender and pure white. The various mixtures from these basic colors give exquisite effects which never fail to please the most fastidious taste for charming pastel effects.

Oil Paints. Many of the dark reds, browns, yellows, make very satisfactory colors when freed from grit and ground in linseed oil or any of the various vehicles used in the manufacture of paints. They have fine covering qualities, flow from the brush easily and wear well. Spent crankcase oil from motors can be used with very good effect for farm houses of all kinds. Any strong drying medium mixed with the oil makes it more desirable as a paint as it dries poorly.

Stains. I doubt if there is any material that will make such a variety of colors for furniture and interior and exterior wood work, ranging in shades from the simplest dark mission to the more complex blues, greens, browns, yellows, orange and intermediate shades.

These are real stains and should not be classed with a dye. They have the very unusual quality of increasing in beauty and intensity with age. They sink deep into the week and become practically everlasting. (Specimens nearly 43 years old will be on exhibition. They are unsurpassed in richness).

Any of the ordinary vehicles can be used for mixing the dry pigments, from water, oils, neutral liquids, to the most powerful acids or alkalies, including some attractive colors made by using creosote as the vehicle. The crude creosote makes a very dark, rich set of colors with the various clays used as a pigment, while the refined creosote (which is light in color) gives a much wider range of colors of rich shades, bearing a close resemblance to paint in appearance, lasting qualities, and serves as a superior wood preservative.

China Clays. But few Alabamians fully realize what a wealth of choice ceramic clays we have, ranging from the coarser tile and jug types to the almost unbelievable snow whites for the making of rare and beautiful pottery.

Group F—BUILDING STONES

In this group the superior building and ornamental stones of the South will be shown. In this group a distinct surprise awaits any who are interested.

Group G—MINERALS

We believe a study of this group will give many suggestions to those interested in that type of commercial possibilities.

The above represents briefly and imperfectly a very small cross section of the museum. We hope to have every group so clearly installed that the student, seeking truth, will not fail to find even more than he anticipated. The business man in many capacities will find much that will prove guide posts along his way to success; and it is further hoped that many of just curious sightseers will become enlightened, inspired, and enthused to the point where he will see his fame and fortune in one of these trails, select it and make it an outstanding business success.

We shall be greatly disappointed if this collection is not added to from time to time, and that it does not render the highest service to all the people. Again I shall be even more greatly disappointed if the searchers for truth do not see in this vast collection much of the glory, majesty, and power of the Great Creator.

NEGROES WELCOME AIR TRAINING UNIT

Tuskegee Will Get First Corps With Promise of Others

By JOSEPH V. BAKER

Despite its feature of segregation, Negroes throughout the country welcomed the promise this week that Negro college men will be included in President Roosevelt's plan to provide experimental pilot training for 20,000 students.

According to a statement issuer by Congressman Arthur W. Mitchell, Negro Democrat, Chicago, Tuskegee Institute will be selected as the base for the Negro units which may participate in the program. The Chicago Congressman said that a branch of the service would be established at the Alabama school first, with the "possibility that other Negro colleges might be included at a later time."

The enthusiasm with which the move was hailed is due, largely, to the fact that Negroes have been studiously removed from practically all branches of the national military forces during the last 20 years. Under no circumstances have they been allowed to join aviation units; and naval service has been limited to menial duty below-decks.

WITH OTHER FORCES

The most severe blow dealt the group by the War Department was the gradual breaking up of the 10th Cavalry, composed entirely of Negroes, which had seen valiant service. The unit now has been broken completely and attached to other forces in the infantry. With the exception of a single unit now located at Fort Benning, Ga., the entire array of Negro soldiery which fought in the World War has disappeared.

Foremost among the schools which would be considered for units in addition to that at Tuskegee Institute are: Howard University, Washington, which is supported by Federal funds; Lincoln University, Chester county, Pennsylvania, which is now receiving aid from the Commonwealth; and Florida Agricultural and Mechanical. The decision to locate the first unit at Tuskegee was, no doubt, occasioned by the fact that the R. O. T. C. work there, now under the direction of Benjamin O. Davis, Jr., a Negro West Point graduate, is rated high in that field.

TWO APPOINTED

Two of the recently elected Republican Governors already have begun to make good their promises of positions of worth to Negroes. In Massachusetts, Governor Saltonstall named a Negro woman to his personal secretarial staff; while Michigan's Governor Fitzgerald has named a Negro to the State's Commission of Labor and Industry.

The Michigan Governor's appointment of Charles H. Mahoney, a leading Detroit attorney, was pointed out as being strategic in that he will have an opportunity to help reduce the Negro relief rolls by placing Negro workers in the industrial employment offered there. The position, which pays $5000 annually, is said to be the most influential ever given a Negro in that State.

Pennsylvania's Republican Governor, Arthur H. James, will receive early this week the formal request of Negroes for positions in his Administration, now little more than two weeks old. Through Republican State Chairman James F. Torrance the Republican State Negro Council meeting in Harrisburg yesterday outlined a score of top positions for Negro county leaders in the new regime. Most were positions held by that group during the Earle Administration.

PLEA FOR POSITION

Promised an Administration "free of racial discrimination" and one which will "seek the co-operation of all the people," Negro leaders assembled in Harrisburg from more than 20 of the State's largest counties expressed confidence that the James Administration will "have 80 per cent. of the Negro voters back into the Republican ranks before fall." In its second important meeting since the elections, the strong Negro organization again did not offer any candidate for the State Athletic Commission, despite the fact that several of that group are seeking the Philadelphia resident spot.

It did, however, emphasize its plea for a position "high in the councils" of the Administration in order to integrate Negroes into the scheme of things. A member of the State Licensing Board for Undertakers, a referee in Workmen's Compensation, a member of the Public Assistance Board, to replace Henry P. Cheatham, who represented the group during the Earle Administration; an inter-racial consultant to the Administration, and jobs in the State Highway and Revenue Departments were among the places sought by the council.

TUSKEGEE MAY GET AVIATION SCHOOL

TUSKEGEE, Alabama.—(Sp.)—Information has been received here that in connection with President Roosevelt's vast airplane building program and training of personnel for national defense has already been filed with Secretary of War Woodring, that Tuskegee Institute be designated as one of the educational institutions at which schools for training pilots and mechanics will be established.

LOUISVILLE, KY., JOURNAL

Asks Tuskegee Base

WASHINGTON — Representative Mitchell, (D. Ill.) only negro congressman, asked Secretary Woodring to choose Tuskegee Institute, negro college at Tuskegee, Ala., as one of the schools for training pilots and aircraft mechanics.

President Roosevelt has recommended that 20,000 be trained. Mitchell said that on a population basis one-tenth of them should be negroes.

He said Woodring promised consideration.

TUSKEGEE DESERVES MORE THAN IT RECEIVES

Another announcement for Tuskegee Institute finds that famous and useful school in a sound and healthy condition, but suffering nevertheless from the same ills that endowed institutions the land over are suffering from.

For a decade the living waters of philanthropists have been falling. The investments of institutions have declined in value along with the investments of individual citizens. Private philanthropists have been in no position to increase their gifts; on the contrary they have had to curtail their donations.

In consequence the revenues of Tuskegee Institute have been drastically reduced. It has been necessary for President F. D. Patterson to meet the situation by drastically curtailing the functions of Tuskegee Institute. The excisions he has made have been painful and unfortunate, but inescapable, and The Advertiser knows that his board of trustees has been pleased at his efficiency and courage in meeting the crisis.

It is deplorable that so powerful an agency for the advancement of our common civilization here in the Deep South should be crippled at this turning point in its history by the drying-up of its resources. But it is in the public interest, it is in the interest of Tuskegee Institute, for our people, white and black, to understand that Tuskegee Institute is not "rich." It is no longer easy prey for those that regard it as a good thing. It has become at last a public responsibility, even as from the beginning it has been a public benefaction. Since 1881 Tuskegee Insttiute has contributed richly to the people—the whole people of Alabama—without receiving anything in return except a nominal appropriation from the state and the lip service of white orators and white editorial writers.

If the inherent capacity of Tuskegee Institute to strengthen the bright pillars of civilization in Alabama is to be preserved, The Advertiser submits that the white people of Alabama must contribute more of their money to its support than in the past. Endowment funds are no longer equal to the demands upon them at Tuskegee, but the demands of our people white and black, upon the flowing wellsprings at Tuskegee are greater, not less, than they were in the lush days of the past.

It is, therefore, the opinion of The Advertiser that the legislature of Alabama should now consider its apparent duty to increase, and substantially, its appropriation for the support of Tuskegee Institute. We in Alabama cannot go on forever receiving and not giving!

Chinese Aviatrix Addresses 3,000 At Tuskegee Institute

She Asks Aid

TUSKEGEE INSTITUTE, (ANP)—Miss Hilda Yen, Chinese aviatrix who is flying over the United States on a goodwill tour in the interest of war-torn China, addressed an audience of 3,000 students, teachers and townfolk, white and colored, in Logan hall last Wednesday night. She was introduced by President Patterson.

Miss Yen's plane crashed near Montgomery, Ala., several days ago. Her appearance at Tuskegee was her first since her release from the hospital in Montgomery. She pilots her own plane.

Speaking irreproachable English Miss Yen explained many of the scenes of her film and pleaded for the maintenance of the Japanese boycott and moral and economic assistance for China.

Chicago-Tuskegee Club Backs Patterson; Raps Propaganda Recently Aimed at Institution

The Chicago Tuskegee club largest and pioneer Tuskegee Alumni group in the country, in its regular meeting Sunday afternoon, went on record as heartily endorsing the administration of Dr. F. D. Patterson, president of Tuskegee, and reaffirming its allegiance to the school. Resolutions were passed condemning the "unfavorable and untrue" publicity recently given the school and which, it was declared, was instigated by "selfish and irresponsible persons."

Claude A. Barnett, a trustee of the school, gave an intimate and factual account of conditions at the institution and outlined phases of Dr. Patterson's program. Other graduates who spoke were Robert R. Taylor, manager of the Rosenwald apartments; Capt. Charles C. Dawson, district supervisor of the NYA; Atty. Poindexter Orr, D. Cheeham, Amos Saunders, Everett Houser, J. Traylor and Atty. James A. Green.

Adopt Resolution

The resolutions adopted read:

"The Chicago Tuskegee club, composed of graduates and former students of Tuskegee Institute, believing in the principles of righteousness and sound education laid down at Tuskegee by our founder Booker T. Washington, and carried on by his successors, Dr. R. R. Moton and Dr. F. D. Patterson, do hereby affirm our faith in our alma mater; in the great good it has accomplished and is accomplishing in building men and women of character and usefulness to our race; and do hereby pledge our support and fealty to the Tuskegee program and commend in the highest degree the administration of President F. D. Patterson.

"We condemn in no uncertain terms the unfounded rumors which have been recently circulated by persons whose motives we do not fully comprehend. We realize that these are troublous times for private institutions which exist chiefly upon philanthropy. Our school, as well as Negro education generally, needs our support and not ill-founded condemnation.

Doing Notable Job

"Tuskegee is doing a notable job in adjusting its curriculum and its policy to meet the rapidly changing social and economic needs of the race.

"Therefore, be it resolved that;

"We urge Tuskegee graduates and former students and the public everywhere to retain their confidence in Tuskegee Institute and Dr. Patterson and in their great contribution which they are making to Negro life."

CHANGES SLATED AT NEGRO SCHOOL

Reorganization Program At Tuskegee Institute Are Announced

TUSKEGEE INSTITUTE, Ala.—President F. D. Patterson, who returned Saturday from a conference with the board of trustees, said in an interview recommendations had been drafted for reorganization of the program of instruction in keeping with modern trends in education and consistent with a curtailed income.

The recommendations include elimination of the high school courses leading to the bachelor of science degree in music; a two-year program in the training of secretaries and the school of nurse training. The recommendations also include development of the school of agriculture, the school of home economics, the school of mechanical industries, the school of education and the extension work in rural education.

President Patterson said inasmuch as all these fields are important and needed in a broad program of education, the existing need for the courses eliminated would be met elsewhere. He said county authorities are being asked to operate the high school in which the enrollment at present is largely local, some 64 per cent of the students living in Macon County.

An appropriation, he said, would be sought from the state in order to continue the very valuable nurse training school.

All the announced changes have been made under careful study for five years and have been made because of a continuing reduction in cash income. This reduction has come to a point that at present the income represents a little more than one-half that was expended during the peak year, 1931.

The reorganization is a crystallization of the Tuskegee Institute program in the fields of vocational and technical education to the end that the school founded by Booker T. Washington may continue to render regional and national service.

Scholarships and grants received from several foundations have for the past few years been contributed largely in support of the technical phases of the Tuskegee Program.

EDUCATION-1939
TUSKEGEE INSTITUTE, COMMENTS ON

Tuskegee, Negro College

By ERNIE PYLE

TUSKEGEE, Ala., March 28.—I've always wanted to see Tuskegee Institute. It is, as you know, the most famous school for Negroes in America.

Booker T. Washington founded it in 1881, nearly sixty years ago. It is a privately endowed institution, with no help from the taxpayers. It has become a model in Negro education.

I won't launch into a long description of what the place looks like. It looks, in fact, like any Midwestern State university.

It covers a lot of rolling ground; the campus is beautiful; there must be three dozen handsome brick buildings scattered around; streets and sidewalks wind about; there are dormitories and a stadium and gymnasium.

Many white visitors—businessmen, students, writers—come to visit Tuskegee. Consequently the institute has facilities for putting up visitors who have a purpose here.

There is not a white person in this whole school, even on the faculty. There are 1,150 students here; 680 boys and 470 girls. The faculty is large—about 250.

The biggest percentage of students is from the South, yet they do come from all over America and from nine foreign countries. The students on the campus are dressed like college students anywhere.

Discipline is more strict than in the ordinary college. There is no smoking on the campus. Boys can smoke in their rooms. Girls can't smoke at all. I saw an ash tray on the desk of only one faculty man.

Drunkenness and rowdyism don't go at all here. No student is allowed to have a car. Attendance at church, twice on Sunday and also on Wednesday evening, is compulsory. So is military drill.

When Booker T. Washington founded this school, no Negro who yearned for knowledge was turned away. The most ignorant, raggedy, barefoot boy could walk in and start learning.

But things have had to change. Today the student must have a certain amount of money for clothes and must have a high school education. As one official said:—

"The bulk are from our middle-class families, if you can say we have a middle class."

The tuition is $75 a year. Every student must work out at least half of his tuition. All must do manual labor in whatever course they are taking. Board and room cost only $20 a month one can be worked out. Practically all of the institute's daily labor is done by students.

The institute offers 41 separate trades. In two years you can get a "diploma"—a certificate of fitness in a trade. Or you can go on another two years and receive a bachelor of science degree. Almost any student is sure of a job at the end of two years in Tuskegee. Of last year's graduating class every single one was placed and working by September 1. There isn't a Tuskegee graduate of last year out of a job today.

Tuskegee has had three presidents. Booker T. Washington, the founder, presided until his death in 1915. Both he and Mrs. Washington are buried on the campus. Dr. Robert R. Moton served for twenty years and retired. He is president-emeritus.

Dr. Frederick D. Patterson has been president since 1935. He is a young man, big like a football player. Ten years ago President Patterson was a veterinary teacher in a small college in Virginia. He got an offer to transfer to Tuskegee.

"I guess you never pictured in your wildest moments that you'd be president of Tuskegee some day, did you?" I asked him.

"I certainly didn't," he said. "Such possibility never entered my head."

News Outside the Door

By J. Otis Swift

On sunny Sunday mornings from March 15 to April 15 the romantic vicinity of Boulder Bridge, Bronx Park, made beautiful by the care of the New York Botanical Garden folk, becomes a lure to ornithologists and amateur bird students from all over Greater New York and beyond.

The birds are coming back! After moon-lighted nights when the aerial pathways leading up the valleys from the south have been astir with returning migrants, they begin dropping down into Hemlock Forest, the Gorge of the Bronx, and along the mystic Fox Sparrow Hollow path.

The arrival of the first phoebe, twitching its tail and crying "Phoebe," about March 15; the meadow lark about February 20; the cowbirds with their glossy black bodies and coffee-colored heads, March 21; the field and [illegible] April 2; and the swamp sparrows running along the mud paths among alder, cornel, wild grape and nettle after April 4—added to those who came earlier—afford constant happiness to student and expert.

When a red-winged blackbird teeters on a dead ragweed stem, its shoulders flashing scarlet and buff against its glossy black, you can read human nature in the expressions of the bird lovers. The hungry-for-information amateurs, the enthusiastic help-the-beginners attitude of the Yosians; the don't-bother-me exclusive institutional atmosphere of the expert who thinks he knows all about birds and has no duty to the beginners—all are exhibited as glasses are leveled at the bird.

The bird lovers are a little world to themselves, and Boulder Bridge—where all the migrants pass—is their Mecca and their Paradise.

TUSKEGEE INSTITUTION REORGANIZES ITS PROGRAM; TO ABOLISH SOME SCHOOLS, EXPAND OTHERS

Tuskegee Institution, Ala. Mar. 23 (ANP)—President F. D. Patterson, who returned last week from New York where he conferred with members of the board of trustees, stated in a special interview that as a result of a recent meeting of the Southern Executive committee and the Finance committee of the trustee board of Tuskegee institute, recommendations had been drafted for the spring meeting of the board of April 1 at Tuskegee in which a definite plan is worked out for the reorganization of the program of instruction in keeping with modern trends in education and at the same time consistent with a seriously curtailed income.

The recommendations include elimination of the high school, the courses leading to the Bachelor of Science in Music Education, a two year program in the school of business for the training of secretaries the school of nurse training and the development of the schools of agriculture, home economics, mechanical industrials and education with the expansion of work in rural education as a major objective.

TUSKEGEE HEAD IS HONORED GUEST AT LINCOLN FUNCTION

NEW YORK.—(By James Byack for ANP)—Dr. Frederick Douglass Patterson, president of Tuskegee Institute, Tuesday night became the third head of that famed cultural center to receive the highest social distinction in the gift of the Republican party, when he took his place on the dais with 75 nationally prominent Americans as guest of honor at the 53rd annual Lincoln Dinner given the National Republican Club at the Waldorf Astoria Hotel here.

The previous Negro guests were Dr. Robert R. Moton and Booker T. Washington. Unanimously considered the most brilliant assembly ever gathered together to honor Lincoln, Patterson shared the dais with former President Herbert Hoover, six governors and two United States senators, all of whom spoke. Among others on the dais were a bevy of Republicans today prominently mentioned as presidential possibilities in 1940.

Unprecedented also was the two full hours of radio time made available for the occasion by all three national radio networks to bring the Lincoln celebration to every home in the land.

Besides the country's outstanding Republican solons, among the 1,500 who packed the grand ballroom of the hotel were many presidents of universities and other distinguished educators, bishops and prominent clergy, captains of finance and other distinguished personages from every state in the union.

Patterson sat between Colonel Theodore Roosevelt, Jr. and Colonel Andrew B. Humphrey, originators of the Lincoln dinners. He was also seen in serious conversation with Dr. James Rowland Angell, president-emeritus of Yale University who sat at Colonel Roosevelt's right.

In accepting the invitation extended by John Hopkins, chairman of the $25-a-plate Lincoln dinner committee, Tuskegee's president apparently had little conception of the widespread political speculation which his acceptance caused in the highest circles of both parties.

In honor of the occasion, the management of the Roosevelt Hotel here placed an elaborate suite at his disposal during his stay. An hour after his arrival, he was greeted by a roomful of reporters. They were quickly informed that the educator came to New York solely to honor Lincoln. He made clear that there were definitely no political implications connected with his presence at the Republican party's most important annual social function.

Patterson pointed out, however, that the members of his group throughout the nation were "cordially interested in the growing spirit of tolerance in America," and emphasized that "every movement in this direction will be beneficial to the entire nation."

As is the traditional custom at Lincoln dinners, Dr. Patterson was called upon at his suite by a member of the dinner committee and personally escorted to the Perroquet Room at the Waldorf where the other guests of honor were assembling.

During his visit, Patterson conferred with Dr. William Jay Schieffelin, chairman of Tuskegee's board, and other friends of the institute concerning the soon return to the airways of the world famous Tuskee Institute choir. He was also guest at a reception given in his honor by Colonel Arthur W. Little, nationally known retired colonel of the famed 369th Negro regiment and author of "From Harlem to the Rhine."

Tuskegee To Open Its 58th Year On Sept. 11

TUSKEGEE INSTITUTE—(SNS)—New students have been arriving daily on the campus of Tuskegee Institute for the past two weeks although, fall quarter classes do not begin until September 11. September 21 is the last day of registration for credit for the Fall Quarter.

All offices at the institute are working hours over time these days preparing for the heavy enrollment of freshmen and returning students.

Dr. I. A. Derbigny, dean of administration has an extra force preparing for the intensive testing program for the classification of the incoming students. The results of these tests which have been given over a period of years are being carefully compiled for a study that Dr. Derbigny will publish in the near future.

The school of education is entering upon the third year of experimentation in certain areas as a result of early findings from the testing program. Wm. A. Clark, director of the School of Education says these findings have been invaluable in the revision of Tuskegee's curricula that has resulted in the general college plan that is being inaugurated this year.

Prof. A. L. Turner, registrar with his staff is oiling the machinery for the registration of Tuskegee's fifteen hundred students. Every new student must be photographed. Must have a complete physical examination, be assigned to a Sunday School class, receive a meal ticket, an entertainment course ticket, pay his fees and have the class schedule approved. All male registrants must also be assigned to their company and battalion in the cadet regiment.

All operations of registration are concentrated in Logan Hall. Typewriters file cabinets, adding machines and business-like desks transform the huge gymnasium into temporary headquarters for treasurer, department heads, registrar, J. J. Flood, personnel director, fresh from a summer course at Ann Arbor, Michigan, is bubbling with ideas for the 1939 Orientation Week, seven days packed full of activities that are guaranteed to steep the newcomers in Tuskegee history and traditions. This program will include personally conducted tours about the campus, a free movie an acquaintance dance conference with Personal Advisers and special lectures.

President F. D. Patterson will extend his formal welcome to students and faculty at the regular Vesper service in the Institute Chapel on Sunday evening September 17.

Tuskegee Calls For Aid In Xmas Cheer For Poor

TUSKEGEE Ala., Nov. 10—Through a staff of experienced workers, Tuskegee institute is conducting a year-round program of important service to southern rural families whose most acute problem is low and uncertain income.

When settlements are made for the fall crops, there are always thousands of share-croppers and farm labor families who "didn't come out" and a large majority of this group are Race farmers. From harvest time until the meager advances are made for spring planting such families face their hardest struggle for existence, it is pointed out.

Christmas comes in the midst of this period and without some such service as Tuskegee institute renders, thousands of children in these homes would have nothing to remind them of the sacred holiday season.

For many years, devoted friends of the institution throughout the country have used Tuskegee as a medium through which they may send gifts to brighten these homes and warm the hearts of the children.

To carry on this work the school issues an appeal for donations of clothing, books, toys, candy, pictures, etc. Some friends prefer to send money with which to purchase gifts and in such instances the donation is spent as directed. Packages and letters may be addressed to F. D. Patterson, president, Tuskegee Institute, Ala.

The doctors extol it because of its easily digestible fat form, and gourmets for a special delicacy of flavor. Goat milk commands a premium price because of its sale to hospitals, but somehow has never become widely popular.

So far, Booth says, no one has needed persuasion when experimental goats have been offered. About 60 of the Tuskegee goats have been placed with various farm families in Alabama and Georgia. Records are kept on all of them.

This is another of those ingeniously simple contributions Tuskegee has habitually given to Alabama from its inception. Tuskegee's influence has brought a great deal of wealth to Alabama. A better fed, low income population will mean a healthier population — and that always means a higher ability to create wealth.

BACKSTAGE AT TUSKEGEE

Editor, The Journal: It was my good fortune recently to be stranded in Tuskegee, Ala., while on a business trip. Through the influence of one of the officials of the colored Government Hospital there, who had formerly spent 16 years in the Tuskegee Institute Hospital, we were taken backstage of the institute.

At 10:30 a. m. on a Sunday it was our pleasure to stand with the vice president of the institute and the lieutenant, a West Point graduate, son of the only colored colonel in the United States Army today, to review the troops as they passed, marching in perfect formation, to the tune of "Onward, Christian Soldiers," etc., en route to church. We followed them, and the tremendous crowd, including the 1,800 pupils and 260 members of the faculty, which had gathered into the beautiful cathedral of Gothic construction, with its famous stained glass chancel window, depicting the history and aspirations of the American Negro, as expressed in the religious folk music of the race, the Negro spirituals. Here we heard the famous Tuskegee Institute choir in splendid harmony, and a sermon on "Friendship."

We were then taken into Dorothy Hall to meet Dr. George W. Carver, the famous colored chemist, painter, musician, poet and philosopher, to announce our arrival. The visit had been prearranged, as the doctor had just returned from a trip to Washington, where the Roosevelt Medal of Recognition had been bestowed upon him. In a fine, thin voice he greeted us cordially, telling us that anyone who was a friend of the doctor with whom we had come to visit him was a friend of his, as he feels greatly indebted to him. I remarked that he didn't appear to be in need of any doctor's services, to which he replied: "As I tell the young folks who are training to carry on where I leave off in my work, 'I'm not as young as I used to be—I wasn't born yesterday.'"

We proceeded to Dr. Carver's museum and laboratory, located conveniently near. Here Joe Williams, of Columbus, Ga., a young graduate of the institute, took great pride in showing and explaining the many useful and beautiful discoveries Dr. Carver had given the world—the 300 by-products of the soybean and the sweet potato (the mucilage to be used on postage stamps in the near future, he tells us, will be made of sweet potatoes), the novel use for cotton in road building, the pottery, the pictures he has painted using only stains produced from Alabama clay on his finger tips. He has received recognition in European art circles and was elected fellow, Royal Society of Arts, London, in 1916.

As I left the institute, I felt as I had felt on viewing the Grand Canyon for the first time a few years ago—in the presence of the stupendous amounts offered him refusing him for money is God ad been he great country; visiting ER, ration.

BILLYWHISKERS GETS HIS DUE

Goats in Alabama are due to become respectable most any day now. Tuskegee dairy research workers have developed a hardy little goat that produces six quarts of milk a day and can subsist on a diet of briars and paper. This goat is not an expensive one and will be especially adapted to the needs of the small tenant or land-owning farmer.

Experimental work on these goats started a few years ago and has been under the direction of E. M. Booth of Tuskegee who once to an idle and somewhat foolish question about how much goats cost replied, "Anywhere from fifty cents to ten thousand dollars."

A ten thousand dollar goat must be some goat, but he might be worth the price. The price of the type of goat developed at Tuskegee from a highly bred Saanon, an ordinary Alabama goat will probably be somewhere near twenty dollars.

Goat milk has always been admired by doctors and a certain circle of gourmets.

Health Topic Of Program

Co-operating with the city of Phoenix in observing local health week, the Men's Group of Trinity Episcopal cathedral are devoting their regular Wednesday evening supper meeting to a program of health education. The program is scheduled for 6:30 oclock.

The state board of health and the Arizona Anti-Tuberculosis association are co-operating in the showing of two sound films, "The Benson Family," and "Let My People Live."

"Let My People Live," is an all-Negro cast picture, showing modern medical science bringing health to a family afflicted with tuberculosis. Rex Ingram, who played in "Green Pastures," makes this film fascinating to white audiences. The harmonious Tuskegee choir of 100 voices is used as a background, and professional actors and drama students of Tuskegee Institute support Mr. Ingram in this educational picture.

TUSKEGEE WILL HEAR ROOSEVELT

Speech Is One Of Many On President's Schedule For Next Few Months

WASHINGTON —(AP)— President Roosevelt's engagement schedule for the next few months, as tentatively outlined today, embraces one of the busiest travel itineraries of any comparable period in his administration.

He also hopes to go to San Francisco for the Golden Gate Exposition, but he will not make a decision until Congress adjourns. Altogether, he will add considerably to the 150,000 miles he has traveled since he became President.

His tentative schedule follows:

March 29—Goes to Warm Springs for a vacation and to dedicate a new school and hospital of the infantile paralysis foundation. During this trip he will motor to Alabama for a speech (date not set) before the Negro School at Tuskegee. He returns to Washington April 10.

April 14—Speaks at Mount Vernon to commemorate the 150th anniversary of George Washington's notification of his election as first president.

April 15—Attends Gridiron Dinner in Washington.

April 17—Throws out first ball at opening American League baseball game, in Washington.

April 28—Goes to Hyde Park, N. Y., home to receive the Crown Prince and Crown Princess of Norway.

April 30—Motors from Hyde Park to New York to open World's Fair. Returns to Hyde Park to receive the Crown Prince and Crown Princess of Denmark.

May 1 — Dedicates postoffice building at Rhinebeck, N. Y.

May 5—Receives President Somoza of Nicaragua at White House.

May 7—Eamon De Valera, American-born prime minister of Ireland, visits White House.

June 8 and 9—King and Queen of England will be White House guests and then be received at Hyde Park after going to fair June 10.

The president has been invited to address the union conference of Methodist churches at Kansas City April 26, but probably will send a message instead. He also has been asked to address the annual dinner of the United States Chamber of Commerce May 4 at Washington. He has this under consideration.

Tuskegee Reorganizes Its Program; To Abolish Some Schools and Expand Others

Will Eliminate High School Department; 60 Pct. Doing Grade Work Come from Macon County

Will Continue Nurse Training Program

TUSKEGEE INSTITUTE, Ala.—(ANP)—President F. D. An appropriation, he said, would

Science in Music and Education, a two-year program in the school of business for the training of secretaries, the school of nurse-training and the development of the schools of agriculture, home economics, mechanical industries and education with the expansion of work in rural education as a major objective.

All the changes stated have been under careful study for at least five years and have been made because of a continuing reduction in cash income during the past five years. This reduction has come to a point that at present the income represents a little more than one-half that expended during the peak year, 1931. The reorganization is a crystalization of the Tuskegee program in the fields of vocational and technical education to the end that the school founded by Booker T. Washington may continue to render through the years a regional and a national service.

President Patterson expressed the hope that since all these fields are important and needed in a broad program of education, the existing need for the offerings eliminated will be met elsewhere. He stated that local county authorities are being asked to operate the high school in which the enrollment at present is largely local; 64 per cent of the students enrolled living in Macon county.

Scholarship aid and grants received from several foundations have for the past few years been contributed largely in support of the technical phases of the Tuskegee program.

Dr. Patterson stated that since rumors of the possible elimiation of the nurse-training school had got abroad ,numerous letters had been received from all sections of the country, giving evidence of the growing demand for highly trained personnel in vocational agriculture, in extension service and for those preparing to be teachers in agricultural colleges and to fill positions as agricultural specialists who will be concerned with federal resettlement and agricultural conservation programs.

Outstanding developments are planned in connection with the agricultural program to meet

The work in home economics has been enriched and broadened by the addition of the department of commercial dietetics, which, though but three years old, has received the endorsement of the American Hotel association and has been unable to meet the heavy demands for graduates to take jobs in commercially operated food establishments.

The trustees, although they regret that Tuskegee has found it necessady to make any curtailments whatever in its broad program of education, realize that many of the things for which the institution has worked and striven for more than a half century are now on the way up toward a splendid fulfilment. They feel that it is not only sound education, but that it is in the protection of the interests of the work that Tuskegee has determined to continue and promote, that its energies and resources be conserved for concentration in fewer fields.

Menrie Smith, principal of Ashland colored school, and wife, Mrs. Othelia Smith, were too happy to have been accompanied by the students and patrons, also teachers, Miss Artie G. Burney, and Mrs. Amanda Scott, on the trip to Tuskegee.

Leaving Ashland we went by way of Dadeville, arriving at Tuskegee Institute at 10 o'clock. On our arrival we were greeted by Mr. Palmer, the registrar of visitors at the Institute. He arranged the observation trip for us about the campus, in a very courteous way.

The very name Tuskegee Normal and Industrial Institute is synonymous of the great spirit and leader, Dr. Booker T. Washington.

The guide for our party, Alexander Jordan, directed us from building to building, where we saw students and teachers in action. Space will not permit us to speak of the many trade buildings we visited where we saw the materialized vision of Dr. Washington. Metal works, shoe making shop, machine shop, brick making, truck farming, dairy and poultry farms were among the places we observed.

I can say for our race group, the spirit and ideal emphasized at Tuskegee Institute will go far toward solving the Negro racial economic, industrial and educational problems.

We are proud to begin the growth of the Tuskegee Institute spirit among some of the students and patrons of Ashland. We are hoping the industrial, economic and educational spirit that were observed at Tuskegee Normal and Industrial Institute by our party will grow until Ashland and all of Clay county will get the Tuskegee spirit for better conditions.

Dr. F. D. Patterson, president of Tuskegee Institute has the full cooperation of white citizens North and South in his work at Tuskegee. It was by noble spirited white philanthropists that the late Dr. Booker T. Washington was able to establish and build the Institute for Negro uplift.

Therefore it's true that if the Negroes are to do well in any local community it will be because the white citizens take interest and helpful part in the Negro's welfare. It is true of Ashland and Clay county. If the colored people are to become useful citizens and a credit to the community and county or nation it will be made possible by the leading white citizens who can and we hope will help us change the deplorable conditions under which Negroes live and exist.

We again express thanks for space to say these few words for sympathy and help.

Tuskegee Alumni Observe Anniversary of Founder

TUSKEGEE INSTITUTE, Ala.—Members of the Tuskegee local alumni association together with faculty members, students and townspeople, observed the 24th anniversary of the passing of Booker T. Washington, founder and first president of Tuskegee Institute, at a sunrise prayer service conducted at his grave here Tuesday, November 14.

All day long scores of friends of the founder and of the Institute, white and colored, came from all sections of Macon County and participated in the observance. They placed flowers on his grave and paused long enough to gaze upon the bronze statue of the man who made tilling the soil as popular as writing a poem and making useful articles with skilful hands as dignified as writing a book. Tuskegee Wants to Retain Motor Traffic

"It has come to the attention of this newspaper that there is a move on foot by the citizens of Tallassee and Wetumpka to divert the Atlanta-Montgomery traffic via the above-named cities when the new bridge under construction at Tallassee is complete," says the Tuskegee News. "The citizens of Wetumpka and Tallassee claim that the route they propose is a more scenic route and of course we disagree with them. For as long as the writer can remember, this traffic has always been directed through Tuskegee, which is a more direct route and this route offers scenery and points of interest that we feel are equal to any to be found on any route in Alabama. The Atlanta-Montgomery highway, through Tuskegee, passes near the Tuskegee Institute, the largest institution of higher learning for colored citizens to be found in the nation. Tuskegee offers hotel accommodations for the traveling public unsurpassed in any town, regardless of size.

"The route through Tuskegee is direct, no winding through towns with narrow streets and obstacles of hindrance to traffic. We know that, by the proposed route, under present conditions, the thoroughfares offered would be very inadequate to care for the vast amount of motor traffic that travels between Montgomery and Atlanta every day. We feel that, if the highway department of the state will make an adequate survey of existing conditions that no change would be considered."

A Tribute To Tuskegee Institute By One Whose Eyes Are Opene

EDITOR'S NOTE: The following account of a trip to Tuskegee Institute by Lillian Singer of the Veteran's Administration, Atlanta, Ga., is reprinted from the ATLANTA JOURNAL of Thursday, Nov. 30, 1939.

IT was my good fortune recently to be stranded in Tuskegee, Alabama, while on a business trip. Through the influence of one of the officials of the colored Government Hospital there, who had formerly spent 16 years in the Tuskegee Institute hospital, we were taken backstage of the institute.

At 10:30 a. m. on a Sunday it was our pleasure to stand with the vice president of the institute and the lieutenant, a West Point graduate, son of the only colored colonel in the United States Army today, to review the troops as they passed, marching in perfect formation, to the tune of "Onward, Christian Soldiers," etc. enroute to church. We followed them, and the tremendous crowd, including the 1,800 pupils and 260 members of the faculty, which had gathered into the beautiful cathedral of Gothic construction, with its famous stained glass chancel window, depicting the history and aspirations of the American Negro, as expressed in the religious folk music of the race, the Negro spirituals. Here we heard the famous Tuskegee Institute choir in splendid harmony, and a sermon on "Friendship."

We were then taken into Dorothy Hall to meet Dr. George W. Carver, the famous colored chemist, painter, musician, poet and philosopher, to announce our arrival. The visit had been prearranged, as the doctor had just returned from a trip to Washington, where the Roosevelt Medal of recognition had been bestowed upon him. In a fine, thin voice he greeted us cordially, telling us that anyone who was a friend of the doctor with whom we had come to visit was a friend of his, as he feels greatly indebted to him.

I remarked that he didn't appear to be in need of any doctor's services, to which he replied: "As I tell the young folks who are training to carry on where I leave off in my work, 'I'm not as young as I used to be—I wasn't born yesterday'."

We proceeded to Dr. Carver's museum and laboratory, located conveniently near. Here Joe Williams, of Columbus, Ga., a young graduate of the institute, took great pride in showing and explaining the many useful and beautiful discoveries Dr. Carver had given the world—the 300 by-products of the soybean and the sweet potato (the mucilage to be used on postage stamps in the near future, he tells us, will be made of sweet potatoes), the novel use for cotton in road building, the pottery, the pictures he has painted using only stains produced from Alabama clay on his finger tips. He has received recognition in European art circles and was elected fellow, Royal Society of Arts, London, in 1916.

As I left the institute, I felt a I had felt on viewing the Grand Canyon for the first time a few years ago—in the presence of this great old man who says, in refusing the stupendous amounts offered him for his formulas, etc., "I cannot accept money for this, it is not my work; it is God working thru me"—that I had been nearer to God than in any of the great cathedrals of Europe or this country, which I have had the pleasure of visiting.

Tuskegee Institute Prepares High Honor For Its Founder

TUSKEGEE INSTITUTE, ALA., March 27.—(AP)—This nationally recognized negro school, Tuskegee Institute, for many years a leading exponent of practical industrial training for members of the negro race, laid plans today for commemoration of the life and works of its founder, Booker T. Washington.

Figures high in negro educational, economic and political affairs will take part in a two-day celebration starting next Saturday, April 1, and ending with a Founder's Day observance the following day, Sunday.

Representative Arthur Mitchell, of Illinois, a native of Alabama and one-time student at Tuskegee and office boy to Washington, will deliver the Founder's Day address.

Washington, a former slave, described by friends as "believing that his people could not be free intellectually as long as they were enslaved economically," started Tuskegee, a co-educational institute, in a little church 57 years ago with 30 pupils and himself the only teacher.

From that humble beginning has grown an institution of 1,700 students from 33 different states and four foreign countries. The faculty now numbers 262 highly trained men and women, and there are 110 buildings, large and small, dotting the more than 3,500 acres of campus.

Washington died in 1915, and observance of Founder's Day began the following year. Since that time distinguished men of all races and walks of life, including two former presidents, William Howard Taft and Herbert Hoover, have addressed the Founder's Day session.

Those assembled this year will hear retold the story of Washington, who served "not only his own race but all races."

A few accomplishments credited to him aside from the founding of the Institute are the National Negro Business League, the Negro's Farmers' Conference, and the National Negro Health Week. Dates for observance of the latter coincide with the Founder's Day celebration, but continue throughout the first week of April with health programs arranged throughout the country.

Following Washington's death his life-long friend, Robert R. Moton, was named president of Tuskegee and under his leadership various phases of higher education were added to the school's curriculum. Today it is possible to obtain the degree of bachelor of science in nine different subjects, while diplomas are given in four others.

Dr. Moton became president emeritus in 1935, Dr. Fred D. Patterson taking over the presidency.

Under Dr. Patterson's leadership the school has continued to stress need of improved farming, better health and more wholesome rural life. Every effort is made to keep negroes in the South, and at lines of work for which they are best fitted.

In addition Dr. Patterson devotes much of his time to building "an abiding good will between the races, beyond the confines of the college campus into the remote sections of the rural South."

NEGRO TUSKEGEE CROWD HEARS MITCHELL

Return To Education Type Of Booker Washington Urged By Speaker

TUSKEGEE, Ala.— (AP) —Representative Arthur W. Mitchell (D., Ill.) today had warned fellow Negroes of "too great a tendency among us to cling to the old idea that the purpose of our education is to free us from what we term unpleasant toil."

Mitchell spoke at a Founders Day program at Tuskegee Institute, established by the slavery-born Booker T. Washington 58 years ago, and said there was "a need to return to the Booker Washington type of education."

"This age demands," he asserted, "that we think seriously of our own problem, that we take into account the fact that the educated Negro must not only be a consumer, but must be a producer. We ought to take special delight in the wonderful record made by our own Dr. (G. W.) Carver, who, by his scientific research, experiments and work, has added materially to the scientific accomplishments of our country . . .

"Notwithstanding the fact that we have been able to erase a very large percentage of our illiteracy, increase our numbers from 6,000,000 to 15,000,000, increase our wealth from a few thousand dollars to more than $1,000,000,000, we are still a dependent people, largely wrapped up in poverty, and helpless in a large degree in the matter of self-support.

". . . There is too great a tendency among us to cling to the old idea that the purpose of our education is to free us from what we term unpleasant toil and to set up an environment where there will be little or no occasion for real struggle and where the desirable things of life will be so accessible and easily reached that the days of real struggle will practically be over.

"Many of us still think that once we can graduate from some accredited school our problem will be solved. Such is not the case."

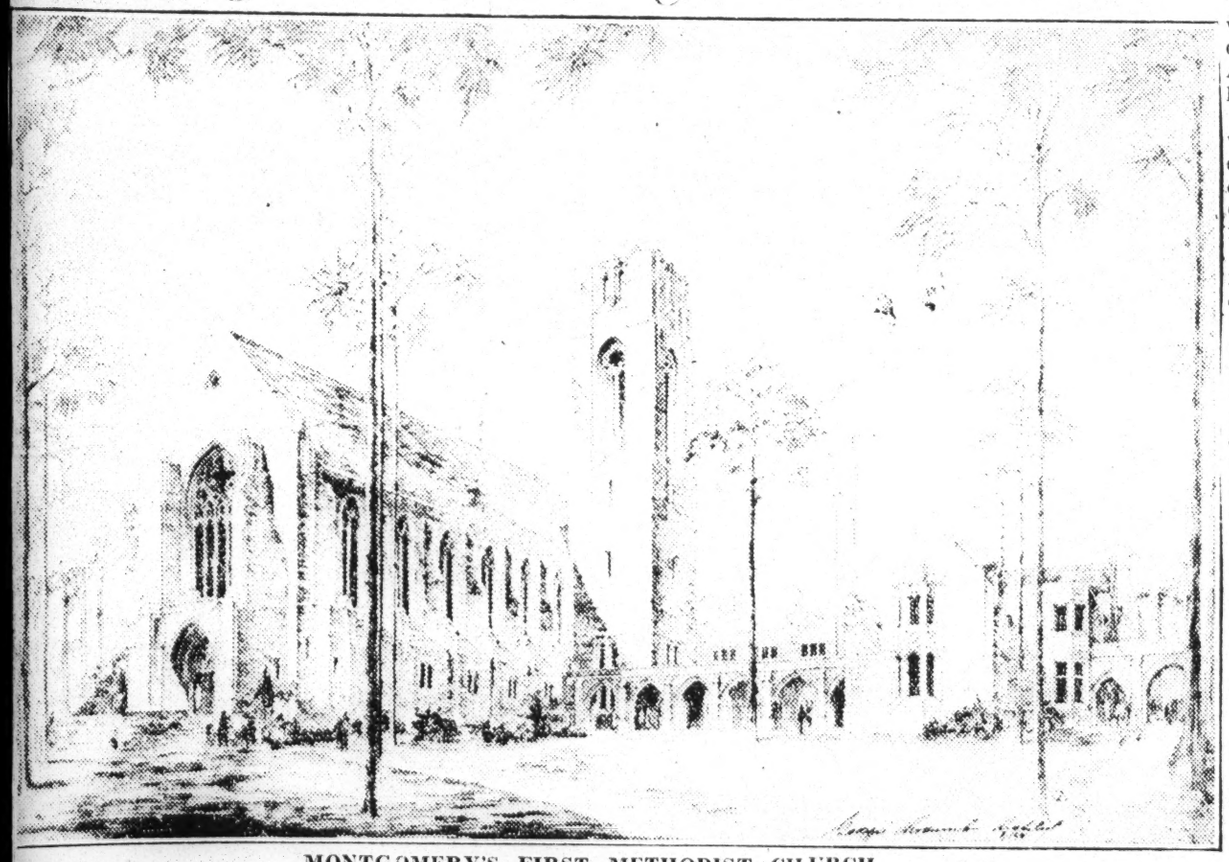
Tuskegee Choir To Sing For Church Fund



MONTGOMERY'S FIRST METHODIST CHURCH

First Methodist Women Sponsoring Concert Tuesday Night

By BERTHA LOYS GILBERT

On Tuesday evening Montgomerians will again have the pleasure of hearing the famous Tuskegee choir sing at the city auditorium. The concert under the sponsorship of the women of the First Methodist Church as a benefit for the building fund for the new church, furnishes a two-fold pleasure for the people of the city, that of the unique experience of hearing the Tuskegee choir sing negro spirituals as no other choir on earth sings them and in addition affording the privilege of contributing substantially to the erection of the beautiful Methodist Cathedral on Park Avenue, Cloverdale. This Cathedral when completed will be not only a shrine for worship but it will be an artistic expression, a heritage for future generations, a monumental achievement for Montgomery, Alabama, and the South.

The noble dream of this beautiful structure now called Alabama's Methodist Cathedral, though resting on tradition has been quickened by a revitalizing faith and a desire for progress and service. The present edifice in course of construction is in perpetuation of the Old Court Street Church which stood for nearly 100 years on the site now occupied by the new postoffice building.

Formed in 1829

It was in September, 1829, that the Court Street Church was formally organized. The Rev. Benjamin Houghton of Mississippi Conference was the first pastor. The building in which the first meetings were held was the only house of worship in the city at that time. In 1830 the small congregation of Methodists purchased from the other interested groups the sole possession of the building. Several times through the years small buildings were razed and larger ones erected on the same spot to meet the needs of the growing congregation.

The imposing building dedicated by Bishop George F. Pierce on March 3, 1856 in what became the heart of Montgomery's business area, with its single spire stood, a land mark in the city, until the early part of 1931 when the property was sold to the Federal government for a postoffice site. The old building was razed and the Court Street Church entered a new era of progress and service.

It was under the pastorate of Dr. John W. Frazer that the new church building enterprise was launched involving the removal to Park Avenue, Cloverdale, and the change of name, though not identity. This is the fourth building enterprise undertaken by this church in its history of more than a century.

Dr. C. S. Mackey followed Dr. Frazer in advancing the erection of the new church and it is being carried to completion under the leadership of Dr. Oscar E. Rice, the present pastor.

Loyalty and Devotion

There is a spirit of loyalty, devotion and cooperation in the erection of this handsome church building not unlike the spirit that dominated the builders of the Cathedrals of Europe. In the energy and perseverance, of both the men and women of the congregation, there is manifested a labor of love for a cause of which "the house made with hands" is merely a symbol.

The Methodist Cathedral is a design of classic beauty. The architecture is orthodox Gothic in every detail throughout the main nave, the tower, the seven assembly chapels, 25 classrooms and church school offices; a nursery, kitchen, banquet hall and church parlors; a church office, pastor's study and choir rooms, four stairways and corridors. A heating plant is included and ample facilities for every need of a modern church. The building is of solid masonry. The wall stones are sandstone from six quarries in Alabama and Tennessee. All trimmings are of white Indiana limestone.

In the scheme which is planned with skill and taste there are numerous impressive memorials represented both in the beautiful assembly chapels and in the windows. The rose window in the chancel gable is similar, except in size, to the famous rose window in the Cathedral of Rheims.

The symbolism of the front double door is taken from Sargent's masterpiece "The Dogma of Redemption" in the Public Library in Boston which represents Christ with outstretched arms, Adam, the father of man, and Eve, the mother of all living. The symbolism on the church entrance is taken from the pedestal of this masterpiece where a stork is represented with its beak in its own breast to get a drop of blood to nourish its young, symbolic of the sacrifice of Christ. This is worked out on the church door in tracery of white limestone. The other door of the main entrance is symbolic of Resurrection and is represented by the Phoenix rising from the flame, renewing itself.

Difficulties Overcome

Difficulties seemingly insurmountable have beset the congregation of the church, including at one time a complete wreck of the building due to accidental explosion; yet day after day, week after week, with an earnestness as if "building for the eye of God," the work has gone steadily forward. Difficulties have been transformed into opportunities and now the day is in sight when the edifice will be completed.

Dr. Rice, pastor of the church, said:

"Now we can see across the valley. Three years ago there appeared in the dim, distant future a glorious vision of a completed church in all its classic beauty. 'Tis true that vision was somewhat clouded with the haunting darkness of difficulty, but it was also lighted by an undying hope. That light has finally prevailed over the darkness and today the vision is clear and distinct. Three years ago there lay between us and the cherished vision a deep valley of forbidding discouragement. It some times seemed like a yawning chasm of impossibility. At such times we all but wondered if that inspired vision had faded into a mere pipe-dream. But we can now see across the valley....that chasm has been bridged by the dauntless courage of a people who will not fail. That fadeless ideal is now being wrought into the reality of a finished task."

Scores of persons have contributed to the building fund but there is much to be done yet in financing the completion of the church, it is explained. "Every member of the church a contributor" is the adopted slogan. The women's committee under the leadership of Mrs. Fitzhugh Lee, is one of the working units that is undaunted and untiring in its efforts to consummate the dream of a finished shrine of worship by next Thanksgiving. In presenting again the Tuskegee Choir the women of the First Methodist Church are furnishing hundreds of Montgomerians an opportunity to "share in the building of a cathedral" and at the same time to share a spiritual experience and artistic pleasure in listening to a program of negro spirituals sung by the people who made them.

'Tuskegee Spirit' Saves the Visitor From Feeling Out of Place on Campus

Touring With Ernie Pyle

Before Ernie Pyle, Scripps-Howard roving reporter, visited Houston, he made a trip into the Old South. Here is another of his articles about the personalities of that section.

By ERNIE PYLE
Scripps-Howard Roving Reporter

TUSKEGEE, Ala., March 17.—Before coming here, I had a misconception of Tuskegee Institute. I thought it was a school of higher learning; a Harvard of the Negro race.

I couldn't have been more wrong. Booker T. Washington started it as a trade school, and a trade school it still is. It teaches Negroes to work.

Ernie Pyle

I have known little about Booker T. Washington. But his spirit is still around here, and in just a couple of days you "get it."

Booker T. Washington never thought the Negro race should consider itself equal in all things with the white race. He said, "It is important and right that all privileges of the law be ours, but it is vastly important that we be prepared for the exercise of these privileges."

That's where Tuskegee stands today. It doesn't put any phoney high-toned ideas into students heads. It wants only to prepare them to work, diligently and honestly, and enlarge their characters generation after generation, until they are capable of being a real and natural part of the civilization into which they were thrown so suddenly, unwilling and bewildered.

Tuskegee is succeeding. On our first evening here I took a walk around the campus before supper. And to my astonishment every student I met, boy or girl, spoke to me.

Later I asked if the students were instructed to do this. They said no, it was just an old Tuskegee custom, and the students pick it up the minute they come. Friendliness and courtesy, they are taught, will help them in life after they leave here.

For two days I have been hot-footing it around here from 7 a.m. till late at night. I've visited departments by the score. I've talked with instructors and students and deans till I'm out of breath.

And the thing that impressed me most is this: In not one instance has anybody made me aware that he is black and I am white. You almost forget it here.

We went last night to the gymnasium to see the basketball games. The gymnasium was packed. We were the only white people there. Throughout the game I talked (when it was possible to be heard) with the Negro girl who sat next to me. We talked as two people would anywhere.

Nobody in that whole gymnasium ever made us conscious, either by staring or by over-attention, that we were whites among blacks. We were doing them no favor by being there, yet we were sincerely welcome.

I talked frankly with Pres. Frederick F. Patterson about it. He calls it the "Tuskegee spirit." But whatever you call it, it is something that Negroes and too-few whites ever acquire.

As most of us know Negroes in our daily lives, they are either in lowly jobs and "keep their place," as we like to say, or else they are "educated" Negroes with an I'm-as-good-as-you-are chip on their shoulder.

Those two attitudes don't exist at Tuskegee. The Negroes here, both faculty and students, treat you exactly as one gentleman treats another.

If all the Negroes in America could come to Tuskegee, and if all the white people could go to a similar school that taught the dignity of association that Tuskegee teaches, how much greater harmony there could be between our two races.

And that brings us up to a point that is grave. Tuskegee is in financial trouble. The interest from its endowments has dropped off. Donations have fallen. The huge plant of Tuskegee is more than the income can carry.

Last year the great Negro school was $23,000 in the red. And they had to take the heart-breaking step of dipping into their permanent investments to pay expenses. There is alarm and fear throughout Tuskegee.

Curtailment is being ordered. The Nursing School will have to be dropped. This means not only stopping one of Tuskegee's most practical courses, but it means also that many Negro sick people from these parts will have no place to go.

Tuskegee doesn't mind begging. Other schools do. And Tuskegee was started and grew to what it is today through the almost inspired begging of Booker T. Washington.

School officials have cast aside any plans for expansion. All they want is the money to keep running. For Tuskegee to slide back after 60 wonderful years is tragedy.

They'll need $50,000 to break even next year. The mere thought of $50,000 scares me to death. But it's just chickenfeed to some people. How about it, somebody?

"No man, black or white, from North or South, shall drag me down so low as to make me hate him."

BOOKER WASHINGTON'S words on Keck's statue of him at Tuskegee may have been noted by President Roosevelt there last Thursday. As Tuskegee celebrates Founders Day this week, Mr. Roosevelt and all the others who participate might properly recall the words and the fact that this greatest of all Negro educational institutions owes its origin to the common ideal of a Southern white man and a Southern Negro. Not all the money that comes to the Southern Negro from the North, not all the social and political recognition that go to him in the North, are worth as much to him as the affection and cooperation that he receives and must continue to receive from the decent white people of the South. It was upon this affection and cooperation that Booker Washington based his statesmanship. He would not hate, and he knew that decent white men would not hate.

George W. Campbell, a Tuskegee banker, was the white man, and Lewis Adams, a mechanic and ex-slave, the black one, who joined in petitioning authorities at Hampton Institute in May, 1881, to start a normal school for Negroes in Alabama and in securing a charter from the state of Alabama for such a school. Out of that came the Tuskegee Institute of today.

Conversant as he is with the ways of the South, even the president may have been puzzled if he read in Alabama newspapers the advertisements of a concert to be given Monday evening in the Birmingham Municipal Auditorium by Marian Anderson, the Negro singer who was denied Constitution Hall in Washington. But at Tuskegee they could have told him that in this same auditorium in this same Deep South city two years ago the Civic Symphony Orchestra featured a "Negro Folk Symphony No. 1" written by Tuskegee's Director of Music Dawson, and that Director Dawson and other members of his race were seated in a box at the performance, and that when the orchestra concluded the playing of his great symphony the whole audience, white and black, stood up and applauded the artist.

Whatever the explanation of the refusal of Constitution Hall to Marian Anderson, we, for one, cannot believe it reflects an antipathy for the Negro among the membership of the Daughters of the American Revolution or a willingness to deny recognition to genuine artists without regard to race or class. We believe the Daughters must be too mindful of the part played in American history by Negroes for that. We believe they must remember too well the 5,000 Negroes who fought for America in the very revolution whose name they bear. We believe they know too well the story of Crispus Attucks, the Negro whose blood was the first spilled for America in that revolution.

Crispus Attucks was the leader of the mob which precipitated the "Boston Massacre." There is a monument to him on Boston Common, unveiled in 1888. "Almost a giant in stature," according to John Adams, he led a band of 50 or 60 men on the evening of March 5, 1770, in protest against British injustices and was killed when the band encountered a group of British troops. Some historians have argued that Attucks was an Indian, others that he was of mixed Indian and Negro blood, but in most accounts he is described as a mulatto and is supposed to have been owned by Deacon William Browne, of Framingham, Mass.

There are many respects in which the South needs to mend its ways with its vast Negro population. But there are few respects in which it can mend them much by imitating the North's way. The advantage belonging to the Negro in the South over the Negro in the North is that in the South, in spite of all the frictions and problems, the white men like him. In the North, no matter what equalities they pretend to give, they don't like him.

* * *

The familiar rumor that Frank Dixon is backing Paul McNutt for president is put into print by Newsweek. Whatever Gov. Dixon's original interest, he has stated more than once recently that he is looking to no particular candidate but solely to Southern delegations prepared to bargain for the South. In Montgomery last week when asked categorically if he was for McNutt, he said no. When asked if he was against McNutt, he said no again, insisting that he was for delegations pledged only to the South. The governor understands well, we are sure, that no such united Southern front as he proposes is possible if delegations are either for or against anybody—whether the person be McNutt or Roosevelt or someone else—and whether the advocacy or opposition be open or secret. Unless, of course, a Southern leader is selected to receive the first votes of the delegations and deliver them later in the best interests of the South.

It seems now that few, if any, of the Southern states are going to be willing to send uninstructed delegations. They are going to instruct for their own or nearby favorite sons. But this should not prevent the formation of the Southern front to which Gov. Dixon has given so fine an interest.

TUSKEGEE INSTITUTE, COMMENTS ON

Wilmington, N. C. Morning Star

"No man, black or white, from north or south, shall drag me down so low as to make me hate him."

WASHINGTON'S WORDS

Booker Washington's words, engraved on Keck's statue of him at Tuskegee Institute, may have been noted by President Roosevelt when he visited there last Thursday. As Tuskegee celebrated its Founders day last week, Mr. Roosevelt and all others who participated might properly have recalled the words and the fact that this greatest of all negro educational institutions owes its origin to the common ideal of a southern white man and a southern negro. Not all the money that comes to the southern negro from the north, not all the social and political recognition that go to him in the north, are worth as much to him as the affection and co-operation he receives (and must continue to receive) from the decent white people of the south. It was upon this affection and co-operation that Booker Washington based the statesmanship of his people. He would not hate, and he knew that decent white men would not hate.

START OF TUSKEGEE

George W. Campbell, a Tuskegee banker, was the white man, and Lewis Adams, a mechanic and ex-slave, the black one, who joined in petitioning authorities at Hampton Institute in May 1881 to start a normal school for negroes in Alabama and in securing a charter from the state of Alabama. Out of that came the Tuskegee Institute of today.

NEGRO MUSIC

Conversant as he is with the ways of the south, even the President may have been puzzled when he was in Alabama last week if he read the advertisements there of a concert to be given in the Birmingham Municipal auditorium by Marian Anderson, the negro singer who was denied Constitution hall and the Central High school auditorium in Washington. But at Tuskegee they could have told him that in this same auditorium in this same deep south city two years ago the Civic Symphony orchestra featured a "Negro Folk Symphony No. 1" written by Tuskegee's Director of Music Dawson, and that Director Dawson and other members of his race were seated in a box at the performance, and that when the orchestra concluded the playing of his great symphony the whole audience, white and black, stood up and applauded the artist.

CRISPUS ATTUCKS

Whatever the explanation of the refusal of Constitution hall to Marian Anderson, we, for one, cannot believe it reflects an antipathy for the negro in the rank and file of the Daughters of the American Revolution or a willingness to deny recognition to genuine artists without regard to race or class. We believe the Daughters must be too mindful of the part played in American history by negroes for that. We believe they must remember too well the 5000 negroes who fought for America in the very revolution whose name the Daughters bear. We believe they know too well the story of Crispus Attucks, the negro whose blood was the first spilled for America in that revolution.

LED MOB

Crispus Attucks, according to the Dictionary of American Biography, was the leader of the mob which precipitated the "Boston Massacre." There is a monument to him on Boston Common, unveiled in 1888. "Almost a giant in statute," according to John Adams, he led a band of 50 to 60 men from Dock Square to the present State street on the evening of March 5, 1770, in protest against British injustices and was killed when the band encountered a group of British troops and shots were exchanged. Some historians have argued that he was an indian, others that he was of mixed indian and negro blood, but in most accounts he is described as a mulatto and is supposed to have been owned by Deacon William Browne, of Framingham, Mass.

The South Breaks Its Shackles

Facts and opinions obtained for The Christian Science Monitor on a 4,400-mile tour of eleven Southern States indicate what Southerners are thinking about their regional problems and progress. These Southern views were presented in a series of twelve articles under the title "The South Breaks Its Shackles."

No. 9.

Tuskegee, Ala.—A bronze statue of Booker T. Washington, the great negro educator, faces the main driveway of the Tuskegee Institute campus here. It shows the founder of the school lifting a shroud off a strong, muscular man, who is crouched to earth beneath toil, looking up as if to see for the first time a light or star he had never seen before. The monument inscription says of Booker T. Washington:

He lifted the veil of ignorance from his people and pointed the way to progress through education and industry.

How high has this veil been lifted in the South? How well have Booker T. Washington's ideal been carried out? What of the negro of the South today—a minority race in a democratic country in an age characterized for the rapid spread of education, industry and communication?

If one were to stay on the Tuskegee campus to answer these questions, he could answer well. Tuskegee today under the leadership of its president, Dr. Frederick D. Patterson, is following the ideal of the founder expressed in his words:

"We shall prosper in proportion as we learn to dignify and glorify labor and put brains and skill into the common occupations of life."

"We here at Tuskegee," Dr. Patterson says, "try to teach the student a trade thoroughly. We are debunking the idea to a great extent of teaching the colored boy and girl subjects which do not enable them to meet life. A student in learning a trade should do things over and over again. The trade should become a part of him. He must actually know what he is doing."

Nearly 50 Trades Taught.

Nearly 50 trades are taught at Tuskegee. For instance, the school maintains a completely modern printing shop. The instructor in charge reports that the shop cannot supply the demand for operators of typesetting machines. The plant prints all of the material used by the school, including a newspaper, while training the students.

"We try to tie the shop work to production to turn out things useful to the school," Dr. Patterson says. "We do not maintain equipment merely for the student to play around with. We keep production in mind in planning courses. Our program is flexible, and we are fitting it to the demands of the day."

The institute maintains a farm where agriculture is taught. Another department teaches boys how to become bricklayers — or plumbers — or mechanics, possibly civil engineers. Girls are given courses in domestic service, nursing, clerical work. The teaching field takes many Tuskegee graduates.

In the beautiful Tuskegee Chapel, brilliantly stained glass windows tell of the struggles of the race in terms of its songs, its "spirituals." One gains the impression at Tuskegee that many of these struggles are being overcome.

Unfortunately the Tuskegee campus does not spread all over the entire South. The institute's influence is great. But just beyond the gates of the campus, the problems begin—the veil has not been lifted, and the immensity of the negro's problem again is forced upon one.

Shacks, Shacks, Everywhere.

Just down the avenue from this beautiful, wooded spot, where young negro boys and girls live happy, playful, useful days, where they learn what they need to become productive citizens with responsibilities — just down the street toward the Montgomery-Atlanta Highway are found again those shacks which characterize the negro dwelling place in the South.

Tuskegee has left off so soon, and the world—the negro's world has begun. There are no sanitary facilities with these dwellings, no glass in many of the windows, little grass in the yards, little loveliness, little cleanliness. And as one noses his car out of this center of negro progress and industry, whether it be north to Birmingham, Ala., or Memphis or Nashville or Knoxville, Tenn., or east to Atlanta or Rome or Savannah, Ga., or Columbia, S. C., or Raleigh, N. C., or Richmond, Va., or west to Jackson, Miss. Shreveport, Baton Rouge or New Orleans, La., or Little Rock, Ark.—it matters not what direction—he will find the same drab, unpainted homes in which most of the negroes in America dwell.

However, it may not matter so much about the paint or facilities of the home. It may not matter if the sight is unpleasant. These are material things which are gradually being changed in housing programs and which can be changed more and more. What does matter is the type of American citizen coming out of these homes. What is the negro of the South thinking? Is he radical? Is he subject to the sway of speakers against the Government, as has sometimes been charged? Is he able to throw off the shackles of his environment to see that star Booker T. Washington discovered when the veil of ignorance was lifted?

Negro Not a Radical.

Dean A. A. Taylor of Fisk University in Nashville, a prominent university for negroes, says, "The negro from a racial standpoint is neither a revolutionary nor a radical. There is hardly sufficient aggression in the negro in some southern areas to protect his own life or fight for it. How could there be aggression of a Leftist nature?"

The outgoing Commissioner of Education in Tennessee says:

"The negro does not want Communism."

And a negro educator of Louisiana says:

"The Civil War proved the most wonderful compliment ever paid a minority race. The white men and boys went to battle, leaving the white Southern women and girls at home with no defense save their colored slaves. If the negroes had been revolutionaries, they would have risen up and undermined the South from behind the lines."

This same man says that it is fortunate that the negro is the one called upon to live in squalor, as "he can do it and be happy and not lose his balance," whereas "a white person seems to go down mentally and morally in conditions of abject poverty."

The Commissioner of Education of one of the largest Southern States tells me:

"The negroes are great mimickers. They always pattern what they see a white person do. Furthermore, they must always have a kingfish to follow. There is danger in this tendency." He summarized his opinion of the race thus:

"All a negro wants is plenty to eat, something to wear, a place to sleep, and something to amuse him. We don't fear the negro, and there is no danger of Communism among them. The only danger is in the kingfish tendency."

A former United States Representative from Arkansas said:

"The negroes in the South are the happiest people ever, and they make good citizens. However, a negro is all brawn and muscle and without someone to plan his work and direct his intellect he is lost."

A Mississippi publisher expresses a typical view:

"The negro must have a white man to tie to. If he doesn't, he is as a ship without a rudder."

These last three statements must be recognized for what they are—Southerners describing the uneducated and untrained man or woman of any race, although they chose to apply them to the negro. That these typical and limiting views of the negro are shattered is proved by the examples of negroes who have seen the star of education and who have broken the shackles of their environment.

Prof. C. L. Barrow, Assistant Director of the Department of Negro Education for Louisiana, tells me:

"It's all bunk for anyone to say that a negro cannot learn as well as anyone else. He can learn any subject as well as a white person. The differentiation we make in school curriculum is not on the basis of race, but rather on the basis of job opportunities for the members of the race. We are trying to train the negro for jobs which will be open to him."

Dr. Oliver C. Carmichael, Chancellor of Vanderbilt University, Nashville, says:

"The negroes are going right ahead. They will walk five miles to school, whereas the poor white class is likely to stay at home, if there isn't a ride. The negroes want to get an education."

A negro school principal, a man with more than 1,400 students under his supervision, reports that "When the children are in school, we push them as much as possible. We cram as much training down them as we can in 60 minutes. We are fighting more than a century of problems with precious seconds. The negro children are hungry and thirsty for knowledge. They are scratching and striving for every bit of information. They are gradually going ahead under extreme handicaps, and they are proving their ability more and more."

Many More Good Schools.

There are many good schools in the South besides Tuskegee for negroes. There are State agricultural and mechanical colleges, which are well staffed and handsomely equipped. Then there are the smaller private institutes and colleges. One of these is the Piney Woods School in Mississippi, a Tuskegee on a small scale. And one of the newest liberal arts colleges is Dillard in the eastern suburbs of New Orleans. Dillard has a beautiful campus, a well-trained faculty, handsome buildings, all white, of the classic Southern style of architecture.

In addition, most of the cities in the South are providing better schools for the negroes. The difficulty lies with the fact that there is such a long way to go toward making the education practical. Tuskegee emphasizes industrial training. So do a few other schools. But on the whole the South is not training the negro or its white citizens with adequate vocational courses. The beginnings are sound. There is much more needed if the veil is really to be lifted.

It is generally believed throughout the South that the real happiness for the negro race must lie close to the soil—not as economic serfs, but as small landowners, small farmers. While there are many negroes who have succeeded in the professions, the race as a whole in the South is rearing its children to the expectancy of toil. And this is not a gloomy prospect when seen as a Kentucky dirt farmer sees it and told me:

"Out on the hills, herding a flock of sheep, or behind a plow, or driving a cultivator, the negro farmer is on an equality with all men. He can do something well. He helps his white neighbor at harvest time. His white neighbor helps him. Dignified labor brings an equality all philosophy and all theories fail to do."

Sundry Memoranda

By ERNIE PYLE

DOWN IN ALABAM'. — Just rambling around:

We were talking with a Birmingham friend the other night about getting sleepy while you're driving a car. Occasionally, on those long open roads out West, I have got so sleepy I had to stop the car and walk up and down the road.

But this friend has me beat all to pieces. The minute he gets behind the wheel, he can barely stay awake. He has had one bad wreck from going to sleep. And I think he holds the world's record for sleeping-while-driving in inopportune places.

He went to sleep right in the traffic of New York City! Right in the heart of town, near Grand Central Station. Ran over a curb and almost through a window. That's what I call being relaxed.

Cullman County, about 50 miles north of Birmingham, is a German community. St. Bernard College there was founded by Germans. The farmers around Cullman are Germans. You hear German spoken on the streets.

That was surprising to me, because I had never thought of there being Germans in the Deep South at all. The county, incidentally, is the most prosperous agricultural county in the state.

You may have seen a movie short entitled, "The Life of Dr. Carver." It's the story of Tuskegee Institute's eminent Negro scientist.

I saw it just before going to Tuskegee. And having seen pictures of him, I realized the Dr. Carver in the final scenes was not really Dr. Carver, though that was the impression given.

So at Tuskegee, I asked officials why the movie company hadn't used Dr. Carver himself. They said they didn't know. He would have been glad to do it. The officials regretted very much that the movie company hadn't done so.

And when I talked with Dr. Carver, one of the most modest and self-effacing men in the world, I realized that he, too, was a little hurt that they hadn't asked him. Personally, I think they ought to be kicked.

Tuskegee Choir Charms Large Audience In Program Here

After hearing the concert last night in the City Hall Auditorium, a crowd which filled nearly every available seat could readily understand why the Tuskegee Institute Choir is ranked among the leaders of the nation's choral groups.

The all-too-short program held the complete attention of the audience and formed impressions which progressed from delight to amazement. Never during the entire program was the attention of the listeners allowed to waver.

The 100-voice group, composed of an abundance of excellent voices, was conducted by William L. Dawson, one of the outstanding musicians of his race. The response he drew from his singers is seldom surpassed by professional groups. Dawson became so absorbed in his music that he was seen joining his singers in several passages.

The soloists were particularly pleasing. Otis Wright, tenor, was heard first and he displayed a voice with a most unusual quality. He was called back after each of his two appearances. The clear lyric soprano voice of Stella Mae Jackson was one of the most delightful ever heard here and her performance created a storm of applause. Jesse Chambliss, singing the lead in "Certn'y Lord," impressed the large gathering with the richness of his tenor voice.

A characteristic of the choir which is difficult to achieve is its remarkable phrasing ability. In the most difficult arrangements every voice executed its part to perfection.

Among the highlights on the enthusiastically received program were the singing of "Deep River" and "Alleluia," an Easter composition by Sibelius. The arrangement of "Deep River" was effectively sung and displayed probably better than any other offering the quality of the voices. "Alleluia" delighted the audience and the final chorus, a backstage echo by a portion of the choir, was a pleasing surprise. Although it was not included on the program "Swing Low Sweet Chariot" was sung by the male quintet as an encore. It would have been a disappointment had this well known spiritual been overlooked.

Few other musical events here have been more impressive than the concert given by this choir.—W.R.E.

Hors d'Oeuvres To Be "Tid-Bits"

Expert Says to Forget Foreign Terms.

TUSKEGEE, Ala.—(AP)—Lucius Boomer, New York hotel and restaurant executive, told members of Tuskegee Institutes' class in commercial dietetics not to try to be French cooks or Italian cooks.

"Be American cooks," Boomer advised the class during a visit to the famous Alabama Negro school.

"There is a great future in American cooking," he continued. "Americanize the menu; never use foreign terms if you can avoid it; make your dishes American."

Tuskegee Group Visits At Industrial High

Three students and two teachers of the Mechanical Department of Tuskegee Institute visited the Industrial High School yesterday for the purpose of observing the work being done in the shop of the school. After the observation of shop management the faculty members of Industrial High School and the visitors were served lunch by the Home Economics Department. In the afternoon the Tuskegee group visited several of the industries in the city of Tuscaloosa.

In the evening a discussion was held at the school. The members of the discussion group were composed of the visitors from Tuskegee Institute, the negro county agent, two local negro tradesmen and the faculty members of Industrial High School. The discussion centered around the problem of fitting boys and girls in occupations for which they are adapted and can make a living. Several problems concerning trades in negro schools were discussed.

Archie Luffboro and Willie A. Evans, local negro tradesmen, and Prof. C. E. Trout, negro county agent, made valuable contributions to the discussion.

The discussion was closed with some brief remarks by Prof. Arthur Floyd, teacher trainer in the Department of Agriculture, Prof. W. S. Allen, itinerant teach-trainer of trades and industries at Tuskegee Institute, and Prof. Charles W. Orr, principal of Industrial High School.

Roosevelt Leaves Congress Embroiled in Scraps As He Departs for Warm Springs

Legislators Will Be Kept Busy During President's Absence by Neutrality, Labor Relations, Relief, Farm Aid, Social Security and Tax Legislation. Will Spend Ten Days in Georgia, His "Other Home."

WASHINGTON, March 29 (AP).—President Roosevelt, departing in midafternoon for a 10-day visit to his "other home" at Warm Springs, Ga., is leaving Congress embroiled in a half dozen major scraps.

Neutrality, labor relations, relief, farm aid, social security and tax legislation will keep the legislators busy while he is away. Some of the issues may come to a head during that time and produce the most heated arguments of the session.

Before going to Warm Springs, Mr. Roosevelt will stop tomorrow at the famous Tuskegee Institute, Negro school founded at Tuskegee, Ala., by the late Booker T. Washington. He will make a brief talk to the students.

Then he will drive to near-by Auburn to visit the Alabama Polytechnic Institute, second oldest coeducational school in the South. En route to Warm Springs, he will make a short stop at Opelika, Ala.

In addition to congressional developments, Mr. Roosevelt will be kept informed about the foreign situation. The end of the Spanish civil war places two problems before the administration: When to recognize the victorious Franco regime and when to lift the embargo on munitions shipments to Spain.

Officials said that removal of the embargo, which was applied under the neutrality law, need not await recognition of Franco. Secretary Hull is collecting information on the whole Spanish question before deciding on the latter step.

The general problem of changing the neutrality law was brought up today before the Senate foreign relations committee. Mr. Roosevelt has suggested revision, contending that in its present form the law might endenger rather than remove war threats.

The President's $552,000,000 defense program has hurdled most congressional barriers, but other spending proposals are stirring up bitter controversies.

A compromise appeared likely on the President's repeated request for $150,000,000 to stave off drastic WPA cuts. Some economy advocates have opposed any extra money.

Mr. Roosevelt won one monetary victory last night when the House refused to vote $250,000,000 for farm parity payments which he had not included in the budget. The fight was far from ended, however, for there were predictions that the Senate would approve the fund.

The President stirred up another agricultural argument yesterday by proposing a cotton export program which would include payment of $1.25 a bale to producers who release their federal loan cotton to the market. It also would provide a subsequent moderate payment on cotton exported. The scheme brought prompt objections from Southern senators.

Tax revision to aid business continues to be a subject of congressional discussion, but some influential Democrats predicted the only action would be alterations in the social security program. The latter probably would include Secretary Morgenthau's suggestion that imposition of another $300,000,000 in old age insurance taxes be delayed. Mr. Roosevelt expressed hope that Congress would tax the income from future issues of government securities, as a result of the Supreme Court decision exempting income tax immunity for federal and state employes.

Revision of the Wagner labor relations act is sought by some members of Congress as an encouragement to business, and Senate hearings have been set for April 11. Senator Barkley (D., Ky.), the Democratic leader, said it was "speculative" whether Congress would enact any amendments at this session.

A number of legislators had wanted to hold up the hearings because of the AFL - CIO peace negotiations. Mr. Roosevelt told reporters yesterday that from all he had heard the peace conferences were getting along all right.

—RAMBLING REPORTER—

Tuskegee Spirit Praised By Pyle

By ERNIE PYLE
Scripps-Howard Staff Writer

TUSKEGEE, Ala., March 13—Before coming here, I had a misconception of Tuskegee Institute. I thought it was a school of higher learning; a Harvard of the Negro race.

I couldn't have been more wrong. Booker T. Washington started it as a trade school, and a trade school it still is. It teaches Negroes to work.

I have known little about Booker T. Washington. But his spirit is still around here, and in just a couple of days you "get it."

Booker T. Washington never thought the Negro race should consider itself equal in all things with the white race. He said, "It is important and right that all privileges of the law be ours, but it is vastly important that we be prepared for the exercise of these privileges."

Mr. Pyle

That's where Tuskegee stands today. It doesn't put any phoney high-toned ideas into students' heads. It wants only to prepare them to work, diligently and honestly, and enlarge their characters, generation after generation, until they are capable of being a real and natural part of the civilization into which they were thrown so suddenly, unwilling and bewildered.

Tuskeegee is succeeding. On our first evening here, I took a walk around the campus before supper. And to my astonishment every student I met, boy or girl, spoke to me.

Later I asked if the students were instructed to do this. They said no, it was just an old Tuskegee custom, and the students pick it up the minute they come. Friendliness and courtesy, they are taught, will help them in life after they leave here.

For two days I have been hot-footing it around here from 7 a. m. until late at night. I've visited departments by the score. I've talked with instructors and students and deans till I'm out of breath.

Finds No Prejudice

And the thing that impressed me most is this: In not one instance has anybody made me aware of racial difference. You almost forget it here.

We went last night to the gymnasium to see the basketball games. The gymnasium was packed. Throughout the game I talked (when it was possible to be heard) with the colored girl who sat next to me. We talked as two people would anywhere.

Nobody in that whole gymnasium ever made us conscious, either by staring or by over-attention, that we were whites among blacks. We were doing them no favor by being there, yet we were sincerely welcome.

I talked frankly with President Frederick F. Patterson about it. He calls it the "Tuskegee spirit." But whatever you call it, it is something that few Negroes and too-few whites every acquire.

Faculty and students here treat you exactly as one gentleman treats another.

If all Negroes in America could come to Tuskegee; and if all the white people could go to a similar school that taught the dignity of association that Tuskegee teaches, how much greater harmony there could be between our two races.

School Needs Funds

And that brings us up to a point that is grave. Tuskegee is in financial trouble. The interest from its endowments has dropped off. Donations have fallen. The huge plant of Tuskegee is more than the income can carry.

Last year the school was $25,000 in the red. And they had to take the heart-breaking step of dipping into their permament investments to pay expenses. There is alarm and fear throughout Tuskegee.

Curtailment is being ordered. This means not only stopping one of Tuskegee's most practical courses, but it means also that many Negro sick people from these parts will have no place to go.

Tuskegee doesn't mind begging. Other schools do. And Tuskegee was started and grew to what it is today through the almost inspired begging of Booker T. Washington.

School officials have cast aside any plans for expansion. All they want is the money to keep running. For Tuskegee to slide back after 60 wonderful years, is tragedy.

They'll need $50,000 to break even next year. The mere thought of $50,000 scares me to death. But it's just chickenfeed to some people. How about it, somebody?

NEW ORLEANS LA. ITEM

Tuskegee

WE ARE sorry to hear that Tuskegee Institute is hard-pressed for money. The famous Negro school needs $50,000 to avert drastic reduction of its teaching staff and curtailment of its courses.

Ever since the days of Booker Washington's presidency, the Institute has commanded the respect of Americans white and black. Its program has stood the test of time remarkably well. It was not in Washington's day, and is not now, a place to educate Negroes for the learned professions. These can provide only a very small percentage of Negroes with livelihood, to say nothing of successful careers.

Tuskegee has been, on the contrary, a trade school in which the accent is placed on equipping Negroes to earn their way, in trades and farming, and to be useful, busy, and self-respecting citizens of the Country, as they find it when they leave the school behind.

The trade school, whether for whites or Negroes, is in our belief the educational institution which will do most to lessen unemployment and buttress recovery in this country. We can't spare any of them, and certainly not Tuskegee.

TUSKEGEE ALUMNI IN NEW YORK PAYS TRIBUTE TO "B. T."

NEW YORK, April 13 (ANP)—The New York Tuskegee Alumni Association celebrated Founder's Day in memory of the late Booker T. Washington, Founder and first president of Tuskegee Institute, Alabama in the Abyssinian Baptist church, here last Sunday. The guest speaker was the Hon. Myles A. Paige, Magistrate of New York City. His subject was "Booker T. Washington: The Man." Frank P. Chisholm, field secretary of Tuskegee Institute, was master of ceremonies.

The program opened with the spiritual "We are Climbing Jacob's Ladder," led by William J. Williams, a Tuskege graduate. Miss Lucy Anderson read an Ode to Booker T. Washington. George Jones, Jr., accompanied by Miss Grace Hunter, gave pleasure with his singing. Marion Jones, a Tuskegee graduate sang in memory of Dr. Washington "Since you went away." E. L. Dimitry, president of the New York Tuskegee club, briefly reviewed the year's work of the club.

The speech by Judge Paige was significant in its emphasis upon the practical wisdom and greatness of Booker T. Washington and in its challenge to the friends and graduates of Tuskegee Institute. Mr. Fred R. Moore, Editor of the New York Age, spoke briefly of his long acquaintance and association with Tuskegee's Founder.

The exercises closed with the singing of the Tuskegee Alma Mater "Tuskegee, Thou Pride of the Swift Growing South." A large and representative group of graduates and friends made the occasion a re-union which was both inspiring and stimulating.

The Tuskegee Choir, one of the country's famous musical organizations, will fill a concert engagement in Selma on Thursday, May 11 at 8:15 p. m. at the Junior High School, to benefit the fund now being raised to furnish the negro community house now nearing completion.

Announcement that the engagement has been secured and that the Tuskegee singers will come here to lend their talent to the cause of aiding in the outfitting of the negro community house was made Saturday by the sponsor for the project, the Rev. E. W. Gamble retired Episcopal rector. Dr. Gamble, active in support of the plan to provide negroes of Selma and vicinity with a center for health clinics, for negro farm and demonstration offices and for other helpful purposes, sought and secured the cooperation of the Tuskegee group whose coming is expected to materially aid the fund.

Committees will be organized by Dr. Gamble Monday, to handle details of the concert which many music lovers in this section will take opportunity to hear. In the past few years the Tuskegee singers have been heard often in New York, and have crowded concert halls in Birmingham, Memphis and other southern cities, so that the proceeds here are expected to be considerable.

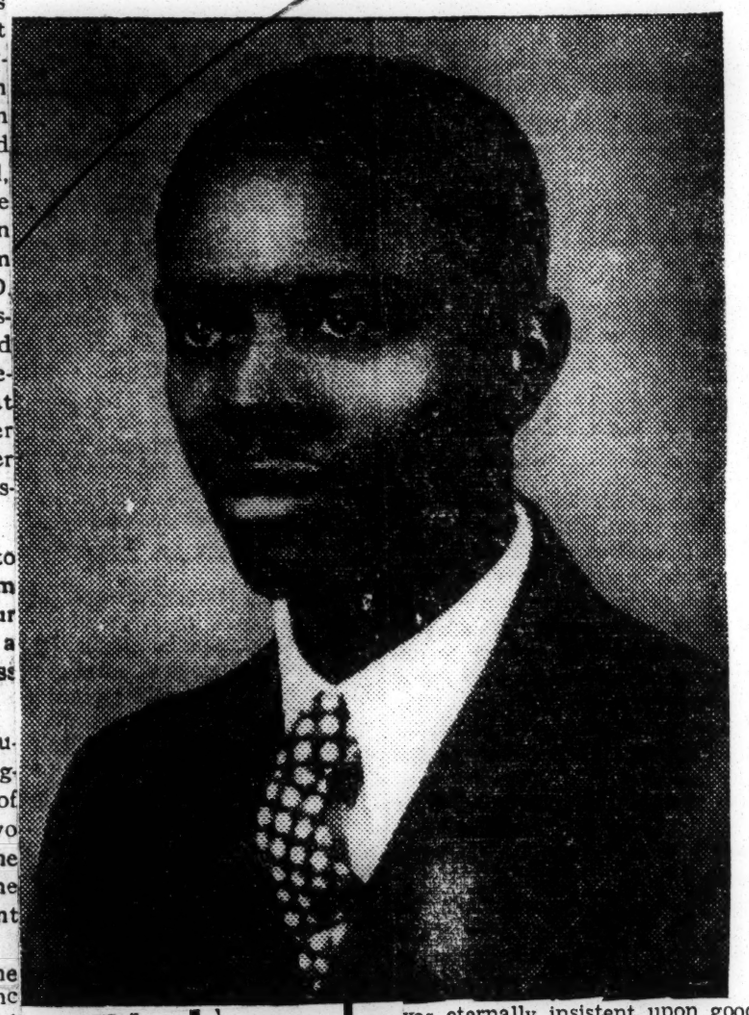
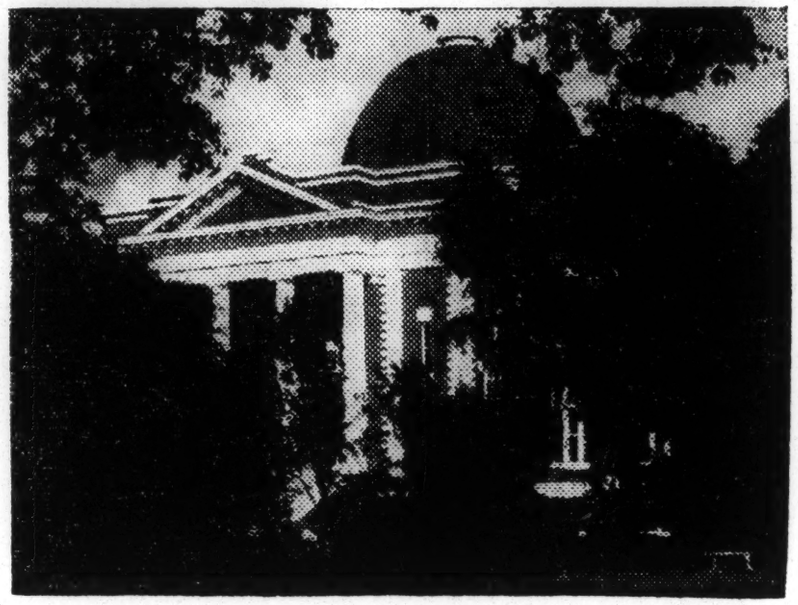
• CAREER IN THE MAKING •





Many young men wait until after college to find positions. But Mr. Joseph W. Williams, a student at Tuskegee Institute in Tuskegee, Alabama, is already the local Sales Representative for the Beech-Nut Packing Company, makers of Beech-Nut Chewing Gum. (Above) Tuskegee Institute where Mr. Williams is embarking on his career.

Since Booket T. Washington, distinguished graduate of Hampton Institute, founded Tuskegee Institute in 1881, the two institutions have been bound by the closest bonds of interest, ideals and purpose. These bonds were drawn closer when Major R. R. , Moton Commandant of Hampton and right-hand man of Dr. H. B. Frissell, Principal, was chosen to be the successor of Booker T. Washington upon the latter's death in 1915. In line with this tradition, Dr. F. D. Patterson, elected President of Tuskegee Institute in 1935, was invited that year to deliver the Commencement address at Hampton that Hampton might get to know better the young man who succeeded her two sons as head of her most distinguished off-shoot.

The first distinguished leader to receive an honorary degree from Tuskegee was President Arthur Howe and in 1934 he delivered a memorable Founder's Day address at Tuskegee.

The bonds of friendship and mutual helpfulness were further strengthened during the administration of Dr Robert R. Moton when the two schools joined forces to raise the endowment of each through the Hampton - Tuskegee Endowment Campaign.

This year when Tuskegee and the parent school have been so menaced by the budget wolf that both have been driven to almost unprecedented retrenchment of their program, it is the president of the younger school who is chosen to bring the message on the occasion of the anniversary celebration — 71 years after Samuel Chapman Armstrong entered upon his epoch-making adventure in practical education for the Negro and the Indian youth.

When the President of Tuskegee Institute delivered the Anniversary address at Hampton Friday, April 28, the world was given another evidence of the Hampton-Tuskegee tradition of good will and mutual helpfulness begun by General Armstrong, continued through Dr. Washington, Dr. Frissell, Dr. Moton and a host of others and burning steadily today in Arthur Howe and Fred Patterson.

Washington Forerunner Of Present-Day Educational Practise

TUSKEGEE INSTITUTE, Ala.—Booker T. Washington's program was the forerunner of much that is now being taught and practiced," Dr. Howard W. Odum, of the University of North Carolina, told the graduates of Tuskegee Institute on Monday of this week in his Commencement address. "I scarcely need to remind you of how eloquent Mr. Washington was in the urging of his people to develop natural resources, to seek land and home ownership, and to work on and on in the application of these talents to the end that they might save money and become substantial citizens capable of the richer life, and the burden of his whole educational program, far ahead of many of the white schools was eternally insistent upon good education, adequate education, strong education, but with it all, skill, training, and high standards.

From this education and training he pointed out again and again what the fruits of the future would be, particularly for his race, but also generally for all men," Dr. Odum said.

Tuskegee Singers Will Typify Negro's Contribution To Music

By BERTHA LOYS GILBERT

Montgomerians will tonight hav the pleasure of hearing the Tuskege Institute Choir under the directio of William L. Dawson in a concer at the City Hall under the sponsor ship of the First Methodist Church as a benefit for its building fund.

The program this evening will be made up of negro spirituals, many of them arranged in modern harmoniza tion for concert performance by Director Dawson, who has done a great service to American music in his work of perpetuating the negro musical idiom. He has been highly praised for his success in preserving the spirituals' primitive emotiona appeal in his original arrangements.

Negro and His Music

A review of the accomplishments of the negro in the field of music would make a highly interesting and revealing chapter. The negro has been a tragic figure in the life of America and the negro and his music can be rightly understood only in the ligh of his historical background both in Africa and America.

Thomasine McGehee, Montgomery writer, and author of "People and Music," describes the origin, character, and importance of negro folk music as a contribution to music in America in this way:

"If you know the music of the negro only from the vaudeville stage or the comic song you know only a caricature of the real music of that race....Genuine negro music shows two influences: the shadowy memor of life in Africa and life in America The result is a music rich in savag color, in flashes of humor, and in great sadness. No more remarkab or genuinely original folk music ex ists today than that of the negro Unlike all other primitive music it built upon harmony. Wherever tw or more negroes are gathered to gether their songs fall into th strangest and richest harmonies minor keys. Only a master musicia could consciously create such ha monies as the most ignorant of th race sings with unstudied beauty.

"The negro sings of a bright fa off heaven where 'all God's chill got shoes.' We smile as we hear thes quaint words but when we hear i sung, we do not smile....we shar the sadness and hope of the singers

Song Sure To Come

"Wherever a group of negroes ar at work or worship a song is sure t come. A leader begins....the grou takes it up....Harmony is added t harmony....The song is vivid through the perfect union of words and tun and the tone quality of the negro voice. Not only has his voice range and power but it has rich resonance Because of its rich harmonies and resonance negro group singing needs no accompaniment of instruments."

Antonin Dvorak, the celebrated Bo hemian composer who resided in thi country for a time and discovered he negro folk music and used th hemes in a symphony which h alled "The New World Symphony, aid of the value of negro folk musi as art material:

"In the negro melodies is all tha s needed for artistic creation—they re pathetic, tender, passionate, mel ancholy, solemn, religious, bold, mer y and gracious—it is music that suit itself to any need."

That the negro race has recognized that his own folk music is a heritage to be treasured and perpetuated is verified in the manner in which the Tuskegee Institute has immortalized the spirituals in the impressive $12,000 chancel window, in the chape on the campus, called "The Singing Window." In this history and aspiration of the negro race as recorded in translucent glass in this window, one realizes something of the deep meaning of the spirituals as an expressio of a race.

The window in which 12 of the spirituals are portrayed, represents the forefathers of the race who were sustained in bondage by religion and looked for deliverance to a childlike faith in God. Former President Robert R. Moton said that it was the wish that the youth of the Institute be pointed constantly to this faith as a basis for aspiration, progress and conception of human brotherhood.

Perpetual Spirit

Director Dawson who was himself a student of the Institute before becoming head of the music department, caught the spirit and in a distinctive way is perpetuating it through his music and the Institute Choir.

As the negro folk music is not limited to his religious songs known as spirituals, so the musical accomplishments of the negro race are not limited to his folk music alone. The program tonight will contain numbers other than the spirituals. Trained negro voices are beautiful when interpreting the works of the masters but the plaintive coloring and the peculiar timber of the negro voice is best brought out in the singing of the songs of his own race.

Negro schools that have been outstanding in preserving and perpetuating the negro folk music have been Fisk University in Nashville and Tuskegee Institute. The Fisk Jubilee Singers were the pioneers in this field.

Negro musicians who with Dr Dawson have gained recognition for advancing the music of the race was the pioneer John Wesley Work, born in Tennessee, who has been called "The rescuer of negro folksong." Nathaniel Dett, whose choral number "Listen to the Lambs," is one of the public's favorites in the Tuskegee Choir's repertoire, has done much to advance the music of the race. Harry Burleigh's compositions based on the spirituals are sung throughout the nation. Many others could be enumerated. Of negro interpretive artists Roland Hayes, tenor, is at the top with Marion Anderson, contralto, who is endowed with one of the rarest voices on the concert stage today.

THE TUSKEGEE CHOIR

After President Roosevelt had listened to a concert last week by the Tuskegee Choir he remarked to Governor Dixon that it was one of the most stirring musical performances he had ever heard. The thousands of Alabamians who have heard the choir will not be surprised to learn of the praise given it by Mr. Roosevelt. Eminent music critics throughout the country have acclaimed the Tuskegee group as one of the finest of its kind ever created.

Last year Montgomerians were so enthusiastic about a performance given here that it was necessary to arrange for a return engagement. Even the second time the choir was here the City Auditorium was filled to capacity.

Tonight the choir makes its first appearance in Montgomery this season, and again it is sponsored by the First Methodist Church. The opportunity to hear these singers will not be missed by any person who knows what finished artists they really are.

Tuskegee Choir Concert Will Be Event Of Note This Evening

William L. Dawson, conductor of the famous Tuskegee Choir, will bring that outstanding musical organization to Montgomery tonight for an engagement at the City Auditorium. The Tuskegee choir has met with tremendous success not only on the concert stage but also on the radio. The choir was engaged by the National Broadcasting Company for a series of thirty minute engagements on coast-to-coast hookups and received praise from people in all walks of life for the rare beauty and sweetness of their songs.

Students from all sections of the United States have gone to the well-known Tuskegee Institute not only for the type of education that it offers but also because of the excellent instruction in music that they are able to obtain. Many of these students find it to their advantage to become members of the Institute Choir because of the opportunity offered them to further their musical education under one of the most outstanding musicians of their own race who is a genius in interpreting the deep feeling and fervor of the Negro spirituals, and who at the same time sings the works of the master's with equal feeling and understanding.

The appearance of the Tuskegee Choir in Montgomery is sponsored by the women of the First Methodist Church. Tickets have been placed on sale at McGehee's Drug Store Montgomery Fair and Dean's Drug Store.

Tuskegee Choir To Give Program Of Folk Music

When the Tuskegee choir comes here for an engagement at the city auditorium Tuesday night music lovers of this city will have an opportunity to hear one of the most famous vocal organizations in this country. The well-known ensemble of a hundred voices is coming to this city under the auspices of the women of First Methodist church.

William L. Dawson, the conductor, a graduate of Tuskegee institute, has furthered his musical education at some of the leading institutions in America. His negro symphony, the first ever written based entirely on negro themes, was played by the Philadelphia symphony, Leopold Stowkowski conducting. The negro folk symphony has been universally recognized as a significant contribution to American music.

Ever since Tuskegee institute was organized in 1881, music has played an important part in the life of the school. One of the first organizations of the infant school was the organizing of a choir made up of untrained voices selected from its small student body. This organization has grown and developed through the years and now music lovers from all sections of the state stop at Tuskegee whenever possible to hear the famous hundred voiced choir which sings on Wednesday evenings at the regular chapel service, at the Sunday morning church services, and on Sunday evenings, when a special program of music is given.

In addition to the presentation of negro folk music as sung among their own people on the cotton plantations of the south, even in the most isolated rural sections, the choir also offers in its extensive repertoire the more formal arrangements of other negro composers, along with the folk songs of many nations.

Tuskegee Players Will Present Play

"Night Must Fall" which has been selected by Prof. Earl Sanders Walker for presentation at the State Teachers college auditorium on April 7, at 8 p. m. by the Little Theater players of Tuskegee institute, is a drama of unusual interest and originality. It is a superb, detailed and chilling portrait of a monster. In fact the New York Telegraph said of the original play that it was a dram of real horror. The members of the cast chosen by Professor Walker to protray the various characterizations have been playing the organization for several years and are considered seasoned actors. Montgomerians should not miss the opportunity of seeing a play that completed a run of a year and seven months in London.

10 Per Cet Enrollment Increase at Tuskegee

TUSKEGEE INSTITUTE, Ala.—(ANP)—Dr. I. A. Derbigny, dean of administration, announces that according to preliminary figures from the registrar's office, the total enrollment of Tuskegee Institute for 1939-40, is up 10 per cent with a total of 1,261 college students.

The enrollment in the school of mechanical industries and in the school of agriculture shows an increase of approximately 25 per cent each over that of last year. The figures for the school of home economics follow closely with a 12 per cent increase.

Although this increase in enrollment is taxing greatly both the housing facilities and teaching personnel, no expansion of dormitory space or additions to the faculty are felt to be necessary for the present.

Class Visits State Capital

Miss Britt's room began planning the trip in January and we worked on these plans until our trip was realized last Friday. We traveled in six cars. Those who drove the cars were Miss Lila Mae Britt, Mrs. R. L. Jimmerson, Mrs. Guy Wilder, Mrs. Glen Avant, Mr. C. O. Mathews and Tom Head, Jr. We left Friday morning at about six o'clock and as soon as we arrived in Montgomery we went through the new Highway building where we learned many interesting things about the traffic laws of our state. From the Highway building we went to the State Capital and from there to the Little White House. We were led through the buildings by guides. These buildings were very interesting as we have been studying the War Between the States, and we added some interesting facts to our knowledge of it. A veteran of this war, General Paul Sanquenetti, was at the capital and gave us much first hand information of this war since he was under General Robert E. Lee. We saw so many things in Jefferson Davis' home that it made us feel as if he were still living there. After leaving the Little White House we started on our trip to Tuskegee We stopped at the Log Cabin, three miles this side of Tuskegee, to eat our lunch. Everywhere we went great hospitality was shown us and these people gave us the use of one of their dining rooms to spread our lunch. After lunch we went on to the Tuskegee Institute. Upon our arrival we were given a guide to take us where we wanted to go. We visited the following places: the home of Booker T. Washington, the library, the gymnasium, the dining hall, the chapel, and Dr. Carver's laboratory. We learned many things about the progress of education since this is the largest Negro school in the world. We have been studying the products of the Southern States and were greatly impressed by the many useful things that Dr. Carver has made from our own products of the South. These grounds, the buildings, and the town of this institute show the progress and worthwhile education of these people. We returned home that night feeling we had accomplished much pleasure and learning from our trip.

SELMA AGAIN BLAZES A TRAIL

Successful sponsorship of an appearance here by the Tuskegee Choir has carried Selma one step nearer materialization of Dr. Edward W. Gamble's dream of an adequately-equipped Community house for negroes.

Already a commodious and comfortable building has been erected and proceeds from the concert by generous musicians from the state's great negro college will go a long way toward making it more comfortable and attractive for colored citizens and visitors to Selma.

To make Dr. Gamble's work more complete, however, assistance is needed from Selmians who can contribute usable articles of furniture, books, magazines and games. Such gifts would materially enhance the value of the Community house without any great amount of sacrifice by any individual and permit Dr. Gamble to put the finishing touches on his splendid project in true Selma style.

Success of the retired Episcopal rector in pushing the Community house to completion gives Selma another accomplishment which will bring it nationwide attention. Few cities offer such a facility to negroes and none, we are informed, have anything that approaches Selma's new structure in attractiveness and perfection of detail. The results of efficient operation of this new civic activity cannot be overestimated, as it will combine the functions of a constructive influence upon a large segment of our population and a definite attraction for colored citizens of a wide area.

Selma blazes a new trail to racial good will and character building among negroes by providing facilities which will make their trading trips here more pleasant and offer them companionship and amusement in surroundings which eventually will eliminate many adverse influences.

Each day that passes finds more and more far-seeing Southerners concerning themselves with the problem of bettering the fortunes of the colored population in the conviction that this section's future economic well-being will be gauged largely by the level to which the negro is encouraged to lift himself.

By inaugurating the Community house project, Dr. Gamble has put this conviction into practice and his achievement may some day be recognized as one of the most progressive moves which this city has made in its long history.

98 Get Diplomas From T. Institute

With the largest crowd of visitors since the 50th anniversary, Tuskegee Institute observed her 54th graduating exercises with a scholarly address by Dr. Howard W. Odum, eminent sociologist and author of "The Southern Regions," a stirring pledge of loyalty by N. R. McCray, representing the reunion class of 1929, a well presented dissertation on Tuskegee's program for "Making Education Real for Rural Communities," by Margaret Young, highest honor student, the awarding of 200 degrees, certificates and diplomas by President F. D. Patterson and the induction of the class of 1939 into the General Alumni Association by Capt. A. J. Neely, executive secretary.

The impressive academic procession, colorful with the hoods of leading colleges and universities, the blue and white Tuskegee Institute uniforms, the bachelor of science candidates in black caps and gowns, the trade diploma candidates in gray caps and gowns, the senior girls of the high school in white hats and white dotted Swiss dresses that they made in their sewing class at a total cost of $2.14 each, moved down Elm Road, the main campus highway, at 1:30, headed by the Institute band, Capt. Frank L. Dry, bandmaster and Capt. W. A .Richardson, marshal of the day.

Afternoon Program Highlights

Heading the procession, with President Patterson and Dr. Odum, was Basil O'Conner, former law partner of President Roosevelt and president of the infantile paralysis foundation of Dr M. O. Bouseld of the Rosenwald Foundation.

At the conclusion of the conferring of degrees President Patterson presented Mr. O'Connor for a few words. Mr. O'Connor said the grant of $8,161,336 for an infantile paralysis unit at Tuskegee was the largest yet made and was given because of the type of work Tuskegee is doing and has been doing.

Morning Program

"Reality in Education," the theme of the morning half of the program, was effectively presented with demonstrations by the honor students in the departments. Mildred Green and William P. Smith made it clear that terracing fields, and inoculating hogs were no matters of mere theory to them.

Cleo Sharpe as the spirit of home economics opened the eyes of "teacher of the old school" (Mozelle Motley) to reality in education by showing her Tuskegee students were taught to make over dresses at a cost of 40 and 90 cents and to choose the best brands of canned goods. The tailor shop showed a suit of osnaburg.

Averile Belle, Edna Jones and Adele Johnson presented dramatically the duties of the public health nurse on her visit to a tubercular mother of a three-month-old baby.

Addie Stabler, high honor student, with Harriet Clarke and Ralph B. Stewart, honor student, told convincingly how the school of education as a service unit to the other departments pust reality into the education. Stewart displayed an attractive exhibit of wood stains which he had made from Alabama clay in the laboratory of Dr. George W. Carver under the direction of Austin W. Curtis, assistant to Dr. Carver. Miss Clark told the audience that the classes in English composition and public speaking found their material in actual needs of the school community—letters, speeches, stories for children.

Frankye Manley, honor student of the high school, spoke of Booker T .Washington and his insistence in reality in education and proved her point by a sewing and cooking demonstration by Laurice Campfield and other high school honor students.

Mothers parked their babies and small children in the science building where a temporary nursery set up with beds, toys and a supply of crackers and milk was presided over by Mrs. Catherine Stewart, Oreta A. Curtis, nurse from the home economics school. One hundred and seventy-five children were cared for during the day.

Class of '88 Present Gift

A high point in the afternoon program was the presentation of Rev. Phillip P. Wright, class of '88, Wetumpka, Ala., who, on behalf of the six surviving members of the class, presented President Patterson a check for $85 as a token of their confidence in this administration. Other members of the class of '88 are Eugenia Lyman, Wharton, Texas; S. R. Marshall, Columbus, Ga.; Sarah Hunt Rogers, Los Angeles, Calif.; and Mrs. William H. Clark and Miss Caroline Smith, of Tuskegee.

Ala. Pastors To Study Problems

TUSKEGEE INSTITUTE, Ala.—(SNS)—The State Inter-Denominational Alliance will be held at Tuskegee Institute, Wednesday, March 15, the Rev. Harry V. Richardson, chaplain, announced Friday. The opening session is scheduled to begin at 9:30 o'clock and will be held in the assembly room of the Home Economics Building on the campus.

"The purpose of the Alliance," Rev. Richardson said. "is to provide an opportunity for the ministers to meet and discuss problems which confront the church as a whole." Previous meetings have been most helpful and far-reaching in beneficial results, it was stated.

roads that will lead you into trouble quicker than any other influence I know of. All parents should instruct their children not to associate with bad company. There have been many men, women, boys and girls, who have been indicted by law and they were not guilty, but because they were in bad company they could not prove their innocence. Therefore, let's select our associates and the type of places that we go. If we will do this, we will find that it will keep us out of trouble.

Bad company has no objective save that of trouble. If you follow bad people around you will soon find yourself in trouble or some one will find you dead some where. Do not run with this so-called good crowd if you want to stay out of trouble. Do not hang around the pool rooms, liquor houses and dives if you want to make something out of yourself.

I know a lot of young people who have had good opportunities to make something out of them-

Numerous friends of Dr. George C. Branche at the Veterans' Administration Facility, Tuskegee, and at Tuskegee Institute, extended him a warm and cordial welcome upon his return from Chicago where he appeared on program at the Ninety-fifth meeting of the American Psychiatric Association, held at Palmer House, May 8-12. More than 1200 of the Nation's leaders in Psychiatory and neurology were present at the meeting. The American Psychiatric Association is the oldest society of medical specialists in the United States and the papers selected for presentation are the best in that field which are submitted.

Dr. Branche spoke on the subject "Therapeutic Quartan Malaria in the Treatment of Neuro-Syphillis Among Negroes." It is recalled that Dr. Branche, who is an outstanding physician, won wide commendation at the convention in 1934 when he spoke on his new and radically different method of treating mental disorders brought about by syphillis His address at the Chicago convention was concerned with later developments in this special field. Again, international atention is focused on the young Tuskege ephysician because of the highly scientific value of his recent paper to the medical profession.

Dr. Branche pointed out that this treatment was developed after it was learned that neuro-syphillis among Negro patients could not be treated with the commonly used tertian malaria.

This was because there had been developed a general racial immunity to this form of malaria through generations of living in warm areas where this disease is prevalent. It was brought out by Dr. Branche that quartan malaria, a stronger and more virulent form of the disease which was more or less foreign to the race, might be substituted. Results have been amazing.

Of those inoculated with the quartan malaria treatment, 93 per cent reacted favorably as contrasted with only 14 percent who reacted to inoculation with chills and fever when the tertain variety was used. He is still using the original quartan strain which was obtained in 1932 from the United States' Public Health Station, Columbia, South Carolina, with equally as favorable results as reported in his preliminary publication in 1934. Shipments of the quartan malaria blood have been furnished other hospitals for inoculation.

Dr. Branche is listed in the 1938 Edition of Who'se Who Among Physicians and Surgeons. He appears among the contributing authors in Dr. Stokes' recent edition of 'Modern Clinical Syphiology,' published in 1934, and in the Year Book of Neurology, Psychiatary and Endocrinology published in 1936 by Reese, Paskind and Sevringans with reference to the treatment of neurosyphils in its various stages, a disease which is responsible for a large percentage of nervous and mental disorders among all groups of people.

Dr. Branche is a native of North Carolina. He was granduated from Lincoln University and the Boston University School of Medicine. He has been connected with the Veterans Administration Facility at Tuskegee, Alabama, since 1923.

CHAIN LETTER IDEA

Tuskegee athletes, both men and women, are writing a chain letter this summer. It is expected that the letter will wind up at Tuskegee Institute on or about September 1 and Coach Cleve L. Abott has been named as the recipient. The letter will furnish interesting data on the activities of the members of the various athletic teams during the summer months. Captain R. S. Darnaby is said to have originated the idea and will see that the letter keeps moving. In the Spring, Robert H. McClasky ,of Lexington, Kentucky, sent his usual plentiful supply of Blue Grass seed to be sown in the Alumni Bowl. The Bowl should be in ideal condition for the opening football game with LeMoyne College Saturday afternoon, September 23. Baseball is being played by students and teachers during the summer, but tennis is engaging the attention of the larger number of persons. These tennis fans may be seen practicing on the championship Courts daily. A large delegation from Tuskegee will go to Hampton in August for the Nationals.

Tuskegee To Play Santa Claus Again To Poor Farmers

With Aid Of Contributions, College Aims To Brighten Homes At Christmas

Tuskegee Institute, with the aid of contributors throughout the state, is planning again this year to play the role of Santa Claus for rural families who find themselves in dire straits between harvest time and Spring.

F. D. Patterson, president of Tuskegee, who issued an appeal Saturday for contributions to brighten Christmas for such families, pointed out that "when settlements are made for the Fall crops, there are always thousands of sharecroppers and farm labor families who 'didn't come out.'"

A large majority of this group, he points out, are Negro farmers, and from harvest time until the meager advances are made for Spring planting, such families face their hardest struggle for existence.

"Right in the midst of this period," the Tuskegee president adds, "Christmas comes and without some such service as Tuskegee Institute renders, thousands of children in these homes would have nothing to remind them of the holiday season.

"For many years, devoted friends throughout the country have used this institution as a medium through which they may send gifts to brighten these homes and warm the hearts of the children.

"We, therefore, renew our appeal for donations of clothing, books, toys, candy, pictures, etc. Some friends prefer to send money with which to purchase gifts and in such instances the donation is spent as directed."

Dr. Patterson asks that packages and letters be sent to him, care of Tuskegee Institute, Tuskegee, Ala.

WHERE IS TUSKEGEE INSTITUTE DRIFTING?

Where is Tuskegee Institute Drifting' that is to say the Old Booker T. Washington Ideas are Vanishing and New and Foolish ones Substituted.

There are created positions such as:Dean of Administration, and Secretary of Labor. Such position holders draw annual pay checks around $3,000 and $4,000, and the teachers' pay is just on the pay roll.

It was Dean Durbenger's idea to eliminate the high school. This idea was very foolish beacuse, the high school is the reserve for the college department and the main stay for football material.

The other crazy idea is To Reduce Joh n A. Andrew Memorial Hospital to An Infirmary, which would take away the school's Nurse Training Unit.

The officials want to cut annual running expense $85,000.00; A very good idea but Don't make this possible by cutting out the High School and reducing the hospital. ABETTER WAY IS TO CUT THOSE CREATED POSITIONS AND RED CING EXTORTIOUS SALARIES. Let the Registrar and the Dean of Men take over the duties of the Dean of Administration and Secretary of Labor as in yester-years.

Some of the good trustees are dissatisfied and are resigning and becoming members of Howard and other Universities Board of Trustees. This will cut some of the financial aid.

There is a let down on the Industrial Side--the one thing that Tuskegee was founded upon. And if it were possible for Booker T. Washington to step from his grave, he would blast these crazy ideas and the ones responsible to Kingdom Come.

It is now up to the Alumni Associations throughout the entire United States to come to the battle front and fight for Tuskegee and the principles of Booker T.Washington.

The home was beautifully decorated with palms, ferns, gladiolas, roses and cut flowers of all kinds in baskets tastefully arranged throughout the house. The table in the hall with the register kept by Mrs. M. D. Garner had on it a huge bowl of cut flowers. The dining room table with its beautiful lace cloth over blue, silver candle sticks with candles tied with pink ribbon and the centerpiece of pink roses carried out most artistically the color scheme of blue and pink. The cream was pink and green; the cakes were pink and green and were decorated with rosebud and green leaves. Pink and green mints were also served.

One of the Junior Clubs, The Sojourner Truth, composed of the following young girls, did the serving: Thomasine, Helen Dibble, Frances Stokes, Hortense Tildon, Gloria Washington, and Ethel Bulls. Others assisting were Mrs. E. C. Cooper, Miss Arnena West, Miss Jean Turner and Miss Melba Savoy.

During the evening more than 200 delegates called to extend congratulations and best wishes.

Among the out-of-town guests were Mr. Charles Kelly, nephew of Mrs. Mack, who came from Los Angeles, California, for the happy occasion. From Durham, North Carolina, came Mrs. Jane E. More than 100 beautiful gifts of silver were received. In addition more than $60.00 in cash. Among the gifts was a box containing pink and white flowers from snapdragons and in each petal was a dime, 25 in all, which attracted much attention and comment because of the unique arrangement. Mrs. Birdie Lee Jones presented two pieces of silver which were given to her when she was married thirty years ago.

Along with the numerous gifts given was a separate table which contained 20 gifts of silver which were wedding gifts of the happy couple 25 years ago. Telegrams were received from Miss Grace Bradley, Atlanta, Ga., Mr. and Mrs. P. H. Reney, Indianapolis, Indiana; Evelyn and Emilie Martin, Tallahassee, Florida; Rev. and Mrs. H. V. Richardson and Mrs. S. P. Martin, Charlottsville, Virginia; Mr. Jack Kelly, Cincinnati, Ohio, nephew of Mrs. Mack; Miss Maude Watkins, Tallahassee, Florida, and Mr. and Mrs. L. A. Green. Another nephew, Dr. Paul Kelly of Talladega college, was unable to be present.

The large number of gifts and host of friends who were present at the anniversary testify the esteem in which Mr. and Mrs. Mack are held. Mr. Mack, who was graduated from Tuskegee in 1908, for twenty-five years has been a member of the faculty of Tuskegee Institute as head of the plumbing and heating department. For twenty years Mr. Mack has been the Master of the Masonic Lodge at the Institute and is also a 33rd degree Mason. Mrs. Mack is a very active member of the Tuskegee Woman's club and is now head of the Junior Department of the Alabama Federation of Colored Women's clubs. She is also leader of the choir of Washington Chapel A. M. E. church and has organized the young people of the people of their community into several clubs which meet regularly with their own officers but under the supervision of Mrs. Mack.

OTHER EDITORS SAY

TUSKEGEE DESERVES MORE THAN IT RECEIVES

ANOTHER ANNOUNCEMENT for Tuskegee Institute finds that famous and useful school in a sound and healthy condition, but suffering nevertheless from the same ills that endowed institutions the land over are suffering from.

For a decade the living waters of philanthropists have been falling. The investments of institutions have declined in value along with the investments of individual citizens. Private philanthropists have been in no position to increase their gifts; on the contrary they have had to curtail their donations.

In consequence the revenues of Tuskegee Institute have been drastically reduced. It has been necessary for President F. D. Patterson to meet the situation by drastically curtailing the functions of Tuskegee Institute. The excisions he has made have been painful and unfortunate, but inescapable, and The Advertiser knows that his board of trustees has been pleased at his efficiency and courage in meeting the crisis.

It is deplorable that so powerful an agency for the advancement of our common civilization here in the Deep South should be crippled at this turning point in its history by the drying-up of its resources. But it is in the public interest, it is in the interest of Tuskegee Institute, for our people, white and black, to understand that Tuskegee Institute is not "rich." It is no longer easy prey for those that regard it as a good thing. It has become at last a public responsibility, even as from the beginning it has been a public benefaction. Since 1881 Tuskegee Institute has contributed richly to the people—the whole people of Alabama—without receiving anything in return except a nominal appropriation from the state and the lip service of white orators and white editorial writers.

If the inherent capacity of Tuskegee Institute to strengthen the bright pillars of civilization in Alabama is to be preserved, The Advertiser submits that the white people of Alabama must contribute more of their money to its support than in the past. Endowment funds are no longer equal to the demands upon them at Tuskegee, but the demands of our people, white and black, upon the flowing well-springs at Tuskegee are greater, not less, than they were in the lush days of the past.

It is, therefore, the opinion of The Advertiser that the legislature of Alabama should now consider its apparent duty to increase, and substantially, its appropriation for the support of Tuskegee Institute. We in Alabama cannot go on forever receiving and not giving!

'Kegee Summer School Offers New Courses

TUSKEGEE, June 8. (ANP) — Tuskegee Institute summer school, June 9, to July 13 and July 14 to August 19, offers many attractive features to those interested in rural leadership as well as in certificate extension and accumulation of credits toward a degree.

Director William A. Clark states that the Workshop for rural principals will be outstanding in the summer program. The fact that the workshop method has been adopted by the nation's leading teacher-training institutions is evidence that Tuskegee is in the educational vanguard.

The "Workshop" activities are in three parts: (1) village and rural school administration, (2) the curriculum materials laboratory, and (3) scientific study of school-community problems; techniques and tools used in interpretation of data; the simple techniques of research necessary for good classroom teaching.

Special courses in rural art include units on flowers and yard beautification. The class in ceramics will refine local clays and make it into dishes, vases, etc. The classes in integrated science will not only be taught science, but how to make and adapt equipment for teaching science in rural schools.

The demonstration-laboratory school at Prairie Farms will be in operation during the summer session as a Rural Community Training center. Special course in Safety Education and Driver Training will be offered through cooperation with the American Automobile association.

Short courses and conferences for those interested or engaged in various types of rural activity will be held throughout the summer session. These include the following: short course for county and home demonstration agents, May 29 to June 17; school of instruction for vocational home economics teachers, July 17 to August 5; a workshop conference course for CCC educational advisers; short course for vocational teachers, July 3 to July 22; short course for in-service chefs, cooks and pantry workers, June 9 to August 19; conference of new farmers of America, June 30 to July 2; annual 4-H Club conference, August 20; Rural Life conference, July 6 and 7, and Parent-Teacher conference, July 10-16.

The Summer Entertainment course announces feature motion pictures, outstanding lecturers and musicians have been engaged for the entertainment of those attending the summer school.

Tuskegee The Mecca

(Chicago Bee.)

Tuskegee Institute, long a center of cultural activity for Negroes, and the birthplace of ideas and moves that have meant advancement for our group in many lines, is soon to have an infantile paralysis center, where treatment of crippled children may be carried on in an institution built and equipped for that purpose, as a result of a recently announced grant of more than one hundred and sixty thousand dollars This is good news for the Negroes of the whole country, and especially will it prove valuable to Tuskegee. The site of the Veteran's Facility, and the probable site for an aviation school for Negroes, with the addition of th Infantile Paralysis Center, the famed Alabama institution will soon be, in fact, the mecca for the Negro population of the United States, where they may have hope of gaining satisfaction for all of their varied desires.

The outstanding work that has been accomplished at this Alabama institution is alone responsible for its having been chosen as the site for so important an institution as the infantile paralysis center will prove to be; and the recognition that it will thus gain will serve to further magnify the wisdom of the man who founded and laid the ground work of the institute. There has never been any cause to discount the importance of the place Tuskegee fills in the life of the whole Negro people. With the addition of the center for treatment for infantile paralysis, there will be additional proof of its importance as a dynamic center from which goes forth the power of beneficence and achievement through the work accomplished there by those who are actively engaged in carrying on its many and varied activities.

Needless to say, we are proud of this new recognition that has come to so worthy an institution as is Tuskegee Institute.

A New Farm Paint

Tuskeegee Institute, famous school for negroes in Alabama, is recommending a paint composed of common clay and used motor oil as an economical covering for southern farmhouses and outbuildings.

The idea that led up to the new product was to devise a cheap paint which southern farmers could use on unfinished woodwork and the rough type of buildings prevalent in the South.

Variations of color may be obtained by mixing soot with the natural clays. It is reported that several houses painted with the mixture have retained their original luster for six months.

Such a paint should not offer serious competition with the more expensive commercial products, since the houses which would be painted with this mixture would go unpainted if a very cheap product were not available.

But if this new paint proves to be attractive, cheap and good, it is to be hoped that its use will not be confined to the farm. Every town and city in the land has "rough" houses that ought to be painted.

"Songs of Souls" Gain Favor; Plan Tuskegee Program

The leading white organizations throughout the state are including 'Songs of the Soul," negro organization placing emphasis on songs of negro origin in their programs as evidence of their appreciation for the songs of the negro and the South, according to Anslem J. Finch of Brandon, originator of "Songs of the Soul."

Finch states that March, April and May will keep members of the organization busy filling engagements all over Mississippi. A plan is now under way to district the organization in order to touch more groups. Jackson will be the headquarters and central district. Other places under study are Vicksburg, Meridian, Indianola and the Prentiss Institute. These points in the state will have charge of certain territories, working under "Songs of the Soul."

Several leading negroes of the state will accompany about 20 or 30 members of the "Songs of the Soul" group on their trip to Tuskegee, which is now being planned by Jesse O. Thomas of Atlanta, a native of Pike county, and a graduate of Tuskegee. Thomas is one of Tuskegee's leading graduates. Dr. George Washington Carver, noted scientist at Tuskegee and once Finch's teacher, wrote: "Even though I am not strong enough to get out much, I shall save myself that I may be privileged to hear 'Songs of the Soul'."

Among leading Mississippi negroes who plan making the trip are M. M. Hubert, of the extension department, Prof. B. B. Dansby, of Jackson college, I. S. Sanders, principal Lanier high school, Jackson; William H. Holtzclaw, alumnus of Tuskegee and founder of the Utica Institute, and B. L. The first motion picture selected for showing at the New York World's Fair in the field of health, medicine, and science, was "Let My People Live," the sound film distributed thru Minnesota in recent months by the Minnesota Public Health Association. It will be shown in the auditorium of the Medical and Health Building, according to Homer N. Calver, director of Health Exhibits.

Rex Ingram heads the all Negro cast of the picture which depicts up-to-date medical and scientific efforts to combat superstitions and fear surrounding tuberculosis. Many of the scenes were filmed on the campus of the Tuskegee Institute, Alabama, and the Tuskegee choir of 100 voices is heard in several selections.

The film has been shown to school children, parents, teachers, at county fairs, to 4-H club groups, and at many meetings of organizations and clubs throughout Minnesota. Lumbermen on the Red Lake Indian Reservation were recently added to the more than 50,000 people in the state who have seen the film, when it was given a wide showing in Beltrami county. Its purpose is to emphasize the importance of early diagnosis and proper treatment of tuberculosis.

TUSKEGEE FLYING BASE CONSIDERED

WASHINGTON, Jan. 19—(AP)—Representative Mitchell (D., Ill.) the only Negro member of the House, announced Thursday he had been notified by the Civil Aeronautics Authority that Tuskegee Institute in Alabama would be considered for a student air training program if the experimental program now under way was successful.

The Illinoisan said he hoped this would be the first step toward furnishing such training to Negro youths in colleges throughout the country.

"We need airplane mechanics and pilots," Mitchell said, "and Tuskegee and other such institutions for Negroes can furnish needed men and should be given the opportunity."

Robert W. Hinckley, member of the authority, wrote Mitchell that when the program was broadened in the Fall Tuskegee would be given every possible consideration for participation along with other colleges and universities of the country.

F. D. Patterson, president of Tuskegee, wrote Mitchell the institute was "definitely interested in a training unit for mechanics

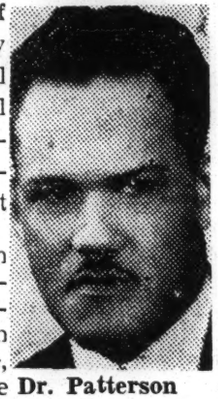
Tuskegee Plans More Emphasis on College

No Liberal Arts Program; High School Work Ending

TUSKEGEE INSTITUTE, Ala. —While Tuskegee Institute plans to discontinue its high school and emphasize college work, there is no intention of turning away from vocational and technical training, President F. D. Patterson said last week.



Dr. Patterson

Dr. Patterson asserted that emphasis on industrial education will increase, and Tuskegee will not become a liberal arts college. "Agriculture, home economics, mechanic arts and rural education will be its major specialties," he said.

Commenting on discontinuance of the high school, he said:

"Tuskegee Institute is simply recognizing the changes which have come in our work as a result of the natural growth in evolution of the education process.

"Our high school at the present time has a comparatively small number of students who live outside of the immediate community and county.

"Those who come to us from far away frequently leave satisfactory facilities.

"They are, likewise, too young and too immature physically to fit into the industrial program of Tuskegee Institute. They therefore represent a group difficult to provide for as well as an unreasonable expense."

Tuskegee It is our hope that untoward incidents at Tuskegee Institute, which are to be expected in the course of events, will not cause any doubt in the public mind as to the basic value of the Tuskegee program or any reflection on the able administration with which the institution has been blessed since the passing of the founder.

Under Dr. Moton Tuskegee made notable advances, in both the field of education as such, and in the field of financial administration The work went forward profitably insofar as support of the school was concerned, and it went forward quite creditably from the viewpoint of improving society by training more and more useful members of society. Under the youthful but able and dynamic Dr. Patterson the prestige of the school in both the old fields has not suffered. Its financial support has continued, and students continue to flock there for the training which Dr. Washington outlined and projected.

As a group, we must learn group responsibility. Group responsibility means we must uphold to the utmost any agency which stands for the highest and best in our group life, and in American life, as does Tuskegee Institute.

STATE AID TO BE ASKED FOR NURSE-TRAINING PROGRAM

Dr. Patterson stated that since rumors of the possible elimination of the Nurse-Training school had got abroad, numerous letters had been received from all sections of the country, giving evidence of the national service this training school renders; that its work is outstanding and its continuance is regarded as needed not only because of the general shortage of nurses, but also because of the south-wide medical and surgical clinics operated in connection with the nursing school at Tuskegee.

An appropraition, he said, would be sought from the State in order to continue this very valuable program in nurse training.

All the changes stated above have been under careful study for at least five years and have been made because of a continuing reduction in cash income during the past five years. This reduction has come to a point that at present the income represents a little more than one half that expended during the peak year, 1931. The reorganization is a crystalization of the Tuskegee Institute program in the fields of vocation and technical education to the end that the school founded by Booker T. Washington may continue to render through the years a regional and a national service.

Scholarship aid and grants received from several Foundation have for the past few years been contributed largely in support of the technical phases of the Tuskegee Program.

Outstanding developments are planned in connection with the agricultural program to meet growing demand for highly trained personnel in vocational ariculture, in Extension Service and among those preparing to be teachers in agricultural colleges and to fill positions as agricultural specialists who will be concerned Federal resettlement and agricultural conservation programs.

The work in Home Economics has been enriched and broadened by the addition of the department of Commercial Dietetics, which though but three years old, had received the endorsement of the American Hotel Association and which has been unable to meet the heavy demands for its graduates to take jobs in commercially operated food establishments.

The trustees, although they regret that Tuskegee has found it necessary to make any curtailment whatever in its broad program of education, realize that many of the things for which the Institution has worked and striven for more than a half century, are now on the way up toward a splendid fulfilment. They feel that it is not only sound education, but that it is in the protection of the interests of the work that Tuskegee has determined to continue and promote that its energies and resources be conserved for concentration in fewer fields.

"South Needs Leadership, Tuskegee $1,000,000 Yearly For Research" -- Alexander

Courier 10-28-39 Pittsburgh, Pa.

TUSKEGEE, Oct. 26—(ANP)—The greatest need of the South today is for intellectual leadership, declared Dr. Will W. Alexander, Farm Security chief, speaking here last week.

In a firm address to FSA workers gathered here for a two week's study conference, Dr. Alexander pictured the national problem and especially the South's problem as one of human relations standing still while industry forged ahead.

THERE SHOULD BE TEN RESEARCH LEADERS

To help solve its social problems there should be ten research centers working the whole Southern area, the FSA chief asserted. Deploring the lack of "a single first-class university with first-class research facilities within the borders of the South," Dr. Alexander declared:

"Tuskegee institute needs a million a year for research. The kind of thing we need won't get done at Harvard, or Cornell or Yale.

"While we are living in an age of combines, our human relations are at the age of the mowing scythe," said the FSA head, who predicted changes in social and economic fields "as revolutionary as those which have taken place in the field of mechanics."

SAYS MACHINE AGE HAS GONE AS FAR AS IT CAN

He expressed the belief that the machine age has gone "as far as it is good for it to go without pause for adjustment," citing the displacement of thousands of agricultural workers by a handful of men operating tractors, combines, drills and gang plows.

Answering his own question, "Where are these workers, now?" Dr. Alexander said that they were probably among the hundreds of thousands of agricultural workers whom FSA is trying to adjust through its rehabilitation program

AN APPEAL FOR CHRISTMAS GIFTS

Editor, The Advertiser:

Through a staff of consecrated, experienced workers, Tuskegee Institute conducts a year-round program of necessary and important service to Southern rural families. Their most acute problem is low and uncertain income.

When settlements are made for the Fall crops, there are always thousands of sharecroppers and farm families who didn't come out" and a large majority of this group are Negro farmers. From harvest time until the meager advances are made for Spring planting such families face their hardest struggle for existence.

Right in the midst of this period Christmas comes and without some such service as Tuskegee Institute renders, thousands of children in these homes would have nothing to remind them of the holiday season.

For many years, devoted friends throughout the country have used this institution as a medium through which they may send gifts to brighten those homes and warm the hearts of the children.

We therefore renew our appeal for donations of clothing, books, toys, candy, pictures, etc. Some friends prefer to send money with which to purchase gifts and in such instances the donation is spent as directed.

Tuskegee Institute Begins Its 58th School Year; Fall Quarter Classes Started September 11

TUSKEGEE INST., Ala., Sept. 14 — New students have been arriving on the campus of Tuskegee Institute for the past two weeks although September 4th was the date set for their arrival. Fall quarter classes began September 11th. September 21st is the last day of registration for credit for the Fall Quarter.

All offices at the Institute are working hours over time preparing for the heavy enrollment of freshmen and returning students. The offices of the Dean of Administration, the Registrar, the Personnel Director, Dean of Men and Dean of Women are especially busy.

Dr. I. A. Derbigny, Dean of Administration, has an extra force preparing for the intensive testing program for the classification of the incoming students. The results of these tests which have been given over a period of years are being carefully compiled for a study that Dr. Derbigny will publish in the near future. This study, Dr. Derbigny feels, will be a constructive contribution to the literature dealing with the re-evaluation of freshmen and high school curricula in Negro schools.

The School of Education is entering upon the third year of experimentation in certain areas as a result of early findings from the testing program. Mr. William A. Clark, Director of the School of Education, says these findings have been invaluable in the revision of Tuskegee's curricula that has resulted in the general college plan that is being inaugurated this year.

A. L. Turner, Registrar, announced this week the procedure for the registration of Tuskegee's fifteen hundred students. Registration includes much more than the payment of fees and the filling out of a class schedule. Every new student must be photographed, must have a complete physical examination, be assigned to a Sunday School class, receive a meal ticket, an entertainment course ticket, pay his fees and have his class schedule approved. Each male student who is physically fit must be assigned to a company in the cadet regiment.

It is the duty of the Office of the Registrar to plan the progressive steps of the registration to the end that there may be effective functioning of all the departments affected with a minimum of confusion and loss of time on the part of students. All operations or registration are concentrated in Logan Hall. Typewriters, file cabinets, adding machines and other office equipment transforms the huge gymnasium into temporary headquarters for the Treasurer, heads of departments, Registrar, and advisors.

J. Julius Flood, Personnel Director, who has just returned from a summer course at Ann Arbor, Michigan, has made known the program for the 1939 Orientation Week. These are seven days packed full of activities that are certain to steep the newcomers in Tuskegee history and traditions. This program will include personally conducted tours about the campus, a free movie, an acquaintance social, conferences with Personal Advisors and spe-

TUSKEGEE'S GIRLS RETAIN NATIONAL AAU TRACK TITLE

WATERBURY, Conn. — The Tuskegee Institute Girls' track team scored their third successive victory in the National Women's A.A.U. track and field championships here this week. Led by Alice Cochrane who won the high jump at 5 feet 2 inches and Lula Hymes who competed in four events, the Tigerettes piled up a total of 33 points to more than double the score of the second place Chicago Park Hurricanes.

The Tuskegee 400-meter relay team retained its title through a fine anchor by Miss Hymes in the remarkable time of 49.4 seconds. The Tiger girl scored in all of the 11 events but one, the baseball throw. Scoring for Tuskegee were Misses Cochrane, Hymes, Florence Wright, Ernestine Rogers, Margaret Barnes, Lelia Perry, Lucy Newell and Hester Brown.

Jewel Cole of Prairie View College placed fifth in the 200-meter run.

Tuskegee Women Win Track Pennant

WATERBURY, Conn.—ANP)—Although taking first in only one individual event, the high jump, Tuskegee's squad had enough team strength to again win the National A. A. U. women's track and field meet Sunday at the municipal stadium. Tuskegee scored 33 points, more than double that of the Chicago Park Hurricanes, second with 16.

Alice Cochrane was the lone champion, winning the high jump at 5 feet 2 inches. Florence Wright was third in the eight-pound shot put, Ernestine Rogers fourth in the 50-meter sprint, Hattie Hall second and Miss Wright third in the discus, Margaret Barnes fourth in the javelon, Leila Berry third in the 80 meter hurdles, Lula Hymes and Lucy Newell second and third in the broad jump. Misses Newell and Hymes second and fourth in the 100 meters, and Hester Brown second in the 200 meters. Jewel Cole of Prairie View was fourth in the 200.

Tuskegee also won the 400 meter relay, largely through a fine anchor leg by Miss Hymes who still had considerable speed left after competing in individual events. Other relay runners were Celestine Birge, Jessie Abbott and Rowena Harrison.

Chicagoan Is Feted by Band At Tuskegee

TUSKEGEE INSTITUTE, Ala., Sept. 14—Delightful in every way was the reception tendered Miss Pearl Tate, secretary of the Chicago-Tuskegee club, by the Tuskegee Institute band, on the occasion of her recent visit to Tuskegee institute. Miss Tate was escorted to the band practice room on the pretext that she was going to hear the band render one of its favorite numbers, but instead a delightful program of music had been arranged in her honor.

At the conclusion of the program Miss Tate was presented with a large box of candy by Miss Elizabeth Lindsay for and on behalf of the members of the band "for her interest in the care and comfort of the Crimson Pipers on the occasion of their annual visit to Chicago in connection with the Tuskegee-Wilberforce football game." Miss Tate's gracious response was pleasing in its sincerity and simplicity. After pleasant reminiscences the members of the band gave Miss Tate a vociferous Tuskegee Yell which was followed by the singing of the Tuskegee song.

TUSKEGEE INSTITUTE, Ala.—(SNS)—Dean of Administration I. A. Derrigny announces that according to preliminary figures from the Registrar's office, the total enrollment of Tuskegee Institute for the year 1939-1940 is up ten per cent with a total of 1,261 college students, as of September 25.

The enrollment in the School of Mechanical Industries and in the School of Agriculture shows an increase of approximately 25 per cent each over that of last year. The figures for the School of Home Economics follow closely with a 12 per cent increase.

The distribution of the 1,261 college students among the several schools is as follows: Mechanical Industries, 26 per cent; Agriculture, 24 per cent; Home Economics, 15 per cent; Education, 15 per cent; Commercial Dietetics, 10 per cent. The remaining 10 per cent is distributed in the departments of Nurse Training, Physical Education, Business and Music.

Although this increase in enrollment is taxing greatly both the housing facilities and the teaching personnel, no expansion of dormitory space or additions to the faculty are felt to be necessary for the present.

The enrollment shows its usual nation-wide distribution with additional students from several foreign countries including Africa, China, Haiti, Cuba and the Bahamas.

The Administration considers the large enrollment of especial significance in view of the fact the figures do not include the enrollment in the high school, which this year was taken over by Macon County and merged with public sshool system of Alabama. When enrollment in the campus laboratory school and in special groups is added the total enrollment for the year will be well toward the 2000 mark.
